appeared to Abram and said to him: "I am the omnipotent God; be pleasing to me and be perfect, and I will establish my covenant between me and thee, and will increase thee exceedingly." 3. And Abram fell down on his face. 4. And the Lord spoke to him and said: "Behold my ordinance is with thee, and I will make thee the father of many nations, and thy name shall no longer be called Abram, and thy name henceforth and to eternity shall be Abraham, for I will make thee a father of many nations, and I will make thee exceedingly great, and will cause nations and kings to proceed from thee. 5. And I will establish my covenant between me and thee and between thy seed after thee in their generations, as an ordinance of eternity; that I will be a God to thee and to thy seed after thee in their generations, [and I will give thee] the land where thou art a stranger, the land of Canaan, that thou shalt be ruler over it to eternity, and I will be their God." 6. And the Lord said to Abraham: "And thou, preserve my covenant, thou and thy seed after thee, and circumcise all your foreskins, and let it be a sign of my ordinance unto eternity between me and thee and for thy descendants. 7. On the eighth day ye shall circumcise all the males in your generation, the members of the household, and him whom ye have bought with gold from all the sons of the strangers whom ye have as your property, who are not of thy seed,—they shall circumcise the children of the household, and whomsoever ye have bought shall be circumcised. 8. And my covenant shall be on your flesh as an eternal ordinance; and whosoever is not circumcised, all of thy males the flesh of whose foreskin is not circumcised on the eighth day, his soul shall be rooted out of his generation, for he has overthrown my covenant." 9. And the Lord said unto Abraham: "Sara, thy wife, shall no longer be called by her name Sara, for Sarah shall be her name;¹ for I will bless and give to thee a son from her, and I will bless him and he will become a people, and kings and nations shall proceed from him." 10. And Abraham fell upon his face and rejoiced, and he said in his heart: "Should there be born a son to one of a hundred years, and shall Sarah, who is ninety, yet bring forth!" 11. And Abraham said to the Lord: "O that Ishmael might live before thee!" 12. And the Lord said: "Yea, and Sarah also shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name Isaac, and I will establish my eternal covenant with him and with his seed after him. 13. And also in reference to Ishmael have I heard thee, and, behold, I will bless him, and I will make him great and will increase him exceedingly, and twelve princes he will beget, and I will make him a great nation; but I will establish my covenant with Isaac, whom Sarah will bear for thee, in these days, in the second year." 14. And having ended speaking with him, the Lord ascended from over above Abraham. 15. And Abraham did as the Lord had said to him, and took Ishmael his son, and all the members of his household, and those whom he had bought with gold, all the males that were in his house, and circumcised the flesh of their sexual member. 16. And at the time of these days Abraham was circumcised, and all the men of his house and all whom he had bought with gold from among the sons of the strangers were circumcised with him. 17. And this is the law for all the generations of eternity, with no change of days and no deviation of day from the eighth day, for it is an eternal ordinance, ordained and written in the tablets of heaven. 18. And every one that is born, the flesh of whose member is not circumcised upon the eighth day, is not of the children of the covenant which the Lord made with Abraham, but is of the children of destruction; and he has no sign upon him that he is the Lord's, but he is for destruction and slaying from the earth and for rooting out of the earth; for he has broken the covenant of the Lord our God. 19. For all the angels of the face and all the angels of glorification were thus created from the day of their creation;¹ and he looked upon the angels of glorification, and he sanctified Israel that they should be with him and with his holy angels. 20. And thou command the children of Israel and let them observe the sign of this covenant, and for their generations as an eternal ordinance that they be not rooted out of the land. 21. For it is ordained as a command of the covenant that they should observe it forever among all the children of Israel. 22. For Ishmael and his sons and his brothers and Esau the Lord did not permit to approach him and did not choose them, for the sons of Abraham are those he acknowledged, and he chose Israel to be his people. 23. And he sanctified it and collected it from among all the children of men, for there are many nations and many peoples, and all are his, and over all has he appointed spirits to rule, that they should lead them astray from him, but over Israel he did not appoint any ruler, neither an angel nor a spirit, but he alone is their ruler, and he preserves them, and he contends for them against the hands of his angels and his spirits and all; and they shall keep all his commandments, and he will bless them, and they shall be his, and he will be theirs, from now on and to eternity. 24. And from now on I will announce to you that the children of Israel will break faith with this ordinance, and will not circumcise their sons according to this whole law, for they will omit this circumcision of the children on the flesh of their circumcision, and they all, the sons of Belial, will leave their children without circumcision as they were born. 25. And the wrath upon the children of Israel will be great from the Lord, for they have deserted his covenant.

Gen. xvii. 15. Really, throughout the text, before this, the Book of Jubilees has been using the word Sôrâ, for which now Sârâ is employed. In Ethiopic this involves no change in the meaning of the name. The LXX. changes from Σάρτα to Σάρρα.

and have departed from his word, and enrage him and blaspheme him, as they do not observe this ordinance according to this sign, for they make their members like the Gentiles for being torn and rooted out of the land. And no longer is there forgiveness or pardon for them that all their sin may be forgiven and pardoned for this error to eternity.

CHAP. XVI. 1. And at the new moon of the fourth month we appeared to Abraham at the oak of Mâmêrê, and we conversed with him, and we announced to him that a son would be given him from Sarah his wife. 2. And Sarah laughed, for she heard that we spoke these words with Abraham; and we admonished her, and she became afraid and denied that she had laughed on account of the words. 3. And we told her the name of her son as it is written on the tablets of heaven, namely, Isaac, as his name. 4. And when we returned to her in a fixed time then she was pregnant with a son. 5. And in this month the Lord carried out the judgments of Sodom and Gomorrah and Sebrûêm and all the circuit of the Jordan, and burnt them with fire and brimstone, and demolished them unto the present day, according to what we have made known to thee concerning all their actions, that they were terrible and very sinful and they defiled themselves and committed fornication and uncleanness over the earth. 6. And accordingly the Lord inflicted judgment upon all the places by the hand of his servants, according to the uncleanness of Sodom, according to the judgment of Sodom. 7. But Lot we saved, for the Lord remembered Abraham, and led him out of the destruction. 8. And he and his daughters committed sin on the earth, such as had not been from the days of Adam until now, for the man lay with his daughters. 9. And, behold, it is commanded and engraven concerning all his seed on the tablets of heaven, that they should tear them out and root them out and judge them according to the judgment of Sodom, and that no seed should be left this man on the earth in the day of judgment. 10. And in this month Abraham migrated from Hebron, and dwelt between Kades and Shur in the mountains of Gêrârôn. 11. And in the middle of the fifth month he migrated from there and dwelt at the well of the oath.¹ And in the middle of the sixth month the Lord visited Sarah, and did to her as he had said to her, and she conceived and bore a son. And in the third month, in the middle of the month, in the days which the Lord had said to Abraham, on the festival of the first harvest, Isaac was born; and Abraham circumcised his son on the eighth day: he was the first one circumcised in the covenant as it was ordained forever. 12. And in the sixth year, in this month, of the fourth week, we came to Abraham to the well of the oath, and we appeared to him as we had told Sarah, that we would come to her, but she became pregnant with a son, and we returned in the seventh month and found Sarah pregnant before us, and we blessed her and told her all things that had been commanded us concerning him [Abraham] that he should not die until six sons had been born to him, and that he would see them before he should die; but that in Isaac his name and seed should be called. 13. And all the seed of his [other] sons will become Gentiles and will be numbered with the Gentiles; but from the sons of Isaac one shall become a holy seed and shall not be numbered among the Gentiles. 14. For he shall become the portion of the Most High, and among those of whom God is ruler will be his abode and all his seed, that it become a seed of the Lord, a nation of inheritance among all the nations, and that it may be a kingdom and a priesthood and a holy nation. 15. And we went our way, and we announced to Sarah all that we had told him; and these two rejoiced with an exceeding great joy. 16. And he built there an altar to the Lord who had saved him and had filled him with joy in the land of his pilgrimage, and he celebrated a festival of great joy in this month, seven days, at the altar which he had built at the fountain of the oath; and he built tents for himself and his servants on this festival, and he was the first one to celebrate the festival of tabernacles on the earth. 17. And in these seven days Abraham would bring every single day upon the altar a burnt offering to the Lord, two oxen, seven sheep, one young goat, on account of his sins that thereby these might be forgiven him and his seed, and as an offering of salvation seven rams, seven goats, and their fruit offering and their drink offering; over all the fat thereof he burnt incense upon the altar as a sacrifice chosen to the Lord as a sweet savor. 18. At mornings and evenings he burnt frankincense, galbanum, staklē and wood and myrrh and spice and costum; all these seven he brought, united with each other in equal parts and clean. 19. And thus he celebrated his festival seven days, rejoicing with his whole heart and his whole soul, he and all those that were in his house; and there was not any stranger with him nor any bastard. 20. And he blessed his Creator who had created him in his generation, for according to his pleasure did he create him; for he knew and observed that from him would come the plant of righteousness for the generations of eternity, and that from him should also come the holy seed, like him who had made all things.¹ 21. And he blessed his Creator, and he was glad, and he called the name of this festival the festival of the Lord with a joy acceptable to the Most High God. 22. And we blessed him forever and all his seed after him in all the generations of the world on this earth, because he celebrated this festival in its house according to the testimony of the tablets of heaven. 23. On this account it is ordained in the tablets of heaven concerning Israel that they shall celebrate the festival of the tabernacles seven days in joy, in the seventh month, that it be accepted before the Lord as an eternal law in the generations of all the years. 24.

And to this there is no limit of days, but it is ordained over Israel as a festival that they shall observe it, and shall dwell in tents, and shall place wreaths upon their heads, and they shall take a willow branch with foliage from the brook. 25. And Abraham took the heart of the palm and good fruit of trees, and every day and day he would go around the altar with the branches, seven times a day, and in the morning he praised and thanked his God for all things in joy.

CHAP. XVII. 1. And in the first year of the fifth week Isaac was weaned, in this jubilee, and Abraham made a great feast in the third month on the day his son Isaac was weaned. 2. And Ishmael, the son of the Egyptian Hagar, was before the face of his father in this place; and Abraham rejoiced and blessed the Lord, because that he could see sons to himself and had not died without sons. 3. And he remembered the words which he had spoken to him on the day that Lot separated from him; and he rejoiced, because the Lord had given him seed on the earth to inherit the land; and he blessed with his whole mouth the Creator of all things. 4. And when Sarah saw that Ishmael was playing and growing, and that Abraham was rejoicing exceedingly, she became jealous of Ishmael, and she said to Abraham: "Drive away this slave and her son, for the son of this one shall not inherit with my son Isaac." 5. And these words were grievous in the eyes of Abraham, on account of his maid, and on account of his son, that he should drive them away from him. 6. And the Lord said to Abraham: "Let it not be grievous in thy eyes concerning the child, and concerning the slave; all that Sarah says to thee, hear her words and do them, for in Isaac shall thy name and thy seed be called for thee. 7. But the son of this [slave] I will make into a great nation, for he is of thy seed. 8. And Abraham arose early in the morning and took bread and a bag of water and put them upon the shoulders of Hagar and of the boy and sent them away. 9. And she went wandering about in the desert Beer-Sheba ; and the water was finished from the bag, and the boy was thirsty, and was not able to walk, and he fell down. 10. And his mother took him, and going, threw him under an olive tree, and she went and sat down opposite him, the distance of an arrow shot, saying : " I cannot see the death of my child ; " and she sat weeping. 11. And an angel of God, one of the holy ones, said to her : " Why dost thou weep, Hagar ? arising, take the boy, and lead him by the hand, for the Lord has heard thy voice." 12. And she looked at the bag and opened her eyes and saw a well of water, and she went and filled the bag with water and gave her boy to drink, and she arose and went toward the desert of Paran. 13. And the boy grew and became a horseman, and the Lord was with him. 14. And his mother took for him a wife from among the daughters of Egypt, and she bore him a son, and he called his name Nâbêmôth, for she said : " The Lord was near to me when I cried out to him." 15. And it happened in the seventh week, in the first year thereof, in the first month of this jubilee, on the twelfth of this month, there was a word in the heavens concerning Abraham, that he was a believer in all that the Lord told him, and that he loved him, because in all temptations he was faithful. 16. And the prince Mastêmâ approached and said before God : " Behold Abraham loves Isaac his son, and esteems him more than all other things ; say that he should bring him as a burnt offering on the altar and thou wilt see if he will do this word, and thou wilt know if he is a believer in everything with which thou triest him." 17. And the Lord knew that Abraham was a believer in all trials which he spoke to him ; for he had tried him in his country, and in the strange land, and had tried him with the wealth of kings, and had tried him again with his wife in that she was torn from him, and with the circumcision, and had tried him with Ishmael and Hagar his maid, when he sent them away, and in all in which he had tried him he was found faithful, and his soul did not become impatient, nor did he hesitate to do it, for he was faithful and a lover of God.¹

CHAP. XVIII. 1. And the Lord said to Abraham, "Abraham." And he said to him, "Behold, O Lord, here I am." 2. And he said to him: "Take thy son Isaac whom thou lovest, and go into the high land, and take him upon one of the hills which I will show thee." 3. And he arose in the morning from there and saddled his ass, and took two young men with him, and Isaac his son, and split the wood for a sacrifice, and he came to the place on the third day, and saw the place from afar. 4. And he came to a well of water, and he said to the young men: "Remain here with the ass, and I and the boy will go on and will worship, and after worshipping will return to you." 5. And he took the wood for the sacrifice and put it upon the shoulders of his son Isaac and he took in his hands the fire and the knife, and the two went together to that place. 6. And Isaac said to his father: "My father." 7. And he said to him: "Behold, here I am, my son." 8. [And he said] "Behold here is the fire, and the knife, and the wood; but where, my father, is the sheep for the sacrifice?" 9. And he said: "The Lord will show me the sheep for the sacrifice, my son." 10. And he came to the place of the hill of the Lord, and he built an altar and laid the wood upon the altar, and tied Isaac his son and placed him upon the wood over the altar, and he stretched out his hands to take the knife to sacrifice Isaac. 11. And I stood before him [God] and before the prince Mastêmâ, and the Lord said: "Tell him not to lay his hand upon the boy and to do him no harm; for I know that he fears the Lord." 12. And the Lord called to him from heaven and said to him: "Abraham! Abraham!" and he was frightened and said: "Behold, here I am." 13. And he said to him: "Do not lay thy hands upon the boy, and do him no harm, for now I know that thou fearest the Lord, and hast not spared from me thy first-born son." 14 And the prince Mastêmâ was confounded; and Abraham lifted up his eyes and looked, and behold a ram held fast with his horns. 15. And Abraham went and took the ram and brought him as a sacrifice in the place of his son Isaac. 16. And Abraham called this place "The Lord seeth," so that it is said "The Lord saw it" for Mount Zion. 17. And the Lord called Abraham by name a second time from heaven as he had appeared to us that we should speak to him in the name of the Lord. 18. And he said: "By my head, I swear, saith the Lord, because thou hast done this thing and hast not spared from me thy first-born son whom thou lovest, therefore I will surely bless thee and will surely increase thy head like the stars of heaven and like the sand of the shore of the sea. 19. And thy seed shall inherit the cities of their enemy, and in thy seed shall be blessed all the nations of the earth, for this that thou hast listened to my voice and hast shown unto all that thou art faithful unto me in all that I say to thee; go in peace." 20. And Abraham went to his young men, and they arose and went together to Beer-Sheba, and Abraham dwelt near the well of the oath; and he celebrated this festival in all the years, seven days in joy, and called it "the festival of the Lord," according to the seven days in which he had gone and returned in peace. 21. And thus it is, and it is engraven and written in the tablets of heaven concerning Israel and its seed to keep this festival seven days in joy.

CHAP. XIX. 1. And in the first year of the first week in the forty-second jubilee Abraham returned and dwelt opposite Hebron, that is, Karjâtârbôk, two weeks of years. 2. And in the first year of the third week of this jubilee the days of the life of Sarah were completed, and she died in Hebron. 5. And Abraham went to mourn over and to bury her; and we tried him if his spirit was patient and if he was impatient in the words of his mouth, and he was found patient in this, and was not shaken. 4. For in the patience of his soul he conversed with the children of Kêti that they should give him a place that he could bury his body in it; and the Lord gave him grace before all who saw him, and he asked with modesty of heart of the children of Kêti, and they gave him the land of the double cave opposite Mâmre, which is Hebron, for forty pieces of silver. 5. But they begged him, saying: "We will give it to thee;" and he did not take anything from them for nothing, for he gave the price for the place, perfect silver; and he bowed down before them twice, and then he buried the body in the double cave. 6. And all the days of the life of Sarah were one hundred and twenty-seven years, and this is two jubilees and four weeks and one year; those are the days of the years of the life of Sarah. And this was the tenth trial with which Abraham was tempted, and he was found faithful and of patient spirit. 8. And he did not speak a single word concerning that God had said that he would give him and his seed after him this land when he petitioned that he might bury his body there, for he was found faithful and patient and was written down as a friend of the Lord in the tablets of heaven. 9. And in the fourth year thereof he took a wife for Isaac his son, and her name was Rebecca, the daughter of Betuel, the son of Nahor, the brother of Abraham. 10. And Abraham took to himself a third wife, and her name was Keturah, from among the sons of his household, for Hagar had died before Sarah. 11. And she bore him six sons, Zambari, and Joksan, and Madai, and Ejazbok, and Sachai in the second week of years.¹ 12. And in the sixth week, in the second year, Rebecca bore to Isaac two sons, Jacob and Esau: but Jacob was pious and righteous and Esau was a rough man, a tiller of the field and hairy, but Jacob dwelt within tents. 13. And the youths grew, and

Jacob learned writing ; but Esau did not learn it, for he was a man of the field and a hunter, and learned war and all rough deeds. 14. But Abraham loved Jacob, but Isaac loved Esau. 15. And Abraham saw the deeds of Esau, and he knew that his name and seed should be called for him in Jacob, and he called Rebecca, and commanded her concerning Jacob, for he saw that she too loved Jacob much more than Esau. 16. And he said to her : " My daughter, watch my son Jacob, for he shall be in my stead upon the earth as a blessing among the sons of men and to all the seed of Shem, and for an honor, and I know that the Lord has chosen him for himself as a people secluded from all those upon the face of the earth, and behold, Isaac, my son, loves Esau more than Jacob, and I see that thou lovest righteousness for Jacob ; add yet to do something good for him and let thine eyes be over him as the beloved, for he shall be to me a blessing over the earth, from now on and to all the generations of the earth. 17. Let thy hands be strong, and thou shalt rejoice in thy son Jacob, for him do I love exceedingly above all my children ; for to eternity the Lord will be blessed in him, and his seed shall fill all the land. 18. If a man can number the dust of the earth, then his seed will be numbered. 19. And all the blessings with which the Lord has blessed me and my seed shall be to Jacob and his seed all the days, and in his seed shall my name be blessed and the names of my fathers, Shem, and Noah, and Enoch, and Mahaalel, and Seth, and Adam ; and these will serve to a founding of heaven and a strengthening of the earth and for a removal of all the stars upon the firmament." ¹ 20. And he called Jacob before the eyes of his mother Rebecca, and he kissed him, and blessed him, and said to him ; " My beloved son Jacob, whom my soul loveth, may God bless thee from the firmament above and give thee all the blessings with which he blessed Adam, and Enoch, and Noah, and Shem, and all that he has conversed with me and all that he has said that he would give me, may he fasten these to thee and to thy seed to eternity, according to the days of heaven over the earth. 21. And the spirits of Mastêmâ shall not become masters over thee and over thy seed to remove thee from the Lord who is thy God, from now on and to eternity. 22. And may the Lord God be thy father, and thou his first-born son, and his people for all days: go, my son, in peace!" 23. And the two went together from Abraham. 24. And Rebecca loved Jacob with all her heart, and with all her soul, exceedingly more than Esau; and Isaac loved Esau exceedingly more than Jacob.

CHAP. XX. 1 And in the thirty-second jubilee, in the first year of the seventh week, Abraham called Ishmael and his twelve sons, and Isaac and his two sons, and the six sons of Keturah and their sons. 2. And he commanded them that they should preserve the path of the Lord to do righteousness and should love each his neighbor, and that they should be thus in all the wars that they go into against every one that is against them, and do justice and righteousness over the earth, and that they circumcise their sons according to the covenant which he had made with them, and that they should not transgress neither to the right hand nor to the left from all the paths which the Lord had commanded them, and that they should preserve themselves from all uncleanness, and that we should remove from our midst all uncleanness and fornication. 3. And if any woman or maid commit fornication amongst you, burn her with fire, and do not commit fornication after their eyes and hearts; and that they should not take unto themselves wives from among the daughters of Canaan, for the seed of Canaan shall be rooted out of the land. 4. And he spoke to them concerning the judgment of the giants and the judgment of Sodom, that these had been judged on account of their wickedness, and on account of fornication and uncleanness and destruction among each other. 5. "But be on your guard against all fornication and uncleanness and contamination of sin, so that ye do not make our name a curse and bring your lives and your sons to destruction by the sword and ye become accursed like Sodom, and all your remnant like the sons of Gomorrah. 6. And I call upon you as witnesses, my sons, love the God of heaven and submit to all his commandments, and do not walk after their idols and after their uncleanness, and do not make molten gods for yourselves nor wooden ones. 7. For they are vanity, and have no spirit, but they are the work of hands, and all who depend upon them Do not worship them nor bow down to them. 8. But worship ye the Most High God and bow down to him ever, and hope upon his face at all times, and do rectitude and righteousness before him, that he may find pleasure in you and give you his mercy, and send down rain to you morning and evening, and bless all your work which ye do on the earth, and bless thy grain and thy water, and bless the seed of thy body, and the seed of thy land, and the herds of thy oxen, and the herds of thy sheep. 9. And thou shalt be for a blessing over the earth, and all the nations of the earth shall desire for you and will bless thy sons in my name that they be blessed as I am." 10. And he gave to Ishmael his son and to the sons of Keturah a gift and sent them away from Isaac his son. 10. And Ishmael and his sons and the sons of Keturah and their sons went together and dwelt from Pharmon (Pharan) to the entrance of Babylon, in all the land which faces toward the east opposite the desert. 12. And these mingled with each other, and their name was called Arabs and Ishmaelites.

CHAP. XXI. 1. And in the sixth year of the seventh week of this jubilee Abraham called Isaac his son, and his father commanded him saying: "I am gray and do not know the day of my death, for I am satisfied in my days. 2. And behold, my son, I am one hundred and seventy-five years old, and in all the days of my life I have ever remembered the Lord and sought with all my might that I might do the will of my God, and that I might walk aright in all his paths. 3. My soul hated idols so that I could be on my guard to do the will of him that created me, for he is the living God, and he is holy, and he is faithful, and he is just above all, and no evil is with him to have regard for persons and to take presents, for he is a god of righteousness, and a doer of judgment over all who transgress his commandments, and all that violate his covenant. 4. And thou, my son, observe his commandments and his ordinance and his judgment, and walk not after the unclean and after the wooden images and after the molten ones. 5. And do not eat any blood of an animal, or of a beast, or of any bird that flies in the heavens. 6. And if thou slaughterest, slaughter as a pure sacrifice that is acceptable; slaughter it and pour out its blood upon the altar and all the fat of the sacrifice place upon the altar with flour and fruit offering, mixed with oil together with drink offering; place all this together upon the altar as a sacrifice of sweet savor before the Lord. 7. Like the fat of the thank offering lay them upon the fire, like the fat of the belly, and all the fat upon the entrails, and the two kidneys and all the fat that is upon them, and upon the thigh pieces, and the liver, together with the kidneys wrapped up in them; bring this all as a sweet savor which will be acceptable before the Lord together with fruit and drink offerings, thou shalt bring them all together for a sweet savor as the bread of the burnt offering for the Lord. 7. And the meat eat on that day and on the second day, and do not let the sun go down on it on the second day until it is eaten and nothing shall be left over for the third day, for it is not acceptable nor chosen, and it shall no longer be eaten, and all who eat bring sin upon themselves. 8. For thus have I found it written in the books of my forefathers, in the words of Enoch and in the words of Noah. 9. And upon all thy sacrifices thou shalt put salt, and thou shalt not violate the covenant of salt in all thy sacrifices before the Lord. 10. And watch all the wood of the sacrifices, that thou dost not bring sacrificing wood besides the following: cypress, fir, and almond, and pine, and fir, and cedar, and savin, and citron, and olive, and myrrh, and balsam.¹ 11. Of these kinds of wood lay upon the altar, under the sacrifice, having examined its appearance, and do not place any broken or dark wood; hard wood and unbroken, perfect, and nearly grown, and not old, for its savor is gone and there is no more savor in it, as at first. 12. Besides these kinds of wood thou shalt place no other kinds, for its savor has departed, and thou shalt send up the smell of its savor to heaven. 13. Observe this commandment and do it, my son, that thou mayest be right in all thy actions. 14. And at all times be clean in thy body and wash thyself with water, before thou goest to sacrifice upon the altar, and wash thy hands and thy feet before thou approachest the altar; and when thou art done sacrificing, return and wash thy hands and thy feet. 16. And let there not appear upon any one of you any blood, nor upon your clothes: be on thy guard, my son, guard thyself exceedingly against blood; bury it in the ground. 16. And do not eat any blood for it is the soul, eat no blood whatever. 17. And do not receive any present for any blood of man that it should be spilt in vain without judgment; for this blood which is spilt causes sin upon the earth, and it cannot be cleansed of the blood except by blood being shed; and do not receive a present or any gift for the blood of man; blood for blood; and ye shall become acceptable before the Lord God Most High, and he will be the protector of good, and that thou mayest be preserved from all evil and be saved from all death. 18. I see, my son, all the deeds of the sons of men, that they are sin and evil, and all their deeds are uncleanness, and rebellious and defiling, and there is no righteousness with them. 19. Guard thyself, do not go on their paths to step into their footprints and do not commit the error of death before the Most High God, lest he hide his face from thee, and return thee into the hands of thy transgression and root thee out of the land, and thy seed from under heaven, and thy name be destroyed and thy seed from all the earth. 20. Preserve thyself from all their deeds and from all their uncleanness, and observe the observance of the Lord Most High and do his will and do right in all things. 21. And he will bless thee in all thy deeds, and will bring forth from thee a plant of righteousness in all the earth, in all the generations of the earth. And my name shall be known, and thy name, under heaven, in all the days. 22. Go, my son, in peace. May the Most High God, my God and thy God, strengthen thee to do his will, and may he bless all thy seed and the descendants of thy seeds to the generations of eternity, with all the blessings of righteousness, that thou mayest be a blessing on all the earth." 23. And he went out from him, rejoicing happy.

CHAP. XXII. 1. And it happened in the first week of the forty-third [fourth] jubilee, in the second year, that is the year in which Abraham died; Isaac and Ishmael came from the fountain of the oath that they might celebrate the festival of the seven days, that is, the festival of the first-fruits of the harvest, with Abraham, their father; and Abraham rejoiced because his two sons came to him. 2. For Isaac had much possessions in Beer-Sheba, and Isaac went out to see his possessions and returned to his father. 3. And in these days Ishmael came to see his father, and they all came together, and Isaac offered up a sacrifice as a burnt offering, and brought it upon the altar which his father had made at Hebron. 4. And he offered a thank offering and made a feast of joy before his brother Ishmael, and Rebecca made new cakes out of new grain, and she gave thereof to Jacob, her best son, that he should bring to Abraham, his father, from the first-fruits of the land, that he might eat and bless the Creator of all before he died. 5. And Isaac, too, sent by the hand of Jacob, who excelled, a thank offering to Abraham, that he should drink and eat. 6. And he ate and drank and blessed the Most High God, who had created the heavens and the earth, and had made all the fat of the earth and had given it to the children of men to eat and to drink and that they should bless their Creator. 7. "And now I humbly thank thee, my Lord, that thou hast shown to me this day: behold, I am one hundred and seventy-five years old and full of days, and all the days were peace. 8. The sword of the hater did not overcome me in all that thou hast given me and my children all the days of my life until the present day. 9. My God, thy grace be over thy servant and over the seed of his sons, that he may be to thee a chosen nation and an inheritance from amongst all the nations of the earth, from now on and to all the days of the generations of the earth unto all eternities." 10. And he called Jacob and said to him: "My son Jacob, the Lord of all bless thee and strengthen thee to do righteousness and his will before him, and may he choose thee and thy seed that ye may be a people for his inheritance, according to his will in all the days. 11. And thou, my son Jacob, come hither and kiss me." 12. And he approached and kissed him, and he said: "Blessed be Jacob, my son, and all his children to the Lord Most High in all eternities; may the Lord give thee a seed of righteousness from among thy sons, to sanctify him in the midst of all the earth; and may all the nations serve thee and bow down to thy seed. 13. Become powerful before men, as thou rulest over all the seed of the earth and among the seed of Seth, when thy path and the path of thy sons is just for being his holy nation. 14. May the Most High God give thee all the blessings with which he blessed me and with which he blessed Noah and Adam; may they rest upon the sacred head of thy seed to all the generations and to eternity. 15. And may the Lord preserve thee clean from all unclean defilement, that thou mayest be forgiven of all the sins which without knowledge thou hast committed, and may he strengthen thee and bless thee, and mayest thou inherit the whole earth. 16. And may he renew his covenant with thee, that thou mayest be to him a nation for his inheritance to all eternities, and he may be to thee and to thy seed a God in reality and in truth in all the days of the earth. 17. And thou, my son Jacob, remember my words and observe the commandments of Abraham, thy father; withdraw from among the Gentiles and do not eat with them, and do not according to their actions, and be not their companion; for their actions are unclean and all their ways are defiled and their sacrifices an abomination. 18. They sacrifice to the dead, and the evil spirits they worship, and in the graves they eat, and all their doings are in vain and for naught. 19. They have no heart to think and no eyes to see any of their actions and when they err, saying to a piece of wood, "Thou art my God," and to a stone, "Thou art my Lord and my saviour," and these have no heart. 20. And thou, my son Jacob, may the Most High Lord aid thee, and the God of heaven bless thee and preserve thee from all their uncleanness and from all their error. 21. Be thou on thy guard, my son Jacob, that thou takest not a wife from among all the seed of the daughters of Canaan, for all its seed is to be rooted out of the land; for on account of the sin of Ham and the transgression of Canaan also all his seed will be destroyed from the earth, and none will be left and escape of them on the day of judgment. 22. And all those that worship idols and all haters will have no hope in the land of the living, for they will descend into Sheol and will go unto the place of judgment, and there will not be any remembrance of them on the earth; just as the children of Sodom were taken away from the earth, there will be taken away all those that worship idols. 23. Fear not, my son Jacob, and do not tremble, son of Abraham; the Most High God will protect thee from all destruction, and from all the paths of error he will deliver thee. 24. This house I have built for myself, that I might place my name above it upon the land which is given to thee and to thy seed forever, and that it should be called the house of Abraham; it is given to thee and to thy seed forever, since thou wilt build up my house and wilt establish my name before God unto eternity, and thy seed and thy name will stand in all the generations of the earth." 25. And he ceased speaking and commanding and blessing. 26. And the two lay together on one bed, and Jacob slept in the bosom of Abraham, the father of his father, and his thoughts kissed him seven times, and his love and his heart rejoiced over him. 26. And he blessed him with his whole heart and said: "The Most High God, the God of all, the Creator of all, who has led me out of Ur of the Chaldees, that he might give me this land as an inheritance to eternity and that I should establish a holy seed, may the Most High be blessed to eternity." 28. And he blessed Jacob and said: "My son, who is in all my heart and in all my thoughts, may I rejoice in him, and may thy grace and thy mercy be extensive over him and over his seed all the days. 29. And do not desert him and do not neglect him from now on and to the eternity of days, and may thy eyes be open over him and over his seed, that thou protectest him and blessest him and sanctifiest him, to be a nation for thy inheritance. 30. And bless him with all thy blessings from now on and to all days to eternity, and renew thy covenant, and be merciful with him and with his seed, in all thy will to all the generations of the earth."

CHAP. XXIII. 1. And he laid two fingers of Jacob upon his eyes, and he blessed the God of gods, and he covered his face and stretched out his feet and slept the sleep of eternity and was gathered to his father. 2. And during all this, Jacob was lying on his bosom and did not know that Abraham, the father of his father, was dead. 3. And Jacob awoke from his sleep, and, behold, Abraham was cold like ice, and he said, "Father! father!" and no one answered, and he knew that Abraham was dead. 4. And he arose from his bosom and ran and told it to

Rebecca, his mother, and Rebecca went to Isaac in the night and told him, and they went together and Jacob with them, and a lamp was in his hand, and going they found Abraham as a corpse. 5. And Isaac fell upon the face of his father Abraham, and wept and blessed him and kissed him; and the words were heard in the house of Abraham, and Ishmael, his son, arose and came to his father Abraham, and wept over Abraham, his father, he and all the house of Abraham, and they wept exceedingly. 6. And his sons Isaac and Ishmael buried him in the double cave, near to Sarah, his wife, and they mourned over him forty days, all the people of his house, Isaac and Ishmael and all their children and the children of Keturah in their places; and the lamentation and weeping over Abraham was ended. 7. And he lived three jubilees and four weeks of years, one hundred and seventy-five years, and the days of his life were completed, and he was old, perfect in days. 8. For the days of the lives of the first fathers were nineteen jubilees, and after the flood they began to decrease from nineteen jubilees, diminishing in the jubilees and becoming speedily old and satisfying their days on account of the many sufferings and the wickedness of their ways, with the exception of Abraham. 9. But Abraham was perfect in his deeds with the Lord and well pleasing and in righteousness all the days of his life; and behold, he did not complete four jubilees in his life until he grew old on account of wickedness, and satisfied with days. 10. And all the generations that arise from then and unto the day of the great judgment age die speedily before completing two jubilees. 11. And it will be since their knowledge leaves them on account of their old age that also all their knowledge ceases. 12. And on that day if a man lives a jubilee and a half jubilee, they say concerning him, "He has lived long;" and the mass of his days are sufferings and pain and trouble and no peace, for punishment follows upon punishment, hostility upon hostility, trouble upon trouble, wickedness upon wickedness, sickness upon sickness, and all evil judgments of this kind, as sickness and inflammation and hail and ice and snow and fever and suffering and becoming stiff, and sterility and death and sword and captivity and all the punishments and sufferings. 13. All this comes in the evil generation which sins upon the earth with the uncleanness of fornication and defilement and the abomination of their deeds. 14. And then they will say: "The days of the fathers were many, even to one thousand years, and were good, and behold the days of our lives, if a man has lived many, are seventy years, and if he is strong, eighty years, and all were evil and no peace will be in this evil generation." 15. And in that generation the children will be about to upbraid their fathers and their sires concerning the sin, and concerning the injustice, and concerning the words of their mouth, and concerning the great wickedness which they do, and concerning their deserting the ordinances which the Lord had covenanted between them and him, that they should observe and do all his commandments and his ordinances and all his laws and not depart to the right or to the left. 16. For all are wicked, and every mouth speaks transgression, and all their deeds are unclean and an abomination, and all their paths are contamination and uncleanness and destruction. 17. Behold, the earth will be destroyed on account of all their deeds, and there will be no seed of wine and no oil, because all their deeds are unbelief, and they all will be destroyed together, the beasts and the animals and the birds and all the fish of the sea, on account of the sons of men. 18. And they will contend with each other, the young with the old and the old with the young; the poor with the rich, and the lowly with the great, and the beggar with the prince, on account of the law and on account of the covenant, for they have forgotten his commandments and his covenant and the festivals and the months and the sabbaths and the jubilees and all law. 19. And they will arise with swords and murder to bring them back to the path, but they will not return until the blood of many has been spilt upon the earth, one over the other. 20. And those who escape will not return on the path of righteousness from their wickedness, for they all will arise for a robbery for wealth, that each one may take that which is his neighbors' and be called by a great name, but not in reality and in truth, and the most holy will be defiled in the uncleanness of the destruction of their defilement. 21. And a great punishment will be over the deeds of this generation from the Lord, and he will give them over to the sword and to judgment and to captivity and to robbery and to devouring. 22. And he will awaken over them the sinners of the Gentiles, who will have no mercy or grace for them, and who regard the face of none, neither old nor young nor any one; for they are wicked and powerful that they act more wickedly than all the children of men; and in Israel they practise violence and sin in Jacob, and the blood of many will be spilt on the land; and there will be none to gather and to bury. 23. And in those days they will cry aloud and call and pray that they be saved from the hands of the sinful Gentiles, and there will be none to save them. 24. And the heads of the children will be white with gray hair, and a child of three weeks will appear as old as a man of a hundred years, and their standing will be destroyed by trouble and oppression. 25. And in those days the children will begin to seek the laws and to seek the commandments and to return to the path of righteousness. 26. And the days will begin to increase and grow many, and the children of men generation by generation and day by day, until their days approach to one thousand years and to a multitude of years and days. 27. And no one will be old or satisfied with days, for all will be [like] children and youths. 28. And all their days will be in peace, and in joy they will end them and live, and there will be no satan nor any destroyer, for all their days will be days of peace and healing and blessings. 29. And at that time the Lord will heal his servants, and they will arise and will see great peace and will cast out their enemies; and the just shall see it and be thankful and rejoice in joy to all eternity, and shall see judgment and curses upon all their enemies. 30. And their bones shall rest in the earth, but their spirits shall increase in joy, and they shall know that the Lord is the doer of judgment, and gives mercy to the hundreds and thousands and to all that love him. 31. And thou, Moses, write down all these words, for thus are they written, and they have raised them upon the tablets of heaven to the generation of eternity.¹

CHAP. XXIV. 1. And it happened after the death of Abraham that the Lord blessed Isaac, his son, and he arose from Hebron and went and dwelt at the fountain of the vision, in the first year of the third week of this jubilee, seven years. 2. And in the first year of the fourth week a famine began in the land, in addition to the first famine which was in the days of Abraham. 3. And Jacob cooked a mess of lentils, and Esau came from the field hungry. 4. And he said to Jacob, his brother, "Give me of thy mess of pulse;" and Jacob said to him, "Give up to me thy right of first birth, and I will give thee bread and also from this mess of pulse." 5. And Esau said in his heart, "I shall die; what is it to me to be born first?" 6. And he said to Jacob, "I will give it to you." 7. And Jacob said, "Swear to me this day," and he swore to him. 8. And Jacob gave to his brother Esau bread and the mess, and he ate and was satisfied, and Esau despised his right of first birth; and from this was Esau called Edom,² on account of the mess of grain which Jacob gave him for his right of first birth. 9. And Jacob became the older, but Esau diminished from his greatness. 10. And the famine was over the land, and Isaac went to go down to Egypt in the second year of this week, and he went to the king of the Philistines at Gêrârâ, to Abimelech. 11. And the Lord appeared to him and said to him: "Do not go down to Egypt; dwell in the land which I tell thee of: be a stranger in this land, and I will be with thee and will bless thee. 12. For to thee and to thy seed I will give all this land, and I will confirm my oath which I swore to Abraham, thy father, and I will increase thy seed like the stars of the heavens, and I will give to thy seed all this land. 13. And in thy seed shall be blessed all the nations of the earth, because thy father hearkened unto my voice and observed my words and my commandments and my law and my ordinances and my covenant; and now hear my voice and dwell in this land." 14. And he dwelt at Gerar three weeks of years. 15. And Abimelech commanded on his account and on account of all that was his, saying: "Every man that touches him or any thing that is his, shall surely die." 16. And Isaac increased in Philistia, and he secured many possessions, oxen and sheep and camels and asses and many possessions. 17. And he sowed in the land of Philistia and he raised a hundred-fold, and Isaac became exceedingly great, and the Philistines were jealous of him, and all the wells which the young men of Abraham had dug during the life of Abraham the Philistines covered after the death of Abraham and filled them with earth. 18. And Abimelech said to Isaac: "Go from me, for thou art exceedingly greater than I;" and Isaac went in the first year of this seventh week from there, and migrated to valleys of Gêrânôn. 19. And they returned and dug open the wells of water, which the servants of Abraham, his father, had dug, and which the Philistines had covered over after the death of Abraham, his father, and he called their names as Abraham, his father, had named them. 20. And the young men of Isaac dug wells in the valley, and found living water; and the shepherds of Gêrânôn quarrelled with the shepherds of Isaac, saying, "This is our water," and Isaac called the name of this well Contention, "because ye have contended with us." 21. And they dug another well, and quarrelled on its account, and Isaac called its name Narrowness. 22. And he arose from there, and they dug another well, and did not quarrel on its account, and he called its name Extension, and Isaac said, "Now the Lord has extended us;" and he increased in the land. 23. And he ascended from there to the well of the oath in the first year of the first week in the forty-third jubilee. 24. And the Lord appeared to him in this night, at the new moon of the first month, and said to him: "I am the God of Abraham, thy father: fear not, for I am with thee, and I will bless thee and increase thy seed like the sand of the sea, on account of Abraham, my servant." 25. And he built an altar there where Abraham, his father, had first built one, and he called upon the name of the Lord, and offered sacrifices to the God of Abraham, his father. And they dug a well and found living water. 26. And the young men of Isaac dug another well, and did not find water, and they went and told Isaac that they had not found water, and Isaac said: "I have sworn this day to the Philistines, and this is to us the affair." 27. And Isaac called the name of this place The Well of the Oath, for there had he sworn to Abimelech and Akôsat, his friend, and Phikôl his companion. 28. And Isaac knew on that day that in injustice they had sworn to them to keep the peace with them. 29. And Isaac on that day cursed the Philistines, and he said: "Cursed be the Philistines to the day of wrath and rage above all the nations: may the Lord make them an ignominy and a curse and anger and rage in the hands of sinful nations, and by the hands of the Hittites let him root them out. 30. And whoever escapes from the sword of the enemy and from the Hittites, may the people of the just root them out in judgment from under heaven, for they will be enemies and haters to my children in their days over the earth. 31. And may no remnant of them be left nor may any be saved on the day of the judgment of wrath, for to destruction and rooting out and being destroyed from the land are all the seed of the Philistines, and no remnant or name shall be left of their seed over the earth. 32. For even if he had ascended to heaven, they would bring him down from there; and if he is fortified upon the earth they will tear him from there; and if he hides himself among the Gentiles, they will destroy him from there; and even if he descends into Sheôl, there too shall his judgment be great, and no peace shall be to him; and if he go into captivity, by the hand of those that seek his soul on the way he shall be killed, and no name or seed shall be left him on the whole earth, for he shall go into the curse of eternity." 33. And thus is it written and engraved concerning him on the tablets of heaven, to do to him on the day of judgment, that he may be rooted out of the earth.

CHAP. XXV. 1. And in the second year of this week in this jubilee Rebecca called Jacob her son, and spake to him, saying: "My son, do not take to thyself a wife from among the daughters of Canaan, like Esau, thy brother, who took to himself as wives two from the seed of Canaan, and they embittered my spirit with all their unclean deeds, for all their deeds are fornication and shame, and there is no righteousness in them, but it is evil. 2. And I, my son, love thee exceedingly, and my mercy, my son, blesses thee at every hour and watch of the night; and now, my son, hear my voice, and do the will of thy mother, and do not take to thyself a wife from among the daughters of this land, except from the house of thy father and except from the family of thy father: take to thyself a wife from the house of my father, and the Most High God will bless thee, and thy children will be a generation of righteousness and thy seed holy." 3. And then spake Jacob with his mother Rebecca, and said to her: "Behold, I am now nine weeks of years old and know no woman: I have touched none nor betrothed myself to any, nor do I think of taking to myself a wife from all the seed of the daughters of Canaan. 4. For I remember, O mother, the words of Abraham, our father, that he commanded me not to take my wife from among all the seed of the house of Canaan, but from the seed of my father's house I should take to myself a wife and from my relationship. 5. I have heard before that daughters have been born to Laban, thy brother, and upon them is my heart set to take a wife of them. 6. On this account I have preserved myself in my spirit not to sin nor defile myself in all my ways all the days of my life, for with reference to lust and fornication my father Abraham gave me many commands. 7. And with all that he has commanded me these twenty-two years my brother contends with me and continually converses, saying: My brother, take to wife one of the sisters of my two wives; but I am not willing to do as my brother has done. 8. I swear before thee, my mother, that all the days of my life I will not take to myself a wife from the seed of all the daughters of Canaan, and will not act wickedly as my brother has done. 9. And do not fear, mother; trust me that I will do thy will, and will walk in rectitude, and my paths will not be destroyed in eternity." 10. And then she lifted up her face to heaven and extended the fingers of her hand toward heaven, and opened her mouth and blessed the Most High God, who had created heaven and earth, and she gave him thanks and praise. 11. And she said: "Blessed be the Lord God and blessed be his name for ever and ever, who has given to me Jacob as a pure son and a holy seed; for thine he is and thine shall be his seed unto all the days and in all the generations of the world: 12. Bless him, O Lord, and place the blessing of righteousness in my mouth that I may bless him." 13. And at that hour the Holy Spirit descended into her mouth, and she placed her two hands upon the head of Jacob, and she said: "Blessed art thou, Lord of righteousness and God of the worlds, and thee do all the generations of men praise: may he give thee, my son, the path of righteousness, and reveal to thy seed righteousness. 14. And may thy sons increase in thy life, and stand to the number of the months of the year, and may thy sons increase and grow more than the stars of the heavens, and more than the sand of the sea increase their numbers. 15. And may he give them this fruitful land, as he said he would give it to Abraham and his seed after him in all the days, and may they possess it to eternity. 16. And may I see for thee, my son, blessed children in this life, and may holy seed be all thy seed. 17. And as the spirit of thy mother in her life caused thee to rest in her womb to give thee birth, thus my affection blesses thee, and my breasts bless thee and my mouth and my tongue praise thee. 18. Increase and be poured over the earth, and thy seed be perfect in all the earth in the joy of heaven and earth, and may thy seed rejoice, and on the great day of peace may the peace of thy name be theirs. 19. And may thy seed abide to all the worlds, and may the Most High God be their God, and may the Most High God dwell with them and his sanctuary be built to all the eternities. 20. He that blesses thee be blessed, and all flesh that curses thee in lies, may it be cursed." 21. And she kissed him and said to him, "May the Lord of the world love thee as the heart of thy mother, and may her affection rejoice in thee and bless thee." 22. And she ceased from blessing him.

CHAP. XXVI. 1. And in the seventh year of this week Isaac called Esau, his elder son, and said to him: "My son, I am old, and behold my eyes are dull of seeing, and I do not know the day of my death. 2. And now take thy hunting weapon and thy bow and thy quiver, and go to the field and hunt and catch something for me, my son, and prepare me a meal such as my soul loves, and bring it to me, so that I may eat and my soul bless thee before I die." 3. But Rebecca heard Isaac speaking to Esau. 4. And Esau went early to the field to hunt and catch something and bring it to his father. 5. And Rebecca called Jacob, her son, and said to him: "Behold, I have heard thy father Isaac speaking with thy brother Esau, saying, 'Hunt me something and prepare a meal and bring it in to me, and I will bless thee before the Lord before I die.' 6. But now hear, my son, my words which I command thee: Go to thy flocks and bring me two good young kids, and I will make a meal out of them such as he loves, and thou shalt bring it in to thy father and he shall eat, that he may bless thee before the Lord before he dies, and thou become blessed." 7. And Jacob said to his mother Rebecca: "O mother, I will not hold back any thing that my father may eat and is pleasing to him; only I fear, my mother, that he will know my voice and will desire to touch me; and thou knowest that I am smooth, but my brother Esau is rough, and I may be before his eyes like an evil-doer, and I should do a deed which he has not commanded me, and he might become angry with me and I should bring a curse upon myself and not a blessing." 8. And Rebecca, his mother, said to him: "Upon me, my son, be thy curse; and again listen to my voice." 9. And Jacob obeyed the words of his mother Rebecca, and he went and took two good and fat young kids and brought them in to his mother, and his mother made a meal out of them as he liked it. 10. And Rebecca took the clothing of her elder son Esau, the most precious with her in the house, and clothed Jacob with them, and the skins of the kids she placed over his hands and upon the exposed parts of his body; and she gave the meat and the bread which she had made into the hands of her son Jacob. 11. And he went in to his father and said: "Behold, I am thy son; I have done as thou hast said to me: arise and sit up and eat of what I have hunted, my father, that thy soul may bless me." 12. And Isaac said to his son, "What is this, that thou hast so suddenly found it, my son?" 13. And Jacob said to him: "He who has caused me to find it, thy God, is before me." 14. And Isaac said: "Come hither to me, that I may touch thee, my son, if thou art my son Esau, or if not." 15. And Jacob came near to Isaac his father, and he touched him.

16. And he said: "The voice is the voice of Jacob, but the hand is the hand of Esau;" and he did not know him, for it was a fate from heaven to remove his spirit; and Isaac did not know him, for his hands were like his [i. e., Esau's] hands, and hairy like the hands of Esau, so that he should bless him. 17. And he said, "Art thou my son Esau?" And he said, "I am thy son." And he said: "Bring hither to me, and I will eat of what thou hast hunted, my son, that my soul may bless thee." 18. And he brought to him the meal, and he ate; and he brought in wine, and he drank. 19. And Isaac, his father, said to him: "Approach and kiss me, my son;" and he approached and kissed him. 20. And he smelt the smell of his clothes, and he blessed him, and said: "Behold, the smell of my son is like the smell of the field which the Lord has blessed; and may the Lord give to thee and increase thee like the dew of the heaven and the dew of earth, and may grain increase and oil be plenty to thee, and may the nations serve thee and the peoples bow down to thee. 21. Be the lord of thy brother, and may the sons of thy mother bow down to thee, and may all the blessings with which the Lord has blessed me and has blessed my father Abraham be thine and thy seed's to eternity: he that curseth thee shall be cursed, and he that blesseth thee shall be blessed." 22. And when Isaac ended blessing his son Jacob, then Jacob went out from Isaac his father to hide himself. 23. But Esau, his brother, came in from hunting, and he too prepared a meal and brought it in to his father, and said to his father, "Arise, my father, and eat of my prey, that thy soul may bless me." 24. And Isaac, his father, said to him, "Who art thou?" 25. And he said to him, "I am thy first-born son Esau; I have done as thou hast commanded me." 26. And Isaac was very much astounded, and said: "Who was he that hunted and caught something for me, and brought it in, and I ate of all before thou camest in, and I blessed him? 27. Blessed shall he be and his seed to eternity." 28. And when Esau heard the words of his father Isaac he cried with a loud and very bitter voice, and said to his father: "Bless me too, father!" 29. And he said to him, "Thy brother came and took thy blessing." 30. [And Esau said:] "And now I know why his name is called Jacob; behold he has ensnared me twice; the first time he took my birth-right, and now he takes my blessing." 31. And he said, "Hast thou not a blessing left for me, my father?" 32. And Isaac answered and said to Esau: "Behold, I have set him as lord over thee and all his brothers, and have given them to be his servants, and with much grain and oil and wine I have strengthened him, and what shall I do to thee, my son?" 33. And Esau said to his father Isaac: "Hast thou but one blessing, father? Bless also me, father." 34. And Esau raised his voice and wept. And Isaac answered and said to him: "Behold, from the fatness of the earth shall be thy substance and from the dew of heaven above; and thou shalt live by thy sword and thou shalt serve thy brother." 35. And it will happen when thou art great and shalt break his yoke off thy neck, thou shalt commit a sin unto death, and all thy seed shall be rooted out from under heaven." 36. And Esau was wroth at Jacob on account of the blessing with which his father had blessed him; and he said in his heart, "Now the days of grief may come for my father, that I may kill my brother Jacob."

CHAP. XXVII. 1. And the words of Esau, her elder son, were told to Rebecca in a dream, and Rebecca, sending, called for Jacob, her younger son. 2. And she said to him: "Behold, thy brother Esau is making his plans to kill thee; and now hear my words: arise and flee to my brother Laban and dwell with him a number of days, until the anger of thy brother has turned and his anger has departed from thee and he forget every thing that thou hast done him, and I will send to bring thee from there." 3. And Jacob said: "I have no fear: if he desires to kill me, I will kill him." 4. And she said to him, "Then should I be deprived of both my sons in one day." 5. And

Jacob said to his mother Rebecca: "Behold, thou knowest that my father is old, and I see that his eyes have become dull, and if I leave him it will be evil in his eyes that I leave him and go away from thee, and my father will be angry and will curse me. I will not go; only if he sends me will I go from here." 6. And Rebecca said to Jacob: "I will go in and will speak to him, and he will send thee." 7. And Rebecca went in and spake to Isaac: "I am aggrieved in my life on account of the two daughters of Heth which Esau has taken to himself as wives from among the daughters of Canaan: why should I yet live? for the daughters of the land of Canaan are evil." 8. And Isaac called his son Jacob, and blessed him, and admonished him, and said to him: "Do not take to thee a wife from among all the daughters of Canaan; arise and go to Mesopotamia, to the house of the father of thy mother, to the house of Bethuel, and take to thee from there a wife from among the daughters of Laban, the brother of thy mother. And may the God of heaven bless thee and increase and enlarge thee, and become thou a collection of nations, and may he give the blessings of thy father Abraham to thee and thy seed after thee, that thou mayest inherit the land of thy pilgrimage and all the land which the Lord gave to Abraham: go, my son, in peace!" 9. And Isaac sent away Jacob, and he went to Mesopotamia to Laban, the son of Bethuel, the Syrian, the brother of Rebecca, the mother of Jacob. 10. And it happened when Jacob had arisen to go to Mesopotamia, the spirit of Rebecca was sad after her son had gone, and she wept. 11. And Isaac said to Rebecca: "My sister, weep not on account of Jacob, my son, for he is going in peace, and in peace he will return. 12. The Most High God will preserve him from all evil and will be with him, for he will not desert him any day of his life, for I perceive that the Lord will prosper his path wherever he goes, until he returns in peace to us and we see him in peace. 13. Do not fear on his account, my sister, for right is his path and he is a perfect and faithful man and will not be destroyed: do not weep!" 14. And Isaac comforted Rebecca on account of Jacob her son, and blessed him. 15. And Jacob went from The Well of the Oath that he might come to Haran in the first year of the second week in the forty-fourth jubilee, and came to Lôzâ among the mountains, that is, Bethel, in the beginning of the first month of this week, and he came to the place at eve, and he turned off from the way toward the west from the highway in this night, and slept there, for the sun had set. 16. And he took one from among the stones of that place and laid it under a tree, and he was travelling alone, and he slept. 17. And he dreamed in that night a dream, and behold, a ladder was planted upon the earth, and its head reached to the heaven, and behold, the angels of the Lord ascended and descended on it, and behold, the Lord stood upon it. 18. And the Lord spake unto Jacob and said: "I am the Lord God of Abraham, thy father, and the God of Isaac: the land upon which thou art sleeping I will give to thee and to thy seed after thee, and thy seed shall be like the sand of the sea, and thou shalt increase to the west and east and south and north; and all the countries of the nations shall be blessed in thee and in thy seed. 19. And behold, I will be with thee and still watch over thee in all things wherever thou goest, and will bring thee back into this land in peace; for I will not leave thee until I do all that I have said to thee." 20. And Jacob finished his sleep, and said: "Truly this place is the house of the Lord, and I did not know it." 21. And he was afraid, and said: "Dreadful is this place, which is nothing but the house of the Lord, and this is the portal of heaven." 22. And Jacob awoke early in the morning and took the stone from under his head and placed it up as a pillar, as a sign of this place; and he poured oil upon its head, and called the name of this place Bethel; but its first name was Lôzâ, like the land. 23. And Jacob prayed a prayer to the Lord, saying: "If the Lord will be with me and guard me on this path upon which I walk, and if the Lord give me bread to eat and clothes to clothe myself, and I return in peace to the house of my father, then the Lord shall be my God, and this stone, which I have set up as a pillar, as a sign in this place, shall be a house of the Lord. 24. And all things that thou givest me, of that I will give the tenth to thee, my God."

CHAP. XXVIII. 1. And he lifted up his feet and went to the land of the east, to Laban, the brother of his mother Rebecca, and he was with him and served him for Rachel, his daughter one week. And in the first year of the third week he said to him: "Give me my wife, for whom I have served thee seven years. 2. And Laban said to Jacob, "I will give thee thy wife." And Laban made a feast, and took Leah, his older daughter, and gave her to Jacob as a wife, and gave her Zolapha as a maid to serve her; and Jacob did not know it, for he thought she was Rachel. 3. And he went in to her, and behold, it was Leah; and Jacob was angry at Laban and said to him: "Why hast thou done thus? 4. Have I not served thee for Rachel and not for Leah? Why hast thou injured me? Take thy daughter and I will go; for thou hast done evil to me." 5. For Jacob loved Rachel more than Leah, for the eyes of Leah were dull, but her form was very beautiful; but Rachel had beautiful eyes and a beautiful and very attractive form. 6. And Laban said to Jacob: "It is not the custom in our land to give the younger before the elder." 7. And it is not right to do this, for thus is it ordained and written on the tablets of heaven, that no one shall give his younger daughter before the older, but shall give the younger after her. 8. And the man that does this loads sin upon himself on this account in heaven, and no one who does this is just, for it is an evil deed before the Lord. 9. And thou command the children of Israel that they do not this thing, and neither take nor give the younger before the older has been established, for it is very wicked. 10. And Laban said to Jacob:

“Let the seven days of this feast pass by, and I will give thee Rachel that thou mayest serve me another seven years, that thou mayest herd my sheep, as thou hast done in the first week.” 11. And on the day when the seven days of the feast of Leah were passed, Laban gave Rachel to Jacob, that he might serve him a second seven years, and he gave Rachel Balla, the sister of Zalapha, as a maid to serve her. 12. And he served seven years again for Rachel, for Leah had been given to him. 13. And the Lord opened the womb of Leah, and she became pregnant and bore Jacob a son, and he called his name Reuben, on the fourteenth of the ninth month of the first year of the third week. 14. But the womb of Rachel was closed, for the Lord saw that Leah was hated but Rachel was beloved. 15. And again Jacob went in to Leah, and she conceived and bore Jacob a second son, and he called his name Simeon, on the twenty-first of the tenth month and the third year of this week. 16. And again Jacob went in to Leah, and she became pregnant and bore him a third son, and he called his name Levi, in the beginning of the third month, in the sixth year of this week. 17. And again Jacob went in to Leah, and she became pregnant and bore him a fourth son, and he called his name Judah, on the fifteenth of the third month in the first year of the fourth week. 18. And in all this Rachel was jealous of Leah, for she did not bear; and she said to Jacob, “Give me a son!” 19. And Jacob said to her, “Am I preventing fruit of the womb from thee: have I left thee?” 20. And when Rachel saw that Leah had borne Jacob four sons, Reuben, Simeon, Levi, and Judah, then she said to him, “Go in to Balla, my maid, and she will conceive and bear a son for me.” 21. And he went in to her, and she became pregnant and bore him a son, and she called his name Dan, on the ninth of the sixth month, in the sixth year of the third week. 22. And again a second time he went in to Balla, and she became pregnant and bore Jacob another son, and Rachel called his name Naphtalim, in the fifth of the seventh month of the second year of the fourth week. 23. And when Leah saw that she had become sterile and did not bear, she became jealous of Rachel, and she gave Zalapha, her maid, to Jacob as a wife, and she became pregnant and bore him a son, and she called his name Gad, on the twelfth of the eighth month in the third year of the fourth week. 24. And again he went in to her, and she became pregnant and bore him another son, and Leah called his name Asher, on the second of the eleventh month in the fifth year of the fourth week. 25. And Jacob went in to Leah, and she became pregnant and bore Jacob a son, and she called his name Issachar, on the fourth of the fifth month in the fourth year of the fourth week, and she gave him to a nurse. 26. And Jacob again went in to her, and she became pregnant and she bore him two [children], a son and a daughter, and she called his name Zebulon and the name of the daughter Dinah, on the seventh of the seventh month in the sixth year of the fourth week. 27. And the Lord was gracious to Rachel and opened her womb, and she became pregnant and bore a son, and she called his name Joseph, in the beginning of the fourth month of the sixth year of this fourth week. 28. And in the days when Joseph was born Jacob said to Laban: "Give me my wives and my children, and I will go to my father Isaac, and I will make for myself a house, for I have completed the years which I have served thee for thy two daughters, and I will go to the house of my father." 29. And Laban said to Jacob: "Remain with me for wages, and herd my folds again and receive thy wages." 30. And they agreed with each other, that he would give him as wages all the young sheep and goats should be his wages. And the possessions of Jacob increased very much, and he possessed oxen and sheep and asses and camels and sons and daughters. 31. And Laban and his sons were jealous of Jacob, and Laban gathered his sheep away from him, and thought out evil.

given birth to Joseph that Laban went out to shear his sheep, for they were distant from him a journey of three days. 2. And Jacob saw that Laban had gone to shear his sheep, and he called Leah and Rachel, and spake unto their hearts, that they should go with him to the land of Canaan, for he told them all that he had seen in the dream, and all that he [God] had spoken to him, that he should return to the house of his father; and they said to him: "We will go everywhere thou goest, with thee we will go." 3. And Jacob blessed the God of his father Isaac, and the God of Abraham, the father of his father, and he arose and prepared his wives and children, and took all his possessions and crossed the river and came to the land of Gilead, and Jacob hid his heart from Laban and did not tell him. 4. And in the seventh year of the fourth week Jacob returned to Gilead in the first month, on the twenty-first; and Laban followed after him, and found Jacob in the mountains of Gilead, in the third month, on the twelfth thereof. 5. And the Lord did not permit him to injure Jacob, for he appeared to him in a dream by night; and Laban spake to Jacob. 6. And on the fifteenth thereof, on that day, Jacob made a feast to Laban and all who had come with him, and Jacob swore to Laban on this day and Laban to Jacob, that they would not cross for evil to one another the mountains of Gilead. 7. And he made there a large stone heap as a testimony; on this account the name of this place is called "The Stone Heap of Testimony;" such is the heap. 8. But before they had called the land of Gilead the land of Raphaim, for it was the land of the Raphaim, and the Raphaim, or giants, were born there, whose length is ten, nine, eight, and seven ells, and their dwellings were from the land of the sons of Ammon to Mount Hermon, and the seats of their kingdom were Kôrônâêm and Adrâ and Misûr and Bêôn. 9. And the Lord slew them on account of the wickedness of their deeds, for they were most terrible, and the Amorites inhabit it in their place, evil and sinful, and there is no nation to-day that has completed all their sin, and therefore they have no length of life upon the earth. 10. And Jacob sent Laban away, and he came into the land of Mesopotamia, the land of the east, but Jacob returned to the land of Gilead and crossed over the Jabbok in the ninth month on the eleventh thereof. 11. And on that day Esau, his brother, came to him, and they settled their troubles; and they went from here into the land of Seir, but Jacob dwelt in tents. 12. And in the first year of the fifth week of this jubilee he crossed the Jordan and lived opposite the Jordan, that he might pasture his sheep from the land of Stone Heap to Betâ-Zôn and to Dôtâêm and to Akrâbil. 13. And he sent to his father Isaac of all his possessions clothing and food and meat and drink and milk and oil and bread of milk and of the palms of the valley; and to his mother Rebecca he also sent four times a year, between the times of the months, between the plowing and the harvest, between the spring and the rain, and between winter and summer, to the tower of Abraham, for Isaac had returned from The Well of the Oath and had gone up to the tower of his father Abraham, and he dwelt there apart from his son Esau. 14. For in the days when Jacob went to Mesopotamia, Esau took to himself as wife Mâlit, the daughter of Ishmael, and collected all the herds of his father and his wives and went up and dwelt in the mountains of Seir, and left Isaac, his father, at The Well of the Oath alone; and Isaac went up from The Well of the Oath, and dwelt in the tower of Abraham, his father, on the mountains of Hebron. 15. And from here Jacob sent all things which he sent to his father Isaac and to his mother from time to time all their sorrows; and they blessed Jacob with all their heart and all their souls.

CHAP. XXX. 1. And in the first year of the sixth week he went up to Salem, which is opposite the east of Shechem, in peace, in the fourth month; and there they brought by force Dinah, the daughter of Jacob, into the house of Shechem, the son of Hamor, the Hivite prince of the land, and he slept with her and defiled her, and she was a small girl twelve years of age. 2. And he begged her father and her brothers for her, that she should be given to him as wife; and Jacob and his sons were angry on account of the men of Shechem, because they had defiled their sister Dinah; and they spoke with them for evil, and intrigued against and deceived them. 3. And Simeon and Levi secretly came to Shechem and inflicted punishment upon all the men of Shechem, and slew all the men they found in it, and did not leave a single one in it. 4. They killed all in torments, because they had dishonored their sister Dinah. 5. And thus ye shall not do from now on and to eternity to defile a daughter of Israel, for in heaven it was ordained over them as a punishment that they should root out all the men of Shechem, because they committed a shame on a daughter of Israel, and the Lord turned them over into the hands of the sons of Jacob, that they should root them out with the sword, and that they should inflict punishment upon them; and never again shall it be thus in Israel, that a daughter of Israel be defiled. 6. And if there is any man in Israel who desires to give his daughter or his sister to any man who is of the seed of the Gentiles, he shall surely die, and they shall slay him with stones, for he has committed a sin and a shame in Israel; and his wife they shall burn with fire, for she has defiled the name of the house of her father, and she shall be rooted out of Israel. 7. And no fornication or defilement shall be found in Israel all the generations of the earth; for Israel is holy to the Lord, and every man that defiles must surely die, and they shall slay him with stones. 8. For thus is it ordained and written on the tablets of heaven concerning all the seed of Israel, that he who defiles must surely die, and they shall slay him with stones. 9. And to this law there is no limit of days and no ceasing and no forgiveness, but he shall be rooted out who defiles his daughter, among all Israel, because he has given of his seed to Moloch and has sinned by defiling. 10. And thou, Moses, command the children of Israel and testify over them that they shall not give any of their daughters to the Gentiles and that they shall not take any of the daughters of the Gentiles; for this is accursed before the Lord. 11. And on this account I have written for thee in the words of the law all the deeds of Shechem which they did against Dinah, and how the children of Jacob conversed saying: "We will not give our daughter to an uncircumcised man, for this is disgraceful to us." 12. And it is disgraceful to Israel to those that give and to those that receive from the Gentiles any daughters, for it is unclean and accursed to Israel; and Israel will not be clean of this uncleanness of him who has of the daughters of the Gentiles for a wife, or who has given of his daughters to a man who is of any of the seed of the Gentiles; for there will be plagues upon plagues, curse upon curse, and all punishment and plagues and curses will come. 13. And if they do this thing, and if they blind their eyes to those that commit uncleanness and to those that defile the sanctuary of the Lord and those that profane his holy name, then shall the whole people together be punished, on account of all this uncleanness and this profaneness, and there will be no respect for persons, and no consideration for persons, and no taking of fruits from his hands and fruit offering and burnt offering and fat and incense offering as a sweet savour, that it may be acceptable. 14. And every man and woman in Israel who defiles the sanctuary shall be thus. 15. And on account of this I have commanded thee, saying: "Testify this testimony over Israel: see how it happened to the Shechemites and their sons, how they were given into the hands of the two sons of Jacob and they slew them in torments, and it was justice to them, and it is written down for justice concerning them."

CHAP. XXXI. 1. And in the new moon of the month, Jacob spoke to all the men of his house, saying: "Purify yourselves and change your clothes, and arising let us go up to Bethel, where I made a vow when I was fleeing from the face of Esau, my brother ; because he [God] has been with me, and has brought me into this land in peace. 2. And remove the false gods that are in your midst. 3. And tear away the false gods which are in your ears and on your necks, and the idols which Rachel took from her father Laban, and which she gave all to Jacob." 4. And he burned and broke and destroyed and hid them under an oak, which was in the land of Shechem. 5. And he ascended at the new moon of the seventh month to Bethel. 6. And he built an altar at the place where he had slept, and he erected there a monument, and he sent for his father Isaac to come to him to the sacrifice, and to his mother Rebecca. 7. And Isaac said: "Let my son Jacob come and let me see him before I die." 8. And Jacob went to Isaac his father, and to his mother Rebecca, to the house of his father Abraham, and he took two of his sons with him, Levi and Judah, and came to his father Isaac and his mother Rebecca. 9. And Rebecca came out of the tower to the front of the tower, that she might kiss Jacob and to embrace him, for her spirit was alive when she heard, "Behold thy son Jacob has come!" and she kissed him. 10. And she saw the two sons and she knew them, and said to him: 11. "Are these thy sons, my son?" and she embraced them and kissed them and blessed them, saying: "In you may the seed of Abraham be honored, and may ye be a blessing over the earth!" 12. And Jacob went in to his father Isaac to his chamber where he slept, and his two sons with him, and he took the hand of his father, and bending down kissed him, and Isaac clung to the neck of Jacob his son, and wept on his neck. 13. And the darkness left the eyes of Isaac, and he saw the two sons of Jacob, Levi and Judah, and he said, "Are these thy sons, my son? for they are like thee." 14. And he said that in truth they were his sons, and "in truth thou seest that they are my sons." 15. And they approached him, and they turned, and he kissed them and embraced them all together. 16. And the spirit of prophecy fell into his mouth, and he took Levi by the right hand, and Judah by the left hand. 17. And he turned to Levi and began to bless him first, saying, "May the Lord God of all, the Lord of all the worlds, bless thee and thy children in all the worlds. 18. And may the Lord give thee and thy seed greatness and great honor, and cause thee and thy seed to approach to him from among all flesh, that they shall serve him in his sanctuary like the angels of the face, and like the holy ones that shall be the seed of thy sons for honor and greatness and holiness: and may he make them great in all the worlds. 19. And they shall be princes and lords and leaders for all the seed of the sons of Jacob: they shall speak the words of the Lord in truth, and shall judge all his judgments in truth, and speak my ways to Jacob, and they shall appear to Israel: may the blessing of the Lord be given into their mouths, that they may bless all the seed of the beloved. 20. And thy mother has called thy name Levi, and in truth has she thus called thee: thou shalt be very near to the Lord, and shalt have a part with all the sons of Jacob: his table shall be thine, and thou and thy sons shall eat thereof, and to all the generations may thy table be full, and may thy food not decrease to all eternity. 21. And all those that hate thee shall fall before thee, and all thy enemies shall be rooted out and be destroyed, but they that bless thee shall be blessed, and all the nations that curse thee shall be cursed." 22. And to Judah he spoke: "May the Lord give thee strength and power that thou mayest tread down all that hate thee: be thou a prince, thou and one of thy sons over the sons of Jacob. 23. May thy name and the name of thy sons be one that goes and encompasses the whole earth and the cities; then shall the Gentiles fear thy face, and all the nations shall tremble and all the people shake. 24. In thee let there be help to Jacob, and in thee may deliverance be found for Israel. 25. And if thou sittest on the throne of the honor of thy righteousness, there shall be great peace to all the seed of the sons of the beloved. 26. He that blesseth thee shall be blessed, and all that hate and trouble thee, and those that curse thee, shall be rooted out and be destroyed from the earth, and shall be accursed." 27. And turning around he kissed him again and embraced him and rejoiced greatly; for he had seen sons of Jacob, who was his son in truth. 28. And he came from between his feet, and fell down and prostrated himself, and he blessed them, and he remained with Isaac, his father, on that night, and they ate and drank with joy. 29. And he caused the two sons of Jacob to sleep, the one at his right, the other at his left, and it was accounted to him for righteousness. 30. And Jacob told his father everything during the night, how the Lord had been merciful to him, and how he had prospered him in all his ways and had protected him from all evil. 31. And Isaac blessed the God of his father Abraham, who had not ceased his mercy and righteousness from the sons of his servant Isaac. 32. And in the morning Jacob told his father Isaac of the vow he had made to the Lord, and of the vision he had seen, and how he had built an altar, and that everything was ready for the sacrifice before the Lord, as he had vowed, and that he had come to place him upon an ass. 33. And Isaac said to his son Jacob: "I am not able to go with thee, for I am old and not able to endure the way: go, my son, in peace, for I am one hundred and sixty-five years old to-day; I am not able to travel. 34. Take thy mother and let her go with thee. 35. And I know, my son, that thou hast come on my account; and may this day be blessed upon which thou hast seen me alive and I have seen thee, my son. 36. Prosper, and fulfil the vow which thou hast vowed, and do not delay thy vow, for thou must seek the vow. 37. And now hasten to fulfil thy vow; and may he be pleased who has made all things, to whom thou hast made thy vow." 38. And he said to Rebecca: "Go with Jacob, thy son." 39. And Rebecca went with Jacob, and Deborah with her, and they came to Bethel. 40. And Jacob remembered the prayer with which his father had blessed him and his two sons, Levi and Judah, and he rejoiced and blessed the God of his fathers, Abraham and Isaac. 41. And he said: "Now I know that I have an eternal hope, and my sons also before the God of all; and thus it is ordained concerning the two, and they have placed it as a testimony for them to eternity, upon the tablets of heaven as Isaac blessed them.

CHAP. XXXII. 1. And he remained in that night in Bethel, and Levi dreamed that they had appointed and made him priest, and his sons to eternity, priests of the Most High God; and he awoke from his sleep and blessed the Lord. 2. And Jacob started early in the morning, on the fourteenth of this month, and the tenth of all that came with him of men and beasts, and gold, and all possessions and clothing. 3. And in those days Rachel became pregnant with her son Benjamin, and Jacob counted his sons from him on and upwards; and the portion of the Lord fell upon Levi, and his father clothed him with the garments of the priesthood, and filled his hands. 4. And on the fifteenth of this month he brought to the altar fifteen oxen from among the cattle, twenty-eight rams, and forty-nine sheep, and sixty lambs, and twenty-nine young goats, as a burnt sacrifice on the altar, and as an acceptable gift for a sweet savor to the Lord God. 5. This was the fulfilment of the vow he had made to give the tenth; together with their fruit and their drink offerings. 6. And when the fire had consumed them, he scattered frankincense over them on the fire; and for thank offering two oxen, and four rams, and four sheep, and a sheep of two years, and two young goats: thus he did distributing over seven days. 7. And he remained there eating, and all his sons and his men in joy seven days, and he blessed and thanked the Lord, who had delivered him from all his trouble, and to whom he had fulfilled his vow. 8. And he took the tenth of all the clean animals and made a burnt offering; and the unclean animals he gave to his son, and the men he gave him, and Levi exercised his priestly office in Bethel before Jacob, his father, in preference to his ten brothers, and he was there a priest, and Jacob fulfilled to him his vows: and thus he gave the tenth again to the Lord, and sanctified it, and it was holy for him. 9. And on this account it is ordained on the tablets of heaven as a law concerning the giving of a second tenth—to eat before the Lord at the place upon which he has chosen his name to dwell year after year, and to this law there is no limit of day to eternity. 10. And this ordinance is written to do it year after year for eating a second tenth before the Lord in the place which he has chosen, and nothing shall be left over from it to the following year. 11. For in its year shall the seed be eaten until the seed of the year and the wine change their days to the days of wine and oil, and to the days of oil in its season. 12. And all that is left thereof and which becomes old, let it be considered contaminated; burn it with fire, for it is unclean. 13. And thus they shall eat together in the sanctuary, and shall not let it become old. 14. And all the tenth of oxen and sheep shall be holy to the Lord, and shall belong to his priests, who will eat it before him from year to year; for thus is it ordained and engraven concerning the tenth on the tablets of heaven. 15. And in the following night, on the twenty-second day of this month, Jacob planned that he would build this place and erect a wall around it, and that he would sanctify it and make it holy to eternity, for himself and his children after him. 16. And the Lord appeared to him in the night, and blessed him, and said to him: “Thou shalt not call thy name Jacob only, but Israel also shall thy name be called.” 17. And he said to him again: “I am the Lord thy God, who has created heaven and earth; and I will increase and multiply thee exceedingly, and kings shall come from thee, and they shall rule over all, wherever the foot of the sons of man has trod. 18. And I will give to thy seed all the land under heaven, and they shall rule over all the nations as they desire, and after that they will gather to themselves the whole earth, and shall inherit the world.” 19. And he completed conversing with him, and ascended from there, and Jacob looked until he ascended to heaven. 20. And he saw in a vision of the night, and behold an angel descended from heaven with seven tablets in his hands, and he gave them to Jacob, and he read all that was written on them, what would happen to himself and his sons in all the years. 21. And he showed him all things that were written on the tablets, and said to him: "Do not build up this place, and do not make it an eternal sanctuary, and do not dwell here, for this is not the place. 22. Go to the house of Abraham, thy father, and dwell there with Isaac, thy father, until the day of the death of thy father. 23. For in Egypt thou shalt die in peace, and in this land thou shalt be buried in honor, in the grave of thy fathers, with Abraham and Isaac. 24. Fear not; for as thou hast seen and read it, thus shall it all be. 25. But write thou down all as thou hast seen and read." 26. And Jacob said: "How can I remember all as I have seen and read it?" 27. And he said to him: "I will recall it all for thee." 28. And he went up from there: and he awoke from his sleep and remembered all that he had seen and read, and he wrote down all the words that he had read and that he had seen. 29. And he stayed there yet another day, and sacrificed there according to all that had been ordained on former days, and called its name "addition," for this day was added; and the first day he called "the festival." 30. And thus it appeared that it would be, and it is written on the tablets of heaven; and on this account it was revealed to him, that he should celebrate it, and that he should add it to the seven days of the festival, and its name was called "addition," because it comes to the seven days; and thus is the festival by number of days of the year. 31. And in the night of the twenty-third of this month, Deborah, the nurse of Rebecca, died, and he buried her below the city under the oak of the river, and called the name of this river "the river of Deborah," and of the oak, "lamentation oak of Deborah." 32. And Rebecca went and returned to her house, to Isaac, his father; and Jacob sent by her rams and calves and sheep, that she should prepare for his father a meal, as he loved it. 33. And he too went after his mother until he came to the land of Kêbrâtân, and he dwelt there. 34. And Rachel in that night gave birth to a son, and called his name "Son of my sorrow," for she suffered in giving birth; but his father called him Benjamin, on the eleventh of the eighth month, in the first year of the sixth week of this jubilee. 35. And Rachel died there, and was buried in the land of Ephrathah, that is, Bethlehem ; and Jacob erected upon the grave of Rachel a column, on the road above her grave. .

CHAP. XXXIII. 1. And Jacob went and dwelt toward the north at Mâgdêlrâep. 2. And he went to his father Isaac, he and Leah, his wife, on the new moon of the tenth month. 3. And Reuben saw Balla, the maid of Rachel, the concubine of his father, while she was bathing in water at a hidden place, and he loved her. 4. And he hid himself at night, and he entered the house of Balla at night, and found her lying alone on her bed, and sleeping, and he lay down with her. 5. And she awoke, and saw, and behold, Reuben was lying with her on the bed ; and she uncovered the edge and seized him and cried out, and discovered that it was Reuben, and she was ashamed on his account, and let go her hand from him, and he fled. 6. And she lamented on account of this thing exceedingly, and did not mention it to anybody. 7. And when Jacob returned and sought her, she said to him: "I am not clean for thee, for I have been defiled for thee, for Reuben has defiled me and lay with me in the night, and I was asleep and did not discover it until he uncovered the edge, and he lay with me." 8. And Jacob was very angry at Reuben that he had lain with Balla, for he had uncovered the covering of his father ; and Jacob did not approach her any more, because Reuben had defiled her, for his deed was very wicked, for it is accursed before the Lord. 9. On this account it is written and ordained on the tablets of heaven, that a man shall not sleep with the wife of his father, and that he shall not uncover the covering of his father, for this is unclean ; they must surely die together, the man that lies with the wife of his father, and the woman, for they do an unclean thing in the land. 10. And there shall be nothing unclean before our God in the nation he has chosen for himself as a kingdom. 11. And again it is written: "Cursed be the one that lieth with the wife of his father, for he hath uncovered the shame of his father, and all the holy ones of the Lord shall say : 'Thus be it ! Thus be it !' " 12. And thou, Moses, command the children of Israel that they observe this word, for the punishment is death, and it is unclean, and there is no forgiveness to atone for a man that does this wicked deed, except slaying and stoning him to death, or rooting him out from amongst the people of our God. 13. For there shall not remain alive on earth a single day any man that does this in Israel, for it is accursed and unclean. 14. And let them not say that Reuben lived and was forgiven that he had slept with the concubine of his father, and she too, although her husband, Jacob, his father, was yet alive. 15. For he had not yet revealed the ordinance and the punishment and the law in its entire completeness ; for in thy days it is as a law since his days and as a law to eternity, to the generation of eternity ; and there is not any passing of days to this law, nor any forgiveness to him, except that they both be rooted out together from the midst of the people : on the day on which they do it they shall slay them. 16. And thou, Moses, write it down for Israel that they observe it according to these words, and let them not commit a mortal sin, for the Lord our God is a judge who has no regard for persons and receives no presents. 17. And tell them these words of the ordinance, that they obey and preserve them, and watch themselves, and be not destroyed and rooted out of the land ; for unclean and an abomination and contamination and profanation are all they that do this on the earth before our God. 18. And there is no sin on earth greater than fornication, which they commit on the earth, for Israel is a nation holy unto God, and a nation of inheritance for its God, and a nation of priesthood and royalty and a possession, and no one shall appear thus unclean in the midst of the holy people. 19. And in the third year of this sixth week Jacob and all his sons went and dwelt in the house of Abraham, near Isaac, his father, and Rebecca, his mother. 20. And these are the names of the sons of Jacob : the first bore Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Judah, Issachar, Zebulun, the sons of Leah ; and the sons of Rachel, Joseph and Benjamin ; and the sons of Balla, Dan and Naphtali ; and the sons of Zalapha, Gad and Asur ; and Dinah, the daughter of Leah, the only daughter of Jacob. 21. And going, they bowed down before Isaac and Rebecca ; and when they saw them, they blessed Jacob and all his sons. 22. And Isaac rejoiced exceedingly that he saw the sons of Jacob, his youngest son, and he blessed them.

CHAP. XXXIV. 1. And in the sixth year of this week of the forty-fourth jubilee, Jacob sent his sons to pasture his sheep, and his servants with them to the pasture of Shechem. 2. And the seven kings of the Amorites assembled themselves against them to slay them, hiding themselves under the trees, and to take away their cattle and their wives. 3. And Jacob and Levi and Judah and Joseph were at the house where Isaac their father was, for his spirit was sad, and they could not leave him ; and Benjamin was the youngest, and on this account remained with his father. 4. And the kings of Tâphô and of Azêsa and Sarâgôn and Sêlô and Gâez, and the king of Bêtôrôn and of Mânîsâkêr came, and all those that dwell in those mountains, who dwell in the woods of the land of Canaan. 5. And they announced this to Jacob, saying : " Behold the kings of the Amorites have surrounded thy sons in order to rob their herds." 6. And he arose from his house, he and his three sons and the young men of his father, and went forth and went against them, eight hundred men who carried swords. 7. And they slew them on the fields of Shechem, and pursued those that fled and slew them with the edge of the sword, and slew them at Arêsa and Thapha and Sêrâgen and Selo and Amânîsakêrô and Gâgâas. 8. And he collected his herds ; and he was more powerful than those and ordained a tax over them, that they should give him tribute, fine fruits of their land, and he built Reuben and Tâmnâtârês. 9. And he returned in peace, and made peace with them, and they were his servants until the day he and his sons descended down to the land of Egypt. 10. And in the seventh year of this week he sent Joseph to learn about the safety of his brothers, from his house to Shechem, and he found them in the land of Dothan. 11. And they waylaid him and made a plot against him to slay him ; and changing, they sold him to Ishmaelite merchants, and they brought him to Egypt, and sold him to Potiphar, the eunuch of Pharaoh, the head cook, the one that sacrificed in the city of Êlêw. 12. And the sons of Jacob killed a young goat, and dipped the clothes of Joseph in its blood, and sent it to their father Jacob. 13. And it was on the tenth of the seventh month, and they stayed all this day until the evening, and they brought it to him ; and he became fevered in his grief unto death, and said : “ A wild beast has devoured Joseph ; ” and on that day all the men of his house were with him, and mourned and lamented with him all the day. 14. And his sons and his daughter arose to comfort him, but he could not be comforted on account of his son. 15. And on that day Balla heard that Joseph had been killed, and she died in her grief, and she was living at Kertârêtêf ; and Dinah, his daughter, died also after Joseph had been slain. 16. This threefold sorrow came over Israel in one month. 17. And he buried Balla opposite the grave of Rachel, and Dinah, his daughter, he also buried there. 18. And he continued mourning for Joseph one year, and did not cease, saying : “ I will descend into the grave grieving for my son. ” 19. And on this account it is ordained for the children of Israel, that they shall mourn on the tenth of the seventh month, on the day when they brought the sad news concerning Joseph to his father Jacob, that on it pardon should be sought by the death of a young goat, on the tenth of the seventh month, once a year, for their sins ; for they had grieved the heart of their father on account of his son Joseph. 20. And this day has been ordained that they shall lament on it over their sins, and on account of all their transgressions, and on account of their error, that they shall cleanse themselves on this day once a year. 21. And after the death of Joseph the sons of Jacob took wives to themselves : first, the name of the wife of Reuben is Adâ ; secondly, the name of the wife of Simeon is Adibâ, a Canaanite woman ; third, the name of the wife of Levi is Mêlkâ, from among the daughters of Arâm, from the seed of the sons of Târâm ; fourth, the name of the wife of Judah is Bêtasûcl, a Canaanite woman ; fifth, the name of the wife of Issachar is Jesâkôr Hêzkâ ; sixth, the name of the wife of Zebulun is Nîmân ; seventh, the name of the wife of Dan, Êglâ ; eighth, the name of the wife of Naphtali is Rasûa, of Mesopotamia ; ninth, the name of the wife of Gad is Mâk ; and tenth, name of the wife of Asur is Ijôn ; eleventh, the name of the wife of Joseph is Asnêth, an Egyptian woman ; twelfth, the name of the wife of Benjamin is Ijôskâ. 22. And Simeon repented and took a second wife from Mesopotamia, like his brothers.

CHAP. XXXV. 1. And in the first year of the first week of the forty-fifth jubilee, Rebecca called her son Jacob and gave him command concerning his father and concerning his brother, that he should honor them all the days of the life of Jacob. 2. And Jacob said : " I will do all thou commandest me, for this thing will be honor and greatness to me and righteousness before the Lord, that I should honor them. 3. And thou, my mother, knowest me from the time I was born until this day, all my deeds and everything that is in my heart, that always I think good concerning all. 4. And how should I not do this which thou hast commanded me, that I should honor my father and my brother ? 5. Tell me, my mother, what perversity thou seest in me ? 6. And I am far removed from him, and gentleness is in me." 7. And she said to him : " My son, all my days I have not seen in thee any perversity, and no depraved actions, but righteousness. 8. But in truth I tell thee, my son, I will die in this year, and will not get beyond this year in my life, for I saw in a dream the day of my death, that I should not live beyond one hundred and fifty-five years. 9. And behold, I have completed all the days of my life which I was to live." 10. And Jacob laughed at the words of his mother, because she said that she would die, and she was sitting opposite him with her strength upon her, without any decrease of strength, for she went in and out, and saw, and her teeth were strong, and no ailment had touched her all the days of her life. 11. And Jacob said to her: "Happy am I, my mother, if my days approach the days of thy life, and my strength abide in me as thy strength; and thou wilt not die, for in vain dost thou speak with me concerning thy death." 12. And she went in to Isaac, and said to him: "One petition I ask of thee: let Esau swear that he will not harm Jacob, and will not persecute him in enmity, for thou knowest the thoughts of Esau, that he was terrible from his youth on, and there is not gentleness in him; for he desires after thy death to kill him. 13. And thou knowest how he has done all the days from the day when Jacob, his brother, went to Haran to this day, that he has left us with his whole heart, and does evil with us. 14. He has collected thy flocks, and all thy possessions he robs from before thy face, and when we entreated and asked for what was ours, he did as a man that practises usury on us. 15. And he is bitter at thee because thou didst bless that perfect and righteous son Jacob; for in him there is no evil, but goodness. 16. And since he came from Haran to this day, he has not deprived us of the least; but he brings us everything in its time and always, and he rejoices in his whole heart when we take anything from his hands, and he blesses us and does not separate from us since he came from Haran to the present day, and he lives with us ever in our house, honoring us." 17. And Isaac said to her: "I know and I see the deeds of Jacob with us, that with all his heart he honors us; but I loved Esau formerly more than Jacob, on account of his birth; but now I love Jacob more than Esau, because he has increased in evil doings, and there is no righteousness in him, for all his ways are injustice and violence, and there is no righteousness in him at all. 18. And now my heart trembles concerning all his deeds, and neither he nor his seed shall abide, for they shall be destroyed from the earth, and they shall be rooted out from under heaven; for he has deserted the God of Abraham, and goes after his women after uncleanness and after error, he and his children. 19. And thou dost tell me that I shall make him swear not to kill

Jacob: even if he swears he will not keep to his oath, and will not do good but evil. 20. And if he desires to kill his brother Jacob, he shall be given into the hands of Jacob and shall not escape from his hands, but fall into his hands. 21. And thou fear not concerning Jacob, for the watchman of Jacob is great and powerful, and honored and worshipped above the watchman of Esau." 22. And Rebecca sent for and called Esau, and he came to her, and she said to him, "One prayer I have, my son, which I ask of thee, and grant it, that thou mayest do what I ask of thee, my son." 23. And he said to her: "I will do all that thou tellest me, and will not refuse any thing that thou askest." 24. And she said to him: "I ask of thee that the day I die thou wilt take me and bury me near the grave of Sarah, the mother of thy father, and that thou and thy brother Jacob* will love each other, and that neither will undertake evil against his brother, but love him, so that ye may be prosperous, my son, and be honored in the midst of the land and that an enemy may not rejoice over you, and that ye may be a blessing and mercy before the eyes of all that love you." 25. And he said: "I will do all that thou sayest to me, and I will bury thee on the day of thy death near Sarah, the mother of thy father, as thou lovest her bones, that they shall be near to thy bones. 26. But Jacob, my brother, I will love above all flesh, and I have no other brother in all the world except him alone, and this is not a great thing for me that I shall love him, for he is my brother, and together we were sown in thy womb, and together we came forth from thee, and if I do not love my brother, whom shall I love? 27. And I then beg of thee that thou wilt exhort Jacob concerning me and concerning my children, for I know that he will rule as king over me and over my children, for on the day when my father blessed him, he made him the higher and me the lower. 28. And I swear to thee that I will love him and will not seek out evil against him all the days of my life, but only good." 29. And he swore to her concerning this whole matter. 30. And she called Jacob before the eyes of Esau, and commanded him according to the words she had spoken with Esau. 31. And he said, "I will do thy pleasure, promising that no evil shall proceed from me and from my sons against Esau, my brother, and nothing shall be shown him except love." 32. And they ate and drank, she and her sons, on this day, and she died, three jubilees and one week and one year old, in this night, and her two sons, Esau and Jacob, buried her in the cave near Sarah, the mother of their father.

CHAP. XXXVI. 1. In the sixth week of this year, Isaac called his two sons, Esau and Jacob, and they came to him, and he said to them: "My sons, I shall go the way of my father into the house of eternity, where my fathers are. 2. Bury me near to Abraham, my father, in the south cave in the field of Êphrôn, the Hittite, which Abraham bought as a burial place; there bury me. 3. And this I command you, my sons, that ye practise righteousness and rectitude on the earth, so that the Lord may bring upon you all that the Lord said that he would do to Abraham and to his seed. 4. And be ye to each other as loving brothers as a man that loves himself, and each seeking for his brother that which is good for him, and acting together from the heart upon earth, and loving each other as yourselves. 5. And concerning the matter of idols, I command ye, that ye cast them away and hold them in abomination, and hate them, and that ye do not love them, for they are full of deception for those that worship them, and for those that bow down to them. 6. And remember, O my sons, the Lord God of Abraham, your father, and how I too worshipped him and served him in truth, that he may increase you in joy and may enlarge your seed like the stars of the heaven in multitude, and plant you upon the earth as a plant of righteousness, which is not rooted out to all the generations of eternity. 7. And now I will make you swear a great oath, for there is no oath greater than the one by the glorious and honored and great name of him who created the heavens and the earth and all things together, that ye will fear and worship him, and that each will love his brother in tenderness and in truth, and that neither will wish evil against his brother, from now on and to eternity, all the days of your life, that ye may be prosperous in all your deeds, and be not destroyed. 8. And if either of you devises evil against his brother, know from now on, that every one that devises evil against his brother shall fall into his hands, and shall be rooted out of the land of the living, and his seed shall be destroyed from under heaven. 9. And on that day of cursing and turbulence he [God] will also burn with devouring fire, as he burned Sodom, thus also will he burn his land and his city and all that is his, and he will be erased out of the book of the discipline of the sons of men, and shall not ascend into the book of life, for he shall be destroyed and shall depart to the eternal curse, so that for all days their punishments may be renewed in hate and in cursing, and in wrath, and in torments, and in fury, and in plagues, and in sickness to eternity. 10. And I say and testify to you, my sons, how that my judgment will come upon the man who desires to do evil against his brother." 11. And he divided all the possessions he had between the two on that day, and he gave the preference to him that was born first, both the tower and all around it, and everything that Abraham possessed around the well of the oath. 12. And he said: "This preference shall be his who was born first." 13. And Esau said: "I have sold and given my age to Jacob, to him it has been given, and I will not say anything more about it, not one word, for it is passed." 14. And Isaac said: "May blessing rest upon you, my sons, and upon your seed this day, for ye have given me rest, and my heart is not sad on account of the birthright, that no strife will take place concerning it. 15. The Most High Lord bless the man that does righteousness, him and his seed to eternity." 16. And he ended commanding them and blessing them, and they ate and drank before him together; and he rejoiced, for there was a reconciliation between them, and they went out from him and rested on that day and slept. 17. And Isaac slept on his bed that day rejoicing, and he slept the sleep of eternity, and died one hundred and eighty years old. 18. And he completed twenty-five weeks and five years. 19. And his two sons, Esau and Jacob, buried him. 20. And Esau went to the land of Edom, to the mountains of Seir and dwelt there. 21. And Jacob dwelt in the land of Hebron, in the tower of the land of the pilgrimage of his father Abraham, and worshipped God with his whole heart, and according to the command of him who appeared to him, who had distinguished him on the day of his birth. 22. And Leah, his wife, died, in the fourth year of the second week of the forty-fifth jubilee, and he buried her in the double cave near to Rebecca, his mother, to the left of the grave of Sarah, the mother of his father. 23. And all of her sons and his sons came to weep over Leah, his wife, with him, and that they might comfort each other on her account, for he mourned over her. 24. For he loved her exceedingly after Rachel her sister died, for she was perfect and righteous in all her ways and honored Jacob: and in all the days which she lived with him, he did not hear from her mouth a hard word, for she was gentle and upright and peaceful and honorable. 25. And he remembered all her deeds which she had done in her life, and mourned exceedingly, for he loved her very much with all his heart and with all his soul.

CHAP. XXXVII. 1. And on the day of the death of Isaac, the father of Jacob and Esau, when the sons of Esau heard that Isaac had given the birthright to his younger son Jacob, they were very angry. 2. And they quarrelled with their father, saying: "Why hath thy father, although thou art the elder and Jacob the younger, given to Jacob the birthright and left thee behind?" 3. And he said to them: "Because I sold my right of first birth to Jacob for a small mess of lentils. 4. And on the day that my father sent me out to hunt and catch and bring something to him that he should eat it and bless me, he came in deception and brought to my father something to eat and to drink, and my father blessed him and put me under his hand. 5. And now our father has made us swear, me and him, that we will not devise any evil one against his brother, and that each will continue in love and in peace with his brother, and will not destroy our ways."

6. And they said to him: "We will not listen to thee to keep peace with him, for our strength exceeds his strength, and we are more powerful than he. 7. We will go out against him, and will slay him, and destroy his children; and if thou dost not go out with us, we will do thee harm also. 8. Listen now to us: We will send to Aram and to Philistia and to Moab and to Ammon, and we will pick out for ourselves chosen men who are prepared for battle, and we will go against him and will battle with him, and we will root him out of the land, before he has taken root and is strong." 9. And their father said to them: "Ye shall not go and make war upon him, that ye may not fall before him." 10. And they said to him: "This is as thou hast done from thy youth on to the present day, and thou hast brought thy neck under his yoke. 11. We will not listen to these words." And they sent to Aram and to Aduram to the associates of their father, and they hired with themselves one thousand fighting men and chosen warriors. 12. And there came to them from Moab and from the children of Ammon those that were hired, one thousand chosen men, and from Philistia one thousand chosen warriors, and from Edom and the Horites one thousand chosen fighters, and from the Hittites strong fighting men. 13. And they said to their father: "Go out, lead them, and if not, we will kill thee." 14. And he was filled with anger and wrath at the time when he saw his sons that they were forcing him to go before them to lead them against Jacob, his brother. 15. And then he remembered all the evil which had been hidden in his heart against his brother Jacob, and did not remember the oath which he had sworn to his father and his mother, that he would not devise any evil all his days against his brother Jacob. 16. And in all this time Jacob did not know that they were coming against him for battle, but he was lamenting over Leah, his wife, until they approached him very near to the tower, four thousand warlike, powerful, and chosen fighters. 17. And the men of Hebron sent to him saying: "Behold thy brother is coming against thee to fight with thee with four thousand heavily girded men, and they carry shields and weapons;" for they loved Jacob more than Esau, and told it to him, for Jacob was a more gracious and mild man than Esau. 18. But Jacob did not believe it until he approached very near the tower. 19. And he fastened the gates of the tower and stood upon the top of the tower, and spoke with his brother Esau and said: "Hast thou come to me bringing me a good consolation on account of my wife who has died? 20. Is this the oath which thou hast sworn to thy father and thy mother twice before they died? 21. Thou hast violated the oath, and on account of what thou hast sworn to thy father, thou shalt be judged." 22. And then Esau answered and said to him: "There is not to the sons of men and to the animals of the earth any oath of trust which they swear to them unto eternity; but on that morning yet they devise evil against each other, so that one may kill his hater and his enemy. 23. And thou too dost hate me and my children to eternity, and there is no brotherly dealing with thee. 24. Hear these my words which I announce to thee: If one can change the bristles of the swine and change them into wool, and if horns will come out of its head like the horns of the deer and rams, then I will maintain brotherly relations with thee. 25. And if the breasts are separated from the mother—for wast not thou to me a brother—and if the wolves make peace with the lambs, so that they do not devour and rob them; and if their hearts incline to doing each other good, then will there be peace in my heart toward thee. 26. And when the lion becomes the friend of the ox, and when he is put into one yoke with him and plows with him, then I will make peace with thee. 27. And when the raven becomes white like the rice bird, then I will know that I love thee and will make peace with thee. Thou shalt be rooted out and thy sons shall be rooted out, and there shall be no peace." 28. And then Jacob saw that his heart was evil against him, and that from his whole soul he would slay him, and he had come springing like a wild animal which comes against the spear that pierces it through and kills it, and it does not depart from it. 29. And then he said to his sons and to his servants that they should attack him and all his companions.

CHAP. XXXVIII. 1. And after that Judah spoke to his father Jacob and said to him: "Bend thy bow, father, and send forth thy arrow and cast down thy hater and slay thy enemy: and mayest thou have the power, for we will not slay thy brother, for to thee and with thee and to us it will be an honor." 2. And immediately Jacob bent the bow and sent forth his arrow, and cast down his brother Esau, and slew him. 3. And again he sent forth his arrow and hit Adôrân, the Aramæan, on the left breast, and drove him back and killed him. 4. And then the sons of Jacob and their servants came out breaking forth from the four sides of the tower. 5. Out came completely Judah, and Naphtali and Gad with him, and fifty young men with him out of the north side of the tower, and killed all that they found before them, and none escaped of those, not one. 6. And Levi and Dan and Asher came out from the east side of the tower, and fifty with them, and they slew the warriors of Moab and Ammon. 7. And Reuben and Issachar and Zebulun came out of the south side of the tower, and fifty with them, and they killed the fighters of Philistia. 8. And Simeon and Benjamin and Enoch, the son of Reuben, came out of the west side of the tower, and fifty with them, and killed of those of Edom and Choran four hundred powerful men, and seven hundred escaped, and four of the sons of Esau fled with them, and left their father behind dead, as he had fallen on the hill which is [called] Adûrâm. 9. And the sons of Jacob pursued after them to the mountains of Seir. And Jacob buried his brother on the hill which is [called] Adûrâm, and returned to his house. 10. And the sons of Jacob overcame the sons of Esau in the mountains of Seir, and made them bend their necks, so that they became the servants of the sons of Jacob; and they sent word to their father inquiring if they should make peace with them, or if they should kill them. 11. And Jacob sent word to his sons that they should make peace; and they made peace with them, and they placed the yoke of servitude upon them that they should pay tribute to Jacob and his sons all the days. 12. And they continued to pay tribute to Jacob until the day when Jacob descended to the land of Egypt, and the sons of Esau did not cease from the yoke of servitude which the twelve sons of Jacob had imposed upon them, until the present day. 13. And these are the kings which ruled over Edom before a king ruled over the children of Israel, until the present day in the land of Edom; and Bâlâk, the son of Bêôr, was king, and the name of his city was Dînâbâ. 14. And Bâlâk died, and Jôbâb, the son of Zârâ, of Bêzôr, ruled in his stead. 15. And Jôbâb died, and Adat, the son of Barad, who slew the Mediarites on the field of Moab, was king in his place, and the name of his city was Amôt. 16. And Adat died and Salmân, of Amalek, was king in his stead. 17. And Salman died and Sâûl, of the river Rôbâêt, was king in his stead. 18. And Sâûl died, and Beûlûnân, the son of Akbûr, was king in his stead. 19. And Beûlûnân died, and Adat was king in his stead, and the name of his wife was Mâtîlât, the daughter of Mâtrît, the daughter of Mêtbed Zaab. 20. These are the kings who ruled in the land of Edom.

CHAP. XXXIX. 1. And Jacob dwelt in the land of the pilgrimage of his father, the land of Canaan. 2. These are the generations of Jacob: When Joseph was seventeen years old they took him down into Egypt, and sold him to Potiphar, the eunuch of Pharaoh, the head of the cooks. 3. And he set Joseph over his whole house: and the blessing of the Lord was in the house of the Egyptian on account of Joseph, and all that he did the Lord prospered. 4. And the Egyptian left in Joseph's hands all that was before him, for he saw that the Lord was with him, and that everything he did the Lord prospered. 5. But Joseph was beautiful to look at and very attractive in form, and the wife of his master lifted up her eyes and saw Joseph. 6. And she loved him and entreated him to lie with her. 7. But he did not give over his soul, but remembered the Lord and the words which his father Jacob had read from among the words of Abraham, that no one among men should commit fornication with the wife of another, and with a woman who has a husband, and that as a punishment for this one death has been established in the heavens before the Most High God, and the sin on account of it will be inscribed on the books which are in eternity, all the days, before the Lord. 8. And Joseph remembered these words, and was not willing to lie with her. 9. And she entreated him one year, and he refused, and would not listen. 10. But she embraced him and seized him in the house in order to force him to lie with her, and locked the doors of the house; but he tore himself out of her hands and left his garment in her hand, and broke the lock, and fled without away from her presence. 11. And the woman saw that he would not lie with her, and she lied before her lord, saying: "Thy Hebrew servant, whom thou lovest, sought to do me violence that he might lie with me, and it happened that when I raised my voice, he fled and left his garment in my hand, when I had seized him, and broke the lock." 12. And the Egyptian saw the garment of Joseph and the broken lock, and he obeyed the words of his wife, and cast Joseph into prison, into the place where the prisoners stayed whom the king had caused to be imprisoned. 13. And there he was in the prison, and the Lord gave Joseph grace in the eyes of the head of the prison guards, and good will before him, for he saw that the Lord was with him, and all that he did the Lord prospered. 14. And he left all things to him, and the head of the prison guards looked to nothing, for all things that Joseph did the Lord perfected. 15. And he remained there two years. 16. And in those days Pharaoh was angry with two of his eunuchs, the chief of the butlers and chief of the bakers, and he cast them into prison, into the house of the chief of the cooks, the prison where Joseph was held. 17. And the chief of the prison guards ordered Joseph to serve them, and he served them before him. 18. And both of them dreamed a dream, the chief of the butlers and the chief of the bakers, and they told it to Joseph. 19. And as he explained to them, thus it happened to them; and the chief of the butlers Pharaoh put back into his office, and the chief of the bakers he killed, as Joseph had explained to them. 20. And the chief of the butlers forgot Joseph in the prison, although he had informed him what would become of him, and did not remember to inform Pharaoh as Joseph had told him, for he forgot.

CHAP. XL. 1. And in those days Pharaoh dreamed two dreams in one night, concerning the matter of a famine which would come over all the land; and he awoke from his dream and called all the dream interpreters that were in Egypt, and the sorcerers, and told them both his dreams, and they were not able to understand them. 2. And then the chief of the butlers recalled Joseph to memory, and spoke concerning him to the king; and he brought him out of prison and narrated his two dreams before him. 3. And he spoke before Pharaoh that his two dreams were one, and he said: "Seven years will come of plenty over all the land of Egypt, and after that, seven years of famine, such as has not been upon the whole earth. 4. And now, O Pharaoh, establish throughout all the land of Egypt storehouses that grain may be gathered into them from city to city, in the days of the years of plenty, so that there may be grain for the seven years of famine, and that the land be not destroyed on account of the famine, for it will be very severe." 5. And the Lord gave Joseph grace and good will before the eyes of Pharaoh, and Pharaoh said to his servants: "We shall not be able to find a wise and intelligent man like this man, for the spirit of the Lord is upon him." 6. And he appointed him the second over the whole kingdom, and made him prince over all Egypt; and caused him to ride upon the second chariot of Pharaoh, and clothed him with byssus garments, and put a golden chain around his neck, and proclaimed before him, saying: "Êl Êl wa abrir." And he put [a ring] upon his hand, and made him master of his whole house, and made him great, and said to him: "I will not be greater than thee except in regard to the thronedom." 7. And Joseph was lord in all the land of Egypt, and all the princes of Pharaoh loved him, and all the servants and all those that did the offices of the king, for he walked in rectitude and without pride and haughtiness of heart, and did not regard persons nor take bribes, but in rectitude he judged over all the peoples of the land. 8. And the land of Egypt was governed peacefully before Pharaoh on account of Joseph, for the Lord was with him, and gave him grace and good will over all his race, before all who knew him and heard reports concerning him; and the kingdom of Pharaoh was in a right condition, without any enemy or evil. 9. And the king called the name of Joseph, Sephnetiphanz, and gave the daughter of Potiphar as a wife to Joseph, the daughter of the one that sacrifices at Heliopolis, the chief of the cooks. 10. And on the day that Joseph stood before Pharaoh he was thirty years old, when he stood before the face of Pharaoh. 11. And in that year Isaac died. 12. And it happened as Joseph had said concerning the explanation of the two dreams, and there were seven years of plenty, and the land of Egypt was full of fruit, for one measure eighteen measures. 13. And Joseph gathered food from city to city, until they were full of grain, until they were not able to count and measure it on account of multitude.

CHAP. XLI. 1. And in the forty-fifth jubilee, in the second week and in the second year, Judah took a wife for Er, his first-born, from among the daughters of Aram, and her name was Tamar. 2. And he hated her and did not lie with her, because his mother was from among the daughters of Canaan, and he desired to take a wife to himself from the relatives of his mother, but his father Judah would not permit him. 3. And this his first-born was wicked, and the Lord slew him. 4. And Judah said to his son Onan: "Go in to the wife of thy brother, and make her thy wife and raise up seed for thy brother." 5. And Onan knew that the seed would not be his, but rather his brother's, and he went to the house of the wife of his brother, and poured the seed upon the ground, and was wicked before the eyes of the Lord, and he slew him. 6. And Judah said to Tamar, his daughter-in-law, "Abide in the house of thy father as a widow until my son Shelah has grown, and I will give thee to him for a wife." 7. And he grew up; but Bêdsûêl, the wife of Judah, would not permit her son Shelah to marry her. 8. And Bêdsûêl, the wife of Judah, died in the fifth year of this week. 9. And in the sixth year thereof Judah went up to shear his sheep at Timnath. 10. And she laid aside her widow's garments and clothed herself with a vail, and beautified herself, and sat down at the gate on the way to Timnath. 11. And when Judah came, he found her, and thought her a harlot, and said to her: "I will go in to thee." 12. And she said to him, "Come in," and he came in unto her. 13. And she said to him, "Give me my pay." 14. And he said to her, "I have nothing in my hand except my ring on my finger and my bracelet and my staff, which is in my hand." 15. And she said to him, "Give me these until thou sendest me my pay." 16. And he said to her, "I will send thee a young kid;" and he gave them to her. 17. And she conceived from him; and Judah went to his sheep, but she went to the house of her father. 18. And Judah sent a young kid through a shepherd of Adullam, and he did not find her, and asked the people of the place, saying, "Where is the harlot which was here?" 19. And they said, "There has been no harlot here, and there is no harlot among us." 20. And he returned and told him that he had not found her, and said, "I asked the people of the place and they said to me that there was no harlot there." 21. And he said, "Arise, let us go that we do not become a laughing stock." 22. And when three months were over she learned that she was pregnant, and they told Judah, saying, "Behold, thy daughter-in-law Tamar has conceived by whoredom." 23. And Judah went to the house of her father, and said to her father and mother and brothers: "Bring her out that she be burned, for she has done an unclean thing in Israel. 24. And it happened when they brought her out to burn her, she sent to her father-in-law the ring and the bracelets and the staff, saying, "Dost thou recognize whose these are,

for from him have I conceived?" 25. And Judah recognized them and said, "Tamar is more just than I." 26. And they did not burn her. 27. And on this account she was not given to Shelah; and he did not again approach her. 28. And after that she gave birth to two male children, Pharez and Zarah, in the seventh year of this second week. 29. And three more completed the seven years of fruitfulness of which Joseph had said to Pharaoh. 30. And Judah knew that it was an evil deed which he had done, for he had lain with his daughter-in-law, and regarded it as a sin before his eyes, and he knew that he had sinned and erred, because he had uncovered the skirt of his son. 31. And he began to lament it and ask for mercy before the Lord on account of his sin. 32. And he told him in a dream, that it would be forgiven him, because he begged exceedingly for mercy and lamented, and did not repeat it. 33. And he obtained forgiveness, for he turned from his sin and ignorance, for it was a great transgression before the Lord our God; and every one that does thus, and lies with his daughter-in-law shall be burned with fire, that he may burn therein, for it is uncleanness and defilement upon them: with fire they shall be burnt. 34. And thou, Moses, command the children of Israel, that there be no uncleanness among them, for every one that lieth with his mother-in-law or his daughter-in-law does an unclean thing: with fire shall be burnt the man who lies with her, and the woman also, and he [God] shall remove the anger and punishment from Israel. 35. But to Judah he said that because his two sons did not lie with her, on that account his seed stands for a second generation, and should not be rooted out; for in the innocence of his eyes he had gone and sought punishment, namely, according to the judgment of Abraham which he commanded his children, that Judah should be burned with fire.

CHAP. XLII. 1. And in the first year of the third week of the forty-fifth jubilee, the famine began to come into the land, and rain refused to be given to the earth; for none fell. 2. And the earth was unfruitful, and in the land of Egypt alone there was food, for Joseph had gathered that he might give them food, and Joseph had gathered the seed of the earth in the seven years of fruitfulness and had guarded it. 3. And the Egyptians came to Joseph that he should give them food, and he opened the storehouses where the grain was in the first year, and he sold it to the people of the land for gold. 4. And Jacob heard that there was food in the land of Egypt, and he sent ten sons, that they should go for him to Egypt, but Benjamin he did not send. 5. And they came, together with those that went there. 6. And Joseph knew them, but they did not know him; and he spoke with and asked them, and said to them: "Are ye not spies and have come to examine the traces of the land?" 7. And he locked them in. 8. And then again he released them and incarcerated Simeon alone, and his nine brothers he sent away. 9. And he filled their sacks with grain, and he placed their gold in their sacks, and they did not know it. 10. And he commanded them that they should bring their youngest brother, for they had told him that their father was yet living and also their youngest brother. 11. And they went up from the land of Egypt, and came to the land of Canaan, and told their father all that had happened to them, and how the prince of the land had spoken with them and had seized Simeon until they should bring Benjamin. 12. And Jacob said, "Ye have robbed me of my children: Joseph is no more, Simeon is no more, and ye will also take Benjamin; your wickedness is upon you." 13. And he said: "My son shall not go with you; it is possible that he will become sick; for their mother has given birth to two sons, one is destroyed and this one ye will take. 14. He might take a fever on the road, and ye will bring my gray hairs in sorrow into death." 15. For he saw that all their gold was returned in their packages, and on this account he feared to send him. 16. But the famine increased and became strong in the land of Canaan, and in all the lands, except in the land of Egypt, for many of the sons of Egypt had gathered their seeds for food when they saw that Joseph was collecting the seed and placing it into the storehouses, and preserving it for the years of famine, and the men of Egypt fed themselves in the first year of their famine. 17. And when Israel saw that the famine was very powerful in the land, and that there was no deliverance, he said to his sons: "Go, return, and bring us food that we die not." 18. And they said: "We will not go: unless our youngest brother goes with us we will not go." 19. And Israel saw that if he would not send him with them all would be destroyed on account of the famine. 20. And Reuben said: "Give him to me into my hand, and if I do not return him to thee, slay my two sons in place of his soul." 21. And he said, "He shall not go with thee." 22. And Judah approached and said to him: "Send him with me; and if I do not bring him back to thee, I shall be a transgressor before thee all the days of my life." 23. And he sent him with them in the second year of this week and in the new moon of the month, and they came to the land of Egypt with all those that went, and presents in their hands; and stacte and nuts and pistachio and pure honey. 24. And they came and stood before Joseph, and he saw his brother Benjamin, and knew him, and said to them: "Is this your youngest brother?" 25. And they said to him: "Yea, it is he." 26. And he said, "The Lord be merciful to thee, my son." 27. And he sent them into his house, and brought out Simeon to them and made them a feast, and they brought to him what they had brought in their hands. 28. And they ate before him, and he gave them all a portion, and increased the portion of Benjamin over the portion of the others seven times, and they ate and drank, and arose and remained with their asses. 29. And Joseph thought out a plan how he could learn their thoughts, whether their thoughts were peace among each other; and he said to the man who was over his house: "Fill all their sacks with food, but their gold return to them in the midst of their receptacle, and my goblet out of which I drink put into the sack of the youngest, the silver goblet, and send them away."

CHAP. XLIII. 1. And he did as Joseph had told him, and filled all their sacks for them with food, but their gold he put into their sacks, and the goblet he put into the sack of Benjamin. 2. And early in the morning they departed. 3. And it happened when they had gone from there that Joseph said to the man : " Follow them, run and upbraid them, saying : ' For good ye have returned evil, and have stolen the silver cup out of which my master drinks.' And bring back to me their youngest brother, quickly before that I go to my official work." 4. And he ran after them and said to them according to these words. 5. And they said to him : " Far be it from thy servants to do this thing : we have not stolen out of the house of thy lord any utensil, and the gold which we found the first time in our sacks, we, thy servants, have brought back out of the land of Canaan. 6. How then would we steal any utensil : behold, here we are, and our sacks ; search, and wherever thou findest the cup in the sack of any man among us, he shall be killed, but we and our asses will serve thy lord." 7. And he said to them : " Not thus, the man with whom I find it, him alone will I take as a servant, but ye shall return in peace to your houses. 8. And when he searched in their vessels, beginning with the oldest and ending with the youngest, it was found in the sack of Benjamin, the youngest. 9. And they were terrified and rent their clothes, and loaded their asses and returned to the city and came to the house of Joseph, and all fell down before him upon their faces on the ground. 10. And Joseph said to them : " Ye have done evil ;" and they said to him : " What shall we say, and with what shall we defend ourselves that our Lord has found the guilt of his servants ? 11. Behold, we are thy servants, O our lord, together with our asses." 12. And Joseph said to them : " I, too, fear the Lord, and ye shall go to your houses, but your youngest brother shall be my servant, for ye have done evil : do ye not know that one like me who drinks out of his cup values it ? 13. And ye have stolen it." 14. And Judah said : " For us, my lord, let me speak a word into the ear of my lord : his mother has borne thy servant, our father, two sons; one has left and was lost, and no one found him, and this one alone is left from his mother; and thy servant, our father, loves him and his soul cleaves to his soul, and it will happen when we return to thy servant, our father, and if the young man is not with us, he will die, and our father will sink away through grief unto death. 15. But I will become a servant to my lord in the place of the boy; but let the youth go with his brothers, for I have given promise for him to thy servant, our father; and if thou dost not return him, then thy servant will be guilty to our father all the days." 16. And Joseph saw the heart of all that they were friendly to each other and well disposed, and he was not able to restrain himself, and he said that he was Joseph, and conversed with them in the Hebrew tongue, and he fell upon their neck and wept; but they had not known him, and began to weep. 17. And he said to them: "Do not weep over me; but hasten and bring my father to me, that I may see him before I die, and the eyes of my brother Benjamin while I see. 18. For, behold, this is the second year of the famine, and there are yet five years without any harvest or fruit of trees or any plants. 19. Hasten ye to come down with your households, so that ye be not destroyed by the famine, and do not grieve yourselves on account of yourselves, and on account of your possessions, for the Lord has sent me before you as a provider, that many people might live. 20. And tell my father that I am yet alive. 21. But ye, behold, see me, that the Lord has set me as a father to Pharaoh, and that I should rule in his house and over all the land of Egypt. 22. And tell my father of all my honor and all the measure which the Lord has given me of wealth and of honor." 23. And at the command of Pharaoh, he gave them wagons and provisions for the road and gave them all colored garments and silver. 24. And to their father, Pharaoh sent garments and silver and ten asses that carried grain and he sent them away. 25. And they went up and announced to their father that Joseph was alive, and that he was measuring out grain to all the nations of the earth, and that he was lord of all the land of Egypt. 26. And their father did not believe it, for he was terrified in his thoughts, but when he saw the wagons which Joseph had sent, his spirit revived and lived, and he said: "It is a great thing for me that Joseph lives: I will go down to see him before I die."

CHAP. XLIV. 1. And Israel arose from Haran, from his house, at the new moon of the third month, and came by the way of the well of the oath, and offered a sacrifice to the God of his father Isaac, on the seventh of this month, and Jacob remembered the dream which he had dreamed at Bethel, and he feared to descend down to Egypt. 2. And while he was thinking that he would send word to Joseph that he should come to him, and that he would not go down, he remained there seven days, if he might see a vision, whether he should remain or go down. 3. And he celebrated the harvest festival of first fruits with old grain, for there was not a handful of seed in all the land of Canaan, for it was unfruitful for all the animals and beasts and birds, and also human beings. 4. And on the sixteenth thereof the Lord appeared to him and said to him: "Jacob, Jacob!" 5. And he said: "Here I am." 6. And he said to him: "I am the God of thy fathers Abraham and Isaac: fear not to go down to Egypt, for I will make thee into a great people. 7. I will go down with thee and I will bring thee back into this land that thou be buried here, and Joseph shall lay his hands upon thy eyes: fear not to go down to Egypt." 8. And he arose, and his sons and his sons' sons, and they placed their father and their vessels upon the wagons. 9. And Israel started from the well of the oath on the sixteenth of third month, and went to the land of Egypt. 10. And Israel sent before him to Joseph, his son Judah, that he should examine the land of Goshen, for there Joseph had told his brothers that they should come, that they should dwell there, that they might be near him; and this was good in the land of Egypt and near to him, for them all and for their animals. 11. And these are the names of the sons of Jacob who went into Egypt with Jacob their father; Reuben, the first-born of Israel: and these are the names of his sons: Ênôch and Phâlûs and Êzêrôm and Charâmî, five: Simeon and his sons, and these are the names of his sons: Ijâmôêl and Ijâmên and Amet and Ijâkîm and Saâr and Sâmel, the son of the Sephanite; seven: Levi and his sons; and these are the names of his sons, Gêdsôn and Kaât and Mêrârî, four: Judah and his sons; and these are the names of his sons: Sêlêm and Phâlûs and Zârâ, four: Issachar and his sons; and these are the names of his sons: Tôlâ and Phûa and Ijâseb and Samarôm, five: Zebulun and his sons, and these are the names of his sons: Azôr and Êlôn and Ijâlûêl, four. 12. And these are the sons of Jacob and their sons whom Leah had borne to Jacob in Mesopotamia, six, and one sister to them, Dinah; and all the souls whom Leah had borne and their sons, who went with their father Jacob to Egypt, were twenty-nine, and Jacob, their father, with them, it thus was thirty. 13. And the sons of Zalapha, the handmaid of Leah, the wife of Jacob, whom she bore to Jacob: Gad and Asher. 14. And these are the names of their sons who went with them to Egypt; the sons of Gad: Zêphjôn and Agâtî and Sômî and Asôhên . . . and Arôli and Arôdi; eight. 15. And the sons of Asher: Ijâmuâ and Jesûa and Bârjâ and Sârâ, their sister, seven. 16. And all the souls are fourteen, and all of Leah were forty-four. 17. And the sons of Rachel, the wife of Jacob, were Joseph and Benjamin. 18. And to Joseph were born in Egypt before his father came to Egypt, whom Asnêt bore him, the daughter of Potiphar, the sacrificer of Heliopolis, Manasseh and Ephraim, three. 19. The sons of Benjamin are Bâlâ and Bâchôr and Êsâbêl, Zuêl and Nemân and Abdlji and Râc and Sanâîm and Aphêm and Gâom, eleven. 20. And all the souls of Rachel were fourteen. 21. And the sons of Bilâ, the handmaid of Rachel, the wife of Jacob, were Dan and Naphtali. 22. And these are the names of their sons who went with them to Egypt; the sons of Dan are Chûsi and Sâmôn and Asûdî and Ijâk and Salamôn, six. 23. And they died in Egypt in the year in which they went down, and there was left to Dan only Chûsî. 24. And these are the names of the sons of Naphtali: Ijâsiêl and Gûhani and Asaâr and Sûlôni and Êmê, six ; and Êmê died in Egypt, who was born after the year of the famine. 25. And all the souls of Rachel were twenty-six. 26. And all the souls of Jacob, that went with him to Egypt, were seventy souls ; but his children and his childrens' children, all together were seventy-five, but five died in Egypt, who were not married and had no children ; and in the land of Canaan two sons of Judah died, Er and Onan, and had no children. 27. And the sons of Israel buried those that were destroyed, and these were counted among the seventy peoples.

CHAP. XLV. 1. And Israel went to the land of Egypt unto the land of Goshen at the new moon of fourth month of the second year of the third week of the forty-fifth jubilee. 2. And Joseph went to meet his father Jacob in the land of Goshen, and he fell upon the neck of his father and wept. 3. And Israel said to Joseph: "I would die now after I have seen thee. 4. And now may the Lord God of Abraham and Isaac be blessed, who has not withdrawn his mercy and kindness from his servant Jacob: It is a great thing to me that I have seen thy face in my life, for true is the vision which I saw in Bethel, blessed be the Lord God to all eternity, and blessed be his name." 5. And Joseph and his brothers ate bread before their father and drank wine ; and Jacob rejoiced exceedingly much, for he saw that Joseph ate with his brothers and drank before him ; and he blessed the Creator of all, who had preserved for him his twelve sons. 6. And Joseph gave his father and his brothers as a present that they should dwell in the land of Goshen and in Râmâsîtinô, and their whole territory, that they should rule it before Pharaoh. 7. And Israel and his sons dwelt in the land of Goshen, the best part of the land of Egypt: but Israel was one hundred and thirty years old when he came into Egypt. 8. And Joseph gave provisions to his father and brothers, and their possessions as much as supported them for the seven years of famine. 9. And the land of Egypt suffered on account of the famine, and Joseph gathered in all the land of Egypt to Pharaoh for food, both the people and their cattle, and Pharaoh possessed everything. 10. And the years of the famine were completed, and Joseph gave to the people that were in the land of Egypt seed and food to sow in the eighth year, for the river had overflowed into all the land of Egypt. 11. For in the seven years of the famine it had watered only a few spots along the bank of the river, but now it overflowed; and the Egyptians sowed upon their land and it produced much grain in that year. 12. And this was the first year of the fourth week of the thirty-fifth jubilee. 13. And Joseph took of the grain which they sowed the fifth part for the king, and the fourth he left them for food and for sowing: and Joseph made it a law for the land of Egypt unto this day. 14. And Israel lived in the land of Egypt seventeen years, and all the days which he lived were three jubilees, one hundred and forty-seven years. 15. And he died in the fourth year of the fifth week of the forty-fifth jubilee. 16. And Israel blessed his sons before he died, and told them everything as it would happen to them in the land of Egypt, and what would come upon them in the latter days, and everything he made known to them, and blessed them and gave Joseph two portions in the land. 17. And he slept with his fathers and was buried in the double cave in the land of Canaan beside Abraham, his father, in the grave which he had dug for himself, in the double cave, in the land of Hebron. 18. And he gave all his books and the books of his fathers to his son Levi, that he should guard them and renew them for the sons of Israel to this day.

CHAP. XLVI. 1. And it happened after the death of Jacob that the children of Israel increased in the land of Egypt. 2. And they became a great people, and they were all united in their hearts, so that each loved his brother and every man assisted his brother, and they increased and multiplied and increased very much. 3. And ten weeks of years were all the days of the life of Joseph which he lived after his father, and he was no enemy or anything wicked in all the days of the life of Joseph which he lived after his father Jacob, for all the Egyptians honored the sons of Jacob during all the days of the life of Joseph. 4. And Joseph died when he was one hundred and ten years old: seventeen years he lived in the land of Canaan and ten years he was a servant, and three years he was in prison, and eighty years he was under the king ruling all the land of Egypt. 5. And all his brothers died, and all that generation. 6. And he commanded the children of Israel, before he died, that they should carry up his bones when they would go out of the land of Egypt. 7. And he made them swear concerning his bones, for he knew that the Egyptians would not again bring out his bones and bury them in the land of Canaan, for Memkerôn, the king of Canaan, while he was dwelling in the land of Asur, was fighting in the valley with the king of Egypt and killed him there and pursued the Egyptians to the gates of Êrômôn. 8. But he was unable to enter, for a second new king ruled over Egypt, and he was more powerful than he; and he returned to the land of Canaan, and the gates of Egypt were locked and no one entered Egypt. 9. And Joseph died in the forty-sixth jubilee, in the sixth week, in the second year; and they buried him in the land of Egypt, and all his brothers died after him. 10. And the king of Egypt went out to fight with the king of Canaan in the forty-seventh jubilee, in the second week, in the second year thereof; and the children of Israel brought out the bones of all the sons of Jacob except the bones of Joseph, and buried them in the fields, in the double caves in the mountains. 11. And the most returned to Egypt, and a few of them remained behind in the mountains of Hebron, and thy father Anbaram [Amram] remained with them. 12. And the king of Canaan overcame the king of Egypt and locked the portals of Egypt. 13. And he devised an evil plan against the children of Israel that he would torment them, and he said to the men of Egypt: "Behold, the people of the children have increased and multiplied more than we; behold, we will plot against them before they become too many, and will torment them with slavery, before a murder comes over us and before these become our enemies; if not, these will unite with the enemy and will depart out of our land, for their faces and hearts are toward the land of Canaan." 14. And he set over them work-overseers that they should torment them with slave work. 15. And they commanded them, and they built strong cities for Pharaoh, Pithom and Ramses, and they built all the walls and sides which had fallen in in the cities of Egypt. 16. And they oppressed them with service, but as much as they abused them so much they increased and so much they multiplied. 17. And the men of Egypt considered the children of Israel unclean.

CHAP. XLVII. 1. And in the seventh week, in the seventh year, in the forty-seventh jubilee, thy father came from the land of Canaan, and thou wast born in the fourth week, in the sixth year, in the forty-eighth jubilee, which are the days of the persecution over the sons of Israel. 2. And King Pharaoh, of Egypt, issued a command concerning them, that they should throw all their children, every male, into the river. 3. And they threw them in seven months, until the day when thou wast born: but thy mother hid thee three months; and they told about her. 4. And she made for thee an ark, and covered it with pitch and asphalt, and laid it in the grass, on the bank of the river, and placed thee into it seven days; and thy mother came in the night and nursed thee, and during the days thy sister Miriam protected thee from the wild animals. 5. And in those days Tarmûth, the daughter of Pharaoh, came to bathe in the river, and she heard thy voice crying, and she told her Hebrew maidens that they should bring thee out; and they brought thee to them. 6. And they took thee out of the ark, and she pitied thee. 7. And thy sister said: "Shall I go and call for thee one of the Hebrew women, who shall raise and nurse this child for thee?" 8. And she said: "Go." 9. And she went and called thy mother Jokabed, and she gave her wages, and she raised thee. 10. And when thou didst grow, they brought thee to the house of Pharaoh, and thou becamest his son; and Anbaram, thy father, taught thee writing. 11. And when thou didst complete three weeks, he brought thee to the royal court. 12. And thou wast in the court three weeks of years, until the day when thou didst go out of the royal court, and didst see the Egyptian as he was beating thy friend from among the children of Israel. 13. And thou slewest him and hid him in the sand, and on the following day thou foundest two of the children of Israel quarrelling, and didst say to the more powerful: "Why dost thou beat thy brother?" 14. And he became angry and wroth, and said: "Who has set thee a ruler and prince over us? 15. Dost thou desire to kill me, as thou didst kill the Egyptian yesterday?" 16. And thou didst fear and flee on account of these words.

CHAP. XLVIII. 1. And in the sixth year of the third week of the forty-ninth jubilee, thou didst go and dwell here five weeks and one year, and didst return to Egypt in the second week, in the second year, in the fiftieth jubilee. 2. And thou knowest what he spoke to thee at Mt. Sinai, and what the prince Mastema desired to do with thee, as thou returnest to Egypt, on the way, at the feast of tabernacles. 3. Did he not with all his power seek to kill thee, and to save the Egyptians out of thy hand, when thou sawest that thou wert sent to deliver judgments and vengeance over the Egyptians? 4. And I delivered thee out of his hands, and thou didst the signs and wonders for which I had sent thee to do in Egypt over Pharaoh and over all his house and over his servants and over his people. 5. And the Lord inflicted a great vengeance upon them for Israel's sake, and beat them and killed them through blood and frogs and flies and dog flies and breaking-out skin-diseases, and also their animals by death, and through hail, by which he destroyed everything that grew for them; and through grasshoppers, who ate the rest that had been left by the hail, and through darkness; and also the first-born of man and animals; and on all their idols the Lord took vengeance and burned them with fire. 6. And everything was sent through thy hand, that thou shouldst do it before it was done, and thou didst tell it to the king of Egypt and before all of his servants and before his people. 7. And everything took place according to thy words: ten great and terrible judgments came over the land of Egypt, that they might take vengeance for Israel. And all the deeds of the Lord concerning Israel and according to his ordinance which he covenanted with Abraham, that he would take vengeance upon them, according as they had served the Egyptians in oppression. 8. And the prince Mastema placed himself against thee, and endeavored to throw thee into the hand of Pharaoh and aided the sorcerers of the Egyptians, and stood by them, and they performed them before thee: the evils, however, we permitted them to perform, but their remedies we did not suffer them to perform by their hands. 9. And the Lord struck them with a dire pox, and they were not able to withstand, for we destroyed them so that they could not do a single sign. 10. And amid all the signs and wonders, the prince Mastema was not ashamed, until he became powerful and cried to the Egyptians that they should pursue after thee with all the power of the Egyptians, with their wagons and with their horses and with all the masses of the people of Egypt. 11. And I stood between the Egyptians and thee, and between them and Israel, and I saved the Israelites out of their hands and out of the hands of the Egyptians. 12. And the Lord led them through the middle of the sea, as if it were dry land. 13. And all the people he caused to come out to pursue Israel, the Lord our God cast into the midst of the sea, into the depths of the abysses, instead of the children of Israel, because the people of Egypt had thrown their children by the hundreds into the river: vengeance was taken upon them and one thousand powerful men, and those that were strong, perished on account of one suckling babe which they had cast into the river from amongst thy people. 14. And on the fourteenth day, and on the fifteenth day, and on the sixteenth day, and on the seventeenth day, and on the eighteenth day, the prince Mastema was bound and chained behind the children of Israel, so that he could not accuse the children of Israel. 15. But on the nineteenth day we let him loose, so that he could help the Egyptians, and that they could pursue the children of Israel; and he made hard their hearts and strengthened them and he became powerful according to the Lord our God, so that he could smite the Egyptians and hurl them into the sea. 16. And on the fifteenth day we bound him, so that he could not accuse the children of Israel on the day when they asked for the utensils and clothing from the men of Egypt, utensils of silver and utensils of gold and utensils of iron, in order to despoil the Egyptians for having served him a service in oppression: and we did not cause the children of Israel to go out of Egypt empty handed.

CHAP. XLIX. 1. Remember the command which the Lord commanded thee concerning the Pascah, that thou shalt keep it in its time, on the fourteenth of the first month, that thou shalt kill it before the evening come, and that they shall eat it during the night, on the evening of the fifteenth, from the time of the setting of the sun, for this is the first day of the festival and the first Pascah. 2. But ye were engaged in eating the Pascah in Egypt while all the powers of Mastema were sent forth in Egypt to destroy all the first-born in the land of Egypt, from the first-born of Pharaoh to the first-born of the captive servant maid in the mill, and down to the the animals. 3. And this is the sign which the Lord gave them: In every house at whose portals they had thrown the blood of a year old sheep, into this house they did not enter to kill those that were locked in it, so that all who were in the house were saved, because the sign of blood was upon the portals. 4. And the powers of the Lord did everything as the Lord commanded them, and they passed by all the sons of Israel, and no plague came over them to destroy any soul from their midst, neither of beast nor of man, not even a dog. And the plague was in Egypt exceedingly great, and there was no house in Egypt in which there was no dead body and weeping and lamentation. 5. And all Israel was engaged in eating the meat of the Pascah and drinking wine, and they lauded and thanked and blessed the Lord God of their fathers, and were prepared to go out from under the yoke of Egypt and from under its slavery. 6. But thou, remember this day all the days of thy life, once in the year, on its day, according to all the law thereof, and thou shalt not change the day for another day, or the month for another month. 7. For it is an ordinance of eternity, which is engraven on the tablets of heaven concerning the children of Israel, that they shall observe each year by year the festivals; once a year, in all their generations, and it has no limit of days, for it is ordained for eternity. 8. And a man, if he is pure and does not come to observe in its time the day, to bring an offering which is acceptable before the Lord on the day of the festival, and to eat and to drink before the Lord, on the day of his festival, that man shall be rooted out, if he is pure and near, because he has not brought the offering to the Lord in its time, and that man places a sin upon himself. Let the children of Israel, who will yet come, observe the Pascah on the day of its time, on the fourteenth of the first month, between the evenings, in the third part of the day to the third part of the night; for two parts of the day are given to the light and the third to the evening; this it is that the Lord has commanded that thou shalt observe it between the evenings. 9. And it shall not take place in the morning, at any time of daylight, but only at the limits of the evenings; and they shall eat it in the time of evening until the third night, and whatever is left of all the meat on the third night, they shall again burn in the fire. 10. And they shall not cook it in water and shall not eat it raw, but carefully roasted on the fire and broiled on the fire; its head together with the intestines they shall roast, and its feet, and shall not break any bone within it, for none of the children of Israel shall have any bone broken. 11. On this account the Lord has commanded the children of Israel to observe the Pascah on the day of its time, and that no bone in it shall be broken, for it is a festival and a day commanded, and there must be no change from it from one day to another, or from one month to another, but on the day shall its festival be observed. 12. But thou, command the children of Israel that they should observe the Pascah on its days in all the years, once each year, on the day of its fixed time, and that it shall become a memorial before the Lord which is acceptable, and that no plague come over them to kill them and to scourge them in that year. 13. If they observe the Pascah in its time in everything as they have been commanded, then it is not allowed them to eat it outside of the sanctuary of the Lord, and all the people of the assembly of Israel shall observe it in its time. 14. Every man who is twenty years and above who comes on that day shall eat it in the sanctuary of your God before the Lord, for thus it is written and ordained that they shall eat it in the sanctuary of the Lord. 15. And when the children of Israel come into the land which they shall possess, into the land of Canaan, and plant the tent of the Lord in the midst of the land, within one of their hosts, until the time when the sanctuary of the Lord shall have been built in the land, then they shall come and observe the Pascah in the midst of the tent of the Lord, and shall sacrifice it before the Lord from year to year. 16. And in the days when a house shall have been built in the name of the Lord in the land of their inheritance, they shall go there and slay the Pascah in the evening, as the sun goes down, in the third part of the day. 17. And they shall place the blood on the foundation of the altar, and the fat they shall lay upon the fire upon the altar, and shall eat flesh thereof that has been roasted at the fire, in the court of the sanctuary in the name of the Lord. 18. And they must not observe the Pascah in their cities and in all their districts, but only before the tent of the Lord or before his house, where his name dwells, so that ye do not trespass against the Lord. 19. But thou, Moses, command the children of Israel, that they shall observe the ordinance of the Pascah as it has been commanded to thee, that they shall observe the day year by year, and its day and the festival of the unleavened bread, that they shall eat unleavened bread seven days, so that they observe its festival, that they bring an offering day by day in these seven days of the Pascah before the Lord on the altar of your God. 20. For this festival ye observed with trembling when ye went out of Egypt until ye had gone through the sea into the desert of Sur, for on the shore of the sea ye completed it.

CHAP. L. 1. And after this law I made known to thee the days of Sabbaths in the desert Sinai, which is between Elam and Sinai. 2. And I told you concerning the Sabbaths of the earth on Mt. Sinai, and concerning the years of jubilees with the Sabbaths ; and also the year I mentioned to you ; but the year thereof we did not tell you, until thou comest into the land which ye shall possess ; and ye shall make the land also observe the Sabbaths for those dwelling in it, and the years of jubilees shall learn. 3. Concerning this I have ordained for thee the weeks of years and the jubilees, from the days of Adam to this day : forty-nine [jubilees] and one week and two years ; and yet forty years are before for learning the commandments of the Lord, until ye cross the border of the land of Canaan, crossing the Jordan on the western side, and jubilees will pass by until Israel shall be cleansed from all fornication and guilt and uncleanness and contamination and sin and transgression, and shall dwell in all the land in safety, and no Satan and no evil one will injure him, and the land will be cleansed from that time on and to eternity. 4. And, behold, the command of the Sabbaths I have written down for thee, and all the judgments of its laws. 5. Six days thou shalt do work, and on the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord, your God ; ye shall not do any work on it, neither ye, nor your children, nor your male servants, nor your maid servants, nor any of your beasts, nor your stranger who is with you. 6. The man that does any work on it shall die, and every man who desecrates this day, who lies with a wife, and who says that he will do something on it, that he will make a trip on it, or concerning all buying and selling, and who draws water on it which he did not prepare for himself on the sixth day, and whoever takes up a burden to carry it out of his tent or out of his house, he shall die. 7. Ye shall not do any work on the Sabbath which ye have not prepared for yourselves on the sixth day, to eat or to drink or to rest or to keep Sabbath from all your work on that day, and to bless the Lord your God, who has given it to you as a festival day; and a holy day it shall be, and a day of the holy kingdom, for all Israel this day, among your days, in all the days. 8. For great is the honor which the Lord has given to Israel to eat and to drink and to be satisfied on this festival day, after resting on this day from all the work of the children of men, except burning frankincense and bringing offerings and sacrifices before the Lord on the days and the Sabbaths. 9. This work alone shall be done on the Sabbath days, in the sanctuary of the Lord your God, so that these shall appear over Israel as a constant atonement, day by day, as a memorial, which is acceptable before the Lord and received forever, day by day, as I have commanded thee. 10. And every man who does any work on this day, or makes a journey, or works his land, be it in the house or at any other place, and whoever lights a fire or rides upon any beast, or travels by ship upon the sea, and everyone that strikes or kills anything, or kills an animal or a bird, and who catches an animal and bird and fish, and who contends or engages in war on the Sabbath day, the man that does any of these things on the Sabbath day, shall die, so that the children of Israel shall observe the Sabbaths, according to the command of the Sabbath of the land, as it is written on the tablets of heaven, which he gave into my hands, that I should write for thee the laws of the times, and the different times in the division of their days.

PREFACE

I HAD hoped to issue this Commentary on the Book of Jubilees quite six years ago, as a sequel to my edition of the Ethiopic and other fragmentary versions of this work; but after writing a large portion of it, I was obliged to abandon the task, as I felt that somehow I had failed to give a satisfactory interpretation of the text, though at the time I could not understand wherein my disability lay. A year or two later when making a special study of the Testaments of the XII. Patriarchs, I came to discover that the source of my failure lay in my acceptance of the traditional view that Jubilees was written in the first century of the Christian era. So long as I wrote from this standpoint, my notes became more and more a laboured apologetic for the composition of this work in the first century. The earliest approximation to the right date appeared in my article on the "Testaments of the XII. Patriarchs" in the Encyclopædia Biblica, i. 241, 1899, where, after giving grounds for the view that the main bulk of that work was written before 100 B.C., I concluded that we should "regard both works (i.e. the Testaments and Jubilees) as almost contemporary, and as emanating from the same school of thought." This view was advocated in the following year by Bohn and by Bousset on various grounds, and it is from this standpoint that the present Commentary is written. The difficulties that beset almost every page of Jubilees vanish for the most part when once we understand that it was written by a Pharisaic upholder of the Maccabean dynasty, who was also probably a priest.

It is difficult to exaggerate the value of Jubilees. The fact that it is the oldest commentary in the world on Genesis, is in itself a distinction. But it is not on this ground that we value it, but rather for the insight it gives us into the religious beliefs of Judaism in the second century B.C. Its interests are many sided. It appeals to the textual critic, as it attests the form of the Hebrew text, which was current in that century. It appeals to the Old Testament scholar, as exhibiting further developments of ideas and tendencies which are only in their incipient stages in the Old Testament. It appeals to the New Testament scholar, as furnishing the first literary embodiment of beliefs which subsequently obtained an entrance into the New Testament, and as having in all probability formed part of the library of some of the apostolic writers. It appeals to the student of theological doctrine, as providing certain indispensable links in the process of development. Finally, to the Jewish scholar, a Pharisaic work of the second century B.C. cannot fail to be of transcendent interest, as it gives the earlier forms of certain legislative enactments that appear in the Mishna, and of legends which in later Judaism have undergone much transformation.

Although half a century has elapsed since the discovery of Jubilees in its complete form in the Ethiopic Version, no scholar has hitherto attempted a commentary on the entire work. Some thirty years ago Rönsch edited a very learned and laborious work on the Latin Fragments, which constitute slightly more than one-fourth of the original writing, but since his time scholars have contented themselves with short studies on various views of our author.

I cannot conclude without thanking Mr. Cowley for his help in verifying references in the Talmud.

INTRODUCTION

§ 1. SHORT ACCOUNT OF THE BOOK

THE Book of Jubilees was written in Hebrew by a Pharisee between the year of the accession of Hyrcanus to the high-priesthood in 135 and his breach with the Pharisees some years before his death in 105 B.C. It is the most advanced pre-Christian representative of the midrashic tendency, which had already been at work in the Old Testament Chronicles. As the Chronicler had rewritten the history of Israel and Judah from the basis of the Priests' Code, so our author re-edited from the Pharisaic standpoint of his time the history of events from the creation to the publication, or, according to the author's view, the republication, of the law on Sinai. In the course of re-editing he incorporated a large body of traditional lore, which the midrashic process had put at his disposal, and also not a few fresh legal enactments, that the exigencies of the past had called forth. His work constitutes an enlarged Targum on Genesis and Exodus, in which difficulties in the biblical narrative are solved, gaps supplied, dogmatically offensive elements removed, and the genuine spirit of later Judaism infused into the primitive history of the world. His object was to defend Judaism against the attacks of the hellenistic spirit that had been in the ascendant one generation earlier and was still powerful, and to prove that the law was of everlasting validity.

From our author's contentions and his embittered attacks on the paganisers and apostates, we may infer that Hellenism had urged that the levitical ordinances of the law were only of transitory significance, that they had not been observed by the founders of the nation, and that the time had now come for them to be swept away, and for Israel to take its place in the brotherhood of the nations. Our author regarded all such views as fatal to the very existence of Jewish religion and nationality. But it is not as such that he assailed them, but on the ground of their falsehood. The law, he teaches, is of everlasting validity. Though revealed in time it was superior to time. Before it had been made known in sundry portions to the fathers it had been kept in heaven by the angels, and to its observance henceforward there was no limit in time or in eternity.

Writing in the palmiest days of the Maccabean dominion, he looked for the immediate advent of the Messianic kingdom. This kingdom was to be ruled over by a Messiah sprung, not from Levi—that is, from the Maccabean family, as some of his contemporaries expected—but from Judah. This kingdom would be gradually realised on earth, and the transformation of physical nature would go hand in hand with the ethical transformation of man till there was a new heaven and a new earth. Thus, finally, all sin and pain would disappear and men would live to the age of 1000 years in happiness and peace, and after death enjoy a blessed immortality in the spirit world.

§ 2. THE VARIOUS TITLES OF THE BOOK

Our book was known by two distinct titles even in Hebrew. These were :

(a) "Jubilees" = τὰ Ἰωβηλαῖα or οἱ Ἰωβηλαῖοι = ספר היובלים;¹ and

(b) "The Little Genesis" = ἡ λεπτὴ Γένεσις = זוטא תשעת.²

(c) Apocalypse of Moses and other alleged names of our book.

(a) Jubilees.—According to the citation of Epiphanius (Haer. xxxix. 6), ἐν τοῖς Ἰωβηλαίοις εὐρίσκεται, τῇ καὶ λεπτῇ Γενέσει, the name Jubilees would seem to have been its more usual designation, and "the little Genesis" its less usual. This name is found in the Syriac Fragment entitled "Names of the Wives of the Patriarchs according to the Hebrew Book called Jubilees" (see Ceriani, Mon. Sacra, ii. Fasc. i. 9-10; also my Ethiopic Text of Jubilees, p. 183).

This name is admirably adapted to our book as it divides into jubilee periods of forty-nine years each the history of the world from the creation to the legislation on Sinai. By his peculiar redaction of the biblical history down to this period, our author has shown that the law was already in force before its republication as a whole on Sinai. Moreover, his chronological heptadic system has received a perfectly symmetrical development. Israel enters Canaan at the close of the fiftieth jubilee, i.e. 2450. In the Assumption of Moses, where a jubilee period of fifty years is used, Israel enters Canaan in the year 2500 (see p. lxviii).

² Cf. Treuenfels, "Die kleine Genesis" in Fürst's Literaturblatt des Orients, 1846, No. 6, p. 81.

³ The epithet "little" does not refer to the extent, for it is larger than the canonical Genesis, but rather to the character of Jubilees. It deals more fully with the details and minutiae (i.e. τὰ λεπτά) than the biblical work. Severus of Antioch, ob. 542 A.D., after an account of the death of Moses and the strife between Michael and the evil angels for Moses' body, adds that these matters were said to be described in a book which gave a more detailed account of the known in Greek, not only as ἡ λεπτή Γένεσις but also ἡ Μικρογένεσις, points quite clearly to an authoritative Hebrew title, בְּרֵאשִׁית וְנֹטָא, which was variously rendered in Greek. There were, indeed, four renderings of the Hebrew :

1. ἡ λεπτή Γένεσις (or Λεπτὴ Γένεσις).
2. ἡ Λεπτογένεσις.
3. τὰ λεπτὰ Γενέσεως.
4. ἡ Μικρογένεσις.

1. ἡ λεπτή Γένεσις.—This title is found sixteen times : in Epiphanius, Haer. xxxix. 6 (twice); Syncellus i. 7, 183, 192; Cedrenus i. 6, 9, 16, 48, 53, 85, 87; Zonaras, p. 18 (twice); Glycas, 206 (twice). As Λεπτὴ Γένεσις in Syncellus i. 5, 185, 203 and Cedrenus i. 7. As ἡ λεγομένη λεπτή Γένεσις in Glycas, pp. 198, 392. For the above passages see pp. lxxvii-lxxx.

2. ἡ Λεπτογένεσις.—This form of the title is found in Didymus of Alexandria (see p. lxxvii) and in one of the MSS of Epiphanius, Haer. xxxix. 6 (τῇ καὶ Λεπτογενέσει), where the Cod. Venet. has τῇ καὶ λεπτῇ Γενέσει. On the other hand, it follows from the Decree of Gelasius (see p. lxxviii) that this form was current among Latin writers.

3. τὰ λεπτὰ Γενέσεως.—This form is found in Syncellus i. 13 (see p. lxxix).

4. ἡ Μικρογένεσις.—This designation is found only in Jerome, Epist. 78 ad Fab. See my note on p. 83, where, instead of Λεπτὴ (a.l. Μικρογένεσις), we should read simply Μικρογένεσις. This is Jerome's independent rendering of the Hebrew title, for Jerome was acquainted with the original of Jubilees.

 2. The Testament of Moses.
 3. The Book of Adam's Daughters.
 4. The Life of Adam.

1. The Apocalypse of Moses.—This title is found in Syncellus i. 5 and repeated from him in Cedrenus i. 7: λεπτῇ . . . Γενέσει, ἣν καὶ Μωϋσέως εἶναί φασί τινες ἀποκαλύψιν: and in Syncellus i. 49: ἐν τῇ Μωϋσέως λεγομένη ἀποκαλύψει. From the words φασί τινες and λεγομένη we conclude that this title had some currency in Syncellus' time. It was undoubtedly a very appropriate designation, since our author makes Moses the recipient of all the disclosures in his work (see the Greek scholion in my note on ii. 1). Cedrenus i. 16 speaks of Jubilees as ἡ λεπτὴ Μωσέως Γένεσις. The Apocalypse of Moses mentioned in Syncellus i. 48, from which he says Gal. vi. 15 (οὔτε περιτομή τι ἔστιν οὔτε ἀκροβυστία, ἀλλὰ καινὴ κτίσις) was derived, can have nothing to do with Jubilees, the main aim of which is the glorification of circumcision.

2. The Testament of Moses = ἡ διαθήκη τοῦ Μωϋσέως.—This was an older title than the preceding. Thus it is found in the Catena of Nicephorus i. 175, where the words ἡ διαθήκη precede a quotation from Jubilees x. 21 (see note in loc.). Here ἡ διαθήκη, as Rönsch (p. 275) has rightly argued, stands for ἡ διαθήκη τοῦ Μωϋσέως. It is impossible to determine whether the Testament of Moses which is here to be identified with Jubilees has anything to do with the διαθήκη Μωϋσέως mentioned in four catalogues of the canonical and uncanonical writings. Rönsch (pp. 480-481) argues for their identification on the ground that the Assumption of Moses forms a suitable close to the Book of Jubilees; that they are found together in this order in the Latin MS which was edited by Ceriani; that the Testament of Moses and the Assumption are enumerated together and in this order in the Catalogues of Nicephorus, the Ps. Athanasius and of the Sixty Canonical Books. If, however, the number of stichoi—1100—assigned to this Testament of Moses by the first catalogue is right, then this Testament cannot be the same as Jubilees; for Jubilees is longer than Genesis which, according to the same catalogue, has 4300 stichoi.

On the other hand, there may have been in circulation a Testament of Moses which was an expansion of Jubilees ii.-iii. To such a work—one-fourth the size of Genesis—the quotation given in my note on ii. 1 may possibly point, and probably the statement made by Severus of Antioch (see footnote on p. xv), and the quotation from a Catena on the Pentateuch in Fabricius ii. 121-122: Est quidem in apocrypho mysticoque codice legere, ubi de creatis rebus subtilius agitur, nubem lucidam, quo tempore mortuus est Moses, locum sepulchri complexam oculos circumstantium perstrinxisse ita, ut nullus neque inorientem legislatorem neque locum videre potuerit, ubi cadaver conderetur. Here we have a combination of the Testament of Moses and the Assumption of Moses (see my Assumption of Moses, pp. xlv. sqq.).

3. The Book of Adam's Daughters.—This book is identified with Jubilees in the Decree of Gelasius (see p. lxviii): Liber de filiabus Adae, hoc est Leptogenesis, Apocryphus. The designation is far from inappropriate for our book, as it aims at giving the names of the wives of all the patriarchs from Adam onwards. On the other hand, it may not have been applied to the entire Book of Jubilees but to a short work based on Jubilees, and consisting mainly or solely of the names (and histories) of the women mentioned in Jubilees. Such a collection we find in the Syriac with the title: "Names of the Wives of the Patriarchs according to the Hebrew Book called Jubilees" (see p. xxix). The glosses in the LXX MS used by Holmes and Parsons, and later by Lagarde (see p. lxxxii), may point to such a collection; for these glosses relate to the wives of the patriarchs and go back ultimately to Jubilees. It is possibly worth while to call attention to the fact that some of these names are found in the Annals of the Arabic writer Tabari (see Lidzbarski, De propheticiis, quae dicuntur, Legendis Arabicis, 1893, pp. 11-12).

4. The Life of Adam.—This designation is found only three times, so far as I am aware, in Syncellus i. 7, and always as ὁ λεγόμενος Βίος Ἀδάμ. According to Syncellus this life of Adam recounted the number of days it took Adam to number the various creatures, the making of Eve, the entrance of Adam into Paradise, and the subsequent admission of Eve, etc. (i. 7-9): κεῖται γοῦν ἐν τῷ λεγομένῳ Βίῳ Ἀδὰμ ὁ τῶν ἡμερῶν ἀριθμὸς τῆς τε ὀνομασίας τῶν θηρίων καὶ τῆς πλάσεως τῆς γυναικὸς καὶ τῆς εἰσόδου αὐτοῦ Ἀδὰμ ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ· καὶ τῆς περὶ τοῦ ξύλου τῆς βρώσεως ἐντολῆς τοῦ θεοῦ πρὸς αὐτόν, καὶ τῆς μετὰ τούτου εἰσόδου Εὕα ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ, τὰ τε τῆς παραβάσεως καὶ τὰ μετὰ τὴν παράβασιν, ὡς ὑποτέτακται . . . ταῦτα ἐκ τοῦ Βίου λεγομένου Ἀδὰμ φιλομαθίας χάριν ἐν συντόμῳ ἐστοιχειώσαμεν. If Syncellus is right here as to the contents of the Life of Adam, it treated of the same subjects as Jubilees ii. 1-29. It may, therefore, have been an excerpt from or a section of Jubilees, as Röscher suggests (475-477). Accordingly, he accepts Treuenfels' proposal that the words in Syncellus occurring just before the above extract—ἐκ τῆς λεπτῆς Γενέσεως καὶ τοῦ λεγομένου Βίου Ἀδάμ—should be rendered: "from the Leptogenesis, that is, from the so-called Life of Adam." Since the statements in the Life of Adam are fuller than in Jubilees, the former would be an enlarged edition of a portion of the latter. Both may have been before Syncellus. From the Life of Adam—the fuller account—he quotes on pp. 7-9, and continues his narrative on

pp. 13-15 from Jubilees. Rönsch quotes in support of this view the statement of Jellinek, Bet ha-Midrash ii. 7, ann. 3: "Ein Theil derselben (der Kleinen Genesis), der von Adam handelt, wurde das Leben Adam's genannt und war den Alten als ספרא דאדם הראשון (Zunz, Die gottesdienstl. Vorträge der Juden, p. 128; J. Fürst im Lbl. des Orients, 1848, p. 589) bekannt."

§ 3. THE ETHIOPIC MSS

There are four MSS of this book in Europe, a, b, c, d, which belong respectively to the National Library in Paris, the British Museum, the University Library of Tübingen, and to the collection of M. d'Abbadie. Of these a b (of the fifteenth and sixteenth cent. respectively) are the most valuable, but in not a few readings the true text is preserved by c d (both of recent date). d is more nearly allied to a and c to b. b is the most trustworthy of the four. For a full description of these MSS the reader can consult Charles's Ethiopic Version of the Hebrew Book of Jubilees, pp. xii sqq.

DILLMANN, Maṣḥafa kāfālē sive Liber Jubilaeorum, qui idem a Graecis Ἡ Λεπτὴ Γένεσις inscribitur, aethiopice ad duorum librorum manuscriptorum fidem primum edidit Dillmann, 1859.

This edition is based on MSS c d.

CHARLES, The Ethiopic Version of the Hebrew Book of Jubilees—otherwise known among the Greeks as Ἡ Λεπτὴ Γένεσις—edited from four MSS and critically revised through a continuous comparison of the Massoretic and Samaritan Texts, and the Greek, Syriac, Vulgate and Ethiopic

Versions of the Pentateuch, and further emended and restored in accordance with the Hebrew, Syriac, Greek and Latin fragments of this book, which are here published in full, Clarendon Press, Oxford, 1895.

This edition is based on the only four MSS hitherto known. It is from this text that my translation is made. In some dozen or more passages, however, to which attention is called in the notes, I have withdrawn emendations which I had introduced into the text—some in deference to criticisms of Drs. Praetorius and Littmann and others as a result of further study of the text and subject-matter. On the other hand, I have been enabled, from the much larger knowledge I now have of the literature than I had in 1893-1895, to discover the true text underlying corruptions that had defied detection, and likewise to recognise the occurrence of many dittographies and not a few lacunae (see § 11). The criticism of the text has been further greatly advanced by my discovery of a large poetical element in the book (see § 12).

CHARLES, The Book of Jubilees translated from a text based on two hitherto uncollated Ethiopic MSS (Jewish Quarterly Review, 1893, vol. v. 703-708; 1894, vi. 184-217, 710-745; 1895, vii. 297-328).

The above translation agrees for the most part with the text which I published subsequently. It is, however, untrustworthy in some passages, and is now superseded by the very much improved edition of it which appears in the present volume.

LITTMANN, Das Buch der Jubiläen (Kautzsch's Apokryphen und Pseudepigraphen des A. Testaments, 1900, ii. 31-119).

This admirable translation is based mainly on my Ethiopic text of Jubilees, but occasionally Dr. Littmann prefers to follow the readings of c d in Dillmann's text, and in some cases the grounds for this preference are so good that I have followed his lead. His translation is on the whole very accurate, though there are of course some passages where corrections will be introduced on the occasion of a second edition. To Dr. Littmann I owe many corrections of my English translation in the Jewish Quarterly.

FABRICIUS, J. A., Codex Pseudepigraphus Veteris Testamenti, 1713, i. 849-864. Fabricius here collects under the head of Parva Genesis, passages in Jerome and Greek writers which are expressly assigned to our book. At the close of this collection he adds: "Non dubito tum apud Hieronymum Quaest. et tradit. Hebraeicis in Genesin, tum apud Georgium Syncellum et Cedrenum plura legi ex parva Genesi repetita: quoniam tamen diserte illa non indicant, haec satis esse volui."

TREUENFELS, Die kleine Genesis בראשית זוטא (Fürst's Literaturbl. des Orients, 1846, Nr. 1-6; 1851, Nr. 15). Treuenfels ascribes our book to a Jewish author, who wrote most probably before the Christian era.

DILLMANN, Das Buch der Jubiläen (Ewald's Jahrbücher der bibl. Wissensch. 1851, iii. 72-96). These pages consist of a series of learned and masterly notes which throw great light on the text and its interpretation. Dillmann was of opinion that Jubilees was written originally in Hebrew or Aramaic in the first cent. A.D. before the fall of Jerusalem.

—— Zeitschrift der deutschen morgenländ. Gesellsch. 1857, xi. 161-163.

—— “Pseudepigraphen des A. Testaments” (Herzog’s Real-Encyc.⁽²⁾ xii. 364-365). Here Dillmann sets the composition of Jubilees at the beginning of the Christian era and regards a still earlier date as possible.

—— “Beiträge aus dem Buche der Jubiläen zur Kritik des Pentateuch Textes” (Sitzungsberichte der Königlich Preussischen Akademie der Wissenschaften zu Berlin, 1883, pp. 323-340). With this contribution to the criticism of the Ethiopic text and its value in determining the criticism of the Pentateuch I have already dealt (Ethiopic Vers. of Heb. Bk. of Jubilees, pp. xviii-xix).

JELLINEK, Ueber das Buch der Jubiläen und das Noah-Buch, Leipzig, 1855 (a reprint from the third volume of his Bet ha-Midrash). Although the main contention of this treatise, that Jubilees is of Essene origin, cannot be sustained, Jellinek’s observations on its relations to Jewish Midrashim (i.e. Wajissau and Tadshe) and legends generally are most illuminating and helpful. Jellinek justly recognises that Jubilees was written when the essential character of the Jewish calendar was not definitely fixed.

BEER, Das Buch der Jubiläen und sein Verhältniss zu den Midraschim, Leipzig, 1856; Noch ein Wort über das Buch der Jubiläen, 1857. The former work is the ablest contribution from the Jewish side that has yet been made towards the interpretation of Jubilees. On pp. 25-39 he deals with the points of similarity existing between Jubilees and Jewish tradition, and on pp. 39-56 the points of divergence. Beer ascribes our book to a Samaritan, who made use of the Samaritan Pentateuch, the LXX, and

Jewish tradition, and wrote in Africa. This Samaritan authorship was shown to be impossible by Ewald (Jahrb. d. bibl. Wissensch. 1856, viii. 184 sq.), in a short review of Beer's work, and Dillmann (ZDMG, 1857, xi. 161-163). In the Monatsschrift f. Gesch. d. Judenthums, 1855, pp. 59-65 and his Leben Abrahams, 1859; Leben Moses, 1863, Beer has made many valuable indirect contributions to the exegesis of Jubilees.

FRANKEL, Monatsschrift für Gesch. und Wissensch. des Judenthums, 1856, pp. 311-316, 380-400. Frankel sought to prove that Jubilees was of Egyptian origin and representative of the cult at the Onias Temple at Leontopolis. To this view of Frankel, Beer rejoined in the treatise cited above under his name: Noch ein Wort über das Buch der Jubiläen.

KRÜGER, "Die Chronologie im Buche d. Jubiläen" (ZDMG, 1858, xii. 279-299. Krüger ascribes the composition of Jubilees to the year 320 B.C., but such a view has rightly failed to obtain a single suffrage.

LANGEN, Das Judenthum in Palästina, 1866, pp. 84-102. Jubilees according to this writer is to be assigned to the years 30-60 A.D. (p. 100).

RÖNSCH, Zeitschrift f. wissenschaft. Theologie, 1871, pp. 60-98; Das Buch der Jubiläen, Leipzig, 1874. Rönsch assigned our book to the years 50-60 A.D. It was directed against the rising Christianity, and was an attempt to draw together all the opposing parties in Judaism against the new religion.

KUENEN, Gesammelte Abhandlungen, 1894, pp. 113 sqq.

SCHÜRER, Gesch. des Jüd. Volkes,⁽³⁾ 1898, iii. 274-280. Schürer follows the ordinary view as to the date of Jubilees: "It may with considerable probability be assigned to the first cent. of the Christian era." Notwithstanding its many divergencies from Pharisaic usage and doctrine at that period he holds that in its essential aspects it represents the prevailing Pharisaic standpoint. A good bibliography closes the article.

SINGER, Das Buch der Jubiläen oder die Leptogenesis, I. Theil; Tendenz und Ursprung, zugleich ein Beitrag zur Religionsgeschichte, Stuhlweissenburg (Ungarn), 1898. Rönsch, as we have seen above, was of opinion that Jubilees was directed against Christianity, but Singer thinks that he can establish that it was the work of a Jewish Christian, written (about 58-60 A.D.) with a polemic purpose against the teaching of St. Paul—especially against his doctrine of the abrogation of the law. This work exhibits much learning both in the field of Judaism and Christianity. But the main thesis is not in any sense proved by him nor is it possible of proof.

BOHN, "Die Bedeutung des Buches der Jubiläen (Theol. Stud. und Kritiken, 1900, pp. 167-184). This article shows admirable insight. Its writer recognises rightly that the book belongs to the second cent. B.C. He ascribes its composition to 150 B.C. or thereabouts.

LITTMANN, Kautzsch's Apokryphen und Pseudepigraphen des Alten Testaments, 1900, ii. 31-38. We have here as good an introduction to our author as was possible from the stage of criticism at the time, and one that is meritorious alike for its learning and judgment. In 1899 Littmann reviewed Singer's book (see above) in the ZDMG, pp. 368 sqq.

§ 7. THE VERSIONS OF JUBILEES—GREEK, ETHIOPIC, LATIN, SYRIAC

1. The Greek Version.—Numerous fragments of this version have come down to us in J. Martyr (? see note on p. 41), Origen (see notes on pp. 194, 227), Diodorus of Antioch (see p. 85), Isidore of Alexandria (see p. lxxxix), Epiphanius (see notes on pp. 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 18, 32, 33, 47, 59, 61, 68, 69, 73, 74, 75, 77, 84, 86), John Malala (see notes on pp. 37, 41, 66), Anastasius Sinaita (flor. seventh cent.—preserved only in Latin; see note on p. 23), Syncellus (see notes on pp. 41, 59, 66, 68, 69, 71, 73, 74, 78, 85, 89, 93, 95, 191, 192. It is remarkable that Syncellus attributed to Genesis what comes from our text—see note on p. 164, and similarly to Josephus—see notes on pp. 157, 186, 208), Cedrenus (see notes on pp. 37, 41, 66, 67, 86, 87, 88, 93, 94, 116, 191, 252), Suidas (see note on p. 91), Zonaras (see p. 35), Glycas (see notes on pp. 37, 84, 85, 164), Joel (see notes on pp. 37, 67).

For probable mistranslations in this version see notes on xxx. 25, xliii. 11, xlvii. 9; for corruptions in the MSS before the Ethiopic and Latin translators, see notes on i. 29, ii. 2, v. 4, xiv. 12, xxiii. 10, xxxii. 27, 29.

This version is the parent of the Ethiopic and the Latin, as we shall prove below.

2. The Ethiopic Version.—This version is most accurate and trustworthy and indeed as a rule servilely literal. It has, of course, suffered from the corruptions naturally incident to transmission through MSS. Thus dittographies are frequent and lacunae are of occasional occurrence (see § 11), but the version is singularly free from the glosses and corrections of unscrupulous scribes, though the temptation must have been great to bring it into accord with the Ethiopic version of Genesis. To this source, indeed, we must trace a few perversions of the text: “my wife” in iii. 6 instead of “wife”; xv. 12 (see note); xvii. 12 (“her bottle” instead of “the bottle”); xxiv. 19 (where the words “a well” are not found in the Latin version of Jubilees, nor in the Mass., Sam., LXX, Syr., and Vulg. of Gen. xxvi. 19). In the above passages the whole version is influenced, but in a much greater degree has this influence operated on MS a. Thus in iii. 4, 6, 7, 19, 29, iv. 4, 8, v. 3, vi. 9, etc., the readings of the Ethiopic version of Genesis have replaced the original text. In the case of b I can discover only one instance of this nature in xv. 15 (see my Text, pp. xii. sqq.).

3. The Latin Version.—This version, of which about one fourth has been preserved, was first published by Ceriani in his Monumenta sacra et profana, 1861, tom. i. fasc. i. 15-62. It contains the following sections: xiii. 10^b-21; xv. 20^b-31^a; xvi. 5^b-xvii. 6^a; xviii. 10^b-xix. 25; xx. 5^b-xxi. 10^a; xxii. 2-19^a; xxiii. 8^b-23^a; xxiv. 13-xxv. 1^a; xxvi. 8^b-23^a; xxvii. 11^b-24^a; xxviii. 16^b-27^a; xxix. 8^b-xxx. 1^a; xxxi. 9^b-18, 29^b-32; xxxii. 1-8^a, 18^b-xxxiii. 9^a, 18^b-xxxiv. 5^a; xxxv. 3^b-12^a; xxxvi. 20^b-xxxvii. 5^a; xxxviii. 1^b-16^a; xxxix. 9-xl. 8^a; xli. 6^b-18; xlii. 2^b-14^a; xlv. 8-xlvi. 1, 12-xlviii. 5; xlix. 7^b-22. This version was next edited by Rösensch in 1874, Das Buch der Jubiläen . . . unter Beifügung des revidirten Textes der . . . lateinischen Fragmente. This work attests enormous industry and great learning, but is deficient in judgment and critical acumen. Rösensch was of opinion that this Latin version was made in Egypt or its neighbourhood by a Palestinian Jew about the middle of the fifth cent. (pp. 459-460). In 1895 I edited this text afresh in conjunction with the Ethiopic in the Oxford Anecdota (The Ethiopic Version of the Hebrew Book of Jubilees). To this work and that of Rösensch above the reader must be referred for a fuller treatment of this subject. Here we may draw attention to the following points. This version, where it is preserved, is almost of equal value with the Ethiopic. It has, however, suffered more at the hands of correctors. Thus it has been corrected in conformity with the LXX in xlvi. 14 where it adds "et Oon" against all other authorities. The Eth. version of Exod. i. 11 might have been expected to bring about this addition in our Ethiopic text but it did not. Two similar instances will be found in xvii. 5, xxiv. 20. Again the Latin version seems to have been influenced by the Vulgate in xxix. 13, xlii. 11 (canos meos where our Ethiopic text = μου τὸ γῆρας as in LXX of Gen. xlii. 38); and probably also in xlvii. 7, 8, and certainly in xlv. 12 where it reads in tota terra for in terra. Of course there is the possibility that the Latin has reproduced faithfully the Greek and that the Greek was faulty; or in case it was correct, that it was the Greek presupposed by our Ethiopic version that was at fault.

Two other passages are deserving of attention, xix. 14 and xxxix. 13. In the former the Latin version "et creverunt et juvenes facti sunt" agrees with the Eth. version of Gen. xxv. 27 against the Ethiopic version of Jubilees and all other authorities on Gen. xxv. 27. Here the peculiar reading can be best explained as having originated in the Greek. In the second passage, the clause "eorum quae fiebant in carcere" agrees with the Eth. version of Gen. xxxix. 23 against the Ethiopic version of Jubilees and all other authorities on Gen. xxxix. 23.

On the other hand, there is a large array of passages in which the Latin version preserves the true text over against corruptions or omissions in the Ethiopic version: cf. xvi. 16, xix. 5, 10, 11, xx. 6, 10, xxi. 3, xxii. 3, etc. (see my Text, p. xvi.).

4. The Syriac Version.—The evidence as to the existence of a Syriac is not conclusive. It is based on the fact that a British Museum MS (Add. 12,154, fol. 180) contains a Syriac fragment entitled, "Names of the Wives of the Patriarchs according to the Hebrew Book called Jubilees." It was first published by Ceriani in his Monumenta Sacra, 1861, tom. ii. fasc. i. 9-10, and reprinted by me as Appendix III. to my Text of Jubilees (p. 183).

§ 8. THE ETHIOPIC AND LATIN VERSIONS—TRANSLATIONS FROM THE GREEK

Like all the biblical literature Jubilees was translated into Ethiopic from Greek. We have seen above (p. xxvi) that the Greek version had a very wide currency. To show that our text is a translation from the Greek version it will be sufficient to point out that in xxxiv. 11 we have a transliteration of ἡλίου ("of the sun"); that in i. 29, ii. 2, v. 4, xiv. 12, xxiii. 10, xxviii. 27, xxxii. 4, 27, 29, xlvii. 5 (see notes in loc.) we must retranslate into Greek before we can discover the source of the various corruptions. Further, Greek words such as δρύς, βάλανος, λίψ, σχῖνος, φάραγξ, etc. are transliterated in the Ethiopic. The Greek article is rendered by the demonstrative ii. 2, iii. 25, xxiv. 19, 29. Finally, proper names are transliterated as they appear in Greek and not in Hebrew: viii. 5, x. 18, etc.

It is no less obvious that the Latin is also a translation from the Greek. Thus in xxxix. 12, timoris = δειλίας, a corruption of δουλείας; in xxxviii. 13, honorem = τιμήν, which should have been rendered by tributum (so Eth.); in xxxii. 26, celavit = ἔκρυψε, corrupt for ἔγραψε (so Eth.). Again, in xxxi. 30, orasti orationem is a mistranslation of ἡύξω εὐχήν, which here = novisti votum; in xxxii. 30, sub glande = ὑπὸ τῆς βαλάνου, which here = sub quercu. The Greek article is often rendered by the Latin demonstrative as in the Ethiopic version: hujus Abrahae, xxix. 16; huic Jacob . . . huic Istraël, xxxi. 15. Greek constructions are reproduced: memor fuit sermones, xvii. 3 = ἐμνήσθη τοὺς λόγους: consummavit loquens, xv. 22 = συνετέλεσε λαλῶν: in omnibus quibus (for quae) dedisti, xxii. 8 = ἐν πᾶσιν οἷς ἔδωκας. We should observe also the extraordinary mistranslation of μήποτε = (ne forte) by ne quando in xlii. 11. (See Rönsch, pp. 439 sqq.)

The early date and place of composition speak for a Semitic original, and the following evidence for such an original is irresistible.

But the question at once arises: was this original Aramaic or Hebrew? Certain proper names in the Latin version ending in -in seem to bespeak an Aramaic, as Cettin, xxiv. 28; Adurin, xxxviii. 8, 9; Filistin, xxiv. 14-16. But since in all these cases the Ethiopic transliterations end in -m and not in -n, it is not improbable that this Aramaising in the Latin version is due to the translator, who, as Rönsch has concluded on other grounds, was a Palestinian Jew. Moreover, it is most dangerous to conclude from Aramaic proper names to an Aramaic original; for Aramaic forms occur not infrequently in the Greek versions of the Old Testament. Thus this very word Cettim (כְּתִים) appears as Χεττάν in Symmachus (Gen. x. 4), Χεττείν in the LXX (B) and Lucian of Judg. i. 26, Χεττιέν in the LXX (B) of 1 Kings x. 33. As regards Adurin (which in the Eth. version = 'Adûrâm), we should observe that this word appears as 'Ανοιράμ, i.e. 'Αδοιράμ, in the sister work Test. Iud. 9. Thus we may here again conclude to an original Hebrew form. It is noteworthy also that whereas in xxxviii. 3 of the Latin we have Adoram, in the Ethiopic we have 'Adôrân. Another Aramaic form is Mastêmâ (מַסְתֵּמָא) [Μαστιφάμ in Syncellus, Μαστιφάτ in Cedrenus, and Mastima in the Latin version, xviii. 12, xlviii. 2], from the hiphel participle, מַסְתֵּם). But the presence of such a proper name in a Semitic document is inconclusive as we have shown above. Cf. Littmann, in Kautzsch's Apok. u. Pseud. ii. 34.

The grounds, on the other hand, for a Hebrew original are weighty and numerous :

1. A work which claims to be from the hand of Moses would naturally be written in Hebrew.—Hebrew, our author teaches, was the sacred and national language (see notes on xii. 25-26 ; xliii. 15).

2. The revival of the national spirit of the nation is universally, so far as we know, accompanied by a revival of the national language.—Thus the Psalms of Solomon (70-40 B.C.) were written in Hebrew, and the Similitudes in the Ethiopic Enoch (xxxvii.-lxx.), as I hope to prove later. As regards the sections of Enoch which were written before the revival of the national spirit under the Maccabees other grounds must decide.

3. The text must be retranslated into Hebrew in order to explain unintelligible expressions and restore the true text.—Thus in xliii. 11 lâ'êlêja = ἐν ἐμοί, which is a mistranslation of בִּי. בִּי in this context = δέομαι, "pray," as in Gen. xlv. 18, which our text reproduces almost word for word. In xvi. 31 lebba dabart (Lat. Vers. corde palmarum) = לבב התמר, where ל is corrupt for לולב. In xlvii. 9 the text = domum Faraonis, but the context demands filiam Faraonis. Hence the Greek translator here misread בַּת-פ as בֵּית-פ or בַּת-פ. The true Aramaic word for daughter is ברת. See also notes on ii. 29, iii. 15, vi. 35, xlviii. 12.

Under this head also we might draw attention to the presence of dittographies already existing in the Hebrew text. See notes on iii. 16, xviii. 15, xxx. 1.

4. Hebraisms survive in the Ethiopic and Latin versions.—Thus in ii. 9, 25 the Ethiopic wahaba = "gave" goes back to נתן, which must here be translated "appointed." In xxii. 10 eligere in te is a reproduction of בחר; in xxiv. 25 sermo hic = "this thing" = הדבר הזה, a purely Hebrew expression; in xix. 8 in qua . . . in ipsa (so also Eth.)

= ἐν ᾧ . . . ἐν αὐτῇ = אֵל אֱשֶׁר בָּהּ; in xl. 7 (see note) we have a transliteration of a Hebrew phrase 'Êl 'Êl wa 'Abîrër where we should read 'Abîrêl. Again in iv. 4 nûha is a corrupt transliteration of נֹחַ. See also vi. 35, xxxiii. 1, xl. 10.

5. Many paronomasiae discover themselves on retranslation into Hebrew.—Thus in iv. 9 there is a play on Enoch the son of Cain; on Jared in iv. 15, on Noah in iv. 28, on Peleg in viii. 8, on Reu in x. 18, on Serug in xi. 6, on Terah in xi. 12 (see notes in loc.).

6. Many passages of this book are preserved in rabbinic writings, such as the Hebrew Book of Noah, the Midrash Wajjissau, the Chronicles of Jerahmeel, the Book of Jashar, and the Midrash Tadshe. It has also much matter in common with the Testaments of the XII. Patriarchs which was also originally written in Hebrew.

§ 10. TEXTUAL AFFINITIES OF THE TEXT OF THE BOOK OF JUBILEES

In order to understand the position which the Hebrew text of Jubilees occupied in relation to the texts and versions of the Pentateuch, it will be necessary to summarise briefly its affinities with them. We shall now discover that our text agrees in turn with the Samaritan (twice?), LXX, Syriac, Vulgate, and with Onkelos.

In the following list, where the corresponding passages in Jubilees and the Pentateuch are given without further comment, the details will be found in the notes accompanying the translation. Thus in the first sub-heading i. (a), where xxvi. 34 of our text is equated with Gen. xxvii. 40, the needful information is given in the notes on xxvi. 34. On the other hand, where the notes do not supply such details the reading given by our text and its supporters and the opposing text and its authorities are supplied in brackets. Thus we are to interpret the statement "xli. 14 ('his shepherd')—Gen. xxviii. 40 ('his friend')," which occurs under the sub-heading ii. (η), "It agrees with the LXX and Vulg. against the Mass., Sam., and Syr.," as meaning that our text, supported by the LXX and Vulg. of Gen. xxviii. 40, reads "his shepherd," whereas the Mass., Sam., and Syr. read "his friend." For fuller information the reader can refer to my Ethiopic Text.

i. First as to its agreement with individual authorities in opposition to the rest:

(α) It agrees with the Sam. against the Mass., LXX, Syr., Onk. in iv. 7 ("he called")—Gen. iv. 25 ("she called"); xxvi. 34 (?)—Gen. xxvii. 40.

(β) It agrees with the LXX against the Mass., Sam., Syr., Vulg. in iii. 24 ("thy pains")—Gen. iii. 16 ("thy conception"); v. 1—Gen. vi. 2; vii. 8—Gen. ix. 22; viii. 1—Gen. xi. 13; xiii. 2—Gen. xii. 6; xiv. 2, 12—Gen. xv. 2, 11; xv. 15 ("her name will be called")—Gen. xvii. 15 ("thou shalt call her name"); xviii. 2—Gen. xxii. 2; xxiv. 25—Gen. xxvi. 32; xxvi. 25 (+ "his son")—Gen. xxvii. 30 (see my Text, p. 97, note 20); xxviii. 11 (+ Jacob)—Gen. xxix. 32; xxviii. 29—Gen. xxx. 43; xxix. 4—Gen. xxxi. 20; xlvi. 14 ("he set over")—Exod. i. 11 ("they set over").

(γ) It agrees with the Syriac version against the Mass., Sam., LXX, Vulg. in xii. 15 ("went forth" in sing.)—Gen. xi. 31 (Mass. = "went forth" in pl., Sam., LXX, Vulg. = "led forth"); xviii. 11 ("I have shown")—Gen. xxii. 12 ("I know"); xliii. 21 ("by the command of the mouth of Pharaoh")—Gen. xlv. 21 ("by the mouth of Pharaoh"); xlvii. 7—Exod. ii. 7; xlix. 9 ("the guilt")—Num. ix. 13 ("his guilt").

(δ) It agrees with the Vulg. against Mass., Sam., LXX, Syr. in vii. 9 ("their shoulders")—Gen. ix. 23 ("both their shoulders"); xiv. 1 ("and thy reward")—Gen. xv. 1 ("thy reward"); xiv. 22 ("shall build up")—Gen. xvi. 2 ("shall be builded up"); xxiv. 3 ("give me")—Gen. xxv. 30 ("feed me"); xxiv. 19 ("living water")—Gen. xxvi. 19 ("well of water"); xxvi. 31 ("Isaac")—Gen. xxvii. 39 ("Isaac his father").

(ε) It agrees with the Targum of Onkelos against the Mass., Sam., LXX, Syr., Vulg. in xiii. 20 ("not be numbered")—Gen. xiii. 16 ("be numbered"); xiii. 24—Gen. xiv. 14; xv. 17 ("rejoiced")—Gen. xvii. 17 ("laughed").

ii. We shall next give its affinities with two or more of the above authorities in opposition to the rest.

(α) Its agreement with the Mass. and Sam.:

It agrees with the Mass. and Sam. against the LXX, Syr., Vulg. in iii. 3—Gen. ii. 20; vi. 7 ("with the life thereof with the blood")—Gen. ix. 4 (LXX ἐν αἵματι ψυχῆς).

It agrees with the Mass. and Onk. against the Sam., LXX, Syr., Vulg., Ps.-Jon. in iii. 7—Gen. ii. 24.

(β) Its agreement with the Mass., Sam., Syr., or with these + Vulg. or + Vulg. and Onk.:

It agrees with Mass., Sam., and Syr. against the LXX and Vulg. in iii. 25 ("for thy sake," בְּעֵבְרֶיךָ)—Gen. iii. 17 (LXX (and Vulg.) ἐν τοῖς ἔργοις σου = בְּעֵבְרֶיךָ); vi. 8 ("by man")—Gen. ix. 6 (LXX ἀντὶ τοῦ αἵματος αὐτοῦ); xxvi. 27 ("thy firstborn")—Gen. xxvii. 32 (LXX + Vulg. om. "thy"); xxvi. 29 ("unto his father")—Gen. xxvii. 34 (LXX + Vulg. om.); xxvii. 21 ("behold")—Gen. xxviii. 13 (LXX + Vulg. om.).

It agrees with the Mass., Sam., Syr., Vulg. against the LXX in v. 27 ("prevailed")—Gen. vii. 24 (LXX ὑψώθη);

xii. 15 ("from Ur")—Gen. xi. 31 (LXX ἐκ τῆς χώρας);
xiv. 3 ("out of thine own bowels")—Gen. xv. 4 (LXX ἐκ σου = 𐤓𐤕𐤍 instead of 𐤓𐤕𐤍𐤓); xiv. 12—Gen. xv. 11; xv. 3 ("Almighty")—Gen. xvii. 1 (LXX σου).

It agrees with the Mass., Sam., Syr., Vulg., and Onk.
against the LXX in xv. 20—Gen. xvii. 22; xxvi. 23 ("peoples")—Gen. xxvii. 29 (LXX ἄρχοντες = 𐤀𐤓𐤕𐤍𐤓 corrupt for 𐤀𐤓𐤕𐤍); xxvi. 24 ("brethren")—Gen. xxvii. 29 (LXX τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ σου).

It agrees with the Mass., Sam., Syr., Aq., Symm., Vulg., and Onk. against the LXX in xiii. 10 ("towards the south")
—Gen. xii. 9 (LXX ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ).

(γ) Its agreement with the Sam. and LXX or with these
+ Syr. or + Onk. or + Vulg. or + Syr. and Vulg.:

It agrees with the Sam. and LXX against the Mass.,
Syr., Vulg. in xiv. 18—Gen. xv. 20; xv. 14—Gen. xvii. 14;
xvii. 1 ("his son")—Gen. xxi. 8 (om.); xxvii. 11 ("my father")—Gen. xxviii. 4 (om.).

Mass., Vulg., and Onk. in ii. 16—Gen. ii. 2.

It agrees with the Sam., LXX, Syr., and Vulg. against Mass., Onk., and Ps.-Jon. in xii. 23 ("them that curse")—
Gen. xii. 3 ("him that curses"); xvii. 7—Gen. xxi. 13;
xxviii. 8 ("I shall give")—Gen. xxix. 27 ("we will give");
xliii. 12 ("with us")—Gen. xlv. 31 (om.).

It agrees with the Sam., LXX, Syr., and Vulg. against the Mass. and Onk. in xv. 16—Gen. xvii. 16; xv. 19 ("and for his seed")—Gen. xvii. 19 ("for his seed").

It agrees with the Sam., LXX, and Onk. against Mass.,
Syr., and Vulg. in iii. 6—Gen. ii. 23.

It agrees with the Sam., LXX, and Vulg. against the Mass.
and Syr. in xiv. 13 ("it was said")—Gen. xv. 13 ("He said").

(δ) Its agreement with the Sam. and Syr. + the Vulg.
or others:

It agrees with the Sam., Syr., Ps.-Jon., Graec.-Ven. against the Mass., Vulg., and Itala in xviii. 12 ("a single (= 𐤓𐤕𐤓) ram")—Gen. xxii. 23 ("behind (𐤓𐤕𐤓) him a ram"). Onk. combines both readings.

It agrees with the Sam., Syr., Vulg., Onk. against Mass. and LXX in xliv. 16 ("Phûa")—Gen. xlv. 13 ("Puvvah").

(ε) Its agreement with the Sam. version + LXX or with the Sam. version + Syr. and others :

It agrees with the Sam. vers., LXX, Syr. (?), Onk. against Mass., Sam., Vulg. in xviii. 15—Gen. xxii. 17.

It agrees with the Sam. Vers., Syr., Vulg. (and possibly Sam.) against Mass. and LXX in xviii. 13 ("hath seen" or "seeth")—Gen. xxii. 14 (Mass. "will be seen" or "provided") (LXX ὥφθη).

(ζ) Its agreement with the LXX and Syr. and with these + others :

It agrees with the LXX and Syr. against Mass., Sam. in iii. 24 ("thy return")—Gen. iii. 16 ("thy desire"); xiv. 2 ("son of my handmaid")—Gen. xv. 2 ("of my house"?); xli. 9—Gen. xxxviii. 14.

It agrees with the LXX and Syr. and, in the main, with the Sam. and Vulg. against the Mass. and Onk. in vi. 32 ("beasts and cattle and birds and every moving thing"; LXX πάντα τὰ θηρία καὶ πάντα τὰ κτήνη καὶ πᾶν πετεινὸν καὶ πᾶν ἑρπετὸν κινούμενον. So Syr. save that it omits καὶ after πετεινόν; Sam. and Vulg. agree with LXX save that Vulg. omits καὶ πᾶν πετεινόν and Sam. omits καὶ πάντα τὰ κτήνη)—Gen. viii. 19 ("every beast, every creeping thing, and every fowl, whatsoever creepeth").

It agrees with the LXX, Syr., and Vulg. against the Mass. and Sam. in v. 8 ("will . . . abide")—Gen. vi. 3 ("will . . . strive"); xiv. 4 ("said unto him")—Gen. xv. 5 ("said"); xv. 16—Gen. xvii. 16; xxiv. 3 ("said to him")

—Gen. xxv. 31 (“said”); xliii. 12 (“our father”)—Gen. xliv. 30 (Mass. “my father”).

(η) Its agreement with the LXX and Vulg.:

It agrees with the LXX and Vulg. against the Mass., Sam., and Syr. (+ “and dancing”) xvii. 4—Gen. xxi. 9 ; xxvii. 8—Gen. xxvii. 46 (+ “of the daughters of Heth”); xxvii. 11 (“after thee”)—Gen. xxviii. 4 (“with thee”); xxviii. 1 (“land of the east”)—Gen. xxix. 1 (“land of the sons of the east”); xli. 14 (“his shepherd” = רֹעֵהוּ)—Gen. xxviii. 20 (“his friend” = רֵעֵהוּ).

It agrees with the LXX, Vulg., and Onk. in xv. 14 (“for he has broken”)—Gen. xvii. 14 (“he has broken”).

(θ) It agrees with the LXX (d^{sil}e, πατρός μου, but other MSS give πατρός σου as in the Sam. and Eth. vers.) against the Mass., Syr., and Vulg. in xxvii. 11—Gen. xxviii. 4 (om.).

Though the above list is not exhaustive it is sufficiently so for our purposes. It follows from it that our book attests an independent form of the Hebrew text of the Pentateuch. Thus it agrees at times with the Sam. or LXX or Syr. or Vulg. or even with Onk. against all the rest. Similarly it agrees with various combinations of these against the rest.

In the next place we infer from the following phenomena that our book represents some form of the Hebrew text of the Pentateuch midway between the forms presupposed by the LXX and the Syriac. For it agrees more frequently with the LXX, see i. (β), or with combinations into which the LXX enters, see ii. (γ), (ε), (η), (θ), than with any other single authority or with any combination excluding the LXX. Next to the LXX it agrees most often with the Syriac, see i. (γ), or with combinations into which the Syriac enters, see ii. (β), (δ). On the other hand its independence of the LXX is shown by such passages as i. (α), (γ), (δ), (ε), and its actual superiority in a large array of readings, ii. (α), (β), where it has the support of the Sam. and Mass., or of these with various combinations of Syr., Vulg. and Onk.

If to the above considerations we add the facts that, so far as I am aware, (1) it never agrees against all the rest with the Mass., which is in some respects the latest form of the Hebrew text; (2) that it agrees in a few cases with Onk., oftener with the Vulg., and still oftener with the Syr., and oftenest with the LXX, against all the rest; (3) that, when it enters combinations, it is almost universally in attestation of the earlier reading, it may be reasonably concluded that the textual evidence points to the composition of our book at some period between 250 B.C. (LXX version of Pentateuch) and 100 A.D., and at a time nearer the earlier date than the latter.

Lacunae.—In addition to the occasional small lacunae which are supplied from the Latin version or other independent sources, there are four larger lacunae in ii. 22, iii. 23, vii. 37, xiii. 25. The first consists of two clauses according to the Greek authorities: "As there were two and twenty letters, and two and twenty books," but, according to the Midrash Tadshe, only of one: "As there were two and twenty letters" (see ii. 23 notes). Since the earliest testimony elsewhere to this reckoning of the books of the Old Testament as twenty-two is that of Josephus (c. Apion. i. 8), it is possible that the clause in question in Epiphanius and Syncellus may be an addition to the text of Jubilees. This reckoning is mentioned also by Origen, Athanasius, Cyril of Jerusalem, in the Canons of the Council of Laodicea, Jerome, etc. (see Ryle, Canon of the Old Testament, 1892, p. 221). On the other hand, it is

The third lacuna in vii. 37 appears to have extended to two or more verses, which dealt with the right of eating the fruit of trees in the fifth year after they were planted, and of sowing and reaping the land during six years and the duty of letting it lie fallow on the seventh (see notes in loc.). The greatest loss which our book has sustained is that which occurs in xiii. 25. Here the text still stands in a mutilated condition. The subject of the lost verses was undoubtedly Abram's pursuit of the kings, his recovery of the captives, and his meeting with Melchizedek. Since on other grounds it appears that the Maccabean princes claimed in some respects to represent the priesthood of Melchizedek, this loss is most deplorable (see notes on xiii. 25, xxxii. 1, xxxvi. 16).

Dittographies.—We have already drawn attention to three passages where dittographies most probably existed already in the Hebrew text. These are far from infrequent in the Ethiopic version. Thus in i. 29, vi. 33, viii. 6, 16, ix. 1, xv. 34, xix. 10, xxii. 24, xxxi. 18, xxxiv. 13, xxxv. 13, the dittographies are verbal repetitions of clauses in immediate or mediate juxtaposition. Some of these repetitions may, of course, have already occurred in the Greek. But there is another class of dittographies present in our version which are due to incorporation in the text of duplicate renderings. Thus in xxx. 16 the clause "and no consideration of persons" follows immediately on "And there will be no respect of persons," and both are alternative renderings of καὶ οὐκ ἔσται προσωποληψία or some such phrase. This conclusion is confirmed by the Latin version which shows no such dittography. We have the evidence of the same version for excising the dittography in xxiii. 11. Other duplicate renderings, which have found their way into the Ethiopic version, our text exhibits in xx. 3, xxi. 10, 13, xxiv. 3. Possibly in xxxii. 21 "read and read," which I have emended with the Latin legit et cognovit into "read and knew," should be regarded as a simple dittography within the Ethiopic; and legit et cognovit as due to two alternative renderings of ἀνέγνω, where the first is right.

Dislocations.—A most probable instance of this nature occurs in xxxvii. 20^{ef}. These two prose lines intervene in the midst of a poem. They are corrupt in all the MSS, but by an easy emendation could be adapted to follow after the first clause of the preceding verse. See note in loc.

Another passage is v. 17-18 which deals with the Day of Atonement. I have treated it as interpolated or else as transposed from after xxxiv. 18-19, which treats of the first institution of this festival. It is possible, however, that these verses did belong to the original. Thus 10^b-12 refer to the final judgment and the renewal of the world. The subject of the final judgment is there further dealt with in its general character in 13-16, and in 17-18 the writer turns aside to show the special grace accorded to Israel on that day if they observe the Day of Atonement. But I still incline to the view that 17-18 are foreign to their present context.

Again, i. 28 should probably be read before i. 26, and xxiii. 16 after xxiii. 19.

§ 12. POETICAL ELEMENT IN JUBILEES

Just before completing my commentary on Jubilees, I was so fortunate as to discover that no small proportion of it was originally written in verse. Accordingly the reader will find the following passages arranged as verse: x. 3; xii. 2-5, 18-20, 23, 29; xv. 6-8; xviii. 15-16; xix. 17, 20-22, 25; xx. 6-10; xxi. 21-25; xxii. 11-23; xxiii. 23-31; xxiv. 30-32; xxv. 15-23; xxvi. 23-24, 31-34;

xxxi. 15-20 ; xxxvii. 20-23. This discovery not only adds to the interest of the book but also illuminates many a dark passage, suggests the right connections of wrongly separated clauses, and forms an admirable instrument of criticism generally. Thus, if the reader turns to xxxvii. 20-23 he will find a poem—probably an old one—consisting of five stanzas of three lines each. Our recognition of this fact enables us to excise as an interpolation the unintelligible words occurring in the MSS at the close of the first stanza. Even if we emended these words we should only have a distich, which would be suspicious in the midst of a poem consisting of tristichs. But not only is the form against their genuineness here, but also their subject matter (see notes in loc.). Again, in xxxi. 18 we reject a line both on the ground of the parallelism and of its being a dittography, and in xxi. 22 a line on the ground of the parallelism. The most important of these poems is the apocalypse in xxiii. 23-31 which consists of ten stanzas, the first nine of which are tristichs and the last a tetrastich. Of the rest some are composed in distichs, as xii. 23, 29 ; xviii. 15-16 ; xx. 6-10 ; xxii. 11-23 ; xxv. 15-23, xxvi. 23-24, 31-34 ; xxxi. 15-20 ; some in tristichs xix. 17, 25 ; xxi. 21-25 ; xxxvii. 20-23 ; and the rest partly in distichs and partly in tristichs in xii. 18-20 (consisting of a tristich + distich + tristich + 2 distichs) ; xv. 6-8 (distich + 2 tristichs) ; xix. 20-22 (2 tristichs + 2 distichs). While on the one hand it must be confessed that in xv. 6-8 ; xviii. 15-16 ; xxxi. 20, and in one or more other passages, it is difficult to arrive at a satisfactory arrangement ; on the other it seems most probable that much of the first chapter was originally written in verse ; also vii. 10^b-12 ; xxvii. 23-24 ; xxxii. 18-19, and many passages elsewhere.

Our book is the work of one author, but is largely based on earlier books and traditions. The narrative of Genesis forms, of course, the bulk of the book, but every page of it contains materials characteristic of the age of our author. By referring to Index I. the reader will see at a glance the books of the Old Testament laid under contribution.

But our present chief interest is the relation of our author to non-canonical Jewish literature. Thus he borrows vii. 20-39, x. 1-15 from the Book of Noah. Of this book happily the greater part of x. 1-2, 9-14 is still preserved in the Hebrew Book of Noah (see Jellinek's Bet ha-Midrash, iii. 155, and my Text of Jubilees, p. 179). Our author had before him also the greater part of the Book of Enoch vi.-xvi., xxiii.-xxxvi., lxxii.-xc.

Besides these he also made use of current traditions and legends, which were already reduced to writing, and have come down to us in Hebrew and Greek in other independent works. Thus the war of Jacob and his sons against the Amorite kings, xxxiv. 1-9, is found in the Test. Judah 3-7, a contemporary work, in the Midrash Wajjissau, which contains if not the original legend, at all events a very early recast of it, and in the Book of Jashar—a late work. Again, our author drew on existing writings for his description of the fratricidal war between Jacob and Esau in xxxvii.-xxxviii. Here the only contemporary authority that still exists for our text is Test. Jud. 9. But with a few reservations the same statement may be made of the Hebrew document preserved in the Jalkut Shimeoni i. 132 and the Chronicles of Jerahmeel (see my notes on pp. 214-215).

Other incidents in our text, which are attested also in the contemporary Testaments of the XII. Patriarchs, are the story of Bilhah's dishonour at the hands of Reuben during Jacob's absence (Jub. xxxiii. 1-9—Test. Reuben 3); Levi's dream as to the priesthood (xxxii. 1—Test. Levi 2, 4, 5, 8, 9), and his consecration to it by Isaac (xxxi. 13-17—Test. Levi 9); the names of the wives of Levi and Judah (xxxiv. 20—Test. Levi 11; Test. Jud. 8, 13, 16); the story of Tamar, Er and Onan, and Judah's repentance (xli. —Test. Jud. 10, 12, 14, 19); the burial of Jacob's sons in Hebron (xlvi. 9—Test. Reub. 7, Levi 19, Jud. 26 Zeb. 10, Dan. 7, Naph. 9, Gad 8, Asher 8; cf. Jos. Ant. ii. 8. 2) during a war between Egypt and Canaan (xlvi. 9—Test. Sim. 8, Benj. 12 [Arm. Vers.]). Also the insertion of Kâinâm in vii. 1 is supported by the LXX of Gen. xi. 13.

Other legendary matter in Jubilees, for which contemporary or earlier documents are, as a rule, not at hand, though most probably belonging to ancient tradition, furnishes us with a large number of proper names—particularly the names of women—'Âwân, wife of Cain (iv. 9), 'Azûra, wife of Seth (iv. 11), Mûalêlêth, the wife of Kenan (iv. 14), and the wives of the various patriarchs down to Terah (see iv. 15, 16, 20, 27, 28, 33; vii. 14, 15, 16; viii. 1, 5, 6, 7; xi. 9, 14, etc.), and of the twelve sons of Jacob (xxxiv. 20), and the daughter of Pharaoh (xlvii. 5). As other proper names of persons we might observe: Barâki'êl (iv. 15), Râsûjâl (iv. 16), Dânel (iv. 20), and so on for the fathers of the wives mentioned above (iv. 27, 28, 33; viii. 1, 5, 6, etc.); also Mâkamârôn, king of Canaan (xlvi. 6), and the Êljô¹ (vii. 22). Again, as names of places: 'Êldâ (iii. 32), the mount of the East (iv. 26), the three cities built by Noah's sons (vii. 14, 15, 16), the various mountains, islands, towns, rivers, and seas mentioned in viii. 12-ix. 13 (most of which can, however, be identified with actual places), 'Ērmôn (= Heroonpolis, xlv. 6).

Other legendary matter was in many instances (see notes in loc.), and possibly in all, the source of the following statements and incidents: the period of five days spent by Adam in naming the creatures (iii. 1-3), the common language of all animals before the Fall (iii. 28), the number of Adam's sons, i.e. twelve (iv. 10), his burial—the first that was made in the earth (iv. 29), the manner of Cain's death (iv. 31), Kâinâm's discovery of writings of the Watchers (viii. 1-4), the detailed account of the tower of Babel and its destruction by a mighty wind (x. 21-26), the beginning of wars and idolatry in Serug's time (xi. 2-4), the history of Abraham's early days and exploits (xi. 16-24), his campaign against idolatry and burning of a heathen temple, death of Haran, Abraham's astronomical knowledge and miraculous acquisition of Hebrew (xii. 1-8, 12-14, 16-21, 25-27), Abraham's ten temptations (xvii. 17), the fact of Zilpah and Bilhah being sisters (xxviii. 9), and of Zebulon and Dinah being twins (xxviii. 23), rape of Dinah at the age of twelve (xxx. 1-3), Jacob's presents to his parents four times a year (xxix. 14-17, 19-20), Isaac's blessing of Levi and Judah (xxxi. 13-20), appointment of Levi to the priesthood as the tenth son (xxxii. 2-3), the deaths of Bilhah and Dinah after news of Joseph's death (xxxiv. 15-16), Simeon's marriage to a woman of Mesopotamia on his repentance (xxxiv. 21), after having first married a woman from Zephath (xlv. 13), the years of famine traced to the failure of the Nile (xlv. 9), the temporary stay of many Israelites in Canaan after burial of the patriarchs (xlvi. 10), the number of months during which the Hebrew children were cast into the river (xlvii. 2), the burning of the Egyptian gods (xlvi. 5), destruction of 1000 Egyptians in the Red Sea for every Hebrew child that was cast into the river (xlvi. 14).

§ 14. JUBILEES—A PRODUCT OF THE MIDRASHIC TENDENCY AT WORK IN THE OLD TESTAMENT CHRONICLER, BUT REPRESENTED BY ITS AUTHOR AS AN ESOTERIC TRADITION

Our book represents an extreme product of the midrashic process which is apparent on most pages of the Old Testament Chronicler. (a) The Chronicler, as we know, to a certain extent rewrote with an object the earlier history of Israel and the history of Judah already recounted in Samuel and Kings. In his hands the history of the nation is so recast as to make it a history of the church, the temple and its cultus, and to represent David and his pious successors as observing all the prescripts of the law according to the Priests' Code. (b) In the course of this process facts that will not square with the writer's presuppositions are omitted or transformed in character. This applies particularly to breaches of the Priests' Code; also to statements such as that in 2 Sam. xxiv. 1, which ascribes David's temptation to Yahweh. This temptation the Chronicler attributes to Satan (1 Chron. xxi. 1).

(a) Now the author of Jubilees sought to do for Genesis¹ what the Chronicler had done for Samuel and Kings (observe especially his recasting of 2 Kings xi. in 2 Chron. xxii. 10-xxiii. 21), and so he rewrote it in such a way as to show that the law had been rigorously observed, even by the patriarchs.

(b) Like the Chronicler our author found many statements in Genesis that did not square with his presuppositions, and accordingly we find that in many instances he alters the text before him,¹ and in others he simply omits. Thus he omits² the sending out of the raven (Gen. viii. 7) possibly on the ground of its being an unclean bird (Lev. xi. 15), and of the doves, Abraham's entertainment of the angels (Gen. xviii. 2-8), his intercession for Sodom (xviii. 22-33), the mention of Lot's wife and many details regarding the destruction of Sodom (Gen. xix. 1-24), Abraham's deception of the Egyptians (xii. 11-14, 18), and of Abimelech in regard to Sarah (Gen. xx. 2-3), Isaac's prayer that Rebecca may have offspring, etc. (Gen. xxv. 21-26), his deception of Abimelech in regard to Rebecca (Gen. xxvi. 7-10), Jacob's meeting with Rachel and his welcome by Laban (Gen. xxix. 2-15), the story of the mandrakes (Gen. xxx. 14-16), Jacob's devices to increase his flocks at the expense of Laban (Gen. xxx. 37-42), the mutual recriminations of Jacob and Laban (Gen. xxxi. 26-32, 36-42), Jacob's meeting with the angels (Gen. xxxii. 1-2), his wrestling with the angel (xxxii. 24-32), his fear of Esau and efforts to propitiate him (Gen. xxxii.-xxxiii.), the circumcision of the Shechemites and their covenant with Jacob (Gen. xxxiv. 14-24). The omissions in the history of Joseph are numerous, but they can be explained almost wholly on the ground of the author's desire for brevity. But as regards Gen. xlix. the case is different. It is purposely suppressed because of its severity on Levi and its giving the pre-eminence to Judah. Our author throughout reverses this relation, and everywhere sets Levi before Judah.

Again, like the Chronicler he takes offence at the frequent mention of men being tempted or slain by God in Genesis and Exodus, and after the example of the Chronicler he represents the temptation of Abraham to offer Isaac (Gen. xxii.) as due to Mastêmâ (Jub. xvii. 16), the attempt on Moses's life (Exod. iv. 24) as made by the same evil agent; likewise the hardening of the hearts of the Egyptians (xlvi. 17—Exod. xiv. 8), and the slaying of the first-born (xlix. 2—Exod. xii. 29), he ascribes to the activities of Mastêmâ and his angels.

Again, just as we must not suppose that the peculiar impress which the Chronicler gave to his historical materials was the result of his individual activity but rather the outcome of a process, which in the course of successive generations had in many respects been transforming history into legend, so we must be careful to recognise in our author's book only a more advanced stage of the process above referred to. Possibly this process would not, in the natural course of things, have thrust the completed law further back than the time of Moses, but the exigencies of our author's time and the corroding influences of Hellenism seemed to him to demand the recognition of the law as superior to time, though revealed in time, and valid not only unto eternity but from eternity. The materials which suggested such a view were already at hand. If the earthly tabernacle was only a copy of a heavenly original (Exod. xxv. 9-40, xxvi. 30), it was but natural to infer that the various elements of the law, which were established in the course of tradition, were likewise copies of divine originals engraven on the heavenly tables. Such a view seemed to be called for by the necessities of the time. Hellenism had for many a decade been undermining circumcision and the observance of the Sabbath,¹ which were the bulwarks of Judaism, before these destructive tendencies came to a head in the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes (see note on xv. 14). Our author is a late representative of the strong reactionary movement which asserted the everlasting validity and sanctity of these elements of the law. Thus he teaches that, though circumcision was first ordained in Abraham's time, it had been ordained in heaven from the beginning, for the two highest orders of the angels had been created circumcised, and that Israel was through circumcision sanctified together with them (xv. 27 note). Similarly the Sabbath, though first ordained in Jacob's time (see ii. 23, 31 notes), was originally celebrated in heaven by God and by the same two chief orders of angels. Israel was to unite with these angels in observing it. It was to be a sign like circumcision marking off Israel from all the other nations of the earth (ii. 19-21), and making them one with the two chief orders of angels in heaven.

Jubilees—an Esoteric Tradition according to its Author.—The Book of Jubilees claims as a whole to be a revelation of God to Moses, and thus to form a supplement to, and an interpretation of, the Pentateuch, which it calls "the first law" (vi. 22). According to 4 Ezra xiv. 6 Moses was to reveal the latter but not the former. This second appears from our author to have embraced in a final authenticated form various revelations which had been made to the patriarchs, and constituted in their hands an esoteric tradition. This secret tradition had been handed down from father to son. Thus Enoch committed it to Methuselah, and Methuselah to Lamech, and Lamech to Noah (vii. 38, xxi. 10). Noah in turn entrusted all his books to his eldest son, Shem (x. 14). Between Shem and Abram the knowledge of the sacred language was lost. But the latter was taught this language by an angel, and he thereupon studied "the books of his fathers" (xii. 27). From these books of his forefathers embracing the writings of Enoch and Noah, Abraham instructed Isaac (xxi. 10). These books contained regulations regarding sacrifices as well as other matters (vii. 38, xxi. 10; cf. Test. Zeb. 3). To Jacob also Abraham transmitted the traditions directly (xxv. 7, xxxix. 6). Again, Jacob educated Joseph from the writings of Abraham (xxxix. 6-7), and finally handed over "all his books and the books of his fathers to Levi his son that he might preserve them and renew them for his children until this day" (xlv. 16). Thus this secret tradition was to be preserved in the hands of the priesthood till the time should come for its publication. From this last statement it would not be unreasonable to infer that our author was a member of the priestly caste.

The object of our author is to defend Judaism against the disintegrating effects of Hellenism.

Our author defends Judaism (a) by glorifying the law as an eternal ordinance and representing the patriarchs as models of piety; (b) by glorifying Israel and insisting on its separation from the Gentiles; and (c) by denouncing the Gentiles generally and particularly Israel's national enemies.

(a) Our author glorifies the law.—We have already (p. 1) drawn attention to our author's glorification of circumcision and the Sabbath, the bulwarks of Judaism, as heavenly ordinances, the sphere of which was so far extended as to embrace Israel on earth. The law, as a whole, was to our author the realisation in time of what was in a sense timeless and eternal. He is careful to set forth the historical occasions when the various elements of the law were first celebrated on earth, and herein he followed a tendency already well established in post-exilic Judaism. We shall now enumerate these briefly. The levitical law of purification after childbirth was enacted after the creation of Adam and Eve (iii. 8-14). On the expulsion of Adam from Eden the law of covering one's shame was enacted (iii. 30-32). This law does not belong to the Mishna or later Jewish legislation. It was manifestly levelled against the custom of baring the person in the Greek games, and is not explicable of any other than the early Maccabean period. The daily incense-offering began after Adam's expulsion from Eden (iii. 27). The law relating to the jubilees was first set forth by Enoch (iv. 18). The law of retribution in kind—"an eye for an eye"—was first carried out in the case of Cain (iv. 31-32). Noah instituted the feast of weeks, which had been observed in heaven since the creation (vi. 17-22), also the feasts on the new moons (vi. 23-27); he offered sacrifices, which anticipate later ritual (vi. 1-4, vii. 3-5), and enunciated the laws regarding fruit-trees and the land keeping Sabbath (vii. 2, 35-37), though he ascribed these laws to Enoch (vii. 38). Abram enacted the law of tithes (xiii. 25-29); celebrated the feast of first-fruits of the grain harvest on the 15th of the third month (xv. 1-2) and instituted the feast of tabernacles (xvi. 20-31), ordained peace-offerings and the regulations relating to the use of salt, wood for sacrifices, washing before sacrifices, and the duty of covering blood (xxi. 7-17), and forbade all intermarrying with the Canaanites (xxii. 20, xxv. 5), and adultery (xxxix. 6). Laban set forth the law—unknown to

Jewish tradition—that the younger sister should not be given in marriage before the elder (xxviii. 6). The penalty of death was ordained for intermarriage with the heathen in connection with the destruction of Shechem (xxx. 7-17). Levi was ordained priest by Jacob at the feast of tabernacles (xxx. 18-23, xxxii. 2-3), and blessed by Isaac as such (xxx. 13-17). Jacob offered tithes through Levi at the feast of tabernacles—also the second tithe (xxxii. 4-9), and re-enacted the law of tithes (xxxii. 10-15; see xiii. 25-29); added the eighth day to the feast of tabernacles as a permanent institution (xxxii. 27-29). The law regarding incest was published in connection with Reuben's outrage (xxxiii. 10-20). The day of Atonement was instituted as a day of fasting and mourning in commemoration of the day when the news of Joseph's death arrived (xxxiv. 18-19; cf. v. 18). The law of incest was re-enacted and extended in connection with Judah's sin with Tamar (xli. 25-26). Jacob celebrated the feast of the first-fruits (xliv. 1, 4).¹

Glorification of the patriarchs.—This glorification of the patriarchs was also characteristic of the Priests' Code (see Carpenter, Hexateuch, i. 123). They are transformed into saints by our author. It is for this reason that Gen. xii. 11-13 (which tells of Abram's representing Sarai as his sister) is omitted, and likewise Isaac's lie about Rebecca, Gen. xxvi. 7. Abram, according to our author, knew the true God from his youth (xi. 16, 17, xii. 1 sqq.). Jacob is represented as a model of filial affection and obedience¹ (xxv. 4 sqq., xxxv. 9-12). The passages relating to Jacob's devices for increasing his flocks (Gen. xxx. 35-38) and his fear of and measures for propitiating Esau (Gen. xxxii.-xxxiii.) are omitted. Indeed our author represents Jacob as declaring that he was not afraid (xxvii. 4) and as ultimately killing Esau (xxxviii. 2). The text in Gen. xlv. 15 is changed in order to clear Joseph from the charge of divination, and the word "Esau" omitted in Gen. xxvii. 24 in order to cover Jacob's lie, and the words "his brother is dead" (Gen. xlv. 20) are changed into "one went away and was lost" (xliii. 11) in order to avoid making Joseph's brethren tell a deliberate lie.²

(b) Glorification of Israel and its separation from the Gentiles.—Whereas the various nations of the Gentiles were subject to angels, Israel was subject to God alone (xv. 32). Not Japheth (Gen. ix. 27) but God was to dwell in the tents of Shem (vii. 12). Israel, moreover, was God's son; and not only did the nation stand in this relation to God, but also its individual members (i. 24, 25, 28, xix. 29). Israel was to receive circumcision as a sign that they were the Lord's (xv. 26), a privilege which they were to enjoy in common with the two chief orders of angels (xv. 27). They were also to unite with God and these two orders in the observance of the Sabbath (ii. 18, 19, 21). Finally, the destinies of the world were bound up with Israel. The world was to be renewed in the creation of the true man Jacob (xix. 24-25, ii. 22), and its final renewal to synchronize with the setting up of God's sanctuary on Zion and the establishment of the Messianic kingdom (i. 29, iv. 26, v. 12).

Israel to be separate from the Gentiles.—Israel was not in any way to imitate the conduct of the Gentiles (xv. 34, xxii. 16); not to eat with them (xxii. 16), nor to form leagues with them (xxiv. 25, 27), nor to intermarry with them; for he that gave his daughter to a Gentile, gave her to Moloch (xxii. 20, xxv. 9, xxx. 7, 10, 11, 13).

(c) The Gentiles denounced generally and particularly Israel's national enemies.—With the immeasurable arrogance of Judaism there went necessarily, hand in hand, an immeasurable hatred and contempt of the Gentiles. Tacitus, more than two centuries later, called attention to this characteristic of the Jews ("adversus omnes alios hostile odium," Hist. v. 5). Judaism regarded its own attitude to the Gentiles as not only justifiable but also just, because it was but a reflection of the divine. God had placed the nations under the authority of spirits or angelic guardians with the object of compassing their destruction (xv. 31). Here, most probably, the ultimate result of an action is declared to be the immediate object of it. Our author denounces particularly the national enemies of Israel, and these, as we shall have more than once occasion to observe, were the very nations with whom Israel was frequently at war in the second century B.C. First of all our author's maledictions are fulminated against the Philistines both in this world and in the next. The chief cities of this nation were either subjected or destroyed by the Maccabean princes (see xxiv. 28-32 notes). Next they are directed against Edom. Thus Isaac is represented as declaring in the blessing of Esau, that, if Esau's seed rebelled against Israel, they should be "rooted out from under heaven" (xxvi. 34). A war between Jacob and Esau is described in xxxviii. 1-14, in which Edom was reduced to servitude "until this day." Edom was thoroughly subdued by John Hyrcanus and forced to accept circumcision (xxxviii. 8 note). Again, in a description of a war between Jacob and seven kings of the Amorites, the writer forecasts the Maccabean victories of later times (xxxiv. 1-9). In an earlier passage he enumerates the chief seats of the Amorites. These were associated with Maccabean victories, in which the Amorites were all but annihilated (xxix. 10-11). Of the Amorites who were "wicked and sinful" and had "wrought to the full all their sins," our author grimly remarks "they have no longer length of life on earth" (xxix. 11). This was practically the result of the Maccabean wars.

Angelology.—The angelology of the author, like that of the Ethiopic Enoch, is in an advanced stage. There are two supreme classes, the angels of the presence and the angels of sanctification (ii. 2, 18), and a very large order of inferior angels who presided over natural phenomena (ii. 2 note). The two first classes joined with Israel in observing the Sabbath and circumcision (see p. 1) and other elements of the law, as the feast of weeks (vi. 18). In addition to the above there were the (seventy) angels who formed the angelic patrons of the nations (xv. 31), and the angels who were the guardians of individuals (xxxv. 17).

The duties assigned to the angels in connection with mankind are numerous. They brought Adam into the Garden of Eden and afterwards Eve (iii. 9, 12), and instructed Adam in tillage in the Garden (iii. 15). They report to God all the sin committed on the earth (iv. 6). The order called "Watchers" descended in the days of Jared to instruct the children of men (iv. 15), and afterwards sinned with the daughters of men (iv. 22). The angels showed to Enoch all that was "on earth and in the heavens" during 294 years (iv. 21), and conducted him into the Garden of Eden (iv. 23). They bound the fallen Watchers in the depths of the earth (v. 6); took to Noah the animals that were to enter the ark (v. 23). In the presence of an angel the earth was divided among Noah's sons (viii. 10). Angels bound nine-tenths of the demons in the place of condemnation (x. 9-11), and instructed Noah in the remedies against all diseases (x. 12); they accompanied the Lord in visiting the tower of Babel (x. 23). An angel bade Abram to go to the land of promise (xii. 22), and instructed him in the knowledge of Hebrew, and explained to him what he found unintelligible (xii. 26, 27). Angels announced to Abraham the birth of Isaac and admonished Sarah for laughing (xvi. 1-4); saved Lot from Sodom (xvi. 7); blessed Abraham and disclosed to him what had been decreed about him (xvi. 16). An angel comforted Hagar (xvii. 11), and withheld Abraham's hand from sacrificing Isaac (xviii. 10). Angels tested Abraham's patience after the death of Sarah (xix. 3). The angels will remember unto a thousand generations Levi's righteous judgment on Shechem (xxx. 20). An angel showed Jacob in a vision of the night seven tablets which recorded all that would befall him and his posterity, and bade him copy them (xxxii. 21, 24-25). Angels disclosed to Judah that he was forgiven for his sin with Tamar (xli. 24). An angel delivered Moses out of the hands of Mastêmâ (xlvi. 2-4). Angels prevented the magicians from furnishing any remedies to the Egyptians (xlvi. 10), and delivered the Israelites out of the hands of the Egyptians (xlvi. 13), and bound Mastêmâ from the 14th to the 18th and let him loose on the 19th, when they led Israel forth (xlvi. 15-19). An angel made known to Moses the Sabbaths, year-weeks, and jubilees, etc. (l. 1-4).

Demonology.—Over against the angelic kingdom stands a well-organised demonic or satanic kingdom. This kingdom is governed by “the prince of the Mastêmâ,”¹ where Mastêmâ is in point of derivation and meaning the equivalent of Satan. His subjects comprise both satans and demons. The demons are the spirits which went forth from the bodies of the slain children of the Watchers and the daughters of men (x. 5; Eth. En. xvi.). According to Eth. En. liv. 6 the guilt of the Watchers originated in their becoming subject to Satan. By means of these demons the prince of the satans is able to compass his evils, which are the seduction and destruction of men. But these have no power over the righteous and over Israel (see note on x. 8).

The date of our book can only be established by a series of indirect evidence. But this evidence is so plentiful and powerful, when apprehended, that no room is left for reasonable doubt.

i. First of all the book was written during the pontificate

of the Maccabean family, and not earlier than 135 B.C.— Thus in xxxii. 1 Levi is called a “priest of the Most High God.” Now, the only Jewish high-priests who ever bore this title were the Maccabean (see note on xxxii. 1). They appear to have assumed it as reviving the order of Melchizedek when they displaced the Zadokite order of Aaron. Jewish tradition ascribes the assumption of this title to John Hyrcanus, but it seems to have been already assumed by Simon; cf. Ps. cx. 4: “Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek,” and 1 Macc. xiv. 41. If, however, we follow the Jewish tradition in this matter, we must fix on 135 B.C.,¹ when Hyrcanus became high-priest, as the earliest possible date for the composition of Jubilees. Notwithstanding the objections of the Pharisees to this title, it was used by the Maccabean princes down to the time of Hyrcanus II. (Jos. Ant. xvi. 6. 2).

ii. Next, it was written before 96 B.C., or some years earlier in the reign of Hyrcanus.—Since our author is of the strictest sect a Pharisee, and at the same time approves of the Maccabean pontificate, Jubilees cannot have been written later than 96 B.C., when the Pharisees and Alexander Jannaeus came to open strife. Indeed, it is hard to conceive of its composition after the public breach between Hyrcanus and the Pharisees which is described in Josephus (Ant. xiii. 10. 5-6), and in the Talmud (Kiddush. 66a) with some variations in names and details. After that event—unfortunately the year is not given by any authority—Hyrcanus joined the Sadducean party, and forbade, under penalties, the observance of Pharisaic ordinances. Hence we may conclude that our book was written between 135 and the year of Hyrcanus’ breach with the Pharisees.

The above conclusions are confirmed by a large mass of evidence, which may be arranged under seven heads. Of these the first four point definitely to the latter half of the second century B.C. as the date of the composition of Jubilees; the remaining three give various grounds for postulating a pre-Christian date at any rate.

i. Our book points to the period—already past—of stress and persecution that preceded the recovery of national independence under the Maccabees.—Thus, it is impossible to ascribe to any other period the causes which led to the enactment or accentuation of the following laws:

(a) The Jews (“those who know . . . the law”) were forbidden to expose their persons by a law “prescribed on the heavenly tables.” This law was devised to forbid Jews taking part in the Greek games established by Jason the high-priest (see iii. 30-31, notes). It was not unnaturally derived from Gen. iii. 21, and was probably current for a generation before embodied by our author in his book.

(b) The law of circumcision is affirmed under the severest penalties (xv. 11-14, 26, 28). This law was observed in the creation of the highest angels (xv. 27). Yet Israel will, our author says, neglect it and “treat their members like the Gentiles” (xv. 33-34). Antiochus forbade circumcision under the penalty of death (1 Macc. i. 48, 60, 61; 2 Macc. vi. 10). There may be a reference also in our text to the Jews uncircumcising themselves, a practice which they resorted to under Antiochus Epiphanes in order to escape the scoffs of the heathen in the palaestra (1 Macc. i. 15; Joseph. Ant. xii. 5. 1).

(c) The Sabbath is re-enacted and its profanation is to be followed by the death penalty (ii. 17-32, l. 6-13). Non-observance of the Sabbath had been prevalent according to our author (xxiii. 19). Antiochus had forbidden the Jews to keep it (1 Macc. i. 39, 45; 2 Macc. vi. 6). Our text lays down the strictest sabbatical laws, such as were not in force at any time save in the second century B.C. or earlier. Thus war is absolutely forbidden (l. 12), and this prohibition was carried out, as we know, in the early Maccabean wars (see l. 12, note). But it was soon found impossible in practice (see note just referred to), and warfare on the Sabbath was subsequently permitted under a variety of circumstances (Bab. Shabb. i. 8; Shabb. 19*a*; Erub. 45*a*).

Again, a man is forbidden to cohabit with his wife (l. 8). This was the practice of the early Chasids; but this ascetic attitude to marriage is abandoned in the Mishna (see l. 8, note).

Again, riding on any beast is forbidden (l. 12). The enforcement of the law during the Syro-Grecian suzerainty is mentioned in the Talmud.

(d) Intermarriage with the heathen is absolutely prohibited by the penalty of death (xxx. 7-17). To give one's daughter to a Gentile was to give her to Moloch (xxx. 10, note). This question had for a long time before our author's date been of vital importance to Israel. But at no time could the danger from this source have been greater than during 200-160 B.C., when the destructive tendencies of Hellenism on Jewish character and religion had come to a head.

ii. Our book presupposes as its historical background the most flourishing period of the Maccabean hegemony.

(a) Only such a period could explain the assured spirit of triumph which led our author to anticipate a world-wide dominion and introduce that expectation into God's promise to Jacob in Gen. xxxv. 11-12: "I shall . . . multiply thee exceedingly, and kings will come forth from thee, and they will judge the sons of men wherever their foot has trodden.¹ And I shall give to thy seed all the earth which is under heaven . . . and they will get possession of the whole earth and inherit it for ever" (Jub. xxxii. 18-19).

(b) Only such a period could explain the pre-eminence assigned by our book to Levi over Judah. We have seen above (p. xlvi) that our author omitted Gen. xlix. because of the absolute pre-eminence above his brethren which is there assigned to Judah and the denunciation of Levi. But he goes further. Thus he ascribes to Levi's descendants the supreme offices of high-priest and civil ruler (xxxi. 14-17), but in regard to Judah, only Judah himself and one of his descendants (i.e. the Messiah) are mentioned as holding civil authority (xxxi. 18-20). Our author seems to imply that the royal descendants of David are no more, and that till the Messiah comes the Maccabees would hold the offices of high-priest and king. In later days when the Maccabees became a name of reproach, they were charged with usurping the throne of David (Pss. of Solomon xvii. 5, 6, 8) and the high-priesthood (Assumpt. Mos. vi. 1).

(c) The legend of the conquests of Esau's sons by the sons of Jacob in xxxvii.-xxxviii., points very clearly to the complete conquest of Edom by Judah in the Maccabean wars. In these wars the Edomites had sided with the Syrians till they were made tributary by John Hyrcanus. This subjection of Edom is referred to in xxxviii. 14, "The sons of Edom have not got quit of the yoke of servitude . . . until this day" (i.e. the author's time). See notes on xxxvii. 9-10, xxxviii. 4-9, where the fuller account in the Jalkut refers to 'Aqrabbim (1 Macc. v. 3), which as well as Adora were memorable as scenes connected with the Maccabean struggle.

This period also best explains the hatred which transformed Isaac's blessing of Esau into a curse (xxvi. 34).

(d) Again the Maccabean wars are adumbrated in the struggle of Jacob's sons with the Amorite kings in xxxiv. 1-9. This is clearer in the completer narrative in Test. Judah 3-7. The cities, Tappuah, Hazor, and Bethoron, which are mentioned here, are associated with notable victories and incidents in the Maccabean war. See notes on xxxiv. 4. So also Bousset, Zeitschrift f. NTliche Wissensch. 1900, pp. 202-205. But the reference to the Amorites is much more obvious in xxix. 10-11, where our author enumerates their chief cities and then grimly adds: "They have no longer length of life on the earth" (xxix. 10-11). Their practical annihilation, which is here referred to, was effected by Judas (see notes on xxix. 10).

(e) Our text reflects accurately the intense hatred of Judah towards the Philistines in the second cent. B.C. It declares that they will be put to the sword by the Kittim, i.e. the Macedonians under Alexander the Great, and subsequently fall into the hands of "the righteous nation" (xxiv. 28-29), and be exterminated, as they practically were by the Maccabees (see xxiv. 28-32, notes).

iii. Our author gives in an apocalypse a history of the Maccabean times (xxiii. 12-31), from the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes to the Messianic kingdom, the advent of which is just at hand. In this section we have the rise of the Chasids, who rebuke their elders for forsaking the law and the covenant (xxiii. 16), the general corruption which entails judgment on man and beast and leads to civil strife (xxiii. 17-20), the warlike efforts of the Maccabees to reclaim the Hellenisers to Judaism (xxiii. 20-22), the sufferings of the nation through the repeated attacks of Syria (xxiii. 23-25), Israel's return to the law, and its gradual ethical and physical transformation in the Messianic kingdom and its triumph over its national foes (xxiii. 26-30). Our author stands already on the threshold of this happy time. It is, therefore, in the most prosperous days of the Maccabean dynasty, i.e., in the days of Simon or John Hyrcanus.

iv. Our book was used by the author of Eth. Enoch xci.-civ., and must, therefore, have been written at latest at the beginning of the first cent. B.C. (see § 19).

v. The textual affinities of our text connect it more closely with the form of Hebrew text, which is presupposed by the LXX (250 B.C.) and found in the Samaritan Pentateuch, than with that which lay behind the Syriac and later versions or Targums. From this evidence we may conclude at all events to a pre-Christian date (see § 10).

vi. Our text preserves older forms of the Haggada and Halacha than are found in the Talmud and later Jewish literature. The details will be found on referring to the notes on the various passages.

Haggada.—In i. 27 (see note) an angel reveals the law to Moses: according to later Judaism Moses receives it from God Himself. In ii. 2-3 angels are said to have been created on the first day: in later Judaism on the second or fifth. According to ii. 7 the Garden of Eden was created on the third day: according to later Judaism before the world. In xi. 2-6 the corruption of mankind is ascribed to the time of Serug: in later Judaism to that of Enos. In xii. 1-14 we have the primitive form of the saga so much developed in later Judaism about Ur of the Chaldees. In xix. 11 Abraham's marriage to Keturah is justified on the ground that Hagar was already dead, whereas later Judaism identifies Hagar and Keturah. In xxx. 2-6 the praise given to Levi and Simeon accords with Jewish views of the first and second cent. B.C. Later Judaism on the whole accepts the judgment pronounced on them in Genesis. Again our author records honestly the marriages of Simeon, Judah, and Joseph, to Gentile women, though such marriages must have in his eyes been full of offence. But later Judaism felt the offence to be too grave for toleration, and sought to establish the Hebrew descent of the women in question (see xxxiv. 20, xl. 10 notes). In xxxvii.-xxxviii. we have the oldest form of the legend of the war between Jacob's sons and the sons of Esau, and similarly in the case of the war between Egypt and Canaan in xlvi. 6-11. Later developments of these legends are found in rabbinic literature. Again, our text retains the original form of the traditions in Genesis, where later Judaism explained them away as offensive. Thus in iv. 15 the sons of God are rightly taken to be angels: in xxxiii. 2 the story of Reuben and Bilhah is accepted, but later Judaism manages to remove all that is objectionable in it. See also notes on iv. 12, xl. 10.

Halacha.—The severe halacha regarding the sabbath in l. 8, 12, were indubitably in force in the second cent. B.C., if not earlier, but were afterwards mitigated by the Mishna and later Judaism. Again the strict halacha in xv. 14 regarding circumcision on the eighth day was a current, probably the current, view in the second cent. B.C. and earlier, since it has the support of the Samaritan text and the LXX. This strict law was subsequently relaxed in the Mishna. In xxxii. 15 the severe law of tithing found in Lev. xxvii. 15 is enforced, but rabbinic tradition sought to weaken the statement. As regards the halacha laid down in iii. 31 regarding the duty of covering one's shame, it is highly probable that such a halacha did exist in the second cent. B.C., when Judaism was protesting against the exposure of the person in the Greek games. See also iii. 8-14 notes, and xx. 4 note.

Finally, we might draw attention to the fact that the Pharisaic regulation about pouring water on the altar (Jer. Sukk. iv. 6; Sukk. 44a) at the feast of tabernacles appears to have been unknown to him. We know that the attempt of the Pharisees to enforce its adoption on Alexander Jannaeus resulted in a massacre of the former.

vii. The following facts postulate a pre-Christian date for the composition of our book:—

(a) The calendar was in an unsettled state when our author wrote. No strict Pharisee, such as our author, could have advanced such a system as is laid down in vi. 28-33, unless at a period when no uniform calendar system was established. With it we may compare an allied system in Eth. Enoch lxxii.-lxxxii. There are good grounds for believing that our author grounded his system on the chronological statements regarding the flood in Genesis (see notes on p. 56).

(b) The divine title "Most High God." The use of this title is frequent in our author. This frequency, as appears in the note on xxxvi. 16, is characteristic of writings before the Maccabean era in the second cent. B.C. When once, however, the Maccabeans had assumed the title "priests of the Most High God," the divine title would naturally remain popular amongst those who, like our author, recognised the validity of the Maccabean pontificate. On the other hand, we should expect a decline in its use to set in with the rising unpopularity of the Maccabean dynasty. This disuse, indeed, is not apparent in the oldest anti-Maccabean work, Eth. Enoch xci.-civ., where the hostility to the Maccabeans is in an incipient stage. There the title "Most High" occurs nine times. But in the Pss. of Solomon and Eth. Enoch xxxvii.-lxx., where the hatred is open and unconcealed, this title is not found in the former and only twice in the latter. In the latter half of the first cent. A.D. there was a revival in its use as its Maccabean associations were forgotten.

(c) The phrase "feast of Pentecost," as a description of the feast of weeks, seems to have been unknown to our author (see note on vi. 17), though it was in use in the first cent. B.C.

§ 18. THE JUBILEES AND YEARS USED BY OUR AUTHOR

Our author claims that his chronological system is derived from the heavenly tables. From these tables it was made known to Moses directly by the angel of the presence, who assured Moses with regard to his disclosures on the solar year of 364 days: "It is not of my own devising, for the book (lies) written before me, and on the heavenly tables the division of days is ordained" (vi. 35). For the convenience of the reader I have reduced the jubilee reckonings to years and placed them in the margin.

The Jubilees.—The chronology is essentially heptadic. Each jubilee consists of seven year-weeks, and each year-week of seven years. It is probably on the ground of the sacred character of the number seven, and possibly also for the sake of symmetry, that our author makes his jubilee consist of forty-nine years instead of fifty, which was the usual reckoning among the Jews. R. Jehuda (Nedarim 61a—quoted by Beer), however, set down the jubilee at forty-nine years; and in the Samaritan Chronicle (Journal Asiatique, 1869, tom. xiv. No. 55, pp. 421-467) a system closely analogous to that of our author is found. Here the jubilee is reckoned at forty-nine and a fraction, which varies unintelligibly in extent, if the text is correct. Thus five jubilees = 246 years, forty jubilees = 1968 years, but sixty jubilees = 2951 years.

It is noteworthy also that, whereas our author applies the jubilee reckoning from the creation to the date of Israel's entering into Palestine, the Talmudic treatise Erachin 12-13a and the Samaritan Chronicle make the jubilee to begin with the settlement of Israel in Palestine, and while the former carries it down to the destruction of the first temple, the latter carries it down to many centuries after the Christian era.

In the Assumption of Moses the jubilee is also used in the chronological system of its author. Thus (i. 2) he reckons 2500 years to have elapsed from the creation of the world to the death of Moses, that is, fifty jubilees of fifty years each. Again, in x. 12 it is stated that from the death of Moses to the Messianic kingdom there will be 250 times (i.e. year-weeks) that is thirty-five jubilees of fifty years each. Thus from the creation to the Messianic kingdom there would be eighty-five jubilees. Cf. Sanh. 97b.

In one other work, the Seder Olam 23, 25, the jubilee period is occasionally used in the history of Israel and Judah contemporary with the reigns of Sennacherib and Nebuchadnezzar.

The Years.—Our author seems to have used a civil year and an ecclesiastical year, both of 364 days. The civil year consisted of twelve months (iv. 17, v. 27, vi. 29-30 note) of thirty days each and four intercalary days (vi. 23 note), one at the beginning of each quarter. The ecclesiastical year consisted of thirteen months of twenty-eight days each, and in accordance with it were regulated the great festivals, the Sabbaths, Passover, and Feast of Weeks (see notes on vi. 29-30, 32). Furthermore, this impossible solar year of 364 days was undoubtedly put forward in Pharisaic circles in the second cent. B.C., and its currency may date from a much earlier period. See note on vi. 32.

In my edition of the Ethiopic Enoch in 1893 I was the first to point out (pp. 25-29, 221-222, 263-264) that chaps. i.-xxxvi., lxxxiii.-xc., and xci.-civ. were from different authors. To the two former sections I assigned a date anterior to 161 B.C., and to the third a date subsequent to 95 B.C. We shall now find that the above critical results are confirmed in the main by the evidence of our text. Thus in my note on iv. 17-23 I have shown that our author had Eth. Enoch vi.-xvi., xxiii.-xxxvi., lxxii.-xc. before him. In confirmation of the conclusions in that note we should observe also that v. 1, 2, vii. 21, 22, 23, 24 of our text (see notes) presuppose vii. 1, 2, 5, ix. 1, 9 of the Eth. Enoch (see also Index I.).

Eth. Enoch xci.-civ. later than Jubilees.—Next as regards xci.-civ. we shall prove that it was subsequent to Jubilees and made use of that work. To begin with, these two writings exhibit certain resemblances. In both there is a temporary Messianic kingdom and an immortality of the soul implied or taught. On the other hand, the tone of Jubilees is optimistic and was written before the breach between the Pharisees and the Maccabean rulers, whereas Eth. Enoch xci.-civ. is pessimistic in tone and was written after the breach had led to the persecution of the Pharisees. We shall now adduce a variety of passages from both books which will establish the dependent relation of this section of the Eth. Enoch on Jubilees.

(a) From a comparison of vii. 29 (see note) and xxii. 22 of our text with Eth. Enoch ciii. 7, 8 it follows that the latter is based on the former. In our text Sheol is not yet associated with fire and burning; but this stage, which combines the characteristics of Sheol and Gehenna, is already attained in the latter work.

(b) In Jub. i. 16 it is promised to Israel that "they will be the head and not the tail." In Eth. Enoch ciii. 11 we have: "they hoped to be the head and have become the tail."

(c) In Jub. i. 29 a new heavens and a new earth were promised. In the despondent Eth. Enoch xci. 16 only a new heaven.

(d) According to Jub. xxxii. 18 Israel is to "judge all the nations according to their desires."¹ In Eth. Enoch xcv. 3 righteous Israel is to "execute judgment on them (the sinners) according to their desires," and in xcvi. 1 is to "have lordship over them according to their desires."

(e) With Jub. xxiii. 31, "their spirits will have much joy," compare Eth. Enoch civ. 4, "ye will have great joy as the angels," where both expressions are applied to the spirits of the blessed after death. Also ciii. 4, "And your spirits—the spirits of you who have died in righteousness—will live and rejoice."

(f) In Jub. xxii. 16 it is said with regard to the wicked "become not their associate," and in Eth. Enoch civ. 6, "have no companionship with them," and in xci. 4, "associate not with those of a double heart." In xcvi. 4, the wicked are said to be the "companions of sinners."

(g) With Jub. xii. 2, "What help and profit have we from those idols," cf. Eth. Enoch xcix. 7, "No help will be found in them" (i.e. idols).

(i) The law is spoken of as "the eternal law" Eth. Enoch xcix. 2, "the law for all future generations" xciii. 6, (cf. xcix. 14), as we might expect in a writer influenced by Jubilees. Throughout all the older sections of Enoch the law is not mentioned.

(k) The references to "the plant of righteousness" (Eth. Enoch xciii. 10), or "of righteous judgment" (xciii. 5), or "of uprightness" (xciii. 2), may be due in part to Jub. i. 16 "plant of uprightness," or "a plant of righteousness" (xvi.

26, xxi. 24). The phrase, however, occurs already in Eth. Enoch x. 16.

(l) Eth. Enoch ci. 2: "when he . . . withholds the rain and the dew from descending on the earth" (cf. c. 12), is found almost verbally in Jub. xii. 4, "who causes the rain and the dew to descend on the earth" (cf. xii. 18, xx. 9).

Eth. Enoch, i.-v. later than Jubilees.—The evidence in respect to the relative dates of this section and Jubilees is not conclusive, but so far as it exists it implies the priority of the latter.

Thus, in Eth. Enoch iii. the words "all the trees . . . shed all their leaves except fourteen trees," most probably go back to Jub. xxi. 12-13 where fourteen evergreen trees are enumerated which were to be used on the altar, cp. Test. Levi 9.

Again, Eth. Enoch v. 9, "They will complete the number of the days of their life, and their lives will grow old in peace and the years of their joy will be many," seems to be an expansion of Jub. xxiii. 29, "All their days they will complete and live in peace and in joy."

Finally, Eth. Enoch i.-v. appears to be later than the Test. XII. Patriarchs, a sister work of Jubilees, but this subject cannot be pursued further here.

The Book of Noah.—This book is referred to twice in our text, i.e. in x. 13, xxi. 10. Our author, moreover, has taken over bodily two considerable sections from it and incorporated them in vii. 20-39, x. 1-15. Thus the Book of Noah was written before 135-105 B.C. But its composition goes back to a much earlier date. Chapters vi.-xi. of the Ethiopic Enoch are clearly from the same source; for they make no reference to Enoch but bring forward Noah (x. 1), and treat of the sin of the angels that led to the flood, and of their temporal and eternal punishment. This section is compounded of the Semjaza and Azazel myths, and in its present composite form is already presupposed by Eth. Enoch lxxxviii.-lxxxix. 1. Hence in its present form it is earlier than 166 B.C. Chapters lx., lxv.-lxix. 25, cvi.-cvii. of the same work are also derived from the Book of Noah and probably xxxix. 1, 2^a, xli. 3-8, xliii.-xliv., liv. 7-lv. 2, lix., but not in their present form. There appears to be no adequate ground for assigning these sections of that ancient work to a later date than those above discussed.

The above facts throw some light on the strange vicissitudes to which even the traditional legends were subject. Thus it would appear that the Noah saga is older than the Enoch, and that the latter was built up in part on the debris of the former. And just as the Noah saga made way for the Enoch, so the Enoch saga in turn made way for the Seth, as I have shown at some length in the notes on pp. 33-36.

§ 20. THE RELATION OF JUBILEES TO THE TESTAMENTS OF THE XII. PATRIARCHS

From a comparison of the passages in our author and the Testaments which treat of the same subjects, it is clear that neither of the two works is dependent on the other, but that both draw independently from the same sources. See notes on xxviii. 9, xxx. 2-6, 18, 25, xxxi. 3-4, 13, 15, 16, xxxii. 1, 8, xxxiii. 1, 2, 4, xxxiv. 1-9, xxxvii.-xxxviii., xli. 8-14, 24-25, xlv. 6-9.

I hope to treat this question exhaustively in my edition of the Testaments.

From §§ 15, 17 it follows without further need of proof that our author was a pharisee of the straitest sect. He was an upholder of the everlasting validity of the law, he held the strictest views on circumcision, the sabbath and on the duty of shunning all intercourse with the Gentiles: he believed in angels and demons § 16, and in a blessed immortality. In § 14 we have shown that he was an extreme representative of the midrashic tendency which had been already at work for centuries.

In the next place our author was a supporter of the Maccabean pontificate. He glorifies Levi's successors as high-priests and civil rulers (xxx. 13-17), and applies to them the title assumed by the Maccabean princes (xxxii. 1). He was not, however, so thorough-going an admirer as the authors of the Test. Levi 18, or Psalm cx. who expected the Messiah to come forth from the Maccabean family (see notes on xxx. 18-19, xxxii. 1).

That our author was a priest might be reasonably inferred from the exaltation of Levi over Judah (xxx. xxxii.) and from the statement in xlv. 16, that the secret traditions, which our author claims to publish, were kept in the hands of Levi's descendants.

§ 22. JUBILEES IN JEWISH, SAMARITAN, AND CHRISTIAN NON-CANONICAL LITERATURE

In Jewish Literature.

In Jewish and Samaritan Literature.—Eth. Enoch i.-v. (?), xci.-civ.; Wisdom (?), 4 Ezra, Chronicles of Jerahmeel, Midrash Tadshe, Book of Jashar, Samaritan Chronicle.

On Eth. Enoch i.-v., xci.-civ. see pp. lxix-lxxi above.

Wisdom.—It is not possible to establish conclusively that our book was used by the author of Wisdom. There are, however, amid great differences, strong affinities between them. Thus both teach a temporary Messianic kingdom and a blessed immortality of the soul. In Jubilees apparently for the first time God is called the Father of the righteous individual Israelite (i. 24 note): in Wisdom this view is frequently and emphatically taught (ii. 13, 18, v. 5, xii. 7, 21). Again in Jubilees the law of retaliation is enunciated in its most literal form (iv. 31, xlviii. 14, notes), and the same phenomenon meets us in Wisdom, xi. 16: δι' ὧν τις ἀμαρτάνει, διὰ τούτων κολάζεται, Cf. also xi. 7, xii. 23, xvi. 1, xviii. 4, 5. Finally either xlviii. 14 of our text or some authority of a like nature seems to have been before the writer of Wisdom xviii. 5:

καὶ ἐνὸς ἐκτεθέντος τέκνον [καὶ σωθέντος]
εἰς ἔλεγχον τὸ αὐτῶν ἀφείλω πλῆθος [τέκνων],
καὶ ὁμοθυμαδὸν ἀπώλεσας ἐν ὕδατι σφοδρῶ.

In both passages the destruction of the Egyptians in retaliation for the casting of the Hebrew children into the river is dealt with, though this is obscured by the glosses καὶ σωθέντος and τέκνων,¹ which I have bracketed as additions of an early scribe who misinterpreted the passage of Moses. In Jub. xlviii. 14 it is said that 1000 Egyptians were destroyed on account of every Hebrew child that was cast into the river. This sense we recover from the Greek on omitting the gloss: "In retribution for even a single child that was exposed Thou didst take away the multitude of them." But the passage is still unsatisfactory, for πλῆθος in the text which = 777 was corrupt in the original source (? Jubilees) as in Hosea viii. 12 for 777 = 10,000. Thus we have: "In retribution for even a single child that was exposed Thou didst take away 10,000 of them," i.e. of those who had taken counsel to destroy the Hebrew children. 10,000 may be more accurate than the 1000 which stands in Jub. xlviii. 14. I have found the same corruption in Ethiopic MSS.

4 Ezra.—There can be little doubt that our book is referred to in 4 Ezra xiv. 4-6, where it is said of Moses: Et misi eum et eduxit populum meum de Aegypto, et adduxi eum super montem Sina et detinui eum apud me diebus multis, Et enarravi ei mirabilia multa, et ostendi ei temporum secreta et temporum finem, et praecepi ei dicens: Haec in palam facies verba et haec abscondes. The haec here refers to Jubilees (see i. 26 notes), which was handed down in the tribe of Levi (xlv. 16) till its publication by our author.

In 4 Ezra vi. 20 the words, libri aperientur ante faciem firmamenti et omnes videbunt simul, refer to the books in which the deeds of men are recorded. These books were kept by Enoch according to our text iv. 23, x. 17.

In x. 46, the date in the words: factum est post annorum tria millia (Syr., Eth., Arab., but Lat. = annos tres) aedificavit Salomon civitatem et obtulit oblationes, appears to be based on that given in Jubilees. If with Joseph. (Ant. viii. 3. 1.) we reckon 592 years from the Exodus to the building of Solomon's temple or 588 years with Sulpicius Severus (Chron. i. 40, 4 sq.) and take, as our author, 2410 to be the year of the Exodus, then we arrive at 3002 or 2998 (see for these and other reckonings Hilgenfeld, Messias Judeorum, p. 83). Again on p. 109 of the work just mentioned Hilgenfeld gives good grounds for assuming that in 4 Ezra xiv. 48 (Syr. Eth.,) the text originally contained a computation in jubilees. See also Rönsch, Das Buch der Jubiläen, pp. 412-414.

Chronicles of Jerahmeel.—This Hebrew work, which has been translated by Gaster, contains a great deal of subject-matter in common with our book. At times it reproduces the actual words of our text. I have no doubt that our text was used by some of the authors of this compilation. See Index II. for references to the parallel passages.

Midrash Tadshe.—This Midrash was written about the beginning of the eleventh cent. A.D. by Moses ha-Darshan, but was based on an early work by Rabbi Pinchas ben Jair who in turn drew his materials from our text (see Eppstein, Revue des Étude juives, 1890, xxi. 80-97; 1891, xxii. 1-25; Bacher, Die Agada der Tannaiten, ii. 499). By consulting Index II. the reader will find the passages which are common to this Midrash and our text.

The Book of Jashar.—This late Hebrew work contains much matter in common with our text, and there is every probability that some of it is derived from it ultimately as its source. See Index II. for a list of parallels. The Hebrew text of this book which I have quoted occasionally, is that which was published at Venice in 1629. Generally, however, I have referred to the French translation of it in Migne's series.

The Samaritan Chronicle.—This book, to which we have already drawn attention (see p. lxxvii), belongs for the most part to the twelfth cent. A.D. It appears to contain a deliberate polemic (see vi. 36 note) against the view of our author that calculations should be made according to the sun only. In keeping with the fact that our author gives his calendar in connection with the flood (vi. 29-38), this Chronicle says that the Samaritan system was known to Noah in the Ark. For a remarkable point of agreement between this Chronicle and our text see note v. 22. Also it cannot be an accident that in the case of the antediluvian patriarchs, their respective ages on the birth of their eldest sons agree in both books in every instance except in that of

Seth. Rönsch (p. 362) has tabulated the numbers as follows :

	Jub.	Sam. Chron.
Adam on the birth of his eldest son was aged	130	130
Seth " " "	130	60-66
Enoch " " "	90	90
Kenan " " "	70	70
Mahalalel " " "	65	66
Jared " " "	62	61
Henoch " " "	65	65
Methuselah " " "	67	67
Lamech " " "	53	53

Hence it is not strange that in some cases we are able to determine missing dates in our text from this Chronicle (see iv. 28 note). On the other hand these two works hardly ever harmonise on the ages of the post-diluvian patriarchs till Terah's time, and the Chronicle, as we should expect, omits Kainam which our text (viii. 1) along with the LXX puts forward as the son of Arpachshad.

In Christian literature.—The Christian literature in which Jubilees is reproduced either by name or anonymously will be treated under the following heads :

- i. Authors who cite Jubilees or the Little Genesis by name.
- ii. *Patristic and other writings which reproduce its text or matter anonymously.*¹

- i. Authors who cite Jubilees or the Little Genesis by name :

DIDYMUS OF ALEXANDRIA (309 or 314 to 394 or 399 A.D.) in epist. canonicas enarrationes, ad I. Joan. iii. 12 (Gallandi, Biblioth. patr. vi. 300): Nam et in libro qui leptogenesis (MS leprogenesis) appellatur, ita legitur, quia Cain lapide aut ligno percusserit Abel. See Jub. iv. 31.

See Jub. iv. 9, 11 and the continuation of the quotation in my note on iv. 10. For passages where Epiphanius has used our text without acknowledgment see Index II.

JEROME (ob. 420).—See quotations in notes on x. 21, xi. 11-13. For other quotations see Index II.

Decretum Gelasii.—In this decree (de libris recipiendis et non recipiendis), the date of which is doubtful (see Zahn, Gesch. des Kanons, II. i. 259-267), our book is included among the writings to be rejected: Liber de filiabus Adae, hoc est Leptogenesis, apocryphus.

SEVERUS OF ANTIOCH (ob. 542).—In an exposition of Deut. xxxiv. 6 this author has (see Nicephorus, Catena, i. 1672-1673) described the destinies that await the good and the evil souls on their separation from the body, and various incidents relating to the contest between Michael and Satan for the soul of Moses. He adds that his statements are drawn from our author: ταῦτα δὲ ἐν ἀποκρύφῳ βιβλίῳ λέγεται κεῖσθαι λεπτοτέραν ἔχοντι τῆς Γενέσεως ἢτοι τῆς κτίσεως τὴν ἀφήγησιν. On this question see above, p. xv note.

NICEPHORUS, Catena, i. 175.—(This catena, published over 120 years ago, contains extracts from writers from the beginning of the Christian era to the seventh cent.) Before the words quoted from this work in the note on x. 21 we find the title of the source given as ἡ διαθήκη. It is most probable that we should add here τοῦ Μωϋσέως (see p. xvii).

SYNCELLUS (flor. 800 A.D.), Chronographia (ed. Dindorf), i. 5: ὡς ἐν λεπτῇ φέρεται Γενέσει, ἣν καὶ Μωϋσέως εἶναί φασί τινες ἀποκάλυψιν. i. 7: ἐκ τῆς λεπτῆς Γενέσεως καὶ τοῦ λεγομένου βίου Ἀδάμ. i. 13: ἐκ τῶν λεπτῶν Γενέσεως. i. 14: (see quotation in note on p. 28). i. 49 (see quotation in note on x. 1). i. 183: τὸν κατὰ μητέρα πάππον τοῦ Ἀβραὰμ ἡ λεπτὴ Γένεσις φησιν ὅτι Ἀβραὰμ ἐκαλεῖτο, ἡ δὲ Σάρρα ἀδελφὴ ὁμοπατρία τοῦ Ἀβραὰμ ὑπῆρχε. i. 185 (see quotation in note on xii. 26). i. 192: Μαστιφὰμ ὁ ἄρχων τῶν δαιμονίων, ὡς φησιν ἡ λεπτὴ Γένεσις, προσελθὼν τῷ θεῷ εἶπεν, εἰ ἀγαπᾷ σε Ἀβραάμ, θυσάτω σοι τὸν υἱὸν αὐτοῦ (see our text, xvii. 16). i. 203: βιασθεὶς Ἰακώβ ὑπὸ Ἰούδα ἐνέτεινε τόξον καὶ πλήξας κατὰ τοῦ δεξιοῦ μαζοῦ τὸν Ἡσαὺ κατέβαλε. τοῦ δὲ θανόντος ἀνοίξαντες τὰς πύλας οἱ υἱοὶ Ἰακώβ ἀνείλουν τοὺς πλείστους. ταῦτα ἐν λεπτῇ Γενέσει φέρεται (see our text, xxxviii. 1 sqq.). For passages where Syncellus has used our text without acknowledgment see Index II.

CEDRENUS (ed. Bekker), i. 6: ἀπὸ τῆς λεπτῆς Γενέσεως. i. 9: ὡς ἐν λεπτῇ φέρεται Γενέσει, ἣν καὶ Μωσέως εἰναί φασί τινες ἀποκάλυψιν. i. 16 (see quotation in note on iv. 31-32). i. 48: ἄγγελος δὲ κυρίου ἐδίδαξεν αὐτὸν τὴν Ἑβραΐδα γλῶσσαν, καθὼς αὐτὸς ὁ ἄγγελος τῷ Μωϋσῇ εἶπεν, ὡς ἐπὶ τῇ λεπτῇ Γενέσει. i. 53: ἐν τῇ λεπτῇ Γενέσει κείμεναι, ὅτι Μαστιφὰτ ὁ ἄρχων τῶν δαιμονίων (and so on as in Syncellus, i. 192, above). i. 85 (see quotation in note on xlvii. 3). i. 87: νόμους δὲ πρῶτον Μωϋσῆς γράφει τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις . . . διδασκόμενος παρὰ τοῦ ἀρχαγγέλου Γαβριὴλ τὰ περὶ τῆς γενέσεως τοῦ κόσμου . . . καὶ τὰς τῶν ἄστρων θέσεις καὶ τὰ στοιχεῖα . . . ὡς ἐν τῇ λεπτῇ Γενέσει κείμεναι. For some of the passages where Cedrenus has used our text without acknowledgment see Index II.

ZONARAS (1081-1118, ed. Pinder), i. 18: οἶδα μὲν οὖν ἐν τῇ λεπτῇ Γενέσει γεγραμμένον ὡς ἐν τῇ πρώτῃ ἡμέρᾳ καὶ αἱ οὐρανῖαι δυνάμεις πρὸ τῶν ἄλλων ὑπέστησαν παρὰ τοῦ τῶν ὅλων δημιουργοῦ. Cf. our text, ii. 2.

GLYCAS (circa 1150, ed. Bekker), p. 198: οὐδὲ γὰρ ὡς πόδας κεκτημένου τὸ πρότερον καθὰ Ἰωσηππὸς τέ φησι καὶ ἡ λεγομένη λεπτή Γένεσις νῦν ἀποφαίνεται τὸν ἐπὶ τῇ κοιλίᾳ περίπατον. See also p. 206. P. 392 (see quotation in note on iii. 8-14). On p. 206 Glycas wrongly attributes to Josephus what is found in Jub. xxxii. 2-3. For some of the passages where Glycas has used our text without acknowledgment see Index II.

ii. Patristic and other writings which reproduce the text or matter of Jubilees anonymously:

HIPPOLYTUS.—The Διαμερισμὸς τῆς γῆς which is assigned to this writer is based on Jub. viii.-ix. See Gutschmidt, Kleine Schriften, v. 239, 587-597, 613 sqq. (quoted by Schürer).

PS.-CLEMENS ROMANUS, Recognitiones (circa 200 A.D.).—This work contains many echoes of Jubilees, see Rönsch, op. cit. 322-325.

ORIGEN (185-254) in Genesis in Eusebius' Præp. Evang. vi. 292 (Migne, xxi. 500). The passage which is quoted from Origen in the note on xxxii. 21 seems to refer to that passage. Another quotation will be found in the note on xlv. 14. The Προσευχὴ Ἰωσήφ, from which this quotation is taken, is cited in the third place in the Synopsis of the Ps.-Athanasius and the Stichometry of Nicephorus, and in the fifth place of the catalogue in the Cod. Coislinianus used by Montfaucon, and in each catalogue immediately after the Πατριάρχαι (cf. Rönsch, p. 332). According to Nicephorus it consisted of 1100 stichoi—the same number as the Testament of Moses, which was identified by some writers with Jubilees. Both Origen (tom. v. in Johannen, p. 77) and Glycas (see Fabric. Cod. Pseud. V.T. i. 765, 768) state that it was current among the Hebrews.

Another fragment of Origen preserved in the Catena of Nicephorus, i. 463, is quoted in the note on xl. 10.

ISIDORE PELUSIOTA of Alexandria, who lived in the fifth cent., gives the following exposition on Deut. xxxiii. 9 (Nicephorus, Cat. i. 1660): ἐπειδὴ ἐπελύτησε τῇ πατρῷᾳ εὐνῇ ὁ Ῥουβείμ, διὰ τοῦτο οὔτε βασιλείας οὔτε ἱερωσύνης ἤξιώθη, καίτοι πρωτότοκος ὢν. ἀλλ' ὁ μὲν Λευὶ τρίτος ὢν οὐ μόνον διὰ τὸ ἐπαγγείλασθαι τὸν πατέρα δεκάτην ἀφιερῶσειν· κάτωθεν γὰρ ἀριθμούμενος δέκατος ἦν, ἄνωθεν δὲ εἰ ἡριθμήθη, εἰς τῶν παιδισκῶν ἡύρίσκετο· ἀλλὰ καὶ δι' ὁσιότητα, καὶ τὸ συγγενικῶν αἱμάτων διὰ τὴν εἰς τὸ θεῖον τιμὴν τὰς χεῖρας ἐμπλήσαι, ἱερωσύνης ἤξιώθη. . . . ὁ δὲ Ἰούδας τέταρτος ὢν, διὰ τὴν ἀδέκαστον κρίσιν, καὶ τὴν ὀρθὴν ψῆφον, βασιλείας ἤξιώθη. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ πολλοὶ τὰ οἰκεῖα κρύπτοντες πλημμελήματα ἐτέρους καταδικάζουσιν, οὗτος δὲ ἑαυτοῦ μὲν κατεψηφίσατο, . . . διὰ τοῦτο εἰκότως τῆς βασιλείας ἤξιούτο. ἱερῶντο γὰρ οἱ ἐκ Λευῖ, ἐβασίλευον δὲ οἱ ἐξ Ἰούδα, οὐ κατὰ κατακλήρωσιν, ἀλλ' ἀρετῆς γέρας εἰληφότες. This exposition regarding Levi is based on Jub. xxxii. 2-3, and regarding Judah on xxxi. 18-20, xli. 23-28.

enumeration of the works of the first day it deviates considerably (see Jub. ii. 2 sqq.). Observe that it confirms our view of a lacuna after ii. 22.

EUTYCHIUS, Patriarch of Alexandria 933-939, Annales translated from Arabic into Latin by Pococke, 1658 (also in Migne, tom. 111, 909-1155).

P. 16. Kain invidit fratri suo . . . ac, lapide caput ejus feriens, ipsum interfecit. Cf. Jub. iv. 31.

P. 56. Natus et Sharna, cujus temporibus coluerunt homines idola, unoquoque quod sibi alliberet colente. Sharna is corrupt for Serug. Cf. Jub. xi. 4.

P. 64-65. Accepit ergo Abraham uxorem suam Saram, quae et ipsi ex patre soror erat. Cf. Jub. xii. 9. For other parallels see notes on pp. 35, 83.

SUIDAS, a Greek grammarian of the tenth or eleventh cent. (Fabricius, i. 336). καὶ τὴν τῶν ἀστέρων κίνησιν, ἐκ τοῦ πατρὸς γὰρ ἐπαιδεύετο τὴν ἀστρονομίαν κ.τ.λ. Cf. Jub. xii. 16. See also note on xii. 2.

JOEL, Chronographia (ed. Bekker, 1836), extending to the year 1206 A.D. This writer, whom I have referred to occasionally in my notes, is generally dependent on Syncellus, Cedrenus or Glycas for any matter which he has in common with our text. It is possible, as Rösensch (p. 367) urges, that the phrase καὶ ἐξολοθρεύειν αὐτὸν ἀπειλοῦντος (Joel, p. 10 (cf. Jub. xxxvii. 23)) testifies to an independent knowledge of Jubilees, as it is not found in those earlier chronographers.

and Parsons' edition, and as r in Lagarde's Genesis Graece, 1868. The scholia in this MS attest many of the personal names which are found in Jubilees. I have cited all of these in their appropriate places in my Ethiopic Text of Jubilees, and many of them in the notes to my translation. See Index II.

LXX MS z in Lagarde's edition contains two readings which come from our text. See notes on v. 31 and vi. 1.

GREGORIUS BARHEBRAEUS (1226-1286).—See note on xi. 11-13.

§ 23. INFLUENCE OF JUBILEES ON THE NEW TESTAMENT

The points of connection between the gospels and our author are very slight, except in the beliefs respecting angels and demons—a subject to which we shall return later. We shall now place the passages side by side where the New Testament is dependent on our text, or presupposes it, or presents a close parallel.

Jub. x. 8.—“Chief of the spirits”; xlviii. 9, 12, “Prince of the Mastêmâ.”

Luke xi. 49.—“Therefore also said the wisdom of God: I will send unto them prophets and apostles, and some of them they will kill and persecute.

i. 12.—“And I shall send witnesses unto them, that I may witness against them, but they will . . . slay the witnesses also and persecute those who seek the law.”

John xiv. 26.—“The Holy Spirit . . . will bring to your remembrance all things, etc.”

xxxii. 25.—“I will bring all things to thy remembrance.” Here God is to cause Jacob to remember all that he had seen in a vision.

Acts vii. 15-16.—“And he (Jacob) died, himself and our fathers, and they were carried over unto Shechem, and laid in the tomb that Abraham bought, etc.”

xlvi. 9.—“And the children of Israel brought forth all the bones of the children of Jacob save the bones of Joseph, and they buried them in the field in the double cave” (i.e. Machpelah). This is the oldest source of the tradition in Acts.

Acts vii. 23.—Moses when “well nigh forty years old” smote the Egyptian.

Acts vii. 30.—Moses spent forty years in Midian.

Acts vii. 53.—“Who received the law as it was ordained by angels and kept it not.” Cf. Gal. iii. 19.

Acts ix. 2.—“If he found any that were of the way.”

Rom. iv. 15.—“Where there is no law, neither is there transgression.”

2 Cor. v. 17.—“A new creation” (Gal. vi. 15).

2 Cor. vi. 18.—“I will be to you a Father and ye shall be to me sons and daughters.”

Gal. ii. 15.—“Sinners of the Gentiles.”

Gal. iii. 17.—“A covenant confirmed beforehand by God, the law which came 430 years later, etc.” Does the confirmation here spoken of mean the birth of Isaac? In that case 430 years exactly elapse between this confirmation of the covenant and the law according to Jubilees.

Gal. v. 12.—“I would that they which unsettle you (i.e. Judaisers) would cut off the member” (ἀποκόψονταί).

xlvi. 1.—Moses spent thirty-eight years.¹

i. 27.—“And He said to the angel of the presence: Write for Moses, etc.” i. 14: “They will forget . . . thy law.” Our text is the earliest authority for the statement that the law was given through angels.

xxiii. 20.—“Turn them back into the way.”

xxxiii. 15-16.—Anticipates this Pauline doctrine.

v. 12.—“A new and righteous nature.”

i. 24.—“I shall be their Father and they will be My children.”² xxiii. 23.—“Sinners of the Gentiles” (cf. xxiii. 24).

xv. 4 sqq. contains the covenant made in 1979 A.M. with Abraham on his circumcision. The law was given in 2410. Hence 2410 - 1979 = 431. Isaac was born in 1980, or exactly 430 years before the legislation on Sinai according to Jubilees.

Contrast xv. 27, according to which the angels were created circumcised.

2 Thess. ii. 3.—“Son of perdition.”

1 Tim. i. 4.—“Fables and endless genealogies.” iv. 7: “old wives’ fables.” Titus iii. 9: “Genealogies and strifes and fightings about the law.”

James i. 13.—“Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God, for God tempteth no man.”

James ii. 23.—“Abraham believed God and it was counted to him for righteousness and he was called the friend of God.”

2 Peter ii. 5.—“Noah, a preacher of righteousness.”

2 Peter iii. 13.—“New heavens and a new earth.”

2 Peter iii. 8.—“One day is with the Lord as a thousand years.”

Rev. i. 6.—“A kingdom, priests.” v. 10: “A kingdom and priests.”

Rev. iv. 5 (xi. 19, xvi. 18; cf. viii. 5).—“Lightnings and voices and thunderings.”

x. 3.—“Sons of perdition.”

The Pauline phrases form a just description of a large portion of Jubilees. The “old wives’ fables” may be an allusion to the large rôle played by women in it.

The author of Jubilees enforces the same view by representing Mastêmâ as suggesting the temptation of Abraham to sacrifice Isaac (xvii. 16), as hardening the hearts of the Egyptians (xlviii. 12, 17), etc.

xiv. 6.—“And he believed on the Lord and it was counted to him for righteousness” (Gen. xv. 6). xix. 9: “He was found faithful and was recorded on the heavenly tables as the friend of God.”

vii. 20-39 contains Noah’s sermon.

i. 29.—“The heavens and the earth shall be renewed, etc.”

iv. 30 contains the oldest dogmatic statement of this fact.

xvi. 18.—“A kingdom and priests.” Our text alone gives this form of Exod. xix. 6 antecedently to Revelation.

ii. 2.—“Angels of the voices and of the thunder and of the lightnings.”

Angelology.—We shall confine our attention here to notable parallels between our author and the New Testament. Besides the angels of the presence and the angels of sanctification there are the angels who are set over natural phenomena (ii. 2). These angels are inferior to the former. They do not observe the Sabbath as the higher orders; for they are necessarily always engaged in their duties (ii. 18). It is the higher orders that are generally referred to in the New Testament; but the angels over natural phenomena are referred to in Revelation: angels of the winds in vii. 1, 2, the angel of fire in xiv. 18, the angel of the waters in xvi. 5 (cf. Jub. ii. 2). Again, the guardian angels of individuals, which the New Testament refers to in Matt. xviii. 10 (Acts xii. 15), are mentioned, for the first time, in Jubilees xxxv. 17. On the angelology of our author see § 16.

Demonology.—The demonology of our author reappears for the most part in the New Testament:

(b) The demons are the spirits which went forth from the souls of the giants who were the children of the fallen angels, Jub. v. 7, 9. These demons attacked men and ruled over them (x. 3, 6). Their purpose is to corrupt and lead astray and destroy the wicked (x. 8). They are subject to the prince of the Mastêmâ¹ (x. 9), or Satan. Men sacrifice to them as gods (xxii. 17). They are to pursue their work of moral ruin till the judgment of Mastêmâ (x. 8) or the setting up of the Messianic kingdom, when Satan will be no longer able to injure mankind (xxiii. 29).

So in the New Testament, the demons are disembodied spirits (Matt. xii. 43-45; Luke xi. 24-26). Their chief is Satan (Mark iii. 22). They are treated as divinities of the heathen (1 Cor. x. 20). They are not to be punished till the final judgment (Matt. viii. 29). On the advent of the Millennium Satan will be bound (Rev. xx. 2-3).

The Messiah.—Although our author is an upholder of the Maccabean dynasty he still clings like the writer of Eth. Enoch lxxxiii.-xc. to the hope of a Messiah sprung from Judah. He makes, however, only one reference to this Messiah, and no rôle of any importance is assigned to him (see xxxi. 18 note). The Messianic expectation showed no vigorous life throughout this century till it was identified with the Maccabean family. If we are right in regarding the Messianic kingdom as of temporary duration, this is the first instance in which the Messiah is associated with a temporary Messianic kingdom.

The Messianic Kingdom.—In the notes on i. 29, xxiii. 30 I have dealt at some length with the character of this kingdom. We have there seen that it was to be brought about gradually by the progressive spiritual development of man and a corresponding transformation of nature. Its members were to attain to the full limit of 1000 years in happiness and peace. During its continuance the powers of evil were to be restrained (xxiii. 29). The last judgment was apparently to take place at its close (see note on xxiii. 30). On the probable derivation of this view from Mazdeism see note on i. 29.

The writer of Jubilees, we can hardly doubt, thought that the era of the Messianic kingdom had already set in. Such an expectation was often cherished in the prosperous days of the Maccabees. Thus it was entertained by the writer of Eth. Enoch lxxxiii.-xc. in the days of Judas before 161 B.C. Whether Jonathan was looked upon as the divine agent for introducing the kingdom we cannot say, but as to Simon being regarded in this light there is no doubt. Indeed his contemporaries came to regard him as the Messiah himself, as we see from Psalm cx., or the noble Messianic hymn in Test. Levi 18. The tame effusion in 1 Macc. xiv. 8-15 is a relic of such literature, which was emasculated by its Sadducean editor. Simon was succeeded by John Hyrcanus in 135 B.C., and this great prince seemed to his countrymen to realise the expectations of the past; for according to a contemporary writer (Test. Levi 8) he embraced in his own person the triple office of prophet, priest, and civil ruler (see note on xxxi. 15), while, according to the Test. Reuben 6, he was to "die on behalf of Israel in wars seen and unseen." In both these passages he seems to be accorded the Messianic office, but not so in our author as we have seen above. Hyrcanus is only to introduce the Messianic kingdom, over which the Messiah sprung from Judah is to rule.¹

Priesthood of Melchizedek.—That there was originally an account of Melchizedek in our text we have shown in the note xiii. 25, and that the Maccabean high-priests deliberately adopted the title applied to him in Gen. xiv., we have pointed out in the note on xxxii. 1. It would be interesting to inquire how far the writer of Hebrews was indebted to the history of the great Maccabean king-priests for the idea of the Melchizedekian priesthood, of which he has made so fruitful a use in chap. vii. as applied to our Lord.

The Law.—On our author's conception of the law as the ideal and eternal realised under time relations see pp. li sqq.

Circumcision and the Sabbath.—On our author's exalted conceptions of these two bulwarks of Judaism, see p. 1.

The Future Life.—In our text all hope of a resurrection of the body is abandoned. The souls of the righteous will enjoy a blessed immortality after death (xxiii. 31). This is the earliest attested instance of this expectation in the last two centuries B.C. It is next found in Eth. Enoch xci.-civ.

The Jewish Calendar.—For our author's peculiar views see § 18 and the notes on vi. 29-30, 32, xv. 1.

THE BOOK OF JUBILEES

Moses receives the tables of the law and instruction on past and future history which he is to inscribe in a book, 1-4. Apostasy of Israel, 5-9. Captivity of Israel and Judah, 10-13. Return of Judah and rebuilding of temple, 15-18. Moses' prayer for Israel, 19-21. God's promise to redeem and dwell with them, 22-25, 28. Moses bidden to write down the future history of the world (the Book of Jubilees?), 26. And an angel to write down the law, 27. This angel takes the heavenly chronological tables to dictate therefrom to Moses, 29.

THIS is the history of the division of the days of the law and of the testimony, of the events of the years, of their (year) weeks, of their jubilees throughout all the years of the world, as the Lord spake to Moses on Mount Sinai

PROLOGUE. This short introduction gives an admirable account of the contents of this book. It is at once a history and a chronological system dominated by the sacred number seven. The history extends from the Creation to the legislation on Sinai, and thus embraces Genesis and part of Exodus. But the writer does not merely reproduce the portions of these books which serve his purpose; he rewrites from the standpoint of the strictest Judaism. See Introduction, §§ 15, 21.

According to their sevenfold division (a c) or "according to their year-weeks" (b d).

Throughout all the years of the world. These words are difficult; for they imply that it was the author's intention to write a history from the Creation till the establishment of the Messianic Kingdom or Theocracy. See i. 26 note.

The Lord አግዚአብሔር: (a). d reads አዎላክ: "God." b c omit. አግዚአብሔር (which generally = kύριος, but often θεός) is generally rendered "Lord" in my translation, but occasionally as "God" when external evidence so requires.

MUNDI.

I. And it came to pass in the first year of the exodus of the children of Israel out of Egypt, in the third month, on the sixteenth day of the month, that God spake to Moses, saying: "Come up to Me on the Mount, and I will give thee two tables of stone of the law and of the commandment, which I have written, that thou mayst teach them." 2. And Moses went up into the mount of God, and the glory of the Lord abode on Mount Sinai, and a cloud overshadowed it six days. 3. And He called to Moses on the seventh day out of the midst of the cloud, and the appearance of the glory of the Lord was like a flaming fire on the top of the mount. 4. And Moses was on the Mount forty days and forty nights, and God taught him the earlier and the later history of the division of all the days of the

Go up, etc. Exod. xxiv. 12.

I. 1. In the third month, on the sixteenth day of the month. It will be observed that our author supplies a date to the defective text of Exod. xix. 1 "In the third month after the children of Israel were gone forth . . . the same day came they." Ps.-Jon. inserts "on the first day of the month" (בְּהַר יְרֵחָא). It will be observed that on the same date on which Moses went up to receive the Law, the sixteenth of the third month, God appears to Jacob on his way down into Egypt (xliv. 5).

On the other hand, we must carefully distinguish this date and the events connected with it from the fifteenth of the third month and the events connected with it. On the fifteenth Abraham celebrated the feast of the first-fruits of the harvest (xv. 1, xlv. 4); Isaac was born (xvi. 13) (so also in Seder Olam); Abraham died (xxii. 1); Judah was born (xxviii. 15); and Jacob and

We shall see later (vi. 17-18 notes) that the feast of weeks was first observed on earth in connection with the covenant of Noah, and was according to our author designed to celebrate the institution of that covenant. It is important to recognise this fact, since later Judaism held that the feast of weeks celebrated the legislation on Sinai (see notes on vi. 17).

And thus it will come to pass when all these things come upon them, that they will recognise that I am more righteous than they in all their judgments and in all their actions, and they will recognise that I have been truly with them. 7. And do thou write for thyself all these words which I declare unto thee this day, for I know their rebellion and their stiff neck, before I bring them into the land of which I swear to their fathers, to Abraham and to Isaac and to Jacob, saying: "Unto your seed will I give a land flowing with milk and honey. 8. †Remove them the plant of uprightness.† I have obelized these words as corrupt. Littmann's rendering, "sie umändern zu einer Pflanze der Gerechtigkeit," is hardly possible linguistically. Moreover, it is against the use of this phrase. Cf. Eth. Enoch x. 16, xciii. 2, 5, 10. Israel was "the plant of uprightness" ness" from the outset. The original of the words and of those that follow appears to be Jer. xxxii. 41 "I will plant them in this land assuredly with all my heart and with all my soul." These words are used in the very same connection as those in the text. It is not improbable, therefore, that the words "in this land" have been lost after the verb. Next "And I will remove them"=kai μεταθήσω αὐτοὺς=וְהִסְעֵתִים. This last may be corrupt for וְהִסְעֵתִים. Thus we should have "And I will plant them the plant of uprightness in the land." This reverses the judgment in verse 13 "I will remove them from the midst of the land."

Let Thy mercy, O Lord, be lifted up upon Thy people, and create in them an upright spirit, and let not the spirit of Beliar rule over them to accuse them before Thee, and to ensnare them from all the paths of righteousness, so that they may perish from before Thy face. 21. But they are Thy people and Thy inheritance, which Thou hast delivered with Thy great power from the hands of the Egyptians: create in them a clean heart and a holy spirit, and let them not be ensnared in their sins from henceforth until eternity." 22. And the Lord said unto Moses: "I know their contrariness and their thoughts and their stiffneckedness, and they will not be obedient till they confess their own sin and the sin of their fathers. 23. Israel shall never again be driven from their own land.

24. I shall be their Father and they will be My children (or "sons"). These words are used in 2 Sam. vii. 14 in reference to Solomon; elsewhere in the OT only in reference to the nation or sections of it. God is the Father of Israel, Deut. xxxii. 6; Is. lxiii. 16; Jer. xxxi. 9; or of the righteous in Israel, even of the righteous individual, Wisdom ii. 16. See also i. 25, 28, xix. 29 of our text. Israel is God's son: Exod. iv. 22, 23; Deut. xiv. 1; Is. xliii. 6; Wisdom xviii. 13; Jud. ix. 4; or the righteous in Israel are God's children, even the individuals, Wisdom ii. 13, 18, v. 5, xii. 7, 21. For Talmudic references see Sayings of the Fathers (ed. Taylor) iii. 22; B. Bathra 10 a, Kiddushin 36 a, Berachoth 3 a. In 2 Cor. vi. 18 St. Paul takes directly these words of 2 Sam. vii. 14 and applies them to all the Christians. In the text they embrace all Israelites. Israelites are God's children according to our author by virtue of their physical descent from Jacob. Cf. i. 28.

25. Children (or "sons") of the living God. Hos. i. 10.

26. And do thou write down for thyself (bc). ad read "And I will write down for thee." These words appear to refer to the present work (as Singer p. 15 has recognised), i.e., Jubilees (cf. i. 7). Moses is to write it down at the dictation of the angel (vi. 1). It constitutes, so to say, the book of the second law. The Pentateuch, on the other hand, is "the book of the first law" (vi. 22), which was written by the angel himself (i. 27). The latter is referred to again in xxx. 12, 21, l. 6. In 4 Ezra xiv. 6 Moses is bidden to reveal the one, i.e., the Pentateuch, and conceal the other, the apocalyptic tradition. Haec in palam facies verba et haec abscondes. In Exod. xxxiv. 27 Moses is bidden to write down certain commands, but the decalogue is engraved on the tables of stone by God Himself: Exod. xxxiv. 1, 28; Deut. x. 2, 4.

All these words, the first and the last, which shall come to pass . . . until eternity. Cf. 4 Ezra xiv. 4, 5: Et adduxi eum super montem Sina et detinui eum apud Me diebus multis, Et enarravi ei mirabilia multa, et ostendi ei temporum secreta et temporum finem.

Until I descend and dwell . . . throughout eternity. Here as in the Prologue the implication is that the author intended to write a history of the world from the Creation to the setting up of the Theocracy. (Cf. Prologue; also i. 27, 29.) In a certain sense he has done so; for references occur to events as late as the early Maccabean times when the author lived. He was of opinion that the Messianic Kingdom would be introduced through the labours of the Maccabees. For God's dwelling throughout eternity." 27. And He said to the angel of the presence: "Write for Moses from the beginning of creation till My sanctuary has been built among them for all eternity. 28. And the Lord will appear to the eyes of all, and all will know that I am the God of Israel and the Father of all with man see Eth. Enoch xxv. 3, lxxvii. 1. This was the perfected theocracy which was looked for by those who did not expect a personal Messiah, such as the authors of Eth. Enoch i.-xxxvi., xci.-civ.; Ass. Moses x. Our author, however, looked for a Messiah sprung from Judah. See note on xxxi. 18.

27. And He said to the angel of the presence. See note on i. 29. Our text forms apparently the earliest testimony to the idea that the law was given through the ministry of angels. In Deut. xxxiii. 2 we have the first mention of angels in connection with the giving of the law, but according to that passage they merely accompany Yahwe. But the way was prepared for the conception in Jubilees by the development which angelology underwent in exilic and post-exilic times. Thus from the exile onwards God communicated no longer directly with His servants. In the case of Ezekiel, who was in the period of transition, the revelation is sometimes made directly to him (xliv. 2), sometimes indirectly through an angel (xl. 3). By the time of Zechariah the development is complete. This prophet receives all his communications through angels. Naturally when we come down to the century in which our book was written, this usage is universal. Daniel receives even the interpretation of his visions through angels (vii. 16 sqq.; viii. 15 sqq. etc.), and in a later work of the same century, Test. XII. Patriarch., Dan. 6, the angel that intercedes for Israel is called "the mediator between God and man" (μεσίτης Θεοῦ καὶ ἀνθρώπων). See also Levi 5. I am not aware of any other references to this conception till the beginning of the Christian era. Thus Philo, De Somnis, i. 22 (p. 642 M.), commenting on Exod. xix. 19, writes that we cannot receive God's benefits save through the agency of His ministers. (οὐδ' ὑπερβαλλούσας . . .

εὐεργεσίας χωρῆσαι δυνάμεθα, ὥς ἂν αὐτὸς προτείνῃ δι' ἑαυτοῦ μὴ χρώμενος ὑπερέταις ἄλλοις.) In the first cent. A.D. we have frequent references to this view. Thus in Jos. Ant. xv. 5. 3: ἡμῶν δὲ τὰ κάλλιστα τῶν δογμάτων καὶ τὰ ὁσιώτατα τῶν ἐν τοῖς νόμοις δι' ἀγγέλων παρὰ τοῦ θεοῦ μαθόντων. From Judaism this verse passed over into the NT. Cf. Gal. iii. 19 νόμος . . . διαταγὴς δι' ἀγγέλων. See also Acts vii. 53; Heb. ii. 2. The Samaritans also believed in the ministry of angels in connection with the law. Cf. Gesenius, Carm. Sam. p. 15 and de Sacy, Not. et extraits de la Bibl. xii. 16. Later Judaism rejected this view probably on polemical grounds, and always represented Moses as receiving the law directly from God. In Sabbath 88b and Shem. rabba 28 Moses is represented as ascending into heaven to receive the law.

Write for Moses, etc. If the interpretation of this verse adopted on i. 26 (note) is right, the angel is to write out the Pentateuch for Moses. There is, however, this difficulty attaching to this interpretation, that the history embraced in the Pentateuch is to extend from the Creation to the time when God's "sanctuary has been built among them for all eternity." It is possible that this means nothing more than such broad and apparently prophetic descriptions of the apostasies of Israel and Judah under their kings, of the Exile and the Return from captivity, and of the restored theocracy as are found in Deut. xxviii.-xxx. It must be confessed that this explanation does not appear adequate.

29. Angel of the presence. The phrase is derived from Is. lxiii. 9 and found also in Test. XII. Patriarch., Jud. 25. This angel is probably Michael who was the guardian angel of Israel: cf. Dan. x. 13, 21, xii. 1; Eth. Enoch xx. 5; Slav. Enoch xxii. 6; Weber, Jüd. Theologie,² 168. Four of these angels are mentioned in Eth. Enoch xl. (where see note on ver. 2 in my edition).

Who went before the camp of Israel. Exod. xiv. 19.

Took the tables of the divisions of the years. From these the angel dictates to Moses.

Divisions of the years—from the time of the creation (c)—of the law (a), etc. This seems to be the best way of taking the text. My text which follows b = "divisions of the years from the creation of the law."

According to the individual years. Bracketed as an interpolation. b omits.

From the day of the [new] creation †when† the heavens and the earth shall be renewed. The text is clearly corrupt. It should furnish us with the terminus a quo and the terminus ad quem. The history of the "tables of the divisions" obviously embraces everything from the creation to the Messianic Kingdom. Hence "new" (haddas) is to be regarded as an Ethiopic interpolation. In a b it follows the word "creation" but in the inferior MSS (c d) it precedes them. Next in place of "†when†" (ama) we should expect "till." We can recover "till" by taking ws (= "when") in the Greek to be a corruption of ew

The heavens and the earth shall be renewed. We should observe carefully the nature of the "renewal" as it appears in Jubilees. This renewal of the creation is not to be instantaneous and catastrophic, but gradual, and its progress to be conditioned ethically by the conduct of Israel. This will be seen most clearly in iv. 26 and xxiii. 26-28 (see notes in loc.). Similar expressions are found in Is. lxxv. 17, lxxvi. 22. In my Eschatology (pp. 122-123) I took these passages in Isaiah to denote a sudden and actual re-creation of the world, and as I conceived they were at variance with their contexts, I marked them as later interpolations. I now see that they should be taken to express a gradual transformation of the world, moral and physical, and, that thus the argument against their originality falls to the ground. This view was probably adopted from Mazdeism, which according to Söderblom (La Vie Future d'après le Mazdéisme, p. 254, Paris, 1901) teaches that le monde deviendra peu à peu meilleur et se spiritualisera pendant les derniers temps. This fifth-century view of the writer in Isaiah lxxv. lxxvi. is reproduced by our author. Heaven and earth and the physical nature of man will be transformed pari passu with man's spiritual transformation (xxiii. 26-28, l. 5). According to Jubilees xxiii. 27 the righteous should attain to a thousand years, and according to Is. lxxv. 20 the sinner should be prematurely cut off when a hundred years old. So far as I am aware, Is.

all their creation according to the powers of the heaven, and according to all the creation of the earth, until the sanctuary of the Lord shall be made in Jerusalem on Mount Zion, and all the luminaries be renewed for healing and for peace and for blessing for all the elect of Israel, and that thus it may be from that day and unto all the days of the earth.

The history of the twenty-two distinct acts of creation on the six days, 1-16. Institution of the Sabbath: its observance by the highest angels, with whom Israel is afterwards to be associated, 17-32. (Cf. Gen. i.-ii. 3.)

II. And the angel of the presence spake to Moses according to the word of the Lord, saying: Write the com-

lxv.-lxvi., Jubilees and Test. Levi 18 are the only Jewish writings which attest this view. But from 100 B.C. Jewish, and subsequently Christian, writers took these expressions in a literal and catastrophic sense. Thus it is an actual re-creation of heaven and earth that is foretold in Eth. Enoch xci. 16, lxxii. 1, xlv. 4; Apoc. Bar. xxxii. 6, lvii. 2; 4 Ezra vii. 75; 2 Peter iii. 13; Rev. xxi. 1.

But again to return to our author we find the following novelty. He teaches that God is to renew His creation at three distinct periods. The first was on the occasion of the Deluge when He destroyed all that was corrupt (v. 11) and "made for all His works a new and righteous nature" (v. 12). The next renewal was to synchronise with the foundation of the Jewish community in Jacob, which should "serve to lay the foundations of the heaven and to strengthen the earth and to renew all the luminaries which are in the firmament" (xix. 25). The idea that a renewal of the world began with Jacob follows also from ii. 22 sqq. According to this passage the twenty-two generations that precede Jacob correspond to the twenty-two works of God at the Creation. A new era of renewal begins with Jacob. Finally when God's sanctuary and the Messianic Kingdom are established amongst men, the final renewal will set in, "when the heavens and the earth shall be renewed" and "all the luminaries shall be renewed" i. 29, iv. 26, v. 12. According to the present text of v. 11, 12, the renewal of creation after the Deluge is taught; but the text is corrupt. In its original form it could only refer to the renewal of the world on the setting up of the Messianic Kingdom. There are thus three great eras in this book: the creation of the world, its renewal on the creation of the true man, Jacob, and its final renewal on the establishment of the sanctuary. On the symbolic values of man and the temple see Eppstein, "Le Livre des Jubilés," Revue des Études juives, 1890, xxi. 92-97.

II. 1. Angel of the presence. See i. 29 (note).

Write the complete history of the plete history of the creation, how in six days the Lord God finished all His works and all that He created, and kept Sabbath on the seventh day and hallowed it for all ages, and appointed it as a sign for all His works. 2. For on creation. We find the following Scholion in a MS Coislin. (Fabric. ii. 120) on Exod. xxiv. 15, which refers to Jubilees: ἐνταῦθα ἡξιώθη ὁ μέγας Μωϋσῆς μετὰ τὰς τεσσαράκοντα ἡμέρας ἰδεῖν δι' ὀπτασιῶν, πῶς ἐν ταῖς ἑξ ἡμέραις ἐποίησεν ὁ θεὸς τὸν οὐρανὸν καὶ τὴν γῆν, καὶ πάντα τὰ ἐν αὐτοῖς κατὰ τάξιν μιᾶς ἐκάστης ἡμέρας καὶ συγγράψαι παρεκελεύσθη.

2-3. These verses record the creations of the first day. They were seven in all: heaven, earth, the waters, spirits, the abysses, darkness, light. We have happily the Greek version preserved in Epiphanius, περὶ Μέτρων καὶ Σταθμῶν, xxii. (see my critical edition of the Ethiopic text pp. 5, 7): τῇ μὲν γὰρ πρώτῃ ἡμέρᾳ ἐποίησε τοὺς οὐρανοὺς τοὺς ἀνωτέρους (καὶ) τὴν γῆν (καὶ) τὰ ὕδατα . . . τὰ πνεύματα τὰ λειτουργοῦντα ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ ἅτινά ἐστι τάδε ἄγγελοι πρὸ προσώπου, καὶ ἄγγελοι τῆς δόξης, καὶ ἄγγελοι πνευμάτων πνεόντων, (καὶ) ἄγγελοι νεφελῶν καὶ γυόφων (καὶ) χιόνος καὶ χαλάξης καὶ πάγου, (καὶ) ἄγγελοι φωνῶν (καὶ) βροντῶν καὶ ἀστραπῶν, (καὶ) ἄγγελοι ψυχῶς καὶ καύματος καὶ χειμῶνος καὶ φθινοπώρου καὶ ἔαρος καὶ θέρους, καὶ πάντων τῶν πνευμάτων τῶν κτισμάτων αὐτοῦ τῶν ἐν οὐρανοῖς καὶ ἐν τῇ γῇ, (καὶ) τὰς ἀβύσσους τὴν τε ὑποκάτω τῆς γῆς καὶ τοῦ χάους, (καὶ) τὸ σκότος, ἐσπέραν καὶ νύκτα, (καὶ) τὸ φῶς, ἡμέραν τε καὶ ὄρθρον. An imperfect enumeration of the seven works is given by Syncellus (ed. Dindorf, p. 4), in which τὰς ἀβύσσους is omitted and νυχθήμερον is substituted. Cedrenus (ed. Bekker, p. 7) reproduces Syncellus' summary, but with an additional corruption. He omits τὰ ὕδατα and reckons νυχθήμερον as two works. The Hebrew work, Midrash Tadshe vi. lines 11-16 (ed. by Eppstein, Beiträge zur jüdischen Alterthumskunde, 1887) is clearly based on our text. It runs: "Twenty-two kinds of creatures were created in the universe in seven days: the first day seven; heaven, earth, waters, darkness, the wind (רוח), the abysses (מחלמות), light. The second day: one only, the firmament. The third day, four. He reunited the waters in one place, brought up the sweet waters from the earth, likewise herbs and trees. The fourth day, three: the sun, moon and stars. The fifth day, three: the moving creatures, birds and sea monsters. The sixth day, four: beasts, and cattle, and creeping things, and man. This corresponds to the twenty-two letters of the alphabet and to the twenty-two generations from Adam to Jacob (כנני כב אחיות שבאב וכנני הרורות מאדם עד שבא יעקב).

In the enumeration of the works of the first day, we observe a divergency between Jubilees (Epiphanius and Syncellus) and the Midrash Tadshe. Where Jubilees gives "angels," the Midrash gives "the wind." The ground for this divergency is manifest. If we examine Gen. i. 1-4 we find that the list of seven works is drawn from these verses, and that the idea of the creation of the angels is simply a development of the word "spirit" (רוח), ver. 2. But the Midrash Tadshe shuns such an inference from Gen. i. 2; for Talmudic Judaism held that the angels were created on the second or the fifth day. In Ber. rabba 1 according to R. Jochanan it was on the second day (Ps. cxv. 4, 5—see also Jerusalem Targum on Gen. i. 26; Chron. of Jerahmeel i. 8), but according to R. Chanina on the fifth (see Gen. i. 20; Is. vi. 6), and R. Luliani bar Tabrai says that they were not created on the first day lest it should be said that they had assisted God in the creation. Philo, Leg. Allegor. i. 2, represents the creation of the angels as accomplished on the seventh day.

Philo (de Mundi opificio, i. 7) mentions seven objects of creation: οὐρανός, γῆ, σκότος, τὸ ἄβυσσον, ὕδωρ, πνεῦμα, φῶς. Here the πνεῦμα retains for the most part its original force; for in the next chapter Philo says with regard to it: τὸ μὲν γὰρ ὠνόμασε θεοῦ, διότι ζωτικώτατον τὸ πνεῦμα. On the other hand he idealises all seven objects of creation of the first day. It is not the actual but the ideal world that is created on the first day. Thus he speaks of the heaven as ἀσώματος, the earth as ἀόρατος, the darkness and the abyss as the ἀέρος ἰδέα καὶ κενοῦ, wind and water as having an ἀσώματος οὐσία, and the light as being νοητός. Notwithstanding, it is obvious that Philo was acquainted with a cosmology such as is given in our text. The Chronicles of Jerahmeel, i. 3, enumerate eight works. It duplicates "the spirit" by taking it first as "the spirit of God" and next as "air." Its dependence on the Jubilee tradition is possible.

the first day He created the heavens which are above and the earth and the waters and all the spirits which serve before Him—the angels of the presence, and the angels of

According to later Judaism, Ber. rabba 3 sqq. four things were created on the first day, mountains (here הרים is corrupt for תהום, "abyss"), heaven, earth, light. On the second—the firmament, hell and the angels. On the third—trees, green things, and Paradise. On the fourth—sun, moon and stars. On the fifth—birds, fishes and the Leviathan. On the sixth—Adam, Eve and worms. In all nineteen works. But according to R. Pinchas, six things were created on the sixth: Adam, Eve, worms, tame beasts, wild beasts, demons.

2. On the first day he created . . . the angels. In addition to the remarks made under this head on ii. 2-3 above we should further observe that grounds are furnished for such a conception by Job xxxviii. 7 (cf. i. 6) "When the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy." Here the sons of God are regarded as admiring spectators of the creation. It is probable that earlier Judaism so understood this verse. At all events, this interpretation appears in patristic literature; cf. Epiphanius, Haer. lxxv. chap. 4: Εἰ μὴ γὰρ ἅμα οὐρανῷ καὶ γῇ καὶ ἄγγελοι ἐκτίσθησαν, οὐκ ἂν ἔλεγε τῷ Ἰώβ οὗτο, "Ὅτε ἐγενήθησαν ἄστρα, ἤνεσάν με πάντες ἄγγελοί μου φωνῇ. See also the quotation from Rufinus in the next note. Nearly two centuries earlier this idea is attested in Hermas, Vis. iii. 4: Οὗτοί εἰσιν οἱ ἅγιοι ἄγγελοι τοῦ Θεοῦ οἱ πρῶτοι κτισθέντες, οἷς παρέδωκεν ὁ κύριος πᾶσαν τὴν κτίσιν αὐτοῦ, αὖξιν καὶ οἰκοδομεῖν καὶ δεσπόζειν τῆς κτίσεως πάσης.

All the spirits which serve before him. This phrase is found in the Jerusalem Targum I. on Gen. i. 26, but there the creation of the angels is assigned to the second day. See further details in preceding note. With our text compare Rufinus, Expositio in Symbol. p. 21 (Fabricius, Cod. Pseud. V.T. ii. 57), Ut breviter aliqua etiam de secretionibus perstringamus, ab initio Deus cum fecisset mundum, praecepit ei et praeposuit quasdam virtutum caelestium potestates, quibus regeretur et dispensaretur mortalium genus . . . Sed et horum nonnulli, sicut et ipse qui princeps appellatus est mundi, datam sibi a Deo potestatem non his quibus acceperant legibus temperarunt nec humanum genus divinis obedire praeceptis, sed suis parere praevaricationibus docuerunt.

The angels of the presence, and the angels of sanctification. Cf. ii. 18, xv. 27, xxxi. 14. These are the two chief orders of angels. On the former see i. 29 note. Both classes are mentioned in ii. 18: these observe the Sabbath together with God and Israel (ii. 18 sqq.), and like them Levi and his seed are to serve in the sanctuary, xxxi. 14. The lower orders who are set over the works of nature do not keep the Sabbath. These angels are, according to the Talmud and no doubt to our author, inferior to righteous Israelites: Sanh. 93a, צדיקים יותר ממלאכי השרה. See also Ber. rabba 8; Tanchuma 14, חביבין ישראל לפני הקב"ה יותר ממלאכי השרה (Singer, p. 98). "The angels of sanctification" are those who sing praises to God (possibly the trisagion as in Eth. En. lxi. 12). As Epiphanius has ἄγγελοι τῆς δόξης (= ἄγγελοι δοξάζοντες), Praetorius proposes that we should read weddāsē instead of qeddāsē. But the text can be defended; for in xv. 27 where the phrase recurs, the Latin has sanctificationis.

sanctification, and the angels [of the spirit of fire and the angels] of the spirit of the winds, and the angels of the spirit of the clouds, and of darkness, and of snow and of hail and of hoar frost, and the angels of the voices and of the thunder and of the lightning, and the angels of the spirits of cold and of heat, and of winter and of spring and of autumn and of summer, and of all the spirits of His creatures which are in the heavens and on the earth, (He created) the abysses and the darkness, eventide (and night), and the light, dawn and day, which He hath prepared in the knowledge of His heart. 3. And thereupon we saw His works, and praised Him, and lauded before Him on account of all His works; for seven great works did He create on the first day. 4. And on the second

Angels . . . of fire . . . of the winds, . . . of the clouds, etc. The third or lowest order of angels presides over the natural phenomena. See Eth. Enoch lx. 12-21, lxxv., lxxx.; Slav. Enoch xix. 1-4.

Angels . . . of fire. Cf. Rev. xiv. 18.

Of the spirit of fire and the angels. So bcd. a and G of Epiphanius omit.

Angels . . . of the winds. Cf. Rev. vii. 1, 2. See Eth. Enoch xviii. 1-5, xxxiv.-xxxvi., lxxvi. on the various functions of the wind.

Of snow. So Gk. of Epiphanius, χιόνος, which was probably corrupted into παντός: hence text of a b. cd om.

Of snow and of hail and of hoar frost. Eth. Enoch lx. 17, 18.

Angels of the voices and of the thunder and of the lightning. This is an obscure phrase. It would be easy if we could omit the first "and." Then we should have the familiar expression "voices of the thunder." Cf. Ps. lxxvii. 18, civ. 7; Rev. vi. 1, x. 4, xix. 6. On the other hand we have in Rev. iv. 5, xi. 19, xvi. 18, ἀστραπαὶ καὶ φωναὶ καὶ βρονταί, and in viii. 5, βρονταὶ καὶ φωναὶ καὶ ἀστραπαί. The phrase in Rev. may be derived from our text. The "voices" may mean the mutterings of the thunder. "Voice" (ἡρ) in itself means thunder in Job xxxvii. 4.

Of winter . . . and summer. Cf. Eth. Enoch lxxxii. 13-20.

(He created) the abysses. abcd read "in all the abysses," connecting the phrase wrongly with the preceding words. "The abysses" are one of the seven things created on the first day and must be in the accusative as in G of Epiphanius. The Kuallû = "all" may be a corruption of 'ellû = "these" (a frequent corruption), and the latter a translation of the Greek article in τὰς ἀβύσσους. G reads τὰς ἀβύσσους τὴν τε ὑποκάτω τῆς γῆς καὶ τοῦ χάους. In my Ethiopic text, omit the three words after qalâyât, which are an attempt partly to restore and partly to emend a into conformity with the G.

3. Seven great works. See note above, p. 11 on ii. 2-3.

4. Works of the second day. Gen. i. 6-7. Cf. Slav. Enoch xxvi.-xxvii. G in Epiphanius runs: ἐν δὲ τῇ δευτέρᾳ τὸ στερέωμα τὸ ἐν τῷ μέσῳ τῶν ὑδάτων, καὶ ἐν αὐτῇ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἐμερίσθη τὰ ὕδατα, τὸ ἥμισυ αὐτῶν ἀνέβη ἐπάνω τοῦ στερεώματος (καὶ τὸ ἥμισυ κατέβη ὑποκάτω τοῦ στερεώματος) τοῦ ἐμμέσῳ ἐπὶ προσώπου πάσης τῆς γῆς. τοῦτο μόνον τὸ ἔργον ἐποίησεν ὁ Θεὸς ἐν τῇ δευτέρᾳ ἡμέρᾳ.

day He created the firmament in the midst of the waters, and the waters were divided on that day—half of them went up above and half of them went down below the firmament (that was) in the midst over the face of the whole earth. And this was the only work (God) created on the second day. 5. And on the third day He commanded the waters to pass from off the face of the whole earth into one place, and the dry land to appear. 6. And the waters did so as He commanded them, and they retired from off the face of the earth into one place outside of this firmament, and the dry land appeared. 7. And on that day He created for them all the seas according to their separate gathering-places, and all the rivers, and the gatherings of the waters in the mountains and on all the earth, and all the lakes, and all the dew of the earth, and the seed which is sown, and all sprouting things, and fruit-bearing trees, and trees of the wood, and the garden of Eden, in Eden, and all

Waters were divided on that day. According to this view as also of Gen. i. 6 there was a sea in heaven resting on the firmament, which through seven flood-gates (v. 24) let down its waters on the earth. See the curious speculation on these waters in Eth. Enoch liv. 7-8.

5-7. Works of the third day. Cf. Gen. i. 9-13; Slav. Enoch xxx. 1. G in Epiphanius is defective: τρίτη δὲ ἡμέρα . . . τὰς θαλάσσας . . . τοὺς ποταμούς, τὰς πηγὰς . . . καὶ λίμνας, τὰ σπέρματα τοῦ σπόρου, καὶ τὰ βλαστήματα, τὰ ξύλα τὰ κάρπιμά τε καὶ ἄκαρπα καὶ τοὺς ὄρυμους . . . καὶ πάντα τὰ φυτὰ κατὰ γένος. ταῦτα τὰ τέσσαρα ἔργα τὰ μέγιστα ἐποίησεν ὁ Θεὸς ἐν τῇ τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ. It is better in Syncellus i. 4: φανέρωσις γῆς καὶ ἀναξήρανσις, παράδεισος, δένδρα παντοῖα, βοτάναι καὶ σπέρματα.

5. The third day. MSS add "He made as."

7. Cf. Slav. Enoch xxx. 1.

Sprouting things = zajebaquel emend-

ed from zajetbalá'ē according to G βλαστήματα.

Garden of Eden, in Eden. MSS add "for pleasure." This phrase is due either to a corrupt ditto-graphy: i.e.—latadlâ is corrupt for bataclâ = ἐν τρυφῇ, a duplicate rendering of גן עדן: or else tadlâ is corrupt for taklât = φυστά and should be transposed after kuellû. The "in Eden" is also superfluous. c omits it.

Garden of Eden. Eden is likewise a creation of the third day in Ber. rabba 15; Slav. Enoch xxx. 1; Book of Adam and Eve i. 1. This is the earliest view so far as our evidence goes. As early, however, as the latter half of the first century A.D., the garden of Eden was said to have been created before the world. Thus 4 Ezra iii. 6 In paradisum, quem plantavit dextera tua antequam terra adventaret. This view arose from taking מקרא in Gen. ii. 8 to mean "from the beginning" instead of "on the east." This new interpretation was adopted by the Targums and the Syriac and Latin Versions, as well as by Aquila, Sym-

(plants after their kind). These four great works God created on the third day. 8. And on the fourth day He created the sun and the moon and the stars, and set them in the firmament of the heaven, to give light upon all the earth, and to rule over the day and the night, and divide the light from the darkness. 9. And God appointed the sun to be a great sign on the earth for days and for sabbaths and for months and for feasts and for years and for sabbaths of years and for jubilees and for all seasons of the years. 10. And it divideth the light from the darkness [and] for prosperity, that all things may prosper which shoot and grow on the earth. These three kinds He made on the fourth day. 11. And on the fifth day He created great sea monsters in the depths of the waters, for these were the first things of flesh that were created by His hands, the fish and everything that moves in the waters, and everything that

8-10. Gen. i. 14-19. Cf. Slav. Enoch. xxx. 2-6. G in Epiphanius very defective: τῇ δὲ τετάρτῃ τὸν ἥλιον τὴν σελήνην τοὺς ἀστέρας . . . ταῦτα τὰ τρία ἔργα τὰ μεγάλα ἐποίησε ὁ Θεὸς ἐν τῇ τετάρτῃ ἡμέρᾳ.

9. Appointed the sun. It will be observed here that though the writer is basing the text on Gen. i. 16-18 he makes no reference to the moon. The omission is intentional. The writer holds that Israel should not be guided by the moon but by the sun in the calculations of all their festivals. See vi. 36-38.

Appointed the sun . . . for jubilees. The period from the entrance of the Israelites into Canaan to the destruction of the first temple is measured by jubilees in Erachin 12-13 a.

13-14. Works of the sixth day. Gen. i. 24-28. Cf. Slav. Enoch xxx. 8 sqq. G in Epiphanius is defective: τῇ δὲ ἑκτῇ ἡμέρᾳ τὰ θηρία . . . τὰ κτήνη, τὰ ἐρπετὰ τῆς γῆς, τὸν ἀνθρώπον . . . ταῦτα τὰ τέσσαρα μεγάλα ἔργα ἐποίησεν ὁ Θεὸς ἐν τῇ ἑκτῇ ἡμέρᾳ.

14. A man and a woman—instead of the usual "male and female."

15. See note on ii. 23. The Greek of this verse and the next is found in Epiphanius, loc. cit.: καὶ ἐγένετο πάντα εἴκοσι δύο γένη ἐν ταῖς ἑξ ἡμέραις. καὶ συνετέλεσεν πάντα τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ ἐν τῇ ἑκτῇ ἡμέρᾳ, ὅσα ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς καὶ ὅσα ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, ἐν ταῖς θαλάσσαις καὶ ἐν ταῖς ἀβύσσοις, ἐν τῷ φωτὶ καὶ ἐν τῷ σκότει καὶ ἐν πᾶσι.

16. On the sixth day. Our text is supported by the Samaritan text and the LXX and Syriac Versions of Gen.

ii. 2^a. Cf. Exod. xx. 11. Budde and Ball accept this (= עֲשֶׂה) as the original reading of Gen. ii. 2^a over against the Massoretic (= עָבַד). The severer observance of the Sabbath belongs certainly to the pre-Christian centuries as we shall see later.

17-21. The two chief orders of angels observe the Sabbath together with God. Israel alone will be chosen to join in this observance. Like the third order of angels (see note on ii. 2), i.e. those that preside over natural phenomena, the Gentiles do not share in this privilege (ii. 31).

17. He gave us a great sign, the Sabbath day. Cf. Exod. xxxi. 13. This sign, first appointed between God and the two chief orders of angels, was to be established subsequently between God and Israel, ii. 21. See ii. 31 note.

cation, these two great classes—He hath bidden us to keep the Sabbath with Him in heaven and on earth. 19. And He said unto us: “Behold, I will separate unto Myself a people from among all the peoples, and these will keep the Sabbath day, and I will sanctify them unto Myself as My people, and will bless them; as I have sanctified the Sabbath day and do sanctify (it) unto Myself, even so shall I bless them, and they will be My people and I shall be their God. 20. And I have chosen the seed of Jacob from amongst all that I have seen, and have written him down as My first-born son, and have sanctified him unto Myself for ever and ever; and I will teach them the Sabbath day, that they may keep Sabbath thereon from all work.” 21. And thus He created therein a sign in accordance with which they should keep Sabbath with us on the seventh day, to eat and to drink, and to bless Him who has created all things as He has blessed and sanctified unto Himself a peculiar people above all peoples, and that they should keep Sabbath together with us. 22. And He caused His commands to ascend as a sweet savour acceptable before Him all the days. . . . 23. There (were) two and twenty heads of mankind from Adam 19. Separate unto Myself a people. 1 Kings viii. 53.

21. A sign. According to Exod. xxxi. 13, 17; Ezek. xx. 12, the Sabbath was to be a sign between God and Israel. See ii. 17 note, 31 note.

Keep Sabbath with us. Israel is to unite with the angels (cf. verses 17, 18) in observing the Sabbath.

To eat and to drink, etc. This joyful aspect of the Sabbath is enforced again in ii. 31, l. 9, 10. In l. 12 fasting on the Sabbath is forbidden. See l. 6 sqq. (notes) for a discussion of the entire question.

A peculiar people above all peoples. Deut. vii. 6; cf. Exod. xix. 5; Amos iii. 2. The Sabbaths are signs that God has given to His people to distinguish them from other peoples. Cf. verse 31; Ezek. xx. 12, 20. “Peculiar” here = zajâtari emended from zajâstarēi.

And that they . . . with us. This seems a dittography of the second clause of this verse.

23. It is clear from Epiphanius, Syncellus and Cedrenus that there is a to Jacob, and two and twenty kinds of work were made until the seventh day; this is blessed and holy; and the former also is blessed and holy; and this one serves with that one for sanctification and blessing. 24. And to this (Jacob and his seed) it was granted that they should always lacuna in the text after ver. 22. Thus in Epiphanius, De Mensuris et Ponderibus, ch. xxii. (ed. Dind. vol. iv. 28) after an account of the six days' creation, drawn word for word from Jubilees, he continues καὶ ἐδήλωσε δι' ἀγγέλου τῷ Μωϋσεῖ ὅτι (Jub. ii. 23) καὶ εἴκοσι δύο κεφάλαια ἀπὸ Ἀδὰμ ἕως τοῦ Ἰακώβ. . . . καὶ (Jub. ii. 21) ἐκλέξομαι ἑμναυτῷ ἐκ τοῦ σπέρματος αὐτοῦ . . . λαὸν περιούσιον ἀπὸ πάντων τῶν ἐθνῶν . . . διὸ καὶ εἴκοσι δύο εἰσὶ τὰ παρὰ τοῖς Ἑβραίοις γράμματα, καὶ πρὸς αὐτὰ καὶ τὰς βίβλους αὐτῶν κβ' ἡρίθμησαν εἴκοσι ἐπτὰ οὐσας· ἀλλ' ἐπειδὴ διπλαῖνται πέντε παρ' αὐτοῖς στοιχεῖα, εἴκοσι ἐπτὰ καὶ αὐτὰ ὄντα καὶ εἰς κβ' ἀποτελοῦνται, τούτου χάριν καὶ τὰς βίβλους κζ' οὐσας κβ' πεποιήκασιν. Also in i. 1 p. 59 ('Ἐπικουρ.) we find αὐταὶ εἰσιν αἱ εἰκοσι-επτὰ βίβλοι αἱ ἐκ Θεοῦ δοθεῖσαι τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις, εἰκοσιδύο δὲ ὡς τὰ παρ' αὐτοῖς στοιχεῖα τῶν Ἑβραϊκῶν γραμμάτων ἀριθμοῦνται, διὰ τὸ διπλαῦσθαι δέκα βίβλους εἰς πέντε λεγομένας. Again Anastasius, who elsewhere quotes Jubilees (see iii. 9 note), seems to refer to our text here in his work on the Hexaemeron (Migne's Biblioth. Patr. Graec. tom. 89, col. 940): Viginti enim duo opera fecisse Deum dicunt, et Judaeorum et Christianorum interpretes . . . propterea viginti quoque duobus libris enumerat omne Vetus suum Testamentum. In Isidore of Seville (ob. 636), Etymolog. xvi. 26. 10 (Migne Bibl. Patr. Lat. tom. 82, col. 595), we have an account of the creation agreeing with Jubilees save in one small particular. It is there shown that there were twenty-two kinds of work just as there were twenty-two generations from Adam to Jacob, twenty-two books in the OT and twenty-two letters. This account is dependent on Epiphanius. Thus it is most probable that originally mention was made in the text of the twenty-two Hebrew letters and the twenty-two books of the Bible, and so we find it actually stated by Syncellus

Chronogr. i. 5 (ed. Dind.) ὁμοῦ τὰ πάντα ἔργα εἴκοσι δύο ἰσάριθμα τοῖς εἴκοσι δύο Ἑβραϊκοῖς γράμμασι καὶ ταῖς εἴκοσι δύο Ἑβραϊκαῖς βίβλοις καὶ τοῖς ἀπὸ Ἀδὰμ ἕως Ἰακώβ εἴκοσι δύο γενεαρχίαις, ὡς ἐν λεπτῇ φέρεται Γενέσει, ἣν καὶ Μωϋσέως εἶναι φασὶ τινες ἀποκάλυψιν. This statement is reproduced verbally by Cedrenus, Compendium Histor. vol. i. 9 (ed. Bekker). Next we have the evidence of the Hebrew tradition preserved in the Midrash Tadshe vi. (quoted above, p. 11): "Twenty-two kinds of creatures were created in the universe. . . This corresponds to the twenty-two letters of the alphabet and to the twenty-two generations from Adam to Jacob." Thus we should probably restore the lacuna as follows:—As there were two and twenty letters and two and twenty (sacred) books and two and twenty heads of mankind from Adam to Jacob, so there were made two and twenty kinds of work, etc. The thirty-nine books of the Old Testament are equalised to the number of letters by the following device. The twelve minor prophets count as one book, similarly Judges and Ruth, Ezra and Nehemiah, Jeremiah and Lamentations are taken together, and the two books of Samuel, Kings and Chronicles are reckoned respectively as one each. Thus the thirty-nine are reduced to twenty-two. See Introd. § 11.

This is blessed and holy, i.e., the Sabbath.

The former also is blessed and holy, i.e., Jacob. These two, the Sabbath and Jacob, are intimately related. As the Sabbath comes at the close of the twenty-two works, so Jacob comes at the close of the twenty-second generation. Not till Jacob's time, therefore, could the Sabbath be rightly observed on earth. Moreover, the Sabbath was given to Israel alone (ii. 31).

be the blessed and holy ones of the first testimony and law, even as He had sanctified and blessed the Sabbath day on the seventh day. 25. He created heaven and earth and everything that He created in six days, and God made the seventh day holy, for all His works; therefore He commanded on its behalf that, whoever does any work thereon shall die, and that he who defiles it shall surely die. 26. Wherefore do thou command the children of Israel to observe this day that they may keep it holy and not do thereon any work, and not to defile it, as it is holier than all other days. 27. And whoever profanes it shall surely die, and whoever does thereon any work shall surely die eternally, that the children of Israel may observe this day throughout their generations, and not be rooted out of the land; for it is a holy day and a blessed day. 28. And every one who observes it and keeps Sabbath thereon from all his work, will be holy and blessed throughout all days like unto us. 29. Declare and say to the children of Israel the law of this day both that they should keep Sabbath thereon, and that they should not forsake it in the error of their hearts; (and) that it is not lawful to do any work thereon which is unseemly, to do thereon their own pleasure, and that they should not prepare thereon anything

And blessed. So a c d. b "and had been blessed."

The Sabbath day. c d. a b omit.

25. Whoever does any work thereon shall die, and that he who defiles, etc. Exod. xxxi. 14, 15. Cf. Exod. xxxv. 2; Num. xv. 32-36. See also verses 26, 27.

26. Command the children of Israel to observe this day that they may keep it holy. Exod. xx. 8, xxxi. 1.

Holier than all other days. Cf. ii. 30 where it is said to be holier than the jubilee of the jubilees; also ii. 33.

27. Whoever profanes it . . . whoever does thereon any work. See two preceding verses.

Rooted out of the land. Deut. xxix. 28.

29. It is not lawful to do any work thereon which is unseemly, to do thereon their own pleasure. In the rendering "which is unseemly" I have followed Barth and Littmann in taking za'ijekawen za'ijâstar'i as representing זָאִי־קָאֵוֶן זָאִי־אֶסְתָּרִי. See also on iii. 15. It might be better to connect the following infinitive with "unseemly" and translate "which is unseemly to do thereon, (even) their own pleasure." It is usual for זָאִי to be followed by an infinitive in this sense. Cf. Esther ii. 9; Chull. 83b; Nid. vi. 4.

Not prepare thereon anything to be to be eaten or drunk, †and (that it is not lawful) to draw water, or bring in or take out thereon through their gates any burden,† which they had not prepared for themselves on the sixth day in their dwellings. 30. And they shall not bring in nor take out from house to house on that day; for that day is more holy and blessed than any jubilee day of the jubilees: on this we kept Sabbath in the heavens before it was made known to any flesh to keep Sabbath thereon on the earth. 31. And the Creator of all things blessed it, but He did not sanctify all peoples and

And that they should not prepare thereon anything to be eaten or drunk . . . which they had not prepared for themselves on the sixth day. Cf. i. 9. It will be observed that by omitting "and (that it is not lawful) to draw water, or bring in or take out thereon through their gates any burden" an excellent sense is restored to the text. Besides, the words in question constitute a break in the grammatical construction. The words "or bring in or take out thereon through their gates any burden" look like a dittography of the first clause in ver. 30. They may, however, be genuine, and we can restore at once the sense and grammar by reading these clauses immediately after the words "their own pleasure." Thus we have: "That it is not lawful to do any work thereon which is unseemly, to do thereon their own pleasure or to draw water or bring in or take out thereon through their gates any burden. And that they should not prepare thereon anything to be eaten or drunk, which they had not prepared for themselves on the sixth day in their dwellings."

Or bring in or take out . . . any burden. The law is found in ii. 30, i. 8; Jer. xvii. 21, 22, 24, 27. Cf. Neh. xiii. 19; John v. 10; Shabb. vii. 2.

Which they had not prepared for themselves on the sixth day. This should follow immediately on the clause "anything to be eaten or drunk." Thus we have the provision enforced in Bez. 2b, that on the Sabbath day nothing should be eaten which had not been expressly prepared on a week day with a view to the Sabbath.

30. Bring in nor take out from house to house. Cf. ii. 29, i. 8; Jer. xvii. 22. Also Shabb. vii. 2, המצוי מרשות לרשות. See note on ver. 29.

On this we kept Sabbath in the heavens. Similarly it is said in vi. 18 that the feast of weeks was celebrated by the angels in heaven till the days of Noah. The writer most probably held that the other feasts were likewise observed in heaven. The sabbath and the feast of weeks, however, are the two chief feasts in the eyes of the writer. According to Ber. rabba 11 even the godless in Gehenna had rest on the Sabbath.

31. Blessed it, i.e., Israel. MSS omit "it" but we have only (with Barth and Littmann) to emend bāraka into bārakā to restore it.

He did not sanctify all . . . nations to keep Sabbath thereon, but Israel alone. Cf. ii. 19. The Sabbath was the special privilege and distinction of Israel. Hence it could not be rightly observed on earth till Jacob's time (see ii. 23 note). It was to be a special sign between God and Israel (ii. 21), as it was already a sign in heaven between nations to keep Sabbath thereon, but Israel alone: them alone He permitted to eat and drink and to keep Sabbath thereon on the earth. 32. And the Creator of all things blessed this day which He had created for a blessing and a sanctification and a glory above all days. 33. This law and testimony was given to the children of Israel as a law for ever unto their generations.

Adam names all creatures, 1-3. Creation of Eve and enactment of Levitical laws of purification, 4-14. Adam and Eve in Paradise: their sin and expulsion, 15-29. Law of covering one's shame enacted, 30, 31. Adam and Eve live in Êldâ, 32-35. (Cf. Gen. ii. 18-25, iii.).

III. And on the six days of the second week we brought, according to the word of God, unto Adam all the beasts, and all the cattle, and all the birds, and everything that moves on the earth, and everything that moves in the water, according to their kinds, and according to their types: the beasts on the first day; the cattle on the second day; the birds on the third day; and all that which moves on the earth on the fourth day; and that which moves in the water on the fifth day. 2. And Adam named them all by their respective names, and as he called them, so was their name. 3. And on these five days Adam saw all these, male and female, according to every kind that was on the earth, but he was alone and found no helpmeet for him. 4. And the Lord said unto us: "It is not good that the man should be alone: let us make a helpmeet for him." 5. And the Lord our God caused a deep sleep to fall upon him, and he slept, and He took for the woman one rib from amongst his ribs, and this rib was the origin of the woman from amongst his ribs, and He built up the flesh in its stead, and built the woman. 6. And He awaked Adam out of his sleep and on awaking he rose on the sixth day, and He brought her to him, and he knew her, and said unto her: "This is now bone of my bones and flesh of my flesh; she will be called [my] wife; because she was taken from her husband." 7. Therefore shall man and wife be one, and therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and cleave unto his wife, and they shall be one flesh. 8. In the first week was Adam created, and the rib—his wife: in the second week He showed her unto him: and for this reason the commandment was given to keep in their

5-6. Creation of woman on the 13th day of the creation. Cf. Gen. ii. 21-23. In the Targ. Jon. on Gen. ii. 21 the rib is said to have been the 13th on the right side. On the Talmudic theories as to the hermaphroditic character of Adam before the creation of Eve see Weber, Jüd. Theologie,² p. 211.

5. One rib from amongst his ribs, and this rib . . . from amongst his ribs. Text literally = "one bone from amongst his bones and this rib (or side) . . . from amongst his bones."

6. [My] wife. The "my" I have bracketed as an interpolation. It is found also in the Eth. vers. of Gen. ii. 23, but in no other important version.

Her husband (חַתָּן). So also Sam., LXX, and Onkelos against Mass., Syr., and Vulg. which omit the pronoun.

7. Cf. Gen. ii. 24.

They shall be one flesh. So also Mass. and Onkelos, but Sam. (וְהָיוּ כְּשֶׁנֶּחָד); LXX, Syr., Vulg., Ps.-Jon. = "they twain shall be one flesh." This latter is followed in Matt. xix. 5; Mark x. 7; Eph. v. 31, and seems to have the older attestation.

8. First week . . . second week. MSS read "seventh" instead of "week" in both cases. We obtain the right sense by simply emending sāb'ēt into sab'at.

8-14. Commandment was given to keep in their defilement, etc. In this passage our author either invents historical grounds or else adopts an already existing legend to account for the commands given in Lev. xii. 2-5. According to Lev. xii. 2, 5 a mother was to be unclean seven days if she bore a man child, and was not to enter the sanctuary till thirty-three days later, in all forty days; and she was to be unclean fourteen days if she bore a maid child, and was not to enter the sanctuary for sixty-six days later, in all eighty days. This law, our author says, was based on the fact that Adam was created at the close of the first week and did not enter the Garden till forty days after his creation, and Eve was created at the close of the second week and did not enter the Garden till eighty days after her creation. This peculiar idea reappears defilement, for a male seven days, and for a female twice seven days. 9. And after Adam had completed forty days in the land where he had been created, we brought him into the garden of Eden to till and keep it, but his wife they brought in on the eightieth day, and after this she entered in various works. Thus in Philo Quaest. in Gen. ii. 21 (translated by Aucher from the Armenian), where Philo is dealing with the creation of woman from the rib of the man, the text appears to recall the views of our author: Siquidem ut perfectior et (si liceat dici) duplicior est viri formatio formatione mulieris: sic etiam dimidio tempore opus habuit, diebus videlicet xl, ubi imperfectae atque, ut ita dicam, dimidia viri sectioni, scilicet mulieri, (opus esset) duplici mensura, nempe diebus lxxx. Our text was certainly before Syncellus, i. 8-9, εἰσήγαγεν ὁ Θεὸς τὸν Ἀδὰμ ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ κατὰ τὴν τεσσαρακοστὴν ἡμέραν τῆς πλάσεως αὐτοῦ. τῇ ἐνενηκοστῇ τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ τῆς κτίσεως . . . εἰσήχθη ὑπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ ἡ τοῦ Ἀδὰμ βοηθὸς Εὐὰ, ἐν τῇ ὀγδοηκοστῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῆς πλάσεως αὐτῆς . . . διὰ τοῦτο προσέταξεν ὁ θεὸς διὰ Μωϋσέως ἐν τῷ Λευιτικῷ, ἥτοι διὰ τὰς μετὰ τὴν πλάσιν τοῦ χωρισμοῦ αὐτῶν ἡμέρας ἐκ τοῦ παραδείσου, ἐπὶ μὲν ἀρρενογονίας ἀκάθαρτον αὐτὴν εἶναι ἐπὶ τεσσαράκοντα ἡμέρας, ἐπὶ δὲ θηλυτοκίας ἕως ἡμερῶν π'. ἐπειδὴ καὶ Ἀδὰμ τῇ μ' ἡμέρᾳ τῆς πλάσεως αὐτοῦ εἰσήχθη ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ, οὗ χάριν καὶ τὰ γεννώμενα τῇ τεσσαρακοστῇ ἡμέρᾳ εἰσφέρουσιν ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ κατὰ τὸν νόμον. ἐπὶ δὲ θήλεος ἀκάθαρτον εἶναι αὐτὴν ἐπὶ ἡμέρας ὀγδοήκοντα, διὰ τε τὴν ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ αὐτῆς εἰσοδὸν τῇ ὀγδοηκοστῇ ἡμέρᾳ καὶ διὰ τὸ ἀκάθαρτον τοῦ θήλεος πρὸς τὸ ἄρσεν. ἄφεδρος γὰρ πάλιν οὕσα οὐκ εἰσέρχεται ἕως ἑπτὰ ἡμέρας ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ κατὰ τὸν θεῖον νόμον. ταῦτα ἐκ τοῦ βίου λεγομένου Ἀδὰμ φιλομαθίας χάριν ἐν συντόμῳ ἐστοιχίωσα, ἐν τῷ πρώτῳ ἔτει τῆς πλάσεως τοῦ Ἀδὰμ, ἐπ' αὐτῷ τὰ πραχθέντα.

In the Book of Adam and Eve translated by Malan in 1882 from the Ethiopic we find an undoubted reminiscence of our text. Thus in i. 74 and 75 it is recounted that Adam made an offering for Cain when he was forty days old and an offering for Cain's twin sister Luluwa when she was eighty days old, when Eve and her daughter approached the altar. Anastasius Sinaita (flor. 7th cent.) in his Anagogic. contemplat. in Hexaem. (Fabricius, Cod. Pseud. V.T. ii. 83; Migne's Bibliotheca Patr. Graec. tom. 89, col. 967) is the first to refer directly to our text: Unde Hebraei ex libro qui non est redactus in canonem qui quidem dicitur Testamentum Protoplastorum, dicunt quadagesima die ingressum esse Adam in Paradisum; sicut etiam videtur cuidam historico chronographo Pyrrhoni, et quibusdam expositoribus. The Pyrrho here mentioned by Anastasius is likewise referred to by Glycas as the source of this statement. Syncellus (p. 8) is the next to use our text: εἰσήγαγεν ὁ Θεὸς τὸν Ἀδὰμ ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ κατὰ τὴν τεσσαρακοστὴν ἡμέραν τῆς πλάσεως αὐτοῦ. Subsequently Glycas (circ. 1150), in his Βιβλος Χρονική (pp. 392-393, ed. Bekker), quotes our text with disapproval: ἡ δὲ λεγομένη λεπτή Γένεσις, οὐκ οἶδ' ὅθεν συγγραφεῖσα καὶ ὅπως, φησὶν ὅτι μεθ' ἡμέρας μ' εἰσῆλθεν ὁ Ἀδὰμ εἰς τὸν παράδεισον, ἡ δὲ Εὐὰ μεθ' ἡμέρας π', καὶ τούτου χάριν ἐν ἡμέραις τοσαύταις προσάγονται τῷ νάφ τό τε ἄρρεν καὶ τὸ θῆλυ, ἀναλόγως τάχα τῷ Ἀδὰμ καὶ τῇ Εὐὰ. On p. 156 Glycas tells us that Pyrrho in his history writes that Adam did not enter the Garden of Eden till the 40th day after his creation, and then adds ἀλλ' οὐκ οἶδα ποῦ διέτριβε πρότερον ὁ Ἀδὰμ, ἔξω τοῦ παραδείσου τεσσαράκοντα διάγων ἡμέρας.

On the other hand Beer (Das Buch des Jubiläen, p. 40) points out that there is not a trace of such a legend in Rabbinic literature, and that on the contrary it is declared in Shabbath 135a (דורות הראשונים יוכיחו שאין אמו במאה לירה) (ונומל לשכנה) that the regulations in Lev. xii. 2-5 had no currency before into the garden of Eden. 10. And for this reason the commandment is written on the heavenly tables in regard to her that gives birth: "if she bears a male, she shall remain in her uncleanness seven days according to the first week of days, and thirty and three days shall she remain in the blood of her purifying, and she shall not touch any hallowed thing, nor enter into the sanctuary, until she accomplishes these days which (are enjoined) in the case of a male child. 11. But in the case of a female child she shall remain in her uncleanness two weeks of days, according to the first two weeks, and sixty-six days in the blood of her purification, and they will be in all eighty days." 12. And when she had completed these eighty days we brought her into the garden of Eden, for it is holier than all the earth besides, and every tree that is planted in it is holy. 13. Therefore, there was ordained regarding her who bears a male or a female child the statute

the legislation of Moses. Yet, notwithstanding Beer's statement, the tradition in our text is not without attestation in Judaism. Thus in the Midrash Tadshe xv. (see Jellinek's edition in his Bet ha-Midrash, iii. 164-193 or Eppstein in Beiträge zur jüd. Alterthumskunde, 1887), "Why did the Holy One, blessed be He, ordain seven days of purification for a woman who had borne a male child and fourteen days for her who had borne a female? This is to recall the creation of the first Adam who was created in seven days †in the first† of the first week, (and) the creation of Eve, who was taken from one of his ribs in the second week. So Pinchas ben Jair (פנחס בן יאיר). The sages however say that both were created on the eve of the Sabbath, the sixth day. Wherefore did the Holy One, blessed be He, ordain that she who had borne a male should enter the temple after forty days, and that she who had borne a female after eighty days? To recall that which God did regarding the first Adam who was created outside the Garden of Eden and did not enter till later."

We observe here that the above statements are attributed to Pinchas. They go back ultimately to our text. As references to Pinchas, Eppstein (Revue des Études juives, xxi. 92, 1890) mentions Chullin 7 b, Kethuboth 46 a, Sota 49 a, Ber. rabba 60.

10. The heavenly tables: In my note on xlvii. 3 of the Eth. Enoch I have touched on the origin and development of the idea underlying this expression, and to this I must refer the reader. The phrase is found in the Eth. Enoch xlvii. 3, lxxxi. 1, 2, xciii. 2, ciii. 2, Test. XII. Patriarch. Levi v.; Asher. ii., vii. The conception is not a hard and fixed one: in Enoch and Test. XII. Patriarch. it wavers between an absolute determinism and prediction pure and simple: whereas in our text, in addition to these significations, it implies at times little more than a contemporary heavenly record of events. In fact, in our author, the heavenly tables are the divine statute book of the Theocracy of which the Mosaic law is the reproduction on earth, or a mere contemporary record of events, or finally they recount the

of those days that she should touch no hallowed thing, nor enter into the sanctuary until these days for the male or female child are accomplished. 14. This is the law and testimony which was written down for Israel, in order that they should observe (it) all the days. 15. And in the first week of the first jubilee, Adam and his wife were in the ^{1-7 A.M.} garden of Eden for seven years tilling and keeping it, and we gave him work and we instructed him to do everything that is suitable for tillage. 16. And he tilled (the garden), and was naked and knew it not, and was not ashamed, and he protected the garden from the birds and beasts and cattle, and gathered its fruit, and eat, and put aside the residue for himself and for his wife [and put aside that which was being future history of the world either predictively or else determinatively. One meaning, moreover, passes imperceptibly into another. Thus those tables record: (1) Laws levitical, criminal, and chronological, in some instances predetermined and previously observed in heaven, in others established for the first time on earth: purification after childbirth, iii. 8-14; law as to covering one's nakedness, iii. 31; as to murder and those who witness it, iv. 5; as to retribution, iv. 32; as to the judgment of sinners, v. 13; as to the feast of weeks, vi. 17 and the divisions and length of the year, vi. 29-35; as to circumcision, xv. 25-26; as to the seed of Lot, xvi. 9 and the feast of tabernacles, xvi. 29; as to the feast of the lord, xviii. 19; as to the Philistines, xxiv. 33; as to the marriage of the elder daughter, xxviii. 6; as to the man who gives his daughter to a Gentile, xxx. 9; as to tithes, xxxii. 15; as to the incestuous person, xxxiii. 10; as to the Sabbath, l. 13. (2) Merely a contemporary event: the naming of Abraham as a friend of God, xiv. 9, and of Levi, xxx. 20; Isaac's blessing of Levi and Judah, xxxi. 32. (3) Predictions and predeterminations: as to the judgment, v. 13; as to the Messianic kingdom, xxiii. 32.

15. Seven years. According to Ber. rabba 18, Sanh. 38*b*, and Die Schatzhöhle, p. 7 (translated by Bezold),

Adam was only six hours in the Garden. MS a of the Slavonic Enoch xxxii. 2 states that Adam was only five and a half hours in Paradise. This last clause looks like a Christian interpolation, and may point to the 5500 years which were to elapse before the coming of Christ according to the early Fathers.

Instructed him . . . for tillage. In Is. xxviii. 26-29 this instruction is attributed to God; but in Ber. rabba 24 it is assigned, as in our text, to the angels: also in the Life of Adam and Eve, 22 (Kautzsch, Apoc. und Pseud. ii. 515) it is stated that God sent Michael with certain seeds to Adam, and with orders to instruct him in husbandry.

Is suitable. So Barth and Littmann take zajâstar'î as representing זָאָר in the Hebrew. See on ii. 29. But the ordinary sense of the word, "is revealed," may be right here. See preceding note.

16. Naked . . . and was not ashamed. Gen. ii. 25.

Protected the garden from the birds, etc. The Greek is found in Glycas (p. 206, ed. Bekker): ὁ Ἀδὰμ ἀπεσώβει τὰ πετεινὰ καὶ ἐρπετά, συνῆγε τὸν καρπὸν ἐν παραδείσῳ καὶ σὺν τῇ γυναικὶ αὐτοῦ ἤσθιεν αὐτόν.

[And put aside . . . kept]. Bracketed as a dittography. Here "which was being kept" = τὸ φυλασσόμενον = תְּשׁוּבָה הַשְּׂמֵרָה, a corrupt dittography of תְּשׁוּבָה הַשְּׂמֵרָה = τὸ καταλειφθέν, "the residue" (or הַנִּשְׁמָר of הנשאר).

kept]. 17. And after the completion of the seven years, which he had completed there, seven years exactly, and in 8 A.M. the second month, on the seventeenth day (of the month), the serpent came and approached the woman, and the serpent said to the woman, "Hath God commanded you, saying, Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden?" 18. And she said to it, "Of all the fruit of the trees of the garden God hath said unto us, Eat; but of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden God hath said unto us, Ye shall not eat thereof, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die." 19. And the serpent said unto the woman, "Ye shall not surely die: for God doth know that on the day ye shall eat thereof, your eyes will be opened, and ye will be as gods, and ye will know good and evil." 20. And the woman saw the tree that it was agreeable and pleasant to the eye, and that its fruit was good for food, and she took thereof and eat. 21. And when she had first covered her shame with fig-leaves, she gave thereof to Adam and he eat, and his eyes were opened, and he saw that he was naked. 22. And he took fig-leaves and sewed (them) together, and made an apron for himself, and covered his shame. 23. And God cursed the serpent, and was wroth with it for ever. . . . 24. And He was wroth with the woman, because she hearkened to the

19. See on ver. 32. Cf. Syncellus i. 13: 'Εκ τῶν λεπτῶν Γενέσεως: τῷ ἐβδόμῳ ἔτει παρέβη καὶ τῷ ὀγδόῳ ἐξερρίφησαν τοῦ παραδείσου, ὡς φησι, μετὰ τεσσαράκοντα πέντε ἡμέρας τῆς παραβάσεως, . . .

23. Cf. Gen. iii. 14. At the close of this verse I have marked a lacuna in the text; for Glycas (p. 206) affirms that according to Jubilees the serpent had originally four feet: ὁ ὄφης ἀπὸ κτήνους ἐρπετὸν ἐγένετο, χεῖράς τε καὶ πόδας ἐκέκτητο. ἀφηρέθη δὲ ταῦτα διὰ τὸ τολμῆρῶς εἰς τὸν παράδεισον εἰσελθεῖν. Syncellus (i. 14) states that the serpent had originally four feet. The text, therefore, most probably contained some statement relative to the cutting off of the serpent's feet. Such a statement would follow naturally on Gen. iii. 14 "upon thy belly thou shalt go." Indeed in the Targ., Ps.-Jon., Gen. iii. 14 we find this very statement גלגל יצאנה, "and thy feet will be cut off." According to the Midrash Koheleth "the ministering angels came down and and cut off its hands and feet." Finally Josephus (Ant. i. 1. 4) writes that the serpent was deprived both of language and feet, ἀφείλετο δὲ καὶ τὸν ὄφιν τὴν φωνὴν . . . ποδῶν τε αὐτὸν ἀποστερήσας σύρεσθαι κατὰ τῆς γῆς ἰλυσπώμενον ἐποίησε.

voice of the serpent, and did eat; and He said unto her: "I shall greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy pains: in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children, and thy return shall be unto thy husband, and he will rule over thee." 25. And to Adam also He said, "Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee that thou shouldst not eat thereof, cursed be the ground for thy sake: thorns and thistles shall it bring forth to thee, and thou shalt eat thy bread in the sweat of thy face, till thou returnest to the earth from whence thou wast taken; for earth thou art, and unto earth shalt thou return." 26. And He made for them coats of skin, and clothed them, and sent them forth from the Garden of Eden. 27. And on that day on which Adam went forth from the Garden, he offered as a sweet savour an offering, frankincense, galbanum, and stacte, and spices in the morning with the rising of the sun from the day when he covered his shame. 28. And on that day was closed the mouth of all beasts, and of cattle, and of birds, and of whatever walks, and of whatever moves, so that they could no longer speak: for they had all spoken one with another with one lip and with one tongue. 29. And He

Thy pains. So also LXX, but Mass., Sam., Syr., and Vulg. = "thy conception" (הריון).

Thy return = ἡ ἀποστροφή σου. So also LXX and Syr. = תשובתך instead of Mass. and Sam. תשוקתך = "they desire."

25-26. Gen. iii. 17-19, 21, 24.

25. Of the tree = ἀπὸ τοῦ ξύλου. The text is "of that tree," but the demonstrative is a rendering of the Greek art. as frequently.

Thy bread. So LXX, but Mass., Sam., Syr., Vulg. omit "thy."

To the earth . . . for earth . . . unto earth. As LXX uses γῆ to render the two Hebrew words ארמה and עפר, so did the Greek version of Jubilees.

27. Here the writer antedates the incense-offering mentioned in Exod. xxx. 34. According to Aboda zara 8a Adam offered an ox whose horns were of earlier growth than its hoof (Beer, Buch der Jub. p. 40).

From the day when he covered his shame. Exod. xx. 26, xxviii. 42, where the priests are bidden to cover their nakedness with breeches when at the altar, may have been in the mind of the writer, as Beer (op. cit. p. 41) suggests.

28. This was undoubtedly a current belief among certain sections of the Jews. Thus it is stated without question in Joseph. Ant. i. 1. 4 ὁμοφωνοῦντων δὲ κατ' ἐκείνο καιροῦ τῶν ζώων πάντων. It appears also in the Book of Adam and Eve i. 18 and in

sent out of the Garden of Eden all flesh that was in the Garden of Eden, and all flesh was scattered according to its kinds, and according to its types unto the places which had been created for them. 30. And to Adam alone did some form is implied in Philo, Quaest. in Gen. i. 32 (Armen.). Both our text and Josephus are quoted as teaching this view in Syncellus, i. 14, τὰ θηρία καὶ τὰ τετράποδα καὶ τὰ ἔρπετα φησὶν ὁ Ἰώσηππος καὶ ἡ Λεπτὴ Γένεσις ὁμόφωνα εἶναι πρὸ τῆς παραβάσεως τοῖς πρωτοπλάστοις. This statement is repeated in Cedrenus, i. pp. 9-10; Zonaras, i. p. 23. It seems implied in the text that the common original language of men and animals was Hebrew. That Hebrew was the primitive language of man, at any rate, was universally believed among the Jews. Thus according to the Jerusalem Targum on Gen. xi. 1 all men originally spoke Hebrew, which was the language by means of which the world was created: בְּלִשָּׁן קִדְשָׁא הָיוּ כִּמְלִלִין קִדְשָׁא בִּיהַ עֲלָמָא. (Cf. also Ber. rabba 18, 31.) In xii. 25, 26 of our text it is called "the tongue of the creation," which "had ceased from the mouths of all the children of men from the day of the overthrow (of Babel)" till the days of Abraham. In Cedrenus, i. 22, however, the legend is differently preserved. Because Eber refused to join in building Babel he did not lose his original language—the language that Adam spoke—like the rest of his contemporaries—τῆς τῶν ἄλλων φωνῆς συγχέσεως ἢ τοῦ "Ἐβερ οὐκ ἀπώλετο. αὕτη δὲ ἐστὶν ἣ καὶ Ἀδὰμ ἐλάλει. Hence his descendants called themselves Hebrews and their language Hebrew, and the names of the patriarchs are a proof that Hebrew was the pre-Babel language—καὶ ταύτην οἱ τοῦτον διαδεξάμενοι ἀπόγονοι πατρωνιμικῶς εἰπὺς τοῖς Ἑβραίοις προσηγόρευσαν καὶ Ἑβραῖδα τὴν φωνὴν ἐκάλεσαν. τεκμήριον δὲ ταύτην εἶναι τὴν πρὸ τῆς συγχύσεως φωνὴν τὰ τῶν παλαιῶν ὀνόματα. This view is likewise Jewish: it is found in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel, xxxviii. 11. But while some Syriac writers such as John bar Madani and Jacob of Serugh admitted this claim, others like Theodoret, Quaest. in

Gen. lx.-lxi., St. Ephraem, and Barhebraeus (see Assemani, Bibl. Or. iii. 313, 314) were just as confident of the absolute priority of their own language, while Solomon Baisorensis reconciled both views by declaring that originally Syriac and Hebrew were one and the same.

In Die Schatzhöhle (transl. by Bezold), p. 29, the priority of Syriac is polemically maintained: "Von Adam his damals redeten sie alle in dieser Sprache, nämlich in der syrischen Sprache . . . denn diese Sprache ist die Königin aller Sprachen. Die früheren Schriftsteller aber irren, indem sie sagen, das Hebräische sei die erste gewesen."

Other writers again asserted that Greek was the primitive speech of mankind. To this last view Eutychius (Nazam, al.-j. pp. 53, 54, quoted by Malan, Book of Adam and Eve, pp. 245, 6) assents in these words. "This approves itself to me. For the Greek language is wiser, clearer and broader than either the Hebrew or the Syriac." The same view must have been held by the writer who first derived the name Adam from the initial letters of the Greek names of the four quarters of the world—ἀνατολή, δύσις, ἄρκτος, μεσημβρία. See Slav. En. xxx. 13 (note); Or. Sibyll. iii. 24-26. As for later Jewish ideas on this subject we find, Sanh. 38 b, that Adam spoke Aramaic, אַרַם, הראשון בלשון ארמי, because Ps. cxxxix., which was supposed to be written by him, contained an Aramaic (?) word. In Shabb. 12^b on the other hand one is bidden not to pray in Aramaic, שאין בלאמי השתה כסרין בלשון ארבי, because the angels of Service do not understand Aramaic (quoted in Levi's Neuhebr. u. chald. Wörterbuch, i. 168). According to Abarbanel, in his exposition of Zephaniah, fol. 276, col. 1 (see Eisenmenger, ii. 778), Hebrew was the language spoken before the building of Babel and should ultimately be that of all Israelites.

He give (the wherewithal) to cover his shame, of all the beasts and cattle. 31. On this account, it is prescribed on the heavenly tables as touching all those who know the judgment of the law, that they should cover their shame, and should not uncover themselves as the Gentiles uncover themselves. 32. And on the new moon of the fourth ^{8 A.M.} month, Adam and his wife went forth from the Garden of Eden, and they dwelt in the land of 'Êldâ, in the land of their creation. 33. And Adam called the name of his wife Eve. 34. And they had no son till the first jubilee, and after this he knew her. 35. Now he tilled the land as he had been instructed in the Garden of Eden.

31. This verse is of great importance from the historical standpoint. It constitutes an emphatic protest on the part of the writer against the adoption by his countrymen ("those who know the judgment of the law") of the customs of the Greeks. The custom, which he here protests against, is the exposure of the person in the Greek palaestra, which was established under the very citadel of David (2 Macc. iv. 12). Here many of the Jewish youths completely stripped themselves and joined in the public sports as Greek athletes. Even the priests of the Temple forsook their duties to join in these heathen games. On the institution of these and other Greek customs see 1 Macc. i. 13, 14; 2 Macc. iv. 9-14; Jos. Ant. xii. 5. 1. It is hardly possible to conceive the shock that such conduct must have given to the religiously disposed amongst the nation, and especially to such a Pharisee of the Pharisees as our author. In order to emphasise his protest against it he did not turn to the laws in Exod. xx. 26, xxx. 34, for these had only to do with the dress of the officiating priest, but to Gen. iii. 21 where he found ample justification for extending the law of covering one's shame to all men. This law, he asserts, was enacted immediately after the expulsion of Adam from Eden, i.e., immediately after the discovery of his nakedness. Subsequently (vii. 20) he represents Noah as enjoining the observance of this ordinance on his children.

32. On the new moon of the fourth month (see note on vi. 23). Syncellus (i. p. 13) says that Adam spent forty-five days in the garden after his transgression. This agrees with our text; for, according to iii. 17, Adam sinned on the 17th of the 2nd month and the expulsion followed on the 1st of the 4th.

In the land of 'Êldâ, in the land of their creation. Can 'Êldâ be a corruption of מולדה? In that case "land of 'Êldâ" would mean "land of nativity." The phrase "land of their creation" is an interpretation of the words in Gen. iii. 23 "whence he was taken," which are reproduced in Onkelos and Ps.-Jon. as "whence he was created" (אֲתַכְרִי), as in our text.

34. Thus Eve was a virgin till after the expulsion from Eden. Cf. Die Schatzhöhle (ed. Bezold, 1883), p. 7: Als Adam und Heva aus dem Paradies herausgegangen . . . sie waren jungfräulich.

IV. 1. 'Âwân. A second daughter named 'Azûrâ (iv. 8) was born later. Cain married the elder 'Âwân, i.e. אָוָן, "wickedness," and Seth the younger, 'Azûrâ. The derivation of the latter is doubtful. Frankel (Monatsschrift f. Gesch. des Judenthums, 1856, 311-316) thinks that it is from עֲזוּרָה = "chaste" (?). Probably it is from אֲזוּרָה, "well guarded" (cf. Syriac Fragment |;וי|). No two of later writers agree as to the forms of these names. According to the Syriac Fragment they were Aswa and Azura: in Epiphanius, Σανή and 'Αζουρά: in Syncellus, 'Ασαννᾶν ('Ασαννά, 'Ασανπᾶν, 'Ασανπά, 'Ασανάμ) and 'Αζουρά. In Glycas and Joel 'Αζουρά ('Αζουρᾶν) is made the elder and 'Ασανάμ the younger. Quite different names are given in the Pseudo-Methodius, i.e., Καλημέρα and Λεβόρα. Again the elder appears as Qalmana in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel and Pseudo-Methodius (Lat. vers.), as Luva in the Book of Adam and Eve, as Azrun in Eutychius, while the younger is Lebuda in Barhebraeus, Aklejâm in the Book of Adam and Eve, and Owain or Laphura in Eutychius. (See Rönsch,

pp. 373-374, Fabricius, Cod. Pseud. V.T. i. 109 sqq.)

According to Syncellus (i. 14) Cain was born in the year 70 A.M., Abel in 77, and Asouam (i.e. 'Âwân) in 85. Though the dates are left indefinite in our text they are no doubt derived from it. Thus Cain married Âwân in the year 135 according to Syncellus, between 134-140 according to our text. 'Âwân was then fifty years old (Syncellus).

2-3. Cf. Gen. iv. 4, 5, 8, 10.

2. The sacrifice of Abel. So a. b c d read "the sacrifice at his hand."

Of Cain. So a. b c d "at the hand of Cain."

3. Complaining or "making suit." Cf. Gen. iv. 10; Eth. Enoch xxii. 5, 6. According to Syncellus (i. 14) Abel was twenty-two years old when he offered his sacrifice on the new moon of the seventh month. Thus the words "in the first of the third jubilee" are to be taken as the first year of the jubilee = 99 A.M. For the later traditions as to the instrument with which Cain slew Abel, see Fabricius, Cod. Pseud. V.T. i. 113.

and he made him a fugitive on the earth because of the blood of his brother, and he cursed him upon the earth.

5. And on this account it is written on the heavenly tables, "Cursed is he who smites his neighbour treacherously, and let all who have seen and heard say, So be it; and the man who has seen and not declared (it), let him be accursed as the other." 6. And for this reason we announce when we come before the Lord our God all the sin which is committed in heaven and on earth, and in light and in darkness, and everywhere. 7. And Adam and his wife mourned for Abel four weeks of years, and in the fourth year of the fifth week (99-127) they became joyful, and Adam knew his wife again, and she 130 A.M. bare him a son, and he called his name Seth; for he said

"God has raised up a second seed unto us on the earth instead of Abel; for Cain slew him." 8. And in the sixth week he begat his daughter 'Azûrâ. 9. And Cain took 134-140 A.M. 'Âwân his sister to be his wife and she bare him Enoch at the close of the fourth jubilee. And in the first year of the 190-196 A.M. first week of the fifth jubilee, houses were built on the earth, 197 A.M. and Cain built a city, and called its name after the name of

5. Cf. Deut. xxvii. 24. Treacherously = δόλφ, the LXX rendering of בְּסֵתֶר in Deut. xxvii. 24. The phrase ba'ekûj bears the same meaning in xxix. 7, xxx. 3. In viii. 9 it = "secretly."

6. Sin . . . committed in heaven. On this old Semitic idea of the possibility of sin in heaven, see my Slavonic Enoch pp. xxxiv. sqq.

7. Mourned for Abel four weeks of years. As Abel was born in 77, and was twenty-two years old according to Syncellus and our text (see verse 3, note) when killed by Cain, the twenty-eight years of mourning extend from 99 to 127. The Greek is found in Syncellus (i. 15): ἐπένθησαν αὐτὸν οἱ πρωτόπλαστοι ἐβδομαδικούς τέσσαρας, ἡγουν ἔτη εἰκοσι ὀκτώ.

Became joyful. The sense may be the same as in Gen. xviii. 12, "After I am waxed old, shall I have pleasure?"

He called. So Sam. ויקרא, but Mass., LXX, Syr., Onk., of Gen. iv. 25 read "she called." In Jubilees it is generally the father that names the child; whereas in J of Genesis it is the mother, except in iv. 26, v. 29, xxv. 25, 26; Exod. ii. 22.

For he said. So LXX and Vulg. but wanting in Mass. and Sam.

8. 'Azûrâ. See note on iv. 1. 'Azûrâ was born in the sixth week of the third jubilee (134-140) or of the fourth (183-189).

9. Bare him Enoch, etc. Cf. Gen. iv. 17. Syncellus (i. 16) ascribes to this Enoch the invention of the plough.

Cain built a city, and called its name . . . Enoch. Cain therefore ceased to be a wanderer. The Book of Jashar, 96, plays on the name Enoch and gives his son Enoch. 10. And Adam knew Eve his wife and she bare yet nine sons. 11. And in the fifth week of the fifth jubilee Seth took 'Azûrâ his sister to be his wife, and in the fourth (year of the sixth week) she bare him Enos. 12. He began to call on the name of the Lord on the earth. 13. And in the seventh jubilee in the third week Enos it the sense of rest in this connection. ויקרא את שם העיר חנוך בשם בנו כי הנח לו יי בארץ בימים ההם.

10. Yet nine sons. Reproduced in Epiphanius, Haer. xxxix. 6 (vol. I. i. 528: ed. Oehler): Γεγονάσι δὲ τῷ Ἀδὰμ καὶ ἄλλοι υἱοί, ὡς ἡ λεπτή Γένεσις περιέχει, ἐννέα μετὰ τοὺς τρεῖς τοὺτους ὡς εἶναι αὐτῷ οὓς μὲν θυγατέρας, ἄρρενας δὲ δεκάδύο. The Book of Jashar speaks of three sons and three daughters of Adam. Syncellus (i. 18) assigns to him thirty-three sons and twenty-seven daughters. Ps.-Philo, Ant. bibl. Lib. p. 41, gives the names of these sons: Acliseel, Suris, Aclamiel, Brabal, Naalt, Harama, Zasam, Maathal, Anath.

11. Cf. Gen. iv. 26. Fourth (year of the sixth week). The lacuna here is supplied from Syncellus. According to Syncellus (i. 17) Seth marries in the year υκέ (= 425), and Enos was born in the year υλέ (= 435). Thus there was an interval of ten years between the marriage of Seth and the birth of Enos. It will be observed that there is a difference of 200 years between the dates assigned by Jubilees and those by Syncellus, and that in the following ten dates relating to the same events respectively both books agree in the tens and units but differ in the hundreds.

	According to Jubilees.	According to Syncellus.
Seth born .	130	230
Azûrâ born .	134	234
Seth marries
Azûrâ .	225	425
Enos born .	235	435
Cainan born .	325	625
Cain marries
Mûalêlêt .	390	790
Mahalalel born	395	795
Jared born .	461	960
Enoch born .	522	1122

This addition of centuries to the dates in Jubilees rising progressively from one to six Syncellus carried out in the service of his chronological system (see Rönsch, 285 sq.).

12. He began. So LXX and Vulg. implying לָקַח.

Began to call, etc. The two great versions, the LXX and Syr., agree rightly with Jubilees in giving this sense to Gen. iv. 26. It was also so understood by Josephus, Ant. i. 3. 1, but when we come down to Jerome's time, most Jewish scholars held that the verse recounted the rise of idolatry (Quaest. in Gen. iv. 26: Tunc initium fuit invocandi nomen Domini, licet plerique Hebraeorum aliud arbitrentur, quod tunc primum in nomine Domini et in similitudine ejus fabricata sint idola). This latter interpretation may have arisen as early as the first cent. A.D.; for it is found in Onkelos ("the children of men ceased praying"—אֲנָשִׁים . . . לֹא קָרְאוּ). By Ps.-Jon. the commencement of idolatry is derived from Gen. iv. 26 by taking קָרַח as = profanari. Ber. rabba 23 recounts that men were exposed to demons in the days of Enos, and that then for the first time they made for themselves idols. Shabbath 118b speaks of man committing idolatry like Enos. The same idea recurs in the Book of Jashar and a closely related one in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel, xxiv. 9, xxvi. 20. Yet even in this book traces of the older view survive; for astrology, divination and idolatry are assigned to Serug's days, though Serug and his sons are said to have had no part in these things (xxvii. 9). Indeed, in the Book of Jashar (Migne, Dict. des Apocr. ii. 1090), it is said that Seth called his son Enos because "men began to corrupt themselves and forsake God for idols."

13-15. Enos, Kenan, Mahalalel, Jared.

And 449-455 A.M. in the second week of the tenth jubilee Mahalalel took unto him to wife Dînâh, the daughter of Barâkî'êl the daughter of his father's brother, and she bare him a son in the third week in the sixth year, and he called his name Jared; for 461 A.M. in his days the angels of the Lord descended on the earth,

Took unto him to wife . . . the daughter of his father's brother. It will be observed that from the descent of the angels onwards men cease to marry their sisters. Epiphanius (Haer. xxxix. 7) remarks: πλατυνθέντων δὲ τῶν ἀνθρώπων . . . λοιπὸν οὐκέτι τὰς αὐτῶν ἀδελφὰς πρὸς γάμον ἤγοντο, ἀλλὰ εἰς εὐνομίαν κατέστη καὶ πρὸ τοῦ διὰ Μωϋσέως ἐγγράφου νόμου ὁ κατὰ τὸν σεμνὸν γάμον θεσμός, καὶ ἐκ τῶν πατραδέλφων αὐτῶν τὰς γαμετὰς ἑαυτῶν ἤγοντο. The last clause appears, as Rönisch (p. 254) has already remarked, to be taken from Jubilees. This book is cited by Epiphanius in the preceding chapter under its twofold name of Ἰωβηλαῖα and Λεπτογένεσις.

Father's brother. MSS read 'êhta 'abûhû = "father's sister"; but I have emended this into 'êhwa 'abûhû, since we find the latter in the Syriac Fragment and in the Greek MS r on Gen. v. 15 (πατραδέλφου αὐτοῦ) and Epiphanius, Haer. xxxix. 7: εἰς εὐνομίαν κατέστη καὶ πρὸ τοῦ διὰ Μωϋσέως ἐγγράφου νόμου ὁ κατὰ τὸν σεμνὸν γάμον θεσμός, καὶ ἐκ τῶν πατραδέλφων αὐτῶν τὰς γαμετὰς ἑαυτῶν ἤγοντο. In similar cases in the sequel the same emendation is made on the authority of the Syriac and Greek, save in viii. 6 and xi. 7 where the Ethiopic preserves the true text.

Jared; for in his days the angels of the Lord descended. We have here a play on Jared's name in the original, ירד . . . בי במיומלאכי אלפים ירדו.

The angels of the Lord descended on the earth. The later Jewish form of the myth relating to the fall of the angels and their intercourse with the daughters of men is constructed on Gen. vi. 1-4 and Is. xxiv. 21. The true interpretation of Gen. vi. 1-4 is undoubtedly that given in our text, the Enoch literature, Testaments of the XII. Patriarchs, Philo, Jude, Peter, Josephus, Justin Martyr, and most of the early Christian writers (see my Eth. Enoch vi. 2, note). But probably at the close of the first cent. A.D., or earlier, Jewish scholars protested against this interpretation. Thus (Ber. rabba 26) R. ben Jochai (early in second cent.) cursed any one who translated Gen. vi. 2 by the phrase "sons of God," and not "sons of the judges." Similarly, the Jew Trypho condemns this interpretation, Justin, Dial. c. Tryph. 79. In the Samaritan Version (בני שלמניה), and the Targum of Onkelos (בני רברביא), and Symmachus (υἱοὶ τῶν δυναστευόντων) we have it rendered as = "sons of the mighty." In the Book of Jasher (Dict. des Apocr. ii. 1097) the sons of God were "judges and magistrates." In the Ps.-Jon. on Gen. vi. 2 we have both interpretations side by side, and also in the

those who are named the Watchers, that they should instruct the children of men, and that they should do

Chronicles of Jerahmeel, xxiv. 11-xxv. 8. Ps.-Philo, Ant. bibl. Lib. p. 42, gives simply the biblical words. Similarly, on the Christian side the traditional interpretation came in due time to be denounced, and "the sons of God" were taken to be the good amongst mankind, the descendants of Seth, and the daughters of men to be the descendants of Cain. So Julius Africanus: οἱ ἀπὸ τοῦ Σῆθ δίκαιοι (see below). Next, while Hilary (ob. 368), Comment. in Ps. cxxxii., contents himself with discrediting the old myth, Chrysostom, Homil. in Gen. vi. 1, says that it is necessary to examine this passage carefully in order to subvert the fables of thoughtless praters—ἀναγκαῖον τούτου τοῦ χωρίου πολλὴν τὴν ἐρευναν ποιήσασθαι καὶ ἀναστρέψαι τὰς μυθολογίας τῶν ἀπερισκέπτως πάντα φθεγγομένων. These fables rest on a false exegesis; for, as he proceeds to show, the sons of God were the posterity of Seth and Enos—οἱ ἀπὸ τοῦ Σῆθ καὶ τοῦ Ἐνὼς. Jerome, Comment. in Ps. cxxxii., and Augustine, De Civ. Dei, xv. 23. 4, pour discredit and contempt on the old myth. Now concurrently with the increasing acceptance of the new interpretation, there necessarily set in the growing importance of Seth, the ancestor of the righteous generations described in Gen. vi. 1-4 as "the sons of God." In this process of glorification the superhuman achievements and characteristics originally connected with other names were gradually transferred to Seth, and this notably in the case of Enoch. Thus in consequence of this new exegesis the star of Enoch paled before that of Seth. In dealing with such literature this is an important fact, since we are thus frequently justified in applying to Enoch the statements of later Christian writers regarding Seth. We shall now show how subordinate the figure of Enoch becomes in later writers, while the glorification of Seth proceeds apace. First of all in Africanus, who lived about the beginning of the third cent., we have, so far as I am aware, the first occurrence amongst Christians of the new exegesis of Gen. vi. 1-4. He adds, it is true, the old view, but he does not approve of it.

His exposition is given in Syncellus (i. 34 sq.): πλῆθους ἀνθρώπων γενομένου ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς ἄγγελοι τοῦ οὐρανοῦ θυγατράσιν ἀνθρώπων συνῆλθον. ἐν ἐνόιοις ἀντιγράφοις εὗρον, οἱ υἱοὶ τοῦ θεοῦ. μυθεύεται δέ, ὡς οἶμαι, ἀπὸ τοῦ Σῆθ, ὑπὸ τοῦ πνεύματος οἱ υἱοὶ θεοῦ προσαγορεύονται, διὰ τοὺς ἀπ' αὐτοῦ γενεαλογουμένους δικαίους τε καὶ πατριάρχας ἀχρὶ τοῦ Σωτήρος. τοὺς δ' ἀπὸ Καὶν ἀνθρώπων ἀποκαλεῖ σποράν, ὡς οὐδέ τι θείον ἐσχηκότας διὰ πονηρίαν γένους. . . . εἰ δὲ ἐπ' ἀγγέλων νοοῖτο ἔχειν τούτους, τῶν περὶ μαγείας καὶ γοητείας. . . . ταῖς γυναῖξιν τὴν γνώσιν παραδεδωκέναι, ἀφ' ὧν ἐποίησαντο παῖδας τοὺς γίγαντας. (Cf. also i. 16 sq.) When we pass from this writer to the sixth cent. Book of Adam and Eve, we find that the new interpretation has ousted the old from the field. Thus the Watchers are throughout described as the sons of Seth, and in Book III. chap. iv. the question is discussed at length: the wise men who said that angels had come down from heaven and mingled with the daughters of men had erred: such actions, moreover, were impossible for spiritual beings. These "angels of God" were the children of Seth who were thus designated so long as they preserved their virginity, their innocence and their glory. But they transgressed and mingled with the daughters of Cain. It is observable that whereas Seth is an extraordinary and superhuman personage in this work, there is nothing notable said of Enoch save that "he wrote a celebrated book" and that "many wonders happened to him . . . but those wonders may not be told in this place." For the same view as to the Watchers, see Die Schatzhöhle, pp. 8-10. Our next illustration consists of an anonymous extract prefixed to the works of Malala (circa 600), quoted by Fabricius, i. 151: ὁ δὲ Ἀδὰμ σ' ἔτῳ ἦν ὅτε ἐγέννησε τὸν Σῆθ' οὗτος ὁ Σῆθ πρῶτος ἐξεῦρεν γράμματα Ἑβραϊκὰ καὶ σοφίαν καὶ τὰ σημεῖα τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καὶ τὰς τροπὰς τῶν ἐνιαυτῶν καὶ τοὺς μῆνας καὶ τὰς ἐβδομάδας καὶ τοὺς ἀστροὺς ἐπέθηκεν ὀνόματα καὶ τοὺς πέντε πλανήταις εἰς τὸ γνωρίζεσθαι ὑπὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων

καὶ μόνον, καὶ τὸν μὲν α' πλανήτην ἀστέρα ἐκάλεσε Κρόνον, τὸν δὲ β' Δία, τὸν δὲ γ' Ἄρεα, τὸν δὲ δ' Ἀφροδίτην, τὸν δὲ ε' Ἑρμῆν. τοὺς γὰρ δύο φωστῆρας ἥλιον καὶ σελήνην ὁ θεὸς ἐκάλεσε. These words form on the whole a reasonable description of the achievements assigned to Enoch in the two books of Enoch, in Jubilees, and the early Christian writers. They are found verbatim in the Chronography of Joel, p. 3 (ed. Bekker, 1836). Next, in the Annals of Eutychius, Patriarch of Alexandria (933-939 A.D.), written in Arabic and translated by Pococke (Migne, tom. 111 col. 913), a vigorous protest is made against the old myth: qui autem errant neque sciunt quid dicant aiunt angelos descendisse ad filias hominum, cum intelligendi sint filii Sethi qui a monte sancto ad filias Caini maledicti descenderunt: Sethiadae enim ob sanctitatem suam et quod montem sanctum incoherent, appellati sunt Bani Elohim, i.e., filii Dei. Similar statements are made in the Chronikon Paschale, i. pp. 38, 39 (ed. Dindorf, 1832). In Syncellus (circa 800 A.D.), i. 17, 19 the now prevailing interpretation of Gen. vi. 1-4 is repeated. The descendants of Seth were pious and beautiful, and they lived in the heights over against Paradise according to the command of Adam, but were later seduced through love of the daughters of men (p. 17). Thereupon Syncellus cites Gen. vi. 1. Again, on p. 19 he writes that two hundred Watchers of the posterity of Seth were seduced and descended and took them wives, etc.—οἱ δὲ ἐκ γένους αὐτοῦ (Σήθ) διακόσιοι ἐγρήγοροι . . . πλανηθέντες κατέβησαν, καὶ ἔλαβον ἑαυτοῖς γυναῖκας, κ.τ.λ. These statements, first made in Eth. En. vi. 4-6, regarding the two hundred angels are here transferred to Seth, though Syncellus was perfectly aware of their original bearing; for in the next paragraph he actually cites this chapter of the Eth. En. Again, on pp. 16-17 Seth, just as formerly Enoch, is said to have been carried off by the angels and to have received a revelation regarding the future fall of the Watchers and the Deluge—ὁ Σήθ ἀρπαγείς ὑπὸ ἀγγέλων ἐμνήθη τὰ περὶ τῆς παραβάσεως μέλλοντα ἔσεσθαι τῶν ἐγρηγόρων καὶ τὰ περὶ κατακλυσμοῦ τοῦ ὕδατος ἐσομένου . . . καὶ γενόμενος ἄφαντος ἡμέρας μ' ἐλθὼν ἐξηγήσατο τοῖς πρωτοπλάστοις ὅσα ἐμνήθη δι' ἀγγέλων. This is an exact account of what was originally attributed to Enoch. In the Synopsis of Cedrenus (eleventh cent.) we meet with the same phenomena, but carried one stage further; for, whereas Syncellus first gave his own version of the intercourse of the sons of God and the daughters of men, and then with remarkable candour the original account from the Book of Enoch, in Cedrenus, on the other hand, the two accounts given by Syncellus are worked up into one, and every incident told of the fallen angels is circumstantially recounted of the posterity of Seth (i. 16-20). In Zonaras (twelfth cent.), i. 26 (ed. Pinder 1841), the current view is given and the older mentioned only to be rejected. When we pass from this author we come to the semi-apotheosis of Seth in the writings of Glycas who lived some thirty or forty years later. Thus in the Annals of Glycas (ed. Bekker, 1836), p. 223, Seth is almost regarded as a divine being:—οἱ υἱοὶ τοῦ θεοῦ, τουτέστιν οἱ ἀπὸ τοῦ Σήθ καταγόμενοι—ἐκέλευον γὰρ διὰ τὴν ἀρετὴν αὐτοῦ θεὸν ἔλεγον: and likewise on p. 228, Σήθ . . . θεὸς εἶναι διὰ τὴν ἀρετὴν αὐτοῦ νομιζόμενος. This idea, indeed, had already appeared in Cedrenus, i. 16, ὠνομάσθη δὲ θεὸς διὰ τὴν λάμψιν τοῦ προσώπου αὐτοῦ, ἣν ἔσχεν ἐν ὄλῃ αὐτοῦ τῇ ζωῇ. Thus Seth has at last become incomparably the chief personage among the early Patriarchs. In Glycas, p. 228, however, the persistency of the original Enoch myth is shown in the words: λέγεται δὲ ὅτι ὁ ἐν τοῖς ἀστράσι τεταγμένος ἄγγελος, ὁ θειότατος δηλαδὴ Οὐριήλ, πρὸς γε τὸν Σήθ καὶ τὸν Ἑνώχ κατιῶν ἐδίδαξεν αὐτοὺς ὥρων μηνῶν τροπῶν καὶ ἐναντιῶν διαφοράς. Just as these Christian writers transferred Enoch's functions to Seth, so Jewish writers after the Christian era, though on different grounds, transferred them variously to Moses, Ezra, Elijah, etc. See my Watchers. The מַשְׁכִּי of Dan. iv. 13, 17, 23, in Greek ἐγγήγοροι. See Eth. En. i. 5 (note), xx. 1, etc.; Slav. En. vii. (notes), xviii. (notes); Test. Reub. v. Thus anciently the watchers were always regarded as an angelic class, but later, owing to a new interpretation of Gen. vi. 1-4, they were said to be the descendants of Seth. We have seen in the immediately preceding note how this came about.

Watchers instruct the children of men. In v. 6 it is said that God sent the angels to the earth. The object with which the angels here descended to the earth (see v. 6, viii. 10 note) seems at first sight to clash with that which is seemingly implied in the Eth. Enoch and the Slavonic Enoch (see Eth. Enoch vi. notes). But it is quite possible that our text provides us with the object originally assigned in the myth. In the Chronicles of Jerahmeel xxv. 2-3 this view is preserved where Shemchazai and 'Azael are represented as receiving permission from God to descend on earth in order to sanctify the divine name among men. When these angels descended they could not resist the attractions of the daughters of men (xxv. 4). Such a view most probably underlies Eth. Enoch vi., lxxxvi. 1. At all events the idea was a familiar one in the Judaism of the second cent. B.C. According to Ethiopic Enoch vi.-xxxvi. and lxxii.-lxxxii. Enoch owed all his supernatural knowledge to the instruction of angels, and according to x. 9-10 of our text Raphael taught Noah the secrets of medicinal herbs, and an angel of the presence instructs Moses throughout our book. The way for such beliefs was prepared by the statements in Ezekiel, Zechariah and Daniel, bearing on such offices of the angels. For Talmudic ideas on this subject see Jewish Encyclopaedia, i. 592-593.

Father's brother. Emended from "father's sister," as in ver. 15.

17-23. These verses relating to Enoch are of great importance as they help to determine the sections of the Ethiopic Enoch which were known to the author of our text. The words "the first . . . who learnt writing" may point to the phrase in Eth. Enoch xii. 3, "Enoch the scribe"; xii. 4, xv. 1, "Scribe of righteousness," but there is no certainty. On the other hand the clause "who wrote down the signs of heaven according to the order of their months in a book that men might know the seasons of the years, etc." may be accepted as a partial description of Eth. Enoch lxxii.-lxxxii. To ver. 18 we shall return presently. As regards ver. 19 we can attain to practical certainty. The words "what was and what will be, he saw in a vision of his sleep as it will happen to the children of men . . . until the day of judgment," form an exact description of the Dream-Visions in Eth. Enoch lxxxiii.-xc., which give a history of the world from the creation till the final judgment. Moreover, the next verse is no doubt indebted to Eth. Enoch lxxxv. 3 for the name of Enoch's wife. It will be observed also that the Dream-Visions referred to in ver. 19 are rightly placed before Enoch's marriage recounted in ver. 20. It is twice emphatically stated in Eth. Enoch lxxxiii. 2 and lxxxv. 3 that Enoch had these Visions before his marriage. We need, therefore, entertain no doubt as to our author having been acquainted with Eth. Enoch lxxxiii.-xc. Now on other critical grounds we know that Eth. Enoch vi.-xi. are earlier than lxxxiii.-xc. Next, the first clause in ver. 21, "he was moreover with the angels of God these six jubilees of years," offers an explanation of Eth. Enoch xii. 1-2, "Before all these events Enoch was translated and no one of the children of men knew whither he was translated, and where he abode, and what had become of him. 2. And his activities had to do with the

the first among men that are born on earth who learnt writing and knowledge and wisdom and who wrote down the signs of heaven according to the order of their months in a book, that men might know the seasons of the years according to the order of their separate months. 18. And he was the first to write a testimony, and he testified to the sons of men among the generations of the earth, and

Watchers and his days were with the holy ones." Since in ver. 22 the clause "testified to the watchers" presupposes such statements as are in Eth. En. xii. 3-6, xiii. 1-2, xiv. 4-7, xv. 2 sqq., we may conclude, therefore, that our author had also chapters xii.-xvi. of Eth. Enoch before him. To return to ver. 21 the clause "they showed him everything which is on earth" appears to refer to Enoch's journeys to the four quarters of the earth as well as to its centre under the guidance of various angels in Eth. Enoch xxiii.-xxxvi. The next words "(everything which is) . . . in the heavens" are less clear. They may point to Enoch's translation to heaven in Eth. Enoch xiv. or possibly to the celestial phenomena described in lxxii.-lxxxii. Moreover, the next words, "and the rule of the sun," seem clearly to indicate such a passage as lxxxii. 13-20. We have already seen that the first clause of ver. 22 manifestly implies such a background as Eth. Enoch xii.-xvi. Its second clause, "who had transgressed with the daughters of men," expresses the thought that recurs frequently in these chapters. As regards its third, "unite themselves, so as to be defiled with the daughters of men," the matter of it is found in xv. 3, 4, but the actual clause word for word is taken from Eth. En. x. 11. Finally ver. 23 points to some tradition like that at the base of Eth. En. lxx., which in its present form is late. From the above, therefore, we conclude that our author refers only to chapters vi.-xvi., xxiii.-xxxvi., lxxii.-xc. of the Eth. Enoch.

17. First . . . who learnt writing . . . and . . . wrote down the signs of heaven, etc. Quoted in the Σειρά of Nicephorus, i. 123, on Gen. v. 21: Ἐνὼχ πρῶτος ἔμαθε γράμματα καὶ ἔγραψε τὰ σημεῖα τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καὶ τὰς τροπὰς καὶ τοὺς μῆνας and in Cedrenus (i. 17) οὗτος πρῶτος γράμματα μαθήσκει. In Eth. Enoch lxix. 8, however, the first instruction of mankind in writing is ascribed to a Satan. On the other hand, just as we should expect (see note on p. 34), John Malala, p. 5 (ed. Dindorf), attributes Enoch's achievements to Seth: οὗτος ὁ Σῆθ πρῶτος ἐξεύρε γράμματα Ἑβραϊκὰ . . . καὶ τὰ σημεῖα τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καὶ τὰς τροπὰς τῶν ἐνιαυτῶν καὶ τοὺς μῆνας. Similarly Cedrenus (i. 16): ὁ Σῆθ . . . τὴν τῶν οὐρανῶν κινήσεων σοφίαν ἐπενόησε . . . καὶ τὰ Ἑβραϊκὰ γράμματα συνεγράψατο, and Glycas (p. 228) transfers to the latter the achievements assigned in the Σειρά above to Enoch: πρῶτος ἐξεύρεν ὁ Σῆθ . . . τὰ σημεῖα τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καὶ τὰς τροπὰς τῶν ἐνιαυτῶν καὶ τοὺς μῆνας. Cf. Joel, Chron. p. 3.

Signs of heaven according to the order of their months. The twelve solar months correspond to the twelve signs of the Zodiac.

18. There is nothing in the Eth. or Slav. Enoch about the "weeks of the jubilees" or "the sabbaths of the years." Our author is here at his beloved practice of antedating an event or usage he wishes to commend to his countrymen. We shall find (vii. 37, 38, xxi. 10 note) that he similarly ascribes legalistic elements to Enoch, though there is no ground for regarding the books of Enoch as having ever contained such matter.

25. Incense of the sanctuary, or "incense in the sanctuary."

Sweet spices acceptable before the Lord on the Mount. bcd = "acceptable before the Lord on the mountains of the South" (qatr). But this use of the word qatr is unexampled elsewhere. a omits it and writes the preceding word badabr. I have taken it as a corruption of qētârê = "sweet spices." The words would point back to Exod. xxx. 7, קטרת כמים.

On the Mount. So a. bcd read "on the mount of the mid-day (or South)." This mountain may be the mountain of the East. See next note.

26. Three of these places are connected with three decisive turning-points or periods in the history of mankind: the Garden of Eden as the first abode of man; Mount Sinai as the place whence the Law was promulgated, and Zion as the centre of the Theocracy. These three are again mentioned in viii. 19. What the Mount of the East is, I cannot determine. In the ZDMG, xi. pp. 730-733 Rapoport is of opinion that the mountain in question is Mount Ephraim (Josh. xvii. 15 sqq.). He argues that this is the most easterly of the mountains of Palestine; that it contains all the localities of special sanctity among the Samaritans, Gerizim, Sichem, Samaria; that Abraham and Jacob had sacrificed thereon (Gen. xii. 7, xxxiii. 20) just as sacrifices had been offered by Adam in Eden, according to iii. 27 of our text and the Talmud, on Sinai by Moses and on Zion by Israel. But as such an interpretation would imply a Samaritan authorship it is thereby made impossible; for the textual evidence is itself decisive against such authorship. The mention, moreover, of Zion tells in the same direction. There is some probability in the suggestion of Röscher, pp. 505-6, that by the Mount of the East we are to understand Lubar, one of the summits of Ararat, on which the Ark rested and Noah sacrificed, as this lay to the NE. of Palestine and as there would thus be connected with these four places the notable names of Adam, Noah, Moses, David. See viii. 19 (note). On the other hand it is possible that we have here the Mount mentioned in the preceding verse as that on which Enoch offered incense. Now if we may cite the evidence of Die Schatzhöhle and the Book of Adam and Eve, Seth and his posterity were commanded by Adam to live on the Mount close to Eden and not to descend to the plain and mingle with the descendants of Cain. Adam's command was observed till the days of Jared. This Mount could rightly be described as the Mount of the East. Or again the Mount of the East may be the mountain which is described as the Lord has four places on the earth, the Garden of Eden, and the Mount of the East, and this mountain on which thou art this day, Mount Sinai, and Mount Zion (which) will be sanctified in the new creation for a sanctification of the earth; through it will the earth be sanctified from all (its) guilt and its uncleanness throughout the generations of the Father's brother. Emended as in 15.

Lamech. The year of Lamech's birth is not mentioned, but it can be determined from the date of Methuselah's marriage furnished by the Samaritan Chronicle. According to it Methuselah was sixty-seven when he married, and as he was born according to our text (iv. 20) in the year 587, Lamech was probably born in the year 654.

28. Cf. Gen. v. 29. In the fifteenth jubilee in the third week . . . she bare him a son . . . Noah. This assigns some year in the period 701-707 as the birthday of Noah, and 707 is no doubt the year intended. For in the Samaritan Chronicle (see preceding note) it is distinctly stated that 707 years elapsed from Adam to the birth of Noah. We can arrive at this date independently also. With the help of the Samaritan Chronicle we saw in the notes on iv. 27 that Lamech was born in 654. Now according to the same Chronicle Lamech was fifty-three when Noah was born: hence Noah was born in the year 707. On the other hand there is a discrepancy between this date of Noah's birth and that which follows from vi. 18 and x. 16. In the former it is said that the Feast of Weeks was celebrated 1309 years, from the day of creation till the days of Noah, and that Noah observed it 350 years. Hence Noah died in 1659. But since in x. 16 Noah is said to have lived 950 years, this would fix 709 as the year of his birth.

Bêtênôs = בֵּת אֲנוֹשׁ. Lagarde's MS r on Gen. v. 29 gives βεθενως: the Syriac = Enoshi.

This one will comfort me. "This one" (ze emended from za = which). Our text follows Gen. v. 29 in attributing to the name Noah (נֹחַ) the meaning belonging to Menachem (מְנַחֵם). The Book of Jashar 136 says that Methuselah for my trouble and all my work, and for the ground which the Lord hath cursed." 29. And at the close of the nineteenth jubilee, in the seventh week in the sixth year 930 A.M. thereof, Adam died, and all his sons buried him in the land of his creation, and he was the first to be buried in the earth. 30. And he lacked seventy years of one thousand years; for one thousand years are as one day in the testimony of the heavens and therefore was it written concerning the tree of knowledge: "On the day that ye eat thereof ye will die." For this reason he did not complete the years of this day; for he died during it. 31. At the close of this jubilee Cain was killed after him in the same year; for his house fell upon him and he died in the midst called the child Noah because the earth would have rest (נח) in his days, but Lamech called him Menachem because "he would comfort us" (נחמנו). The same ideas are found in Ber. rabba 25. These results of learned reflection on Gen. v. 29 appear to be later than Jubilees.

And for the ground. All authorities save the LXX and our text omit "and."

First to be buried in the earth. This shows that the legend, which is attested in the later Life of Adam and Eve (Tischendorf's Apocalypses Apocryphae, p. 21), that the body of Abel was not buried till that of Adam was, already existed.

30. Cf. Gen. ii. 17. This interpretation of a day as a thousand years was current among the Jews. Cf. Ber. rabba 19, 22. 2 Pet. iii. 8 μία ημέρα παρά Κυρίῳ ὡς χίλια ἔτη. En. xxxiii. 1, 2 (note) where the application of this principle of interpretation to the six days creation and the seventh of rest issues in the doctrine of the Millenium. Justin Martyr (Dial. cum Tryph. lxxxi.) apparently quotes from the text: ὡς γὰρ τῷ Ἀδὰμ εἶρητο, ὅτι ἡ δ' ἂν ἡμέρα φάγη ἀπὸ τοῦ ξύλου, ἐν ἐκείνῃ ἀποθανέται, ἐγνωμεν αὐτὸν μὴ ἀναπληρώσαντα χίλια ἔτη. Συνήκαμεν καὶ τὸ εἰρήμενον, ὅτι ἡμέρα Κυρίου ὡς χίλια ἔτη, εἰς τοῦτο συνάγειν. See also Lactantius, Institution, vii. 14.

31-32. Cain was killed . . . in the same year, etc. In Syncellus, i. 19, the text is partly reproduced: τῷ αὐτῷ ἔτει καὶ Κάιν ἀπέθανεν, ἐμπεσόντος ἐπ' αὐτὸν τοῦ οἴκου· λίθοις γὰρ καὶ αὐτὸς τὸν Ἀβελ ἀνέειλε. In Cedrenus, i. 16, more fully: οὗτος ὁ Κάιν, ὡς ἡ Λεπτὴ Μωσέως Γένεσις φησὶν, τῆς οἰκίας πεσοῦσης ἐπ' αὐτὸν τελευτᾷ· λίθοις γὰρ τὸν ἀδελφὸν Ἀβελ ἀπέκτεινε, καὶ λίθοις ὁμοίως καὶ αὐτὸς ἀπεκτάνθη. In the Excerpta Chronologica prefixed to the works of John Malala we have this and the later legend given: κατὰ (? μετὰ) δὲ ταῦτα τῆς οἰκίας ἐπ' αὐτὸν πεσοῦσης ἀπέθανεν, ὡς ἐνιοὶ φασιν· ἕτεροι δὲ ὅτι Λαμέχ αὐτὸν ἀπέκτεινεν. This latter account is found also in Glycas 223, in the Book of Adam and Eve, ii. 13, in Jarchi's Comm. on Gen. iv. 23, Tanchuma 6, the Book of Jashar (section Beresheth). For other authorities where the later legend is given see Eisenmenger, i. 470-471. On the other hand, according to Ber. rabba 22, the Rabbis said that he was killed by a stone, but Simeon the son of Gamaliel stated that he was killed by a reed. The latter idea seems to have been suggested by the likeness between יר and נר.

of his house, and he was killed by its stones; for with a stone he had killed Abel, and by a stone was he killed in righteous judgment. 32. For this reason it was ordained on the heavenly tables: "With the instrument with which a man kills his neighbour with the same shall he be killed; after the manner that he wounded him, in like manner shall they deal with him." 33. And in the twenty-fifth jubilee Noah took to himself a wife, and her name was 'Ēmzârâ, the daughter of Râkê'êl, the daughter of his father's brother, in the first year in the fifth week: and in the third year thereof she bare him Shem, in the fifth year thereof she bare him Ham, and in the first year in the sixth week she bare him Japheth.

31. With a stone he had killed Abel, and by a stone was he killed in righteous judgment, etc. We have here the primitive human law of retaliation (eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, etc., Exod. xxi. 24; Lev. xxiv. 19) described as a law of the divine procedure. This law of exact retribution is not merely an enactment of human justice, our author declares; it is observed by God in his government of the world.

It is noteworthy that the same principle of retribution is enforced by historical examples in 2 Macc. v. 10, where speaking of Jason the author writes: ὁ πλῆθος ἀτάφρων ἐκρίψας ἀπένθητος ἐγενήθη, καὶ κηδίας οὐδ' ἦστινος . . . μετέσχευ. Similarly, it is recounted of Nicanor (xv. 32, 33) that he was punished in those members with which he had sinned. Cf. also xiii. 8. In this respect 2 Macc. therefore represents truly this second-cent. B.C. doctrine of retribution. Taken crassly and mechanically the above law is without foundation; but spiritually conceived it represents the profound truth enunciated repeatedly in the N.T. Thus in Gal. vi. 7 "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap"; Col. iii. 25 "he that doeth wrong shall receive again the wrong that he hath done"; 2 Cor. v. 10 in the judgment men shall "receive the things done in the body." In the Parables this kinship of the penalty to the sin is repeatedly dwelt on: the unforgiving debtor is refused forgiveness, the slothful servant loses what he had, he who will not use his affluence to succour a brother's need will lose it for himself, and the man who refuses to part with an offending eye or hand will finally lose his whole body in Gehenna. See note on xlviii. 14.

According to Beer this halachic interpretation of Exod. xxi. 24 is unknown to traditional Judaism, which enacts that the murderer is to be slain with the sword.

33. 'Ēmzârâ. This name is found in the Syriac Fragment and Lagarde's LXX MS γ. Frankel derives it from אֵם שָׂרָה or אֵם שָׂרָה because she lived in the days of the Flood.

Brother. Emended as in ver. 15.

Shem . . . Ham . . . Japhet. Cf. x. 14, where again Shem is represented as the eldest. We should observe here that our author thus understood aright יפֿתֿ הַגִּבּוֹר in Gen. x. 21 as "(Shem) . . . the elder brother of Japhet" (so also Vulg.) over against the Massorettes, Symmachus, and Rashi who wrongly understood it as "brother of Japheth the elder." The LXX is similarly wrong: ἀδελφῶ Ἰάφεθ τοῦ μείζονος, Ber. rabba 26, 37, and the Book of Jashar (in loc.). On the other hand in Sanhedrin 69 b Shem is said to be two years older than Japhet.

And it came to pass when the children of men began to multiply on the face of the earth and daughters were born unto them, that the angels of God saw them on a certain year of this jubilee, that they were beautiful to look upon; and they took themselves wives of all whom they chose, and they bare unto them sons and they were giants. 2. And lawlessness increased on the earth and all flesh corrupted its way, alike men and cattle and beasts and birds and everything that walks on the earth—all of them corrupted their ways and their orders, and they began to devour each other, and lawlessness increased on the earth and every imagination of the thoughts of all men (was) thus evil continually. 3. And God looked upon the earth, and behold it was corrupt, and all flesh had corrupted its orders, and all that were upon the earth had wrought all manner of evil before His eyes. 4. And against the angels whom He had sent upon the earth, He was exceedingly wroth, and He gave commandment to root them out of all their dominion, and He bade us to bind them in the depths of the earth, and behold they are bound in the midst of them, and are (kept) separate. 7. And against their sons went forth a command from before His face that they should be smitten with the sword, and be removed from under heaven. 8. And He said "My spirit will not always abide on man; for they also are flesh and their days shall be one hundred and twenty years." 9. And He sent His sword into their midst that each should slay his neighbour, and they began to slay each other till they all fell by the sword and were destroyed from the earth. 10. And their fathers were witnesses (of their destruction), and after this they were bound in the depths of the earth for ever, until the day of the great condemnation, when judgment is executed

4. Which I have created. Emended from ab which = "He had created." Corruption could have arisen from confusion of ἐκτίσα and ἐκτίσε, as Littmann has pointed out. cd = "was created." Possibly we should keep to b throughout, and translate "He would destroy . . . which He had created." Cf. vi. 20.

10. Until the day of the great condemnation, i.e., the day of the final judgment. See iv. 19, 24. Cf. Eth. Enoch x. 13. The intervening period, according to Eth. Enoch x. 12, is seventy generations.

10^b-12. Verses 11-12 if the text is correct teach that God recreated the human race and all His other works at the time of the Flood "so that they should not sin in their whole nature forever, but should be all righteous . . . alway." In Josephus, Ant. i. 3. 2 there is a slight approximation to this idea: ὁ δὲ Θεὸς τοῦτον μὲν τῆς δικαιοσύνης ἡγάπησε, κατεδίκασε δ' οὐκ ἐκείνων μόνων τῆς κακίας, ἀλλὰ καὶ πάν ὅσον ἦν ἀνθρώπινον τότε δόξαν αὐτῷ

διαφθεῖραι καὶ ποιῆσαι γένος ἕτερον πονηρίας καθαρὸν. See also Philo, De Vita Moses, ii. 12. But with the subsequent corruption of all the descendants of Noah till the time of Abraham and the universal apostasy of the Gentiles according to our author, such a statement is practically inconceivable. Moreover, it is not difficult to discover the origin of the error in our text. Verses 10^b-16 are descriptive of the final judgment, and simply amplify the last clause of ver. 10. Thus the time of the verbs "destroyed," "was," "made" in 11-12 is wrong and we should have "shall destroy," "shall be" and "shall make." "Judged" must also be rendered "shall have judged," but this last does not necessitate a change in the text of either the Ethiopic or Hebrew. The text therefore should be translated: "Until the day of the great condemnation, when judgment shall be executed on all who have corrupted their ways and their works before the Lord, 11. And He shall destroy (them) all from their places, and there shall not be left one of them on all those who have corrupted their ways and their works before the Lord. 11. And He †destroyed† all from their places, and there †was† not left one of them whom He judged not according to all their wickedness. 12. And He †made† for all His works a new and righteous nature, so that they should not sin in their whole nature for ever, but should be all righteous each in his kind alway. 13. And the judgment of all is ordained and written on the heavenly tables in righteousness—even (the judgment of) all who depart from the path which is ordained for them to walk in; and if they walk not therein, judgment is written down for every creature and for every kind. 14. And there is nothing in heaven or on earth, or in light or in darkness, or in Sheol or in the depth, or in the place of darkness (which is not judged); and all their judgments are ordained and written and engraved. 15. In regard to all He will judge, the great according to his greatness, and the small according to his smallness, and each according to his way. 16. And He is not one who will regard the person (of any), nor is He one who will receive gifts, if He says that He will execute judgment on each: if one gave everything that is on the earth, He will not regard the gifts or the person (of any), nor accept anything at his hands, for He is a righteous judge. [17. And of the children of Israel it has whom He shall not have judged according to all their wickedness, 12. And He shall make for all His works, etc." This corruption of the tenses may possibly have arisen in the Ethiopic, or in the Greek, but this is very improbable, as it involves so many changes. On the other hand it is easy to explain the false text as having originated in a mistranslation of the Hebrew. The above passage = ער יום הרין הגרול בהעשות משהפס בכול אשר השחית דרכו ומעשהו לכני והאביר כלם . . . ולא יותר מהם אחר אשר לא . . . ועשה. Here we have to suppose that the Greek translator failed to grasp the sense of the passage and see that והאביר and the other verbs followed

And as for all those who corrupted their ways and their thoughts before the flood, no man's person was accepted save that of Noah alone ; for his person was accepted in behalf of his sons, whom (God) saved from the waters of the flood on his account ; for his heart was righteous in all his ways, according as it was commanded regarding him, and he had not departed from aught that was ordained for him. 20. And the Lord said that He would destroy everything which was upon the earth, both men and cattle, and beasts, and fowls of the air, and that which moveth on the earth. 21. 18. The time referred to here is obviously the tenth day of the seventh month, i.e., the Day of Atonement. In Lev. xvi. in spite of the terms in verses 16, 21, the sin-offering atoned only for sins committed in error (בשגגה, akosistos), i.e. accidentally or involuntarily (Lev. iv. 2, 13, 22, etc.—these are the ἀγνοήματα in Heb. ix. 7), not for those committed deliberately and defiantly (ביר רעה, Num. xv. 30). This is the view enforced in the Mishnic treatise Yoma viii. 9: "If a man says I will sin, and then repent . . . Heaven does not give him the means of practising repentance ; and if he says, 'I will sin and the Day of Atonement will bring atonement,' the Day of Atonement will bring no atonement." On the other hand both in our text and in the treatise Shebu'oth i. 6 it is taught that on the Day of Atonement sins of every description are forgiven "both the light and the grave, the intentional and the unintentional, the conscious and the unconscious, those relating to the positive and the negative commands, and even those that were to be visited with the death penalty by God or human judgment." And yet we must discriminate between the teaching of our text and of the treatise Shebu'oth in favour of the former. In the latter the ceremonial was of the nature of an opus operatum. In our text, on the other hand, repentance is insisted on : God's mercy is not to be won on the Day of Atonement save by those who turn (ישבו) from their sins. Thus though our text stands midway between the doctrine prescribed in Lev. xvi. (also in the treatise Yoma) and the treatise Shebu'oth, with the former it prescribes as necessary to atonement the temper of true repentance: with the latter it maintains the efficacy of the atonement for sins of every description.

The fifth year of the fifth week of the twenty-seventh jubilee = 1307 A.M. This agrees exactly with the chronology in the Samaritan Chronicle: "From Adam to the birth of Noah was a period of 707 years, and from Adam to the Flood 1307 years" (Samaritan Chronicle translated by Neubauer in the Journal Asiatique, 1869, pp. 421-469).

6) that according to local tradition the Ark rested on a great mountain in Armenia called Baris above Minyas, Professor Sayce (Journal of Royal Asiatic Soc. xiv. p. 389 note) conjectures that this is the mountain named Lubar in our text, seeing that both are said by Epiphanius and Syncellus (see note on vii. 1) to be on the borders of Armenia. I am indebted to him also for the following note in which he seeks to account for the syllable Lu in Lubar. "In the Vannic cuneiform inscriptions Lulu is the country which is called Urartu (Ararat) in Assyria, on the borders of Armenia and Kurdistan, and is almost certainly the Lulubi or Luluwi of the Assyrian inscriptions in which was Mount Nizir

2. Made atonement for the earth. Though Jewish Haggada knows nothing of this particular act of atonement, it is easy to justify such a conception from Lev. xviii. 26-28; Num. xxxv. 33, 34. The earth itself as being defiled needed expiation. Unnatural vices and murder pollute it.

5. Gen. ix. 7. It is noteworthy that the clause be a blessing (וּבְרֵכּוּ) corresponds to "multiply" (וּרְבּוּ) in the parallel in Gen. The latter appears to be corrupt for וּרְבּוּ = LXX καὶ κατακυριεύσατε.

6. Gen. ix. 2, 3.

As the green herbs, I have given you all things to eat. From Gen. ix. 3 save the verb "to eat" which, however, is only a repetition of the phrase "for food" in the preceding clause. Of the argument that concluded from those words that only certain herbs were allowed for food, our text knows nothing. This view appears in Justin, Dial. c. Tryph. 20 βουλομένου αὐτοῦ εἰπεῖν ὡς λάχανα χόρτου . . . ἐπεὶ τῶν χόρτων οὐκ ἐσθλομέν οὕτω καὶ διαστολὴν ἔκτοτε τῷ Νῶε διεστάλθαι φατέ. According to Goldfahn (*Monats-schrift für Gesch. d. 8. Gen. ix. 6.

10-14. Noah and his sons swear to the covenant as of perpetual obligation as regards the non-eating of blood (ver. 10). Because this ordinance was of perpetual obligation, it was re-enacted on Mount Sinai; but, whereas in Noah's covenant it had been brought forward only on its negative side, in the Mosaic legislation it was enforced in its positive side, that is, according to the former, blood was not to be eaten, whereas according to the latter its true use was to sprinkle the worshipper (ver. 11) and to make atonement before God (ver. 14). Moreover, as Noah's covenant was instituted in the third

all the generations of the earth in this month. 11. On this account He spake to thee that thou shouldst make a covenant with the children of Israel in this month upon the mountain with an oath, and that thou shouldst sprinkle blood upon them because of all the words of the covenant, which the Lord made with them for ever. 12. And this testimony is written concerning you that you should observe it continually, so that you should not eat on any day any blood of beasts or birds or cattle during all the days of the earth, and the man who eats the blood of beast or of cattle or of birds during all the days of the earth, he and his seed shall be rooted out of the land. 13. And do thou command the children of Israel to eat no blood, so that their names and their seed may be before the Lord our God continually. 14. And for this law there is no limit of days, for it is for ever. They shall observe it throughout their generations, so that they may continue supplicating on your behalf with blood before the altar; every day and at the time of morning and evening they shall seek forgiveness on your behalf perpetually before the Lord that they may keep it and not be rooted out. 15. And He gave to Noah and his sons a sign that there should not again be a flood on the earth. 16. He set His bow in the cloud for a sign of the eternal covenant that there should not again be a flood on the earth month, so also the Law was given on Sinai in the same month (ver. 11). [In no passage is it said that the covenants of Noah and of Moses were established on the same day in the third month. Such a connection appears to exist between the date of the covenant of Noah and that of the first celebration on earth of the feast of weeks (see notes on verses 17-18).]

to destroy it all the days of the earth. 17. For this reason it is ordained and written on the heavenly tables, that they should celebrate the feast of weeks in this month once a year, to renew the covenant every year. 18. And this whole festival was celebrated in heaven from the day of creation till the days of Noah—twenty-six jubilees and five weeks of years: and Noah and his sons observed it for seven jubilees and one week of years, till the day of Noah's death, and from the day of Noah's death his sons did away with (it) until the days of Abraham, and they eat blood. 19. But Abraham observed it, and Isaac and Jacob and his children observed it up to thy days, and in thy days the children of Israel forgot it until ye celebrated it anew on this mountain. 20. And do thou command the children of Israel to observe this festival in all their generations for a commandment unto them: one day in the year in this month they shall celebrate the festival. 21. For it is the feast of weeks and the feast

17-18. In connection with the covenant Noah is bidden to observe the feast of weeks. Since it follows from xv. 1 (see note) and xlv. 4, 5 that this feast was celebrated on the 15th of the third month (see note on i. 1) we may reasonably assign the promulgation of the Noachic covenant to the same date. Later Judaism (Maimonides, More Neb. 41) held Pentecost to celebrate the giving of the Law on Sinai, and designated this day as "the day of the giving of the Law" (יום כותן הורה). So our author (cf. i. 1). This idea is not found in Philo and Josephus; but it appears in Jerome, Ep. ad Fab. mansio 12; August. Contra Faust. xxxii. 12. Observe that our author ascribes the covenant with Abram to the same date (see note on xiv. 20).

17. Feast of weeks. This title is found in Exod. xxxiv. 22 (תַּחֲתֵּי שָׁבֻעַ, ἐορτὴ ἑβδομάδων). Our text is not acquainted with the more familiar designation of this feast, i.e. Pentecost. This designation, which is a Greek rendering, ἡ πεντηκοστή (ἡμέρα), of the rabbinic יום הכששים, is found in 2 Macc. xii. 32 μετὰ τὴν λεγομένην πεντηκοστήν. Tob. ii. 1 contains another early instance of its use, and Philo, De Septenar. 21, a near approach to it. For later instances see 1 Cor. xvi. 8; Jos. Ant. iii. 10. 6.

18. Twenty-six jubilees and five weeks=1309 years. On the slight discrepancy in our author's dates see notes on iv. 28 and v. 22.

Seven jubilees and one week=350 years.

Did away with (it) . . . and they eat blood. Here again the close connection of the feast of weeks and of the covenant with Noah is emphasised.

19. But Abraham. For "but (a d) Abraham" (b c d), b c read "and Abraham alone."

Observed it. a b omit "it."

Ye celebrated it anew [= ἡδασκewō (a)]. b c d read "I have renewed them" or "I have renewed (it) unto them" [= ἡδασκewōmū (b c d)].

20. One day in the year. This should perhaps be: "the first day (of the week) in every year." See note on ver. 22.

21. The feast of weeks was likewise known as the feast of the harvest of first-fruits: this feast is twofold and of a double nature: according to what is written and engraven concerning it celebrate it. 22. For I have written in the book of the first law, in that which I have written for thee, that thou shouldst celebrate it in its season, one day in the year, and I explained to thee its sacrifices that the children of Israel should remember and should celebrate it throughout their generations in this month, one day in every year. 23. And on the Exod. xxiii. 16, הַיּוֹם הַהוּא. In the latter respect it was a feast of first-fruits as in the text, or the day of first-fruits, Num. xxviii. 26, יוֹם הַבְּכִיּוֹת, ἡ ἡμέρα τῶν νέων. Why this festival should be said to be "of a double nature" I do not see.

Celebrate it=gēbarâ emended from gēbrâ="its celebration."

One day in the year. Eppstein (Revue des Études juives, xxii. 7-8) suggests that "one day" here=ἡμέρα μία=יום אחד, which in its original context meant "the first day," i.e. of the week, Sunday. Thus Pentecost was to fall on the same day every year, a Sunday, the first of the week. If this is right it follows that if we count back seven weeks we arrive at Nisan 22, "the morrow after the Sabbath," which is also the first day of the week, and that the author of our book interpreted the term Sabbath in its strict sense as the weekly Sabbath (see note on xv. 1). For somewhat similar directions regarding the Passover see xlix. 7, 8.

Its sacrifices, or "the sacrifices."

One day in every year. This should perhaps be "the first day (of the week) in every year" as Eppstein suggests (see note above).

23. According to Lev. xxiii. 24 only the 1st day of the 7th month was a day of remembrance. Nevertheless the special significance assigned to these four days was a not unfamiliar idea in the second cent. as appears from the Eth. Enoch and our text, both of which we shall discuss presently in this relation. Even the Mishna appears to preserve some echoes of the early controversies that circled round them; for we can hardly interpret otherwise the passage in the Rosh ha-Shanah i. 1: "On 1st Nisan—beginning of year, of government and of festivals. On 1st Ellul, the year of tithing of beasts according to R. Eliezer and R. Simeon. On 1st Tisri, the calendar year, the Sabbatical year and jubilee year, and (year) of plants and vegetables. On 1st Sebat, year of blooming of trees according to school of Shammai but on 15th according to school of Hillel." That different usages prevailed at different times follows clearly from the sacrifices enjoined on the new moons in Ezekiel xlvi. 6 and Num. xxviii. 11-15. The Rabbis could give no satisfactory explanation of these differences: some indeed were for removing Ezekiel from the Canon, and others denied its authenticity on account of them. Returning now to our text and the parallel passages in the Eth. Enoch, we observe that these four days have a religious significance in the former, but an astronomical in the latter. In Eth. En. lxxv. 1, 2, lxxxii. 11 they are called "leaders," because they lead in the four quarters of the year. They are also called "intercalary days" (Eth. Enoch lxxv. 2) ἡμέραι ἐπαγόμεναι, and correspond respectively to the vernal equinox (1st of 1st month), the summer solstice (1st of 4th month), the autumn equinox (1st of 7th month), and the winter solstice (1st of 10th month). These four days, when added to 360 (i.e., 12 months of 30 days each, Eth. Enoch lxxxii. 11), constitute an invariable year of 364 days (cf. our text v. 32, 38; Eth. Enoch lxxv. 2, lxxxii. 11). On the meaning of this year of 364 days see notes on verses 29-30, 32.

new moon of the first month, and on the new moon of the fourth month, and on the new moon of the seventh month, and on the new moon of the tenth month are the days of remembrance, and the days of the seasons in the four divisions of the year. These are written and ordained as a testimony for ever. 24. And Noah ordained them for himself as feasts for the generations for ever, so that they have become thereby a memorial unto him. 25. And on the new moon of the first month he was bidden to make for himself an ark, and on that (day) the earth became dry and he opened (the ark) and saw the earth. 26. And on the new moon of the fourth month the mouths of the depths of the abysses beneath were closed. And on the new moon of the seventh month all the mouths of the abysses of the earth were opened, and the waters began to descend into them. 27. And on the new moon of the tenth month the tops of the mountains were seen, and Noah was glad. 28. And on this account he ordained them for himself as feasts for a memorial for ever, and thus are they ordained. 29. And they placed them on the heavenly tables, each had thirteen weeks; from one to another

On the new moon of the first month. On this date Noah was bidden to make an ark, v. 21, vi. 25; the earth first became visible after the flood, v. 30, vi. 25; Noah offered a sacrifice, vii. 2, 3; Abraham erected an altar and sacrificed thereon, xiii. 8; God appeared to Isaac, xxiv., who forthwith offered sacrifice, 22, 23; Jacob went to Bethel, xxvii. 19; Levi was born, xxviii. 14.

On it Adam and Eve went forth from the Garden, iii. 32; the mouths of the abysses beneath and the flood-gates of heaven were closed, v. 29, vi. 26; angels appeared to Abraham, xvi. 1; Joseph was born, xxviii. 24; Jacob arrived in Egypt, xlv. 1.

29-30. Each had thirteen weeks, etc. According to verses 23-30 the year consists of four seasons and each season of three months or thirteen weeks. The year has, therefore, on this computation 12 months of 30 days each

(passed) their memorial, from the first to the second, and from the second to the third, and from the third to the fourth. 30. And all the days of the commandment will be two and fifty weeks of days, and (these will make) the entire year complete. 31. Thus it is engraven and ordained on the heavenly tables. And there is no neglecting (this com-

(see below) and 4 intercalary days, 52 weeks, or 364 days. This our author takes to be the duration of a solar year. A solar year of 12 months is likewise presupposed in iv. 17 where the months are said to be of the same number as the signs of the zodiac; in v. 27 where five months are described as amounting to 150 days, hence each month consists of 30 days; in xii. 16 Abram makes observations on the 1st of the 7th month to learn the character of the ensuing six months (autumn and winter). They are solar months; for they are six in number, xii. 27; in xvi. 12-13 a year of twelve months is implied; and in xxv. 16 the tribes who are to spring from Jacob are to be of the same number as the months of the year. In the face of these facts Frankel was quite wrong, as Beer has shown, to assert that Jubilees reckoned each month at 28 days and added a thirteenth month of 28 days. On the other hand Eppstein (Revue des Études juives, xxii. 10-13) offers the attractive suggestion that in Jubilees two kinds of years are used: a civil year of 12 months with eight of 30 days each and four of 31 days each; and an ecclesiastical year of 13 months of 28 days each. Our author, writes Eppstein, fixed the dates of the festivals according to the ecclesiastical year, and by such a year managed to make each week, each month and each year to begin on Sunday and terminate on the Sabbath. By such an arrangement also all the festivals fell on Sunday save that of the Day of Atonement, and all the chronology took a regular and uniform character from the fact that everything had 7 for its point of departure. Thus the week had 7 days: the month $4 \times 7 = 28$: the year $52 \times 7 = 364$: the year-week 7 years and the jubilee 7×7 years. Further, the date assigned by our author to the feast of weeks, i.e. Sivan 15, certainly supports Eppstein's view. This date can only be arrived at by reckoning the 7 weeks from Nisan 22. Thus the paschal lamb was offered on Nisan 14: the feast of unleavened bread began on the 15th and ended on the 21st. On the 22nd the wave-sheaf was offered. Now if we count 7 weeks onward from this day, that is 1 week in the 1st month, 4 weeks in the 2nd and 2 in the 3rd (Sivan), the feast of weeks falls on the 15th of Sivan as in our author. Thus the date presupposes months of 28 days. And since the months consisted of 28 days each, there must have been 13 in this ecclesiastical year, as it consisted of 364 days. Finally, if Eppstein's view on the interpretation of vi. 22 is correct, it serves to confirm the above view; for if the year begins on Sunday, the passover on Nisan falls on the Sabbath: the offering of the wave-sheaf on Sunday the 22nd and the feast of weeks on Sunday, Sivan 15.

But on the other hand there is this objection to this theory: it is not true that all the festivals in Jubilees are fixed according to this so-called ecclesiastical year; for the four ordained by Noah in vi. 23-29 are determined according to the 12 solar months of the year. Apart from this objection this theory is the best solution of the problem yet offered. Elsewhere, where two years were in use, as amongst the Egyptians and later amongst the Abyssinian Jews, the civil year was a solar one and the ecclesiastical a lunar.

30. The entire year complete. So b, which alone gives an intelligible sense.

31. Neglecting, or "transgressing." Beer has suggested that t'adwô here points back to עָבַר = "intercalation." Linguistically, this is possible. If so, our author would be here protesting against such systems of intercalating days in the lunar year to make it synchronise with the solar, as we find in Eth. Enoch lxxiv.-lxxv., and the later systems of the Pharisees. But seeing that the same word which I render "neglecting" is found twice in ver. 33 and in xv. 25, and that it cannot in two of these instances bear the meaning Beer proposes, I have retained the ordinary meaning of the word. See also on xlix. 14.

32. Three hundred and sixty-four days. A solar year of the same length is also taught in Eth. Enoch lxxiv. 10, 12, lxxv. 2; Slav. Enoch xlviii. 1. In Slav. Enoch xiv. 1 the ordinary reckoning of 365½ days is found. It is obvious that we have here to do with an old Jewish reckoning. I have shown in my edition of the Eth. Enoch pp. 189-191 that the advocates of this system were acquainted with the Greek octaeteris and the cycle of Calippus, and in my edition of the Slav. Enoch, that its author in xvi. 8 was familiar with the Metonic cycle. Why then did these writers, notwithstanding their knowledge of the Greek systems, advocate an impossible solar year of 364 days? I think their action in this matter must be attributed to dogmatic prejudice. If they regarded it as vital to the validity of their festivals that they should be celebrated not only on the same day of the month but also on the same day of the week from year to year, it seemed possible to attain this end by enforcing the acceptance of a year of 364 days. If the solar year were of this duration, it would always begin on the same day of the week; for it would consist of 52 weeks exactly. Furthermore if it began on Sunday, the first day of the week, the Sabbath would always constitute the 7th day of each of the 52 weeks, and the great festivals would always fall on the same day of the week and on the same day of the month from year to year. Thus the Passover would take place on Nisan 14, a Sabbath day, the wave-sheaf would be offered on Nisan

22, a Sunday (the morrow after the Sabbath), and the feast of weeks on Sivan 15, a Sunday—that is in case we reckon 13 months of 28 days each, the ecclesiastical year (see note on vi. 29-30). By the assumption, therefore, of an impossible solar year of 12 months of 364 days in all and of an ecclesiastical year of 13 months of the same number of days consisting of an arbitrary succession of hebdomads independent of the phases of the moon, they seemed to have succeeded in synchronising the civil and ecclesiastical years without resorting to intercalary days. But this year of 364 days goes back in all probability to the Exile. It will be observed that our text brings forward this disquisition on the true length of the year in connection with the account of the flood. Now it is just in the same connection in the narrative of P in Genesis that a year of 364 days is presupposed as Bacon (Hebraica, viii. 79-88, 124-139 [1891-1892]) points out. Thus, the epochs of the flood are:—

Beginning	.	2nd month	17th day
Climax	.	7th "	17th "
Mountain tops
appear	.	10th "	1st "
Waters dried up	1st	"	1st "
Earth dry	.	2nd "	27th "

He points out that the flood, which in the Babylonian account lasted one year, lasts here from the 17th of the 2nd month of one year to the 27th of the 2nd of the next. Now he argues that, if one reckoned according to Hebrew lunar months, ten days (cf. Jubilees vi. 36) had to be added at the close of the 12th month in order to reach the equivalent date in solar time; for the lunar year was 354 days ($= 12 \times 29\frac{1}{2}$; cf. Eth. Enoch lxxviii. 15). Now if the solar year was reckoned at 364 days, we can understand why Noah's exit is assigned to the 27th and not to the 17th of the 2nd month; for ten days represent according to Jubilees (vi. 36) and the Eth. Enoch (lxxiv. 10, sixty-four days, and (these) will constitute a complete year, and they will not disturb its time from its days and from its feasts; for everything will fall out in them according to their testimony, and they will not leave out any day nor disturb any feasts. 33. But if they do neglect and do not observe them according to His commandment, then they will disturb all their seasons, and the years will be dislodged from this (order), [and they will disturb the seasons and the years will be dislodged] and they will neglect their ordinances. 34. And all the children of Israel will forget, and will not find the path of the years, and will forget the new moons, and seasons, and sabbaths, and they will go wrong as to all the order of the years. 35. For I know and from henceforth shall I declare it unto thee, and it is not of my own devising; for the book (lies) written before me, and on the heavenly tables the division of days is ordained, lest they forget the feasts of the covenant and walk according to the feasts of the Gentiles after their error and after their ignorance. 36. For

We presume, therefore, writes Bacon, that the authors of Enoch or Jubilees found their peculiar year of 364 days (=12 sidereal months of 30 days each +4 intercalary days) in the Genesis account of the flood. Considering the advanced stage of astronomical science in the second cent. B.C. among the nations in touch with Judaism, it is not possible to explain their adoption of such a solar year unless it appealed to them on dogmatic grounds and had at its back an inspired authority. Genesis formed the inspired authority, and the dogmatic grounds are obvious (see above). That such a scheme is impracticable is really no objection, if we consider that the author of Jubilees is as thorough-going an idealist as the author of the priestly legislation, and is still more sublimely defiant of that which is merely practicable. On the other hand, the authors in question, though acquainted with the systems current in Greece, were most probably ignorant of the astronomical data which necessarily determined them; and, as a civil year of 360 days was current both in Babylon and Egypt (in the former country corrected by intercalation), they may not have known any irrefutable grounds against the adoption of the solar year of 364 days, authenticated as it was by the priestly compilation of the Exile.

there will be those who will assuredly make observations of the moon—now (it) disturbs the seasons and comes in from year to year ten days too soon. 37. For this reason the years will come upon them when they will disturb (the order), and make an abominable (day) the day of testimony, and an unclean day a feast day, and they will confound all the days, the holy with the unclean, and the unclean day with the holy; for they will go wrong as to the months and sabbaths and feasts and jubilees. 38. For this reason I command and testify to thee that thou mayst testify to them; for after thy death thy children will disturb (them), so that they will not make the year three hundred and sixty-four days only, and for this reason they will go wrong as to the new moons and seasons and sabbaths and festivals, and they will eat all kinds of blood with all kinds of flesh.

36. Our author is decidedly opposed to the use of the moon in determining the seasons and feasts. Thus in ii. 9 it is the sun that is to be man's guide as to days and sabbaths, and feasts, and months and years. Again in iv. 21 the angels instruct Enoch as to the lordship of the sun in such matters. Thus our book seems to be a polemic against the teaching of Eth. Enoch lxxiii.-lxxiv. if we accept the text in lxxiv. 12 where we have a statement in irreconcilable conflict with our text: "And the moon brings in all the years exactly so that their position is not prematurely advanced or delayed by a single day unto eternity; but they complete the changing year with perfect justice in 364 days." But this divergence arises only from a corruption of the text. For "And the moon brings in . . . unto eternity; but the moons" read "And they (the sun and stars) bring in all the years so exactly that their position is not prematurely advanced or delayed by a single day unto eternity, and they." It is true, however, that the Samaritan Chronicle (translated by Neubauer in the Journal Asiatique, xiv. no. 55, 1869, pp. 421 sqq.), which was acquainted with our text, adopts a hostile attitude to it on this question. Thus it declares that we should reckon according to the course of the sun and of the moon, and quotes Gen. i. 14: "Le calcul avec l'un d'eux seulement (c'est-à-dire avec le soleil ou avec la lune) ne suffit pas."

Comes in . . . ten days too soon.

And these are the sons of Shem: Elam, and Asshur, and Arpachshad—this (son) was born two years after the flood—and Lud, and Aram. 19. The sons of Japheth: Gomer and Magog and Madai and Javan, Tubal and Meshech and Tiras: these are the sons of Noah. 20. And in the twenty-eighth jubilee Noah began to enjoin upon his sons' sons the ordinances and commandments, and all the judgments that he knew, and he exhorted his sons to observe righteousness, and to cover the shame of their flesh, and to bless their Creator, and honour father and mother, and love their neighbour, and guard their souls from fornication and uncleanness and all iniquity. 21. For owing to these three things came the flood upon the earth, namely,

20. From this verse to the close of the chapter we have a fragment of the lost book of Noah. From ver. 26 to the end Noah speaks in the first person. Its legalistic character favours the view that its present setting and colouring are due to the author of the book, who was so careless however as to leave the persons unchanged in verses (26-39).

The substance of this section is referred to in Epiphanius (Ancorat. cxii., Dindorf's ed., i. 215), where it is said that Noah, οἷα δίκαιος ὢν καὶ τοὺς ἑαυτοῦ παῖδας εὐλαβεῖς καθιστᾶν πειρώμενος, ἵνα μὴ τοῖς αὐτοῖς ὑποπέσωσι κακοῖς ὥς καὶ οἱ ἐν τῷ κατακλυσμῷ, οὐ μόνον διὰ λόγων τούτοις τὴν εὐλάβειαν παρετίθει, ἀλλὰ καὶ δι' ὅρκου ἀφ' ἐνὸς ἐκάστου αὐτῶν τὴν πρὸς τὸν ἀδελφὸν εὐνοίαν ἀπήτησε.

Cover the shame, etc. Cf. iii. 31.

21. These three things, that is "fornication, uncleanness and all iniquity" which are mentioned in the preceding verse (see xx. 5, xxiii. 14). Ber. rabba 31 assigns idolatry, impurity and bloodshed as the three causes of the Flood (חמסוה עון חמסוה גילוי עריות, חמסוה שפיכות דמים). Cf. Sanh. 74a: "R. Johanan says in the name of R. Simeon b. Jehozadak . . . If one says owing to the fornication wherein the Watchers against the law of their ordinances went a whoring after the daughters of men, and took themselves wives of all which they chose: and they made the beginning of uncleanness. 22. And they begat sons the Nâphîdim, and †they were all unlike†, and they devoured one another: and the Giants slew the Nâphil, and the Nâphil slew the Eljô, and the Eljô mankind, and one man another. 23. And every one sold himself to work iniquity and to shed much blood, and the earth was filled with iniquity. 24. And after this they sinned against the beasts and birds, and all that moves and walks on the earth: and much blood was shed on the earth, and every imagination and desire of men imagined vanity and evil continually. 25. And the Lord destroyed everything from off the face of the earth; because of the wickedness of their deeds, and because of the blood which they had shed in the midst of the earth He destroyed everything. 26. "And we were left, I and you, my sons, and everything that entered with us into the ark, and behold I see your works before me that ye do not walk in righteousness; for in the path of destruction ye have begun to walk, and ye are parting one from another, and are envious one of another, and (so it comes) that ye are not in harmony, my sons, each with his brother. 27. For I see, and behold the demons have begun (their) seductions against you and against your children, and now I fear on your behalf, that after my death ye will shed the blood of men upon the earth, and that ye, too, will be destroyed from the face of the earth. 28. For whoso sheddeth man's blood, and whoso eateth the blood of any flesh, will all be destroyed from the earth.

29. And there will not be left any man that eateth blood,
Or that sheddeth the blood of man on the earth,
Nor will there be left to him any seed or descendants
living under heaven ;

For into Sheol will they go,
And into the place of condemnation will they descend,
And into the darkness of the deep will they all be removed by a violent death.

30. There shall be no blood seen upon you of all the blood there shall be all the days in which ye have killed any beasts or cattle or whatever flies upon the earth, and work ye a good work to your souls by covering that which has been shed on the face of the earth. 31. And ye shall not be like him who eats with blood, but guard yourselves that none may

30. Upon you. By an easy emendation we could read among you.

Covering that which has been shed. This prescript of later legislation is here carried back to Noah : cf. Lev. xvii. 13 ; Ezek. xxiv. 7. We must be careful to render "covering" and not "burying." The Ethiopic word is dafana = καλύπτειν = ἔκρυψε and not qabara = θάπτειν = ἔταψεν. Singer (p. 200) bases one of his arguments for the Jewish Christian authorship of the book on the wrong rendering "burying." Chullin ii. 9 censures the latter as Jewish Christian.

31. Eats with blood. Lev. xix. 26.

eat blood before you: cover the blood, for thus have I been commanded to testify to you and your children, together with all flesh. 32. And suffer not the soul to be eaten with the flesh, that your blood, which is your life, may not be required at the hand of any flesh that sheds (it) on the earth. 33. For the earth will not be clean from the blood which has been shed upon it; for (only) through the blood of him that shed it will the earth be purified throughout all its generations. 34. And now, my children, hearken: work judgment and righteousness that ye may be planted in righteousness over the face of the whole earth, and your glory lifted up before my God, who saved me from the waters of the flood. 35. And behold, ye will go and build for yourselves cities, and plant in them all the plants that are upon the earth, and moreover all fruit-bearing trees. 36. For three years the fruit of everything that is eaten will not be gathered: and in the fourth year its fruit will be accounted holy [and they will offer the first-fruits], acceptable before the Most High God, who created heaven

32. Cf. Gen. ix. 4; Lev. xvii. 10, 11, 14.

33. The earth will not be clean, etc. See vi. 2 (note).

Saved me from . . . the flood. If we observe that in ver. 39 Enoch is called "the seventh in his generation" and that verses 20-39 are Noah's words, as "a preacher" of righteousness"; if we note further the words saved me from . . . the flood, we shall not unreasonably conclude that this book was known to the writer of 2 Peter ii. 5 "saved Noah the eighth person, a preacher of righteousness, bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly."

36. In this verse we ought, if the text were authentic, to have an interpretation of the law enunciated in Lev. xix. 23-24. According to this law of the Priests' Code the fruit of a tree was not to be used for the first three years after it was planted. "In the fourth year all the fruit thereof shall be holy, for giving praise unto the Lord" (פריו קדש הלוים ליהוה). It will be observed that our text follows Lev. xix. 24 very closely: "in the fourth year its fruit will be accounted holy" (b.c. a d "will be gathered"). The question now arises, what was to be done with the fruit of the fourth year? (a) If we omit the words in brackets, our text directs that all the fruit of the fourth year is to be accounted holy and offered to God. (b) If the bracketed words are genuine, the text directs that, while all the fruit is to be accounted holy, only the first-fruits are to be offered to God. In either case the words that follow elucidate

make ye the release so that ye release it in righteousness and uprightness, and ye shall be righteous, and all that you plant will prosper. 38. For thus did Enoch, the father of your father command Methuselah, his son, and Methuselah his son Lamech, and Lamech commanded me all the things which his fathers commanded him. 39. And I also will give you commandment, my sons, as Enoch commanded his son in the first further the same subject, and ordain that of the fruit of the fourth year the first-fruits are to be offered on the altar and the rest of it to be given to the priests. Next the words "offer . . . on the altar" seem to mean "offer as a burnt-offering" as in Lev. ii. 14-16, where the Israelite is bidden to burn the first-fruits of corn and oil on the altar.

But if the above interpretation is right, it does not agree with that of later Judaism. According to the latter it belonged to its owners and was to be consumed within the walls of Jerusalem. See Josephus, Ant. iv. 8. 19. In Sifre on Num. v. 10 it is decided that the priests had no share in the fruits of the fourth year. Something of the same nature may be implied in Ps.-Jon. on Lev. xix. 24, where the fruit of the fourth year is said to be קִנְיֵי תוֹשְׁבֵיָהּ בְּהָרָה. Beer (Das Buch der Jubiläen, p. 52) writes that the Samaritans, the Caraites and Ibn Ezra held the view set forth in the text. In any case, the teaching of our text does not diverge from that of later Judaism as much as the various regulations on this subject in the different codes of the Pentateuch (see Hastings, Bible Dict. ii. 10-11).

be rendered "so that they offer," but the context is against this.

37. And in the fifth year. At the close of these words I have marked a lacuna. The text should have proceeded to enunciate the right of eating the fruit of this year as in Lev. xix. 25, whereas it proceeds to speak of the year of release described in Deut. xv. 1, 9, that is, the seventh year; or else of the command in Exod. xxiii. 11; Lev. xxv. 2-7, to let the land lie fallow every seventh year. The verb hadaga is used in the translation of נָשָׂא in the above two senses of letting a field lie fallow (Exod. xxiii. 11) and of remitting a debt (Deut. xv. 2). But the context is concerned with the land. Hence we may render "let it (the land) rest so that ye let it rest." But as this is tautologous we may conclude that there is some corruption. Our text = ἀφήσετε αὐτήν ἵνα ἀφήτε αὐτήν. Here I take ἀφήτε to be a corruption of ἀνήτε. We should then have ἀφήσετε αὐτήν ἵνα ἀνήτε αὐτήν. This is a rendering though not an accurate one of נָשָׂא בְּשָׁנָה שְׁבִיעִית in Exod. xxiii. 11. Hence, instead of "make ye the release . . . release it," we should probably read: "(In the seventh year) ye will let it rest and lie fallow."

38. Thus did Enoch . . . command. The author attributes halachoth to Enoch. See note on xxi. 10.

Kâinâm. This name, which is not found in the Mass., Sam., Syr., Vulg. of Gen. xi. 13 nor yet in the Targums, appears in the LXX version of this verse and also in Luke iii. 36. In the Mass., Sam., etc. Salah is the son of Arphaxad. The same facts are stated in Gen. x. 24 and 1 Chron. i. 24. At the best, therefore, the tradition attested by our text, the LXX and Luke is not an ancient one. The motive for its insertion in the text is obvious from ii. 23 above. Without this name there would only have been twenty-one heads from Adam to Jacob. The same motive may have led to its insertion in the LXX.

3. He found a writing, etc. The wisdom

attributed by our author to the Watchers, is in Josephus (Ant. i. 2. 3) assigned to the children of Seth: Σοφίαν τε τὴν περὶ τὰ οὐράνια καὶ τὴν τούτων διακόσμησιν ἐπενόησαν. ὑπὲρ δὲ τοῦ μὴ διαφυγεῖν τοὺς ἀνθρώπους τὰ ὑψηλόμενα μηδὲ πρὶν εἰς γυνώσιν ἐλθεῖν φθαρῆναι . . . στήλας δύο ποιησάμενοι τὴν μὲν ἐκ πλίνθου τὴν ἑτέραν δὲ ἐκ λίθων ἀμφοτέρας ἐνέγραψαν τὰ εὐρημένα. J. Malala, Anon. Chron. p. 6, reproduces the matter contained in the above statement and adds: μετὰ δὲ τὸν κατακλυσμὸν Καῖνᾶν, ὁ υἱὸς Ἀρφαζᾶδ, συνεγράψατο τὴν ἀστρονομίαν, εὐρηκὼς τὴν τοῦ Σῆθ καὶ τῶν αὐτοῦ τέκνων ὀνομασίαν, ὡς εἴρηται, τῶν ἀστέρων ἐν πλακὶ λιθίνῃ γεγραμμένην. In Syncellus, i. 150, this event is recounted as follows: τῷ β' φ' ε' ἔτει Καῖνᾶν διοδεύων ἐν τῷ πεδίῳ εὗρε τὴν γραφὴν τῶν γιγάντων καὶ ἔκρυψε παρ' ἐαυτῷ. The words of Syncellus are reproduced in Cedrenus, i. 27, but with the following important addition which further illustrates our

And he wrote it down and said nothing regarding it; for he was afraid to speak to Noah about it lest he should be angry with him on account of it. 5. And in the thirtieth jubilee, in the second week, in the first year 1429 A.M. thereof, he took to himself a wife, and her name was Mēlkā, the daughter of Madai, the son of Japheth, and in the fourth year he begat a son, and called his name Shelah; for 1432 A.M. he said: "Truly I have been sent." 6. [And in the fourth year he was born], and Shelah grew up and took to himself a wife, and her name was Mû'ak, the daughter of Kêsêd, his father's brother, in the one and thirtieth jubilee, in the fifth 1499 A.M. week, in the first year thereof. 7. And she bare him a son in the fifth year thereof, and he called his name Eber: and he took unto himself a wife, and her name was 'Azûrâd, the 1503 A.M.

9, 10. This secret and unauthorized division of the earth is followed by a formal and authoritative one made by Noah in the presence of an angel, and subscribed to by his sons with an oath binding on their descendants. On this subject Beer (Buch der Jubiläen, p. 33) quotes Pirke R. Eliezer, ch. 24. This device of the author in some respects anticipates the Social Contract of Rousseau, but the objects are different. The theory in our text makes it clear that there must have been current in the second cent. B.C. religious and moral objections to the Hebrew invasion of Palestine and the slaughter of the Canaanites which accompanied it. This scheme of an ancestral compact approved by God and accepted as obligatory for succeeding generations is an attempt to obviate such objections, and to show that in reality the true transgressors were not Israel but the Canaanites, and that Israel in seizing Palestine were but resuming possession of what was their own; for the Canaanites had settled in Palestine, although this country had fallen by lot to Shem and his descendants (see ix. 14, 15, x. 29-34 and notes in loc.). By mutual consent, moreover, a curse had been invoked on any one who should break this covenant as well as destruction on him and on his seed. Cf. Epiphan. Haer. lxvi. 84 (II. ii. p. 542, Oehler): οὐκ οἶδεν ὁ ἰδιώτης ὅτι τὴν ἰδίαν γῆν ἀπέκλησαν διηρπασμένην ἀπ' αὐτῶν καὶ ἐξεδικήθη τὰ μεταξὺ ἀλλήλων γινόμενα ἐν ὄρφῃ ἀληθείας καὶ ὀρκῷ. Hence when Israel invaded Palestine and drove out the Canaanites they were simply recovering their own possessions. Cf. Syncellus, i. 83-84: νεωτερίσας ὁ τοῦ Χάμ υἱὸς Χαναὰν ἐπέβη τοῖς ὀρίοις τοῦ Σὴμ καὶ κατώκησεν ἐκεῖ παραβὰς τὴν ἐντολὴν Νῶε σὺν τοῖς ἐξ αὐτοῦ γενομένοις ἔθνεσιν ἐπτά, Ἀμορραίοις, Χετταίοις, Φερεζαίοις, Εὐαίοις, Γεργεσαίοις, 'Ιεβουσαίοις καὶ Χανααίοις, οὓς διὰ Μωϋσέως καὶ 'Ιησοῦ ἐξωλόθρευσεν ὁ θεὸς καὶ κατὰ τινὰς καιροὺς διὰ τῶν κριτῶν ἀπέδωκε τοῖς υἱοῖς 'Ισραὴλ τὴν πατρῶαν γῆν . . .

three sons were to take in possession, and they reached forth their hands, and took the writing out of the bosom of Noah, their father. 12. And there came forth on the writing as Shem's lot the middle of the earth which he should take as an inheritance for himself and for his sons for the generations of eternity, from the middle of the mountain range of Râfâ, from the mouth of the water from the river

12-21. Shem's lot. It is impossible to define exactly the limits of Shem's portion. The text is at times indefinite and no doubt corrupt; but even if we had the original before us many obscurities would still remain, owing to the vague and inaccurate geographical ideas of the time. The boundaries of Shem's portion are defined in verses 12-16 and the countries embraced within them in ver. 21, and ix. 2-6, 13^b. Since there is some hope of understanding our author's ideas as to the countries allotted to Shem, we shall confine our attention in the main to this question, and supplement the evidence of the text by citations from Epiphanius and Syncellus which are based upon it. We shall also make occasional use of the statements of Josephus on this head as well as of the Chronicles of Jerahmeel.

First of all Shem's portion is said to include (ver. 21) the countries of Eden, and of the Red Sea, of Bashan, Lebanon, Elam, Asshur, Babel, Susa, Media, India, the mountains of Sanir and Amana, and the islands of Kaftur. To this list ix. 2-6 adds the waters of Dedan, the mountains of Mebrî and Elâ and the land of Arârâ (? Ararat). Finally in ix. 13^b there are the islands of Kamâturi. Now, if we turn to Epiphanius, Ancorat. cxii. (Dindorf's ed. i. 215), we find that he defines Shem's portion as extending from Persia and Bactria to India, to Rhinocurura which is between Egypt and Palestine (τῷ μὲν Σῇμ . . . ὑπέπεσεν ὁ κλῆρος ἀπὸ Περσίδος καὶ Βάκτρων ἕως Ἰνδικῆς ἕως τῆς χώρας Πινोकουρούρων). The same statement is made in the Chronicon Paschale (i. 53) and in Syncellus (i. 82), though in fuller form in the latter (Σῇμ . . . ἔδωκεν ἀπὸ Περσίδος καὶ Βάκτρων ἕως Ἰνδικῆς μῆκος, πλάτος δὲ ἀπὸ Ἰνδικῆς ἕως Πινोकουρούρων τῆς Αἰγύπτου, ἤτοι τὰ ἀπὸ ἀνατολῆς ἕως μέρους τῆς μεσημβρίας, τήν τε Συρίαν καὶ Μῆδειαν καὶ ποταμὸν διορίζοντα αὐτοῦ τὰ ὄρια τὸν Εὐφράτην). Cedrenus (i. 23) reproduces this passage. The Chronicles of Jerahmeel xxxi. 2 give practically the same delimitations: "Shem, the eldest, chose his portion in the land of 'Asya, that is, the land of Persia from Bactris to Endiana, from the Persian river to the Ocean in the west and the whole Rînôs." These definitions include for the most part the countries enumerated in our text above as well as in Josephus, Ant. i. 6. 4, but they hardly explain the statement in viii. 12 that Shem's portion extended to the river Don and the Rhipaeen mountains. Now a list of countries filling up this larger area is given in Epiphanius (Adv. Haer. II. ii. p. 544 [Haer. lxxv. 83], ed. Oehler): τῷ δὲ Σῇμ ὑπέπεσεν ὁ κλῆρος πρὸς πλάτος, ἡ Παλαιστίνη καὶ Φοινίκη καὶ Κοίλη, Κομμαγήνη, Κιλικία, Καππαδοκία, Γαλατία, Παφλαγονία, Θράκη, Εὐρώπη, Ῥοδόπη, Λαζία, Ἰβηρία, Κασπία, Καρδυνέα, ἄχρι τῆς Μηδίας πρὸς βορρᾶν. ἐντεῦθεν οὗτος ὁ κλῆρος διορίζει τὸν Ἰάφεθ τὰ πρὸς βορρᾶν. But Thrace, Rhodope and probably Europa are here wrongly assigned to Shem.

12. The middle of the earth. Palestine according to Ezek. xxxviii. 12 (cf. also v. 5; Eth. Enoch xxvi. 1) was the navel (נוֹרֵם, ὀμφαλός) of the earth. Cf. viii. 19 of our text. The idea reappears in Rabbinic Hebrew. Singer (p. 68) quotes Joma 54^b; Sanhedrin 37^a; Pesikta Rabb. x. in Tanch. on Lev. xix. 23, כֵּן אֶרֶץ יִשְׂרָאֵל כְּבוֹר שֶׁל עוֹלָם וְיוֹשְׁלִים בְּאֶרֶץ יִשְׂרָאֵל.

Râfâ. This range is no doubt the Rhipaeen mountains which ancient geographers placed in the northern parts of Europe and Asia or in other

Tînâ, and his portion goes towards the west through the midst of this river, and it extends till it reaches the water of the abysses, out of which this river goes forth and pours its waters into the sea Mê'at, and this river flows into the great sea. And all that is towards the north is Japheth's, and all that is towards the south belongs to Shem. 13. And it extends till it reaches Kârâsô: this is in the bosom of the tongue which looks towards the south. 14. And his portion extends along the great sea, and it extends in a straight line till it reaches the west of the tongue which looks towards the south; for this sea is named the tongue of the Egyptian Sea. 15. And it turns from here towards the south towards the mouth of the great sea on the shore of cases appear to have identified with the Ural mountains. The Tanais or Don is placed by our author in their neighbourhood. A son of Peleg is so named in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel xxvii. 5.

Tînâ. The Tanais or Don. This river is said to spring from "the waters of the abysses."

Mê'at. The Maeotis or Sea of Azov.

13-14. These two verses should describe the western boundary.

13. Kârâsô. Dillmann identifies this place with the Chersonese. But if it is connected, as it seems to be, with "the tongue (i.e. gulf) which looks towards the south," which in ver. 14 is defined as "the tongue of the Egyptian Sea," this identification cannot be right. I am inclined to believe that in Kârâsô we have the latter part of the word Ῥινωκοροῦρα, which lies on the western boundary of Shem. For if we turn to the quotations from Epiphanius and Syncellus in the note on 12-21 we find that the portion of Shem is said to extend "from India to Rhinocurura in Egypt." This place furthermore is situated on the frontier of Ham's portion according to Epiphanius and the Chronicles of Jerahmeel. Thus in Adv. Haer. II. ii. 84 of the former, Ham's African dominions extend ἀπὸ Ῥινωκοροῦρων ἄχρι Γαδελρων: and in xxxi. 2 of the latter, "from Rinôs as far as Gadaira." In this last quotation

we have another abbreviation of the long name Rhinocurura. It will be observed, indeed, that our text makes Shem's portion extend westward as far as the mouths of the Gihon (Nile), so that later writers have diverged somewhat from their primal authority. Ῥινωκοροῦρα is used by the LXX in translating נַחַל מִצְרַיִם, i.e., "the torrent of Egypt," a town on the confines of Egypt and Palestine, in Is. xxvii. 12.

This is in the bosom of. These words cannot be right if either of the above interpretations of Kârâsô is sound.

Tongue. The word lesân may be rendered indifferently "promontory" (of the land) or "bay" or "gulf" (of the sea).

Tongue which looks towards the south. This phrase is repeated and defined in the next verse.

14. Tongue which looks towards the south. This may mean the promontory which runs out into the Red Sea on which Mt. Sinai is situated.

The tongue of the Egyptian Sea. This is the Gulf of Aqaba at the north of the Red Sea. Our text is the literal equivalent of Is. xi. 15, לְשׁוֹן יַם מִצְרַיִם, as Littmann has observed.

15-16. These two verses should describe mainly the southern, eastern, and northern-eastern boundaries.

15. The word Samên which is rendered "south" can also be rendered "north"—a later meaning of the word.

(its) waters, and it extends to the west to 'Afrâ, and it extends till it reaches the waters of the river Gihon, and to the south of the waters of Gihon, to the banks of this river. 16. And it extends towards the east, till it reaches the Garden of Eden, to the south thereof, [to the south] and from the east of the whole land of Eden and of the whole east, it turns to the †east,† and proceeds till it reaches the east of the mountain named Râfâ, and it descends to the bank of the mouth of the river Tînâ. 17. This portion came forth by lot for Shem and his sons, that they should possess it for ever unto his generations for evermore. 18. And Noah rejoiced that this portion came forth for Shem and for his sons, and he remembered all that he had spoken with his mouth in prophecy; for he had said:

And may the Lord dwell in the dwelling of Shem.”

19. And he knew that the Garden of Eden is the holy of holies, and the dwelling of the Lord, and Mount

West to 'Afrâ (c d). b reads “to the west of 'Afrâ.” ‘Afrâ seems to be Africa in its early limited sense.

Gihon. Eth. has Gijôn, i.e., the Gihon, one of the four rivers of Paradise (Gen. ii. 13). According to our text (viii. 23) it flows to the south of the Garden of Eden. This river compassed “the whole land of Cush.” Whether the Cushites are the Kassî of the cuneiform inscriptions or the Ethiopians does not concern us here, though the identification of the Gihon and Nile may have arisen from a confusion of the two countries. Syncellus, i. 89, speaks of two distinct countries named Ethiopia: Αἰθιοπία ἡ βλέπουσα κατὰ Ἰνδοῦς πρὸς εὐρόνοτον, ἄλλη Αἰθιοπία πρὸς νότον, ὅθεν ἐκπορεύεται ὁ Νεῖλος ποταμός. Our author undoubtedly identifies the Nile with the Gihon. So Syncellus (p. 82) interprets this passage, τὸν Νεῖλον, ὃς καὶ Γειῶν . . . λέγεται. Γήων is used as a rendering of גִּיחֹן, i.e., the Nile in Sirach xxiv. 27: see also Jer. ii. 18.

16. South. Better translate “north.” See note on ver. 15.

[To the south]. Bracketed as ditto-graphy.

It turns to the †east†. We should expect “to the west.” I have omitted “and” before “it turns.” The boundary line now returns to the river Don whence it started in ver. 12.

18. See vii. 11. God dwells in the dwellings of Shem: the three most holy places belong to Shem.

19. In iv. 26 above we have seen that there are four holy places in the earth: from the present verses we learn that three of these are in Shem's portion. The fourth place, therefore, must either have been in Japheth's or Ham's portion. Either therefore the Mount of the East may be regarded as Ararat in Japheth's portion, or as the great mountain in the south-east (cf. Eth. En. xxiv. 3, xxv. 3), which would probably belong to Ham's portion. See also iv. 26 note. The latter mountain is the chief in a range of mountains of fire (Eth. En. xviii. 9, xxiv. 1), and such a range belongs to Ham's portion: see ver. 22.

Sinai the centre of the desert, and Mount Zion—the centre of the navel of the earth: these three were created as holy places facing each other. 20. And he blessed the God of gods, who had put the word of the Lord into his mouth, and the Lord for evermore. 21. And he knew that a blessed portion and a blessing had come to Shem and his sons unto the generations for ever—the whole land of Eden and the whole land of the Red Sea, and the whole land of the east, and India, and on the Red Sea and the mountains thereof, and all the land of Bashan, and all the land of Lebanon and the islands of Kaftûr, and all the mountains of Sanîr and 'Amânâ, and the mountains of Asshur in the north, and all the land of Elam, Asshur, and Bâbêl, and Sûsân and Mâ'êdâi, and all the mountains of Ararat, and all the region beyond the sea, which is beyond the mountains of Asshur towards the north, a blessed and spacious land, and all that Navel of the earth. See note on ver. 12.

21. A blessed portion. Cf. Syncellus, p. 83, (Σήμ) τὰς ἐξαιρέτους τῶν παρ' αὐτοῦ εὐλογιῶν ἐκκληρώσατο ὡς καὶ ἐν τῇ Γενέσει φέρεται. On the countries mentioned in this ver. see note on 12-21.

Bashan. In Eth. Bâsâ.

Islands of Kaftûr. This is Caphtor the proper name of a country in Jer. xlvii. 4; Amos ix. 7. The plural is used of its inhabitants in Gen. x. 14; Deut. ii. 23. In Gen. x. 14 these are taken to be the Cappadocians in the Syr., Onk., and the Jon. and Jer. Targums; also in Amos ix. 7 in the LXX, Syr., Vulg., Targ.-Jon.; also in Jer. xlvii. 4 in the Syr., Jon. Targ., Vulg.; also in Deut. ii. 23 in the LXX, Syr., Onk., Vulg., Jon.-Targ. There are thus some grounds for regarding Kaftûr as equivalent to Cappadocia in this text, and this view may be confirmed by the passage in Epiphanius which includes Cappadocia in the portion of Shem; see quotation in note on viii. 12-21. On the other hand if we take the words "islands of Kaftûr" as a correct translation of the original (probably כַּפְתֹּר), the phrase may denote the island of Crete. Kamâtûrî in ix. 13 may be a corruption of Kaftûr. Modern exegesis has taken the scriptural Caphtor to be Cilicia, Cyprus, Crete, or Coptos, a city in the upper Thebaid (see Encyc. Bib. on "Caphtor").

Sanîr and 'Amânâ. Cf. ix. 4. These names may be derived from Cant. iv. 8. Sanîr is the Biblical Senir in Deut. iii. 9; Ezek. xxvii. 5. In Deut. iii. 9 it is said to be the Amoritish name for Hermon. Sanîru occurs in the cuneiform inscriptions (see Bertholet on Ezekiel xxvii. 5). 'Amânâ may belong to the range of the Antilibanus or be Mt. Amanus in northern Syria. Josephus (Ant. i. 6. 1) and the Chronicles of Jeralhmeel (xxx. 3. 5) favour the latter view.

Elam. The name of Shem's eldest son. The country is the Assyrian Elamtu, and is "nearly equivalent to the Susiana and Elymais of the Greeks" (Encyc. Bib. ii. 1253). Sûsân, which is mentioned presently, was its capital, or it may stand for Susiana.

Mâ'êdâi, i.e. Media. See x. 35.

is in it is very good. 22. And for Ham came forth the second portion, beyond the Gihon towards the south to the right of the Garden, and it extends towards the south and it extends to all the mountains of fire, and it extends towards the west to the sea of 'Atêl and it extends towards the west till it reaches the sea of Mâ'ûk—that (sea) into which †everything which is not destroyed descends†. 23. And it goes forth towards the north to the limits of Gâdîr, and it goes forth to the coast of the waters of the sea to the waters of the great sea till it draws near to the river Gihon, and goes along the river Gihon till it reaches the right of the Garden of Eden. 24. And this is the land which came forth for Ham as the portion which he was to occupy for ever for himself and his sons unto their generations for ever. 25. And for Japheth

22-24. Ham's portion. This portion embraces all Africa from the mouths of the Nile westward and southward and certain parts of Asia, which are vaguely defined in viii. 23, ix. 1, imperfectly in Epiphan. Ανεορατ. cxii.: Χὰμ δὲ τῷ δευτέρῳ ἀπὸ τῆς αὐτῆς 'Ρινοκουρούρων ἕως Γαδείρων τὰ πρὸς νότον: and in Syncellus, 82: Χὰμ δὲ τῷ δευτέρῳ . . . ἔδωκε τὰ πρὸς νότον καὶ Λίβαν καὶ μέρος τῆς δύσεως ἀπὸ 'Ρινοκουρούρων τῆς Αἰγύπτου, Αἰθιοπίας, καὶ Αἰγυπτίου καὶ Λιβύης, 'Αφρικῆν καὶ Μαυριτανίαν ἕως 'Ηρακλείων στηλῶν ἕτοι ἕως τοῦ δυτικοῦ καὶ Λιβυκοῦ 'Ωκεανοῦ, ποταμὸν διορίζοντα τὸν Νεῖλον, ὃς καὶ Γεῖων . . . λέγεται, for both these passages omit the countries belonging to Ham in Asia. In Epiphan. Adv. Haer. II. ii. 544 (Haer. lxvi. 84), however, these are given very fully: ὑπέπεσεν ὁ κλῆρος ἀπὸ 'Ρινοκουρούρων ἄχρι Γαδείρων, Αἰγυπτίου ἔχων καὶ Μαρειανήν καὶ 'Αμμῶνα, Λιβύην τε καὶ Μαρμαρίδα, Πεντάπολιν, Μακάτην, Μακρόνην τε καὶ Λεπτημάγην, Σύρτιν, Μαυριτανίαν, ἄχρι τῶν 'Ηρακλεωτικῶν στηλῶν λεγομένων καὶ τῆς ἔσω Γαδείρης ταῦτα τὰ πρὸς νότον ἀπὸ δὲ 'Ρινοκουρούρων τὰ πρὸς ἀνατολήν, τήν τε 'Ιδοιμαίαν καὶ Μαδιαντίν, τήν τε 'Αλαβαστρῖτιν, καὶ 'Ομηρίτιν, καὶ 'Αξωμίτιν, καὶ Βούγειαν, καὶ Λίβαν, ἄχρι τῆς τῶν Βάκτρων χώρας. ὁ δὲ αὐτὸς

κλῆρος διορίζει ἀνὰ μέσον τοῦ Σήμ τὰ πρὸς ἀνατολήν. According to the Chronicles of Jerahmeel xxxi. 2 "Ham took his portion in the land of Afriqia which comprises Aram, Hamath, and the mountain of Lebanon . . . until the Red Sea and the Sea of Philistia, from Rînôs as far as Gadaira." See also for Josephus' views, Ant. i. 6. 2.

22. Gihon. Eth. has Gîjôn. See note on viii. 15.

To the right, i.e. to the south.

Mountains of fire. On certain fiery mountains see Eth. Enoch xviii. 6-9, xxiv. 1-3.

'Atêl. The Atlantic.

Mâ'ûk. This sea or ocean lies in the extreme west: cf. ver. 26. Is the word a distortion of 'Ωκεανός, the Great Ocean Stream?

Everything which is not destroyed descends (a b). c d = "everything perishable descends." What is required probably is: "if anything descends into it, it perishes."

23. Gâdîr, i.e. Gades, Cadiz.

Goes along the river Gihon. I have added 'ba' before Gihon; for the writer could not say that the Nile flowed towards the Garden of Eden.

25-29^a. Japheth's portion—Northern Asia, Europe, and five great islands. This portion, which is further described in ix. 7-13, embraces the countries north came forth the third portion beyond the river Tînâ to the north of the outflow of its waters, and it extends north-easterly to the whole region of Gog and to all the country east thereof. 26. And it extends northerly to the north, and it extends to the mountains of Qêlt towards the north, and towards the sea of Mâ'ûk, and it goes forth to the east of Gâdîr as far as the region of the waters of the sea. 27. And it extends until it approaches the west of Fârâ and it returns towards 'Afêrâg, and it extends easterly to the waters of the sea of Mê'at. 28. And it extends to the region of the river Tînâ in a north-easterly direction until it approaches the boundary of its waters towards the mountain Râfâ, and it turns round towards the north. 29. This is the land which came forth for Japheth and his sons as the portion of his inheritance which he should possess for himself and his sons, for their generations for ever; five great islands, and a great land in the north. 30. But it is cold, of Shem and Ham's portions from Media to Rhinocurra in Asia and to Gades in Europe. Epiphanius (Ancorat. cxii.) describes it brietly: 'Ιάφεθ τῷ τρίτῳ ἀπὸ Μηδείας ἕως Γαδείρων καὶ Ρινοκουρούρων τὰ πρὸς Βορρᾶν. Cf. Chronicon Pasch. i. 46. A fuller account from a later standpoint is given by Syncellus (p. 83): 'Ιάφεθ . . . (ἔδωκεν) ἀπὸ Μηδείας τὰ πρὸς ἄρκτον καὶ δυσμὰς ἕως Γαδείρων καὶ Βρεττανικῶν νήσων, Ἀρμενίαν καὶ Ἰβηρίαν, Πόντον, Κόλχους καὶ τὰς κατόπιν χώρας καὶ νήσους ἕως Ἰταλίας καὶ Γαλλικῆς, Σπανικῆς, τε καὶ Κελτιβηρίας καὶ Λυσιτανῶν. Practically the same description of Japheth's province is given by Epiphanius (Adv. Haer. II. ii. 544 [Haer. lxvi. 84]): οὗτος ὁ κλῆρος (τοῦ Σῆμ) διορίζει τὸν Ἰάφεθ τὰ πρὸς Βορρᾶν (i.e., Japheth's province in Asia is bounded by Shem's on the south): πρὸς δὲ τὴν δύσιν ἀπὸ τῆς Εὐρώπης ἄχρι τῆς Ἰσπανίας καὶ Βριττανίας, ἐκείθεν τε τὰ παρακείμενα ἔθνη, Ἑῆτες καὶ Δαῦνεις, Ἰάπυγες, Κάλαβροι, Λατῖνοι, Ὀπικοί, Μάγαρδες, ἕως διακατοχῆς τῆς Σπανίας, καὶ τῆς Γαλλίας, τῆς τε τῶν Σκόττων καὶ Φράγγων ἄνω χώρας. An elaborate account of Japheth's province appears in Josephus, Ant. i. 6. 1, and in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel xxxi. 4-5. The latter is dependent in some respects on the former.

25. The boundaries of Japheth's portion in Asia.

Gog. The country of Gog is in northern Asia. Gog is identified with the Scythians by Josephus (Ant. i. 6. 1) and the Chronicles of Jerahmeel (xxx. 4).

26-28. The boundaries of Japheth's portion in Europe.

26. Qêlt. These are probably the Celts.

Mâ'ûk. See on ver. 22.

27. Fârâ (cd), b Ferâ, a Ferêg. Fârâ may be Africa. See ver. 15.

Afêrâg. This may be Phrygia. This country according to Josephus (Ant. i. 6. 1) and the Chronicles of Jerahmeel xxxi. 5 belonged to Japheth.

29. Five great islands. See note on ix. 13. To these five may belong Cyprus, Sicily, Sardinia, Corsica. Five islands in the Great Sea are mentioned in Eth. Enoch lxxvii. 8.

and the land of Ham is hot, and the land of Shem is neither hot nor cold, but it is of blended cold and heat.

Subdivision of the three portions amongst the grandchildren of Noah. Amongst Ham's children, 1: Shem's 2-6: Japheth's, 7-13. Oath taken by Noah's sons, 14-15.

IX. And Ham divided amongst his sons, and the first portion came forth for Cush towards the east, and to the west of him for Mizraim, and to the west of him for Put, and to the west of him [and to the west thereof] on the sea for Canaan. 2. And Shem also divided amongst his sons, and the first portion came forth for Elam and his sons, to the east of the river Tigris till it approaches the east, the whole land of India, and on the Red Sea on its coast, and the waters of Dêdân, and all the mountains of Mebrî and 'Êlâ, and all the land of Sûsân and all that is on the side of Pharnâk to the Red Sea and the river Tînâ. 3. And for Asshur came forth the second portion, all the land of Asshur and Nineveh

30. Land of Ham is hot. Cf. Epiphan. Haer. lxi. 85: Χαναάν δὲ πλεονέκτης ὦν ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ Χάμ ἐπῆλθε τῇ Παλαιστηνῶν γῇ . . . καταλείψας τὸν ἴδιον κλῆρον διὰ τὸ δοκεῖν εἶναι κανυματινόν.

IX. 1. Cf. Gen. x. 6.

Cush. Eth. has Ques. The country is no doubt Ethiopia. See also Josephus and the Chronicles of Jerahmeel, in loc.

Mizraim. Eth. has Mêsîrêm. He receives מִצְרַיִם or Egypt.

Put. Eth. has Phûd. So also in LXX Φούδ, i.e. פִּיז. The country of Phûd is Libya, lying west of Egypt. See Josephus and Jerahmeel.

To the west of him . . . on the sea for Canaan. Thus Canaan's portion extended from Libya to the Atlantic on the west. See x. 28-29. The bracketed words are a dittography.

2. Elam's portion—from the Tigris to the utmost confines of India, the countries bordering on the Red Sea and running northward to Pontus and the Don.

The east, the whole land of India (c d). ab read "to the east of the whole land of India." But India was in Shem's portion. See viii. 21.

Waters of Dêdân. Dedan is a son of Raamah, one of the sons of Cush (Gen. x. 7) or of Jokshan, son of Keturah (Gen. xxv. 3). The Dedanites are generally taken to be a commercial people dwelling in Arabia, possibly on the north-west. See Encyc. Bibl. i. 1053.

Mebrî (b). a Mazbâra.

'Êlâ (b c d). a 'Êlâm.

Pharnâk. Can this be Pharnacia on the coast of Pontus? On the countries falling to Shem's portion in Asia Minor and to the north see quotation from Epiphanius (Adv. Haer.) in note on viii. 12-21.

and Shinar and to the border of India, and it ascends and skirts the river. 4. And for Arpachshad came forth the third portion, all the land of the region of the Chaldees to the east of the Euphrates, bordering on the Red Sea, and all the waters of the desert close to the tongue of the sea which looks towards Egypt, all the land of Lebanon and Sanîr and 'Amânâ to the border of the Euphrates. 5. And for Aram there came forth the fourth portion, all the land of Mesopotamia between the Tigris and the Euphrates to the north of the Chaldees to the border of the mountains of Asshur and the land of 'Arârâ. 6. And there came forth for Lud the fifth portion, the mountains of Asshur and all appertaining to them till it reaches the Great Sea, and till it reaches the east of Asshur his brother. 7. And Japheth also divided the land of his inheritance amongst his sons. 8. And the first portion came forth for Gomer to the east from the north side to the river Tînâ; and in the north there came forth for Magog all the inner portions of the north until it reaches to the sea of Mê'at. 9. And for Madai came forth as his portion that he should possess from the west of his two brothers to the islands, and to the coasts of the islands. 10. And for Javan came forth the fourth

And skirts the river=wawadafa falaga, emended from wadafâ falag of abâ, which is untranslatable. If wadafâ were the name of a river we might emend falag into falaga and translate: "to the river Wadafâ."

4. Arpachshad's portion. See further ix. 13 for the islands allotted to him. In Josephus, Ant. i. 6. 4, the descendants of Arpachshad are identified with the Chaldees. Eth. has 'Arphâxed.

Tongue of the sea, etc. I don't know what is meant here.

Sanîr and 'Amânâ. See note on viii. 21.

5. The Syrians.

'Arârâ, i.e. Ararat. See viii. 21.

6. Lud's portion extends from the west coast of Asia Minor to the east of Asshur. Josephus, Ant. i. 6. 4, says the descendants of Lud were the Lydians.

8. Magog. Only Gog is spoken of in viii. 25.

9. The north-western portions of Europe fell to Madai's lot, but he was dissatisfied with it (see x. 35) and begged a portion of Shem's lot. Madai's lot would seem to embrace Britain and Ireland. The former is mentioned in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel (xxxi. 5), Epiphanius and Syncellus; see notes on viii. 25-29^a.

10. Javan. Eth. has 'Îjô'evân. Javan denotes properly Ionia, the Greek colony in Asia Minor, and is used in this limited sense in Is. lxvi. 19; Ezek. xxvii. 13. This name also de portion every island and the islands which are towards the border of Lud. 11. And for Tubal there came forth the fifth portion in the midst of the tongue which approaches towards the border of the portion of Lud to the second tongue, to the region beyond the second tongue unto the third tongue. 12. And for Meshech came forth the sixth portion, all the region beyond the third tongue till it approaches the east of Gâdîr. 13. And for Tiras there came forth the seventh portion, four great islands in the midst of the sea, which reach to the portion of Ham [and the islands of Kamâtûrî came out by lot for the sons of Arpachshad as his inheritance]. 14. And thus the sons of Noah divided notes the Graeco-Macedonian empire : Dan. viii. 21, x. 20, xi. 2. In our text it seems to embrace all the islands of the coast of Asia Minor, while in Josephus, Ant. i. 6. 1, it includes Ionia and all the Greeks.

Every island and the islands. We should expect rather "all the coast-lands and the island."

11. Tubal's (Eth. Tôbêl) portion seems to extend from Thrace to Italy. Josephus, Ant. i. 6. 1, identifies Tubal's descendants with the Iberes who lived in the Caucasus, and the Chronicles of Jerahmeel, xxxi. 5, identify them with the Iberi and Ispania (?). It is not clear what the three tongues of land are. Italy seems to be the third, Greece the second and possibly Thrace the first. The descendants of Tubal in Gen. x. 2 are identified with Tibareni in Pontus.

12. As Italy seems to be the third tongue, Meshech's portion extends from the north of Italy to Cadiz. Josephus, Ant. i. 6. 1, and the Chronicles of Jerahmeel, xxxi. 4, take the descendants of Meshech to be identified with the Cappadocians, but modern scholars with the Moschi who lived between the sources of the Phasis and Cyrus.

13. The descendants of Tiras (Eth. Tîrâs) seem to be the Tyrseni, a branch of the Pelasgians who lived by piracy on the coasts and islands of the Aegean Sea. Josephus, Ant. i. 6. 1, identifies them with the Thracians.

Four great islands. See on viii. 29.

[The islands of Kamâtûrî . . . as his inheritance]. I have bracketed these words as an interpolation. They are foreign to their present context, for it is dealing with the possessions of the sons of Japheth, and Arpachshad is a son of Shem. Furthermore, the phraseology "came out . . . for the sons of Arpachshad" is unusual. This phrase "the sons of" is used only in the case of Noah's three sons: viii. 17 "for Shem and his sons"; viii. 24 "for Ham . . . and his sons"; viii. 29 "for Japheth and his sons." But in connection with Noah's sixteen grandsons in chap. ix. it is not used. The grandson is mentioned in each case as the person to whom a certain province is allotted. On the other hand, the words may in some form have followed after ix. 4, which defines the possessions of Arpachshad. From viii. 21 we know that "the islands of Kaftûr" were in Shem's portion. Now these "islands of Kamâtûrî" may be the "islands of Kaftûr"; for Kamâtûrî could easily originate from Kaftûr.

14. Following our text Epiphanius, Anchorat. cxiv. (Dind. ed., vol. i. 217), writes τούτων τολυνν τῶν ἐθνῶν οὕτως ἐκ τῶν τριῶν υἱῶν τοῦ Νῶε γεγονότων καὶ τριχῇ τοῦ κόσμου τοῖς τρισὶν υἱοῖς διαμερισθέντος, ὡς προεῖπον, ὅρκος ἀπητήθη παρ' αὐτῶν ὑπὸ τοῦ πατρὸς μηδένα ἐπεμβαίνειν τῷ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ κλήρῳ, τὸν δὲ ὑπερβαίνοντα τὴν τοῦ ὅρκου διαταγὴν ἐξολοθρεύεσθαι ἐν τῷ ὅρκῳ καὶ πᾶν τὸ σπέρμα αὐτοῦ. X. 1. We have here another fragment of the lost Apocalypse of Noah. The former fragment we found in vii. 20-39. Of the present fragment a summary is preserved in Syncellus, i. 49, though, of course, as forming a genuine section of Jubilees. This summary gives the contents of verses 1-9. Καὶ γὰρ ἐν τῇ Μωϋσέως λεγομένη ἀποκαλύψει φέρεται περὶ αὐτῶν, ὅτι μετὰ τὸν κατακλυσμὸν τῷ βφπβ' ἔτει τοῦ κόσμου φθόνῳ κινούμενοι μετὰ θάνατον ἐπλάνησαν τοὺς υἱοὺς Νῶε. καὶ εὐξαμένον τοῦ Νῶε ἵνα ἀποστῶσιν ἀπ' αὐτῶν, ὁ κύριος ἐκέλευσε τῷ ἀρχαγγέλῳ Μιχαὴλ βαλεῖν αὐτοὺς εἰς τὴν ἄβυσσον ἄχρι ἡμέρας τῆς κρίσεως· ὁ δὲ διάβολος ἡτήσατο λαβεῖν μοῖραν ἀπ' αὐτῶν πρὸς πειρασμὸν τῶν ἀνθρώπων καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ τὸ δέκατον αὐτῶν κατὰ πρόσταξιν θείαν, ὥστε πειράζειν τοὺς ἀνθρώπους πρὸς δοκιμὴν τῆς ἐκάστου πρὸς θεὸν προαιρέσεως, τὰ δὲ λοιπὰ ἐννέα μέρη ἐβλήθη εἰς τὴν ἄβυσσον. But what is of still greater interest is the fact that in the Hebrew Book of Noah fragments of verses 1-2, 9-14 have been preserved from the Hebrew original. For this work the reader can consult Jellinek's Bet ha-Midrash, iv. 155-156, or my text of Jubilees, p. 179.

"God of the spirits of all flesh, who hast shown mercy unto me,
And hast saved me and my sons from the waters of the flood,
And hast not caused me to perish as Thou didst the sons of perdition;
For Thy grace has been great towards me,
And great has been Thy mercy to my soul;
Let Thy grace be lift up upon my sons,
And let not wicked spirits rule over them
Lest they should destroy them from the earth.

4. But do Thou bless me and my sons, that we may increase and multiply and replenish the earth. 5. And Thou knowest how Thy Watchers, the fathers of these spirits,

The unclean demons. These are the spirits which went forth from the Mamzerim or children of the angels and the daughters of men. See vii. 22; Eth. Enoch xiv.-xvi.

The unclean demons began . . . destroy them (so ab). cd omit "the children of." But Syncellus, i. 49, and the passage from the Hebrew Book of Noah (see my Eth. Text, p. 35, notes 17-19) show that instead of "the children of the sons" we should simply have "the sons." Under the word daqîqa (= "the children of") there may lie some corruption of the verb 'adqaqa, "to beat small" = לרכות, a corruption for להכות, "to slay." Now this verb is the last infinitive in the passage of the Hebrew Book of Noah (see below), and as the other three verbs in the Ethiopic text are literal equivalents of the preceding three infinitives in the same passage we may conclude that we have thus recovered the true text. The passage in question is: החלו רוחות הממזרים להתגרות בבני נח להשטות ולטעות ולהכות ולהכל = "And the spirits of the Mamzerim began to stir themselves against the sons of Noah, to lead astray and cause to err and to destroy and to slay." "Unclean demons" in our text is a good equivalent for "the spirits of the Mamzerim," though it is not a literal rendering. The Hebrew original of our text therefore = "The unclean demons began to lead astray and to make to err and to slay and to destroy the sons of Noah" (= החלו להשטות ולטעות ולהכות ולהכל). On the other hand the expression "sons' sons" recurs in verses 2, 3^b, and 5^b, so that the text of ab may be right.

acted in my day: and as for these spirits which are living, imprison them and hold them fast in the place of condemnation, and let them not bring destruction on the sons of thy servant, my God; for these are malignant, and created in order to destroy. 6. And let them not rule over the spirits of the living; for Thou alone canst exercise dominion over them. And let them not have power over the sons of the righteous from henceforth and for evermore." 7. And the Lord our God bade us to bind all. 8. And the chief of the spirits, Mastêmâ, came and said: "Lord, Creator, let some of them remain before me, and let them hearken to my voice, and do all that I shall say unto them; for if some of them are not left to me, I shall not be able to capacity they are designated as "angels of punishment," liii. 3, lvi. 1, lxii. 11, lxiii. 1, so also in our author. Thus the evil spirits under Mastêmâ (1) tempt men, lead them astray and blind them x. 2, 8, xlviii. 12, 16, and harden their hearts xlviii. 17. In xv. 31 it is actually stated that God put spirits in authority over men to lead them astray; see notes on xv. 31-32. Again (2) they accuse men of actual or alleged sins, xvii. 16, xlviii. 15, 18. Finally (3) they destroy those who have sinned, being created for this purpose, x. 2, 5. As angels of destruction they appear, xlviii. 2, in slaying the first-born in Egypt. In xlviii. 2 Mastêmâ seeks to slay Moses for failing to circumcise his son. These spirits seek to rule a man in order to destroy him, x. 3. But they cannot touch the righteous, x. 6; every breach of the law, however, exposes men to their malignant influence, xlviii. 2. Israel as such is God's own portion and is not subject to spirits of any kind, xv. 32, xvi. 18, xix. 28. From this high ethical conception our author falls away, no doubt under the influence of his authorities, in x. 12, 13, where, as in Tobit, magical methods are said to be effective against evil spirits. See further note on xlviii. 2.

execute the power of my will on the sons of men ; for these are for corruption and leading astray before my judgment, for great is the wickedness of the sons of men."

9. And He said : " Let the tenth part of them remain before him, and let nine parts descend into the place of condemnation." 10. And one of us He commanded that we should teach Noah all their medicines ; for He knew that they would not walk in uprightness, nor strive in righteousness.

11. And we did according to all His words : all the malignant evil ones we bound in the place of condemnation, and a tenth part of them we left that they might be subject before Satan on the earth. 12. And we explained to Noah all the medicines of their diseases, together with their seductions, how he might heal them with herbs of the earth.

13. And Noah wrote down all things in a book as we instructed him concerning every kind of medicine. Thus the evil spirits were precluded from (hurting) the sons of Noah. 14. And he gave all that he had written to Shem, his eldest son ; for he loved him exceedingly above all his sons. 15. And Noah slept with his fathers, and was buried

9. Cf. Hebrew Book of Noah : " And the angel did so and enclosed them in the house of judgment (בית המשפט). Only one-tenth did he permit to go to and fro on the earth before the prince of the Mastema to rule over the godless to smite them and to plague them with all manner of diseases." The angel according to this Hebrew book is Raphael, but according to Eth. Enoch x. 11-13 is Michael. Again, though according to our text only one-tenth of the demons are allowed to act with impunity to the day of judgment, in Eth. Enoch xv.-xvi., all the demons have this privilege.

So it is stated in the Hebrew Book of Noah, where there is a manifest paronomasia between רפואות and רפאל. Cf. Eth. Enoch x. 7 ; Tob. iii. 17, xii. 14, 15.

righteousness, wherein he was perfect. For Enoch's office was ordained for a testimony to the generations of the world, so that he should recount all the deeds of generation unto generation, till the day of judgment. 18. And in the three and thirtieth jubilee, in the first year in the second week, Peleg took to himself a wife, whose name was Lômânâ the daughter of Sînâ'ar, and she bare him a son in the fourth year of this week, and he called his name Reu; for he said: "Behold the children of men have become evil through the wicked purpose of building for themselves a city and a tower in the land of Shinar." 19. For they departed from the land of Ararat eastward to Shinar; for in his days they built the city and the tower, saying, "Go to, let us ascend thereby into heaven." 20. And they began to build, and in the fourth week they made brick with fire, and the bricks served them for stone, and the clay with which they cemented them together was asphalt which comes out of the sea, and out of the fountains of water in the land of Shinar. 21. And they built it: forty and three years were they building it; its breadth was 203 bricks, and the

Reu. Eth. has Râgaw = Παγαύ = רעו (Gen. xi. 18). It is obvious that our author thus derived Reu from רעו, "to be evil." There was a paronomasia in the original. "He called his name Râgau (רעו); for . . . the children of men had become evil," רעו. This derivation appears in the Onomasticon, p. 197, 27: 'Ραδν (i.e. 'Ρααύ) κακούμενος.

Made brick with fire; and the bricks served, etc. This passage appears to be the source of the Chronicles of Jerahmeel xxix. 2: "Come and let us make bricks . . . and let us burn them and each brick will be to us as a stone and the pitch for mortar." Cf. Joseph. Ant. i. 4. 3.

21. For the three slight emendations of the text in this verse see my text, pp. 36-37. The passage is found in Greek in the Catena of Nicephorus, i. 175: ἐπὶ μὲν ἔτη ἔμειναν οἰκοδομοῦντες. τὸ ὕψος, εὐλγὴ πῆχεις, καὶ δὺν παλεσταί (sic), τὸ πλάτος ἐπὶ σγ' πλίνθους. τῆς πλίνθου τὸ ὕψος, τρίτον μίᾱς πλίνθου. τὸ ἔκταμα τοῦ ἐνὸς τοίχου στάδιοι γ' καὶ τοῦ ἄλλου

And the Lord our God said unto us: "Behold, they are one people, and (this) they begin to do, and now nothing will be withholden from them. Go to, let us go down and confound their language, that they may not understand one another's speech, and they may be dispersed into cities and nations, and one purpose will no longer abide with them till the day of judgment." 23. And the Lord descended, and we descended with Him to see the city and the tower which the children of men had built. 24. And He confounded their language, and they no longer understood one another's speech, and they ceased then to build the city and the tower. 25. For this reason the whole land of Shinar is called Babel, because the Lord did there confound all the language of the children of men, and from thence they were dispersed into their cities, each according to his language

λ'. Euty chius (translated by Pococke, 1658, pp. 51, 52) has drawn upon our text in the following passage: Tres ergo annos lateribus conficiendis et coquendis insumpserunt: quorum singuli tredecim cubitos longi, decem lati, ac quinque alti essent; urbemque inter Tyrum et Babelem exstruxerunt orgyas longam tercentum et tredecim, latam centum quinquaginta unam: cujus muri alti orgyas quinquies mille quingentas triginta tres; lati triginta tres; turris autem orgyas decies mille alta; quibus exstruendis quadraginta annos insumpserunt. Cf. J. Malalas, p. 12; Glycas, p. 240. The clauses in brackets in the translation are derived from the Greek. Rös ch (p. 401) quotes the following passage respecting this tower from Weil's Biblische Legenden der Muselmänner, pp. 77-78: Der Thurm (Nimrod's) ward bis zu einer Höhe von 5000 Ellen gebaut . . . This forms Jerome's note on the name of the place of encampment Rissah (רִסָּה) in Num. xxxiii. 21, 22. In later Hebrew מִסָּה and מִסָּה are used as = stadium or race-course. "Overthrow" = dēqat = καταστροφή = הפכה. Observe the play of words not preserved in Eth.): "Overthrew it . . . and they called its name 'Overthrow'" = הפכו את שמו וקראו. . . . הפכה. This disagrees with its name "Babel" in Gen. xi. 9. According to Sanh. 109a one-third of the tower of Babel was burnt, one-third swallowed up in the earth, and one-third standing.

28. Ham's portion lay in the north of Africa. It is described in the next verse as lying in the west towards the sea, cf. ix. 1. The designation "land of the south" is a loose one. The word rendered "south" rightly means "north," but it is used occasionally in this wrong sense by Ethiopic scribes. See note on viii. 15.

29. This view is, I think, found only in Jubilees and the books dependent upon it. Palestine fell by lot to Arpachshad and north-west Africa (see ix. 1) to Canaan; but Canaan wrongfully seized Palestine: see Epiphanius, Anchorat. cxiv. p. 217 (ed. Dindorf): ἐπεὶ οὖν ἐν τῷ κλήρῳ Σῆμ ἡ Παλαιστίνη ὑπέπεσε καὶ πάντα τὰ πλησίον αὐτῆς, πλεονέκτης δὲ ὢν ὁ Χαναὰν υἱὸς Χάμ ἐπῆλθε τῇ Παλαιστίνῃ ὕστερον γῆ, τουτέστι τῇ Ἰουδαίᾳ, καὶ ἀφαρπάξει αὐτήν, ἐμακροθύμει δὲ ὁ θεός, διδοὺς χρόνους μετανοίας, ἵνα μετανοήσῃαν οἱ ἐκ τοῦ Χάμ καὶ ἀποδώσι τοῖς τοῦ Σῆμ τὴν ἰδίαν κληρουχίαν, ἐκείνοι δὲ οὐ μετενόουν, ἀλλ' ἤθελον τὸ μέτρον αὐτῶν πληρῶσαι. τότε ὁ θεὸς μετὰ πολλὰς ὕστερον γενεὰς δίκαιος ὢν ἐκδικεῖ τὴν παράβασιν τοῦ ὅρκου. οὕτω γὰρ ἔδει πληρωθῆναι τὸ Ἀμορραίων μέτρον. Cf. also Haer. lxvi. 85 (II. ii. 544); Syncellus, i. 83; Glycas, 242. The words of the last come very near our text: ὁ τοῦ Χάμ υἱὸς Χαναὰν ἰδὼν τὴν πρὸς τὸν Λίβανον γῆν ὅτι . . . ἐστὶν . . . κρείττων τῆς ἑαυτοῦ γῆς, τυραννικῶς καθήρπαξεν αὐτήν. the border of the sea. 30. And Ham, his father, and Cush and Mizraim, his brothers, said unto him : "Thou hast settled in a land which is not thine, and which did not fall to us by lot : do not do so ; for if thou dost do so, thou and thy sons will fall in the land and (be) accursed through sedition ; for by sedition ye have settled, and by sedition will thy children fall, and thou shalt be rooted out for ever. 31. Dwell not in the dwelling of Shem ; for to Shem and to his sons did it come by their lot. 32. Cursed art thou, and cursed shalt thou be beyond all the sons of Noah, by the curse by which we bound ourselves by an oath in the presence of the holy judge, and in the presence of Noah our father." 33. But he did not hearken unto them, and dwelt in the land of Lebanon from Hamath to the entering of Egypt, he and his sons until this day. 34. And for this reason that land is named Canaan. 35. And Japheth and his sons went towards the sea and dwelt in the land of their portion, and Madai saw the land of the sea and it did not please him, and he begged a (portion) from Elam and Asshur and Arpachshad, his wife's brother, and he dwelt in the land of Media, near to his wife's brother until this day. 36. And he called his dwelling-place, and the dwelling-place of his sons, Media, after the name of their father Madai.

30. Cf. Syncellus, i. 83-84 : μετὰ διακόσια ἔτη τῆς τελευτῆς Νῶε, νεωτερίσας ὁ τοῦ Χάμ υἱὸς Χαναὰν ἐπέβη τοῖς ὁρίοις τοῦ Σὴμ καὶ κατώκησεν ἐκεῖ. With the word "sedition" in the text compare νεωτερίσας in Syncellus.

33. Hamath. Eth. has 'Ēmâth (i.e., 'Ημάθ, המא) ; see xiii. 2. Hamath was the northern boundary of Israel (Num. xxxiv. 8 ; Judg. iii. 3, etc.). In 2 Chron. vii. 8 we have the phrase : "From the entering in of Hamath to the river of Egypt."

He is quoted in Catena Nicephori, i. 167 on Gen. ix. 27 : τί δὴ ποτε, καὶ κατοικησάτω ὁ Ἰάφεθ ἐν τοῖς σκηνώμασι τοῦ Σὴμ εἴρηται ; ὁρᾷς, ὅτι πάντα προφητεία ἦν διὰ προφάσεώς τινος, ἥ ἄνευ προφάσεως φανερομένη ; καὶ γὰρ μετὰ ταῦτα Μαδαῖ, τουτέστιν ὁ Μῆδος, τοῦ Ἰάφεθ ὦν υἱός, τὸ κάλλιστον τῶν τοῦ Σὴμ οἰκήσεων κατέσχε τὴν Μηδίαν, μέρος οὐκ ἐλάχιστον τῆς τῶν Περσῶν γῆς.

2-6. The corruption of mankind which our author ascribes to the period of Serug is by later writers assigned to the age of Enos, the son of Seth: see iv. 12 note. Some reflection of our text appears in Epiphanius, Adv. Haer. i. 1. 6: Φαλὲκ δὲ γεννᾷ τὸν Παγοῦ . . . καὶ ἤρξατο εἰς ἀνθρώπους ἡ εἰδωλολατρία τε καὶ ὁ Ἑλληνισμὸς . . . οὕτω δὲ ἐν ξοάνοις καὶ ἐν τορείαις λίθων ἢ ξύλων ἢ ἀργυροτεύκτων . . . μόνον δὲ διὰ χρωμάτων καὶ εἰκόνων ἢ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου διάνοια ἐαυτῇ ἐφηύρατο τὴν κακίαν: also in Cedrenus, i. 47: ἐπὶ τούτου (Σηροῦχ) οἱ ἀνθρώποι τὸν κατ' ἀλλήλων ἀνέξήσαντες τύφον στρατηγούς τε ἑαυτοῖς κατεστήσαντο καὶ βασιλεῖς. καὶ τότε πρῶτως πολεμικὰ κατασκευάσαντες ὅργανα πολεμεῖν ἀλλήλους ἐνῆρξαντο. See also Book of Adam and Eve (Malan), iii. 24: Ps.-Philo, Ant. bibl. Lib. p. 45.

2. Individuals began to exalt themselves, etc. So MSS. The emendation in my text is not necessary.

3. 'Ûr, the son of Kêsêd. We have here an attempt to explain the phrase Ur of the Chaldees (אור כשדים) through reference to Ur and his father Kêsêd.

'Arô. Corrupt for Ura or Ur.

4. And they made for themselves molten images, and they worshipped each the idol, the molten image which they had made for themselves, and they began to make graven images and unclean simulacra, and malignant spirits assisted and seduced (them) into committing transgression and uncleanness. 5. And the prince Mastêmâ exerted himself to do all this, and he sent forth other spirits, those which were put under his hand, to do all manner of wrong and sin, and all manner of transgression, to corrupt and destroy, and to shed blood upon the earth. 6. For this reason he called the name of Sêrôh, Serug, for every one turned to do all manner of sin and transgression. 7. And he grew up, and dwelt in Ur of the Chaldees, near to the father of his wife's mother, and he worshipped idols, and he took to himself a wife in the thirty-^{1744 A.M.}sixth jubilee, in the fifth week, in the first year thereof, and her name was Mêlkâ, the daughter of Kâbêr, the daughter of his father's brother. 8. And she bare him Nahor, in the first year of this week, and he grew and dwelt in Ur of the Chaldees, and his father taught him the researches of the Chaldees to divine and augur, according to the signs of heaven. 9. And in the thirty-seventh jubilee, in the sixth^{1800 A.M.} week, in the first year thereof, he took to himself a wife, and her name was 'Îjâskâ, the daughter of Nêstâg of the Chaldees. 10. And she bare him Terah in the seventh

Chronicles of Jerahmeel in note on iv. 12. Our text was known directly or indirectly by Cedrenus, i. 47: αὐξηθέντα δὲ τὸν Ναχώρ ἐδίδαξεν ὁ πατὴρ πάντων ἐπίλυσιν οἰωνῶν, τῶν τε ἐν οὐρανῷ σημείων διακρίσεις καὶ τῶν ἐπὶ γῆς ἀπάντων καὶ πᾶσαν Χαλδαϊκὴν μαντείαν. 1806 A.M. year of this week. 11. And the prince Mastêmâ sent ravens and birds to devour the seed which was sown in the land, in order to destroy the land, and rob the children of men of their labours. Before they could plough in the seed, the ravens picked (it) from the surface of the ground. 12. And for this reason he called his name Terah, because the ravens and the birds reduced them to destitution and devoured their seed. 13. And the years began to be barren, owing to the birds, and they devoured all the fruit of the trees from the trees: it was only with great effort that they could save a little of all the fruit of the earth in their days. 14. And in this

1870 A.M. thirty-ninth jubilee, in the second week in the first year, Terah took to himself a wife, and her name was 'Êdnâ, the

11-13. This legend is traced to our text by Jerome. Two other writers reproduce it, but do not mention the source. Jerome, in commenting on Num. xxxiii. 27 (Epist. lxxviii. ad Fabiolam, mansione 24), writes as follows: *Castra metati sunt in Thare (Num. xxxiii. 27): Hoc eodem vocabulo (תר) et iisdem litteris scriptum invenio patrem Abraham, qui in supradicto apocrypho Geneseos volumine, abactis corvis, qui hominum frumenta vastabant, abactoris vel depulsoris sortitus est nomen. I know of only two other references to the incident in our text. The first is in S. Ephraem i. 156 and is quoted by Malan, Book of Adam and Eve, p. 248: "Abram when a child, having been sent by Terah to drive away ravens sent to destroy the crops, as a punishment for the idolatry of the land, Abram—unable to drive them away—by a sudden impulse, called upon God to order them off, who answered: 'Here am I,' and ordered the ravens away from Terah's field." The second is found in Bar-hebraeus, Historia Dynastiarum, p. 13 (Fabric. Cod. Pseud. V.T. i. 422 sq.): *Cum Abraam annorum esset quindecim, annuit Deus precibus ejus contra picas quae terram Chaldaeorum vastabant semina terrae ab iis mandata per dentes. These last two passages are in the main derived from our text.

11. Sent. This can be rendered also "had sent."

12. Reduced them to destitution. The Ethiopic here = ἐπρώχισαν αὐτούς, but it could also be a rendering of ἐθλίψαν or ἐκάκωσαν. Hence this verb may go back to the Chaldee verb תרע = to ravage, devastate. This verb would constitute a play on the name Terah (תר) and the verse would run: ובואח קרא אח שמו תרה כי העורבים תרעו בהם. For attempts to explain the derivation of Terah from the meaning assigned by Jerome see Rönsch, Das Buch der Jubiläen, 266-267; Beer, Leben Abraham's, pp. 95-96.

daughter of 'Abrâm, the daughter of his father's sister. 15. And in the seventh year of this week she bare him a son, 1876 A.M. and he called his name Abram, by the name of the father of his mother; for he had died before his daughter had conceived a son. 16. And the child began to understand the errors of the earth that all went astray after graven images and after uncleanness, and his father taught him writing, and he was two weeks of years old, and he separated 1890 A.M. himself from his father, that he might not worship idols with him. 17. And he began to pray to the Creator of all things that He might save him from the errors of the children of men, and that his portion should not fall into error after uncleanness and vileness. 18. And the seed time came for the sowing of seed upon the land, and they all went forth together to protect their seed against the ravens, and Abram went forth with those that went, and the child was a lad of fourteen years. 19. And a cloud of ravens came to devour the seed, and Abram ran to meet them before they settled on the ground, and cried to them before they settled on the ground to devour the seed, and said, "Descend not: return to the place whence ye came," and they proceeded to turn back. 20. And he caused the

the daughter of Karnabo, is said to be the wife of Nahor, but by taking the context rightly we get Amtalai as wife of Terah. Book of Jashar (Migne, Dict. des Apocr. ii. 1103) gives Amtela as Terah's wife, but there is no mention of her father's name. According to Eutychius (translated by Pococke, 1658) Terah had two wives, Yuna and Tohwait. See note on xii. 9.

15. Abram, by the name, etc. This statement is referred to by Syncellus, i. 183: Τὸν κατὰ μητέρα πάππον τοῦ 'Αβραὰμ ἡ Λεπτὴ Γένεσις φησιν ὅτι 'Αβραὰμ ἐκαλεῖτο, ἡ δὲ Σάρρα ἀδελφὴ ὁμοπατρὶα τοῦ 'Αβραὰμ ὑπῆρχε.

16-17. Syncellus writes (i. 184) on the authority of our text: τῷ ἰδ' ἔτει αὐτοῦ ὁ 'Αβραὰμ ἐπιγνούς τὸν τῶν ὄλων θεὸν προσεκύνη. Cf. Cedrenus, i. 47:

οὗτος ('Αβραὰμ) μόνος, τῶν ἀπανταχοῦ τὴν ἐπὶ τὰ εἰδῶλα πλάνην νοσοῦντων, τὸν ἀληθῆ θεὸν ἐπέγνω καὶ δημιουργὸν τῶν ὄλων ἀνεκήρυξε. According to Simon ben Lakish in Ber. rabba 30, 64, 95, Midr. on Shir ha-Shirim v. 16 (cf. Midr. on Esther ii. 5), Book of Jashar (op. cit. ii. 1106), Abraham knew God when only three years old, according to R. Chanina in his forty-eighth year. See Beer, Leben Abr. 103-104 for other references.

clouds of ravens to turn back that day seventy times, and of all the ravens throughout all the land where Abram was there settled there not so much as one. 21. And all who were with him throughout all the land saw him cry out, and all the ravens turn back, and his name became great in all the land of the Chaldees. 22. And there came to him this year all those that wished to sow, and he went with them until the time of sowing ceased: and they sowed their land, and that year they brought enough grain home and eat and were satisfied. 23. And in the first year of the fifth week

1891 A.M. Abram taught those who made implements for oxen, the artificers in wood, and they made a vessel above the ground, facing the frame of the plough, in order to put the seed thereon, and the seed fell down therefrom upon the share of the plough, and was hidden in the earth, and they no longer feared the ravens. 24. And after this manner they made (vessels) above the ground on all the frames of the ploughs, and they sowed and tilled all the land, according as Abram commanded them, and they no longer feared the birds.

Abram seeks to turn Terah from idolatry, 1-8. Marries Sarai, 9. Haran and Nachor, 9-11. Abram burns the idols: death of Haran, 12-14 (cf. Gen. xi. 28). Terah and his family go to Haran, 15. Abram observes the stars and prays, 16-21. Is bidden to go to Canaan and blessed, 22-24. Power of speaking Hebrew given to him, 25-27. Leaves Haran for Canaan, 28-31. (Cf. Gen. xi. 31-xii. 3.)

XII. 1-14. Instead of the simple narrative in these verses we have in later Jewish writings elaborate accounts of the fear inspired in Nimrod by Abram's birth, and the attempts of the former to destroy Abram in a furnace of fire when he refused to commit seventh year thereof, that Abram said to Terah his father, saying, "Father!" And he said, "Behold, here am I, my son."

2. And he said,

"What help and profit have we from those idols which thou dost worship, idolatry. The idea that Abram was cast into a fiery furnace arose from a literal interpretation of Gen. xv. 7, "I am the Lord that brought thee out of Ur (כְּאַוּר) of the Chaldees" where אֵשׁ was taken to mean "fire." Probably a comparison of Exod. xx. 2 and Is. xxix. 22 may have contributed to this interpretation. The casting of Abram into the furnace of fire is recorded in Targ.-Jon. on Is. x. 32, in the Ps.-Jon. on Gen. xi. 28, xv. 7, and the Jerus. Targ. on Gen. xv. 7; also in Ber. Rabba 38, 39, 42, 43, 44, 63; Shem. rabba 18, 23, 44; Wajikra rabba 36; Debarim rabba 9. As to whether it was God Himself or an angel who delivered Abram out of the fire was a question of debate among the Rabbis in the first and second cent. (Ber. rabba 48, Midr. on Shir ha-Shirim i. 12). Exaggerated and grotesque forms of the legend will be found in the Book of Jashar (Dict. des Apocr. ii. 1111 sqq.) and the Chronicles of Jerahmeel xxxiii.-xxxiv. On the other hand no trace of the legend occurs in Josephus (Ant. i. 7) or in the Palestinian Midrashim (the Mechilta, Sifra and Sifre), nor in our text save in xii. 14, where we have perhaps the source of a kindred legend—the death of Haran by fire (see note in loc.). Jerome mentions this last legend (see note on xii. 14) and likewise the former about the casting of Abram into the fiery furnace (Quaest. Hebr. on Gen. xii. 4): Erant autem Abram septuaginta quinque annorum, quando egressus est ex Charra. Indissolubilis nascitur quaestio: si enim Thara pater Abrahæ, cum adhuc esset in regione Chaldaea, septuaginta annorum, genuit Abram, et postea in Charra ducentesimo quinto aetatis suae anno mortuus est: quomodo nunc post mortem Thare, Abram exiens de Charra, septuaginta quinque annorum fuisse memoratur: cum a nativitate Abrae usque ad mortem patris ejus, centum triginta quinque fuisse anni doceantur. *Vera est igitur illa Hebraeorum traditio, quam supra diximus, quod egressus sit Thara cum filiis suis de igne Chaldaeorum: et quod Abram Babylonio vallatus incendio, quia illud adorare nolebat, Dei sit auxilio liberatus: et ex illo tempore ei dies vitae, et tempus reputetur aetatis, ex quo confessus est Dominum, spernens idola Chaldaeorum. Potest autem fieri ut, quia scriptura reliquit incertum, ante paucos annos Thara de Chaldaea profectus venerit in Charra quam mortem obieret, vel certe statim post persecutionem in Charra venerit et ibi diutius sit moratus. For a full discussion of the subject and references to later Jewish literature see Beer's monograph in the Monatsschrift für Gesch. Judenthums, 1855, pp. 59-65. Beer is of opinion that Persia was the home of the legend and that it did not make its way into Palestine till the third cent. of the Christian era. This is much too late. A late form of the tradition is found in Ps.-Philo, Ant. bibl. Lib. pp. 48 sqq.*

2. This tradition of Abram admonishing Terah was known to Suidas (Fabric. Cod. Pseud. V.T. i. 336-338): 'Αβραὰμ ὑπάρχων ἐτῶν ἰδ' καὶ θεογνωσίας ἀξιοθεῖς ἐνουθέτει τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῦ λέγων· τί πλανᾷς τοὺς ἀνθρώπους διὰ κέρδος ἐπιζημιον, τοῦτέστι, τὰ εἰδῶλα; οὐκ ἔστιν ἄλλος θεός, εἰ μὴ ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, ὁ καὶ πάντα τὸν κόσμον δημιουργήσας. Epiphanius (Adv. Haer. i. 1, p. 38, Oehler) attributes the invention of image-worship to Terah: Ναχώρ δὲ γεννᾷ τὸν Θάρρα· ἐντεῦθεν γέγονεν ἀνδριαντοπλασία ἀπὸ πηλουργίας καὶ κεραμικῆς ἐπιστήμης διὰ τῆς τοῦ Θάρρα τούτου τέχνης.

And has created everything by His word,
And all life is from before His face.
5. Why do ye worship things that have no spirit in them?
For they are the work of (men's) hands,
And on your shoulders do ye bear them,
And ye have no help from them,
But they are a great cause of shame to those who

And a misleading of the heart to those who worship

And if I tell them the truth, they will slay me; for their soul cleaves to them to worship them and honour them. Keep silent, my son, lest they slay thee." 8. And these words he spake to his two brothers, and they were angry with him and he kept silent.

And in the sixtieth year of the life of Abram, that is, ^{1936 A.M.} in the fourth week, in the fourth year thereof, Abram arose by night, and burned the house of the idols, and he burned all that was in the house, and no man knew it. 13. And they arose in the night and sought to save their gods from the midst of the fire. 14. And Haran hastened to save them, but the fire flamed over him, and he was burnt in the fire, and he died in Ur of the Chaldees before Terah his father,

The same form of the words is found in the Ethiopic version of Gen. xvii. 15 and may go back to the Greek version. In the LXX the words, however, are given as Σάρα and Σάρρα.

The daughter of his father. Our author here follows Gen. xx. 12, where Abraham says that Sarah is the daughter of his father but not of his mother. Syncellus probably follows our text in saying (i. 183): ἡ δὲ Σάρρα ὁμοπατρία τοῦ Ἀβραάμ ὑπῆρχε. In the Book of Adam and Eve (translated by Malan), iv. 2, the two wives of Terah are mentioned, Tona, the mother of Abraham, and Tahdif, the mother of Sarah (see note on xi. 14). On the other hand Josephus (Ant. i. 6. 5; 7 1) describes Sarai as a niece of Abraham and a daughter of Haran—an evasion probably unknown to our author. According to the rabbinic tradition (Jebam. 98 a, Sanh. 58 b, Ber. rabba 18, etc.) marriage with half-sisters on the father's side was permitted to the descendants of Noah (see Singer, Das Buch der Jubiläen, p. 167 note). Marriage with a sister or half-sister is strictly forbidden in Lev. xviii. 9, 11, xx. 17. See note on iv. 15.

10. Haran. Eth. has 'Arân.

11. According to Gen. xi. 29 Nahor married Milcah, the daughter of Haran.

12-14. In the note on xii. 1-14 (p. 90 sq.) I have drawn attention to the fact that our book knows nothing of the later legend of the casting of Abram into the furnace. In verses 12-14, however,

we have an old legend—possibly devised by our author, being suggested by the twofold meaning of the Ur (אור), i.e. the name of a country and a fire. Our author is fond of explaining events from the meanings of words. A different form of the legend appears in Jerome, who rejects the legend of Abram's being cast into the fire (Quaest. Hebr. on Gen. xi. 28): Pro eo, quod legimus, in regione Chaldaeorum, in Hebraeo habetur, in Ur Chesdim, id est in igne Chaldaeorum. Tradunt autem Hebraei ex hac occasione istius modi fabulam: quod Abraham in ignem missus sit, quia ignem adorare noluerit, quem Chaldaei colunt, et Dei auxilio liberatus de idolatriae igne profugerit . . . Mortuus est Aran ante conspectum Thare . . . in igne Chaldaeorum: quod videlicet ignem nolens adorare igne consumptus sit. Syncellus (i. 185) follows our author: ἐνεπύρισεν Ἀβραάμ τὰ εἰδῶλα τοῦ πατρὸς αὐτοῦ καὶ συγκατεκαύθη αὐτοῖς Ἀρρὰν θέλων σβέσαι τὸ πῦρ ἐν νυκτί. Cedrenus (i. 48) seems to have had our text before him: ἤδη δὲ ἐξηκοστὸν ἔτος ἄγων ὁ Ἀβραάμ, ὡς οὐκ ἔδōκει τὸν πατέρα πείθειν καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους οἰκέλους τῆς περὶ τὰ εἰδῶλα ἀποσχέσθαι δεισιδαιμονίας, λανθάνει νυκτὸς τῶν εἰδῶλων ἐμπρήσας τὸν οἶκον. αὐτῶν δὲ ἐξαναλουμένων οἱ ἀδελφοὶ νοήσαντες ἀναπηδῶσι, βουλόμενοι ἐκ μέσου τοῦ πυρὸς ἐξελέσθαι τὰ εἰδῶλα. φιλοτιμότερον δὲ ὁ Ἀρὰμ τῷ πράγματι προσφερόμενος ἐν μέσῳ διαφθείρεται τοῦ πυρός. 1951 A.M. the sixth week, in the fifth year thereof, Abram sat up throughout the night on the new moon of the seventh month to observe the stars from the evening to the morning, in order to see what would be the character of the year with regard to the rains, and he was alone as he sat and observed. 17. And a word came into his heart and he said: "All the signs of the stars, and the signs of the moon and of the sun are all in the hand of the Lord. Why do I search (them) out?"

Dynastiarum, p. 13 (quoted by Fabricius, i. 422): Incenditque ille templum idolorum in urbe Chaldaeorum, at Haran frater ipsius ad extinguendum ignem ingressus combustus est. According to Beer (Leben Abr. 110) the same legend is found in Midr. b. Bechaii.

15. Haran. Eth. has Kârân, i.e. הרן, Haran, a city in the N.W. of Mesopotamia. Cf. Gen. xi. 31.

16-18. Abram on the first of the seventh month seeks to determine the nature of the weather during the ensuing six rainy months (see note on xii. 27). In Ber. rabba 44, according to the Rabbis, God told Abram that he was a prophet and not a star-gazer. Cedrenus (i. 48-49) reproduces the substance of our text: ἔνθα ὁ Ἀβραὰμ δεκαπέντε ἔτη τῷ πατρὶ συνοικήσας ἐννοεῖ ποτὲ νυκτὸς ἐκ τῆς τῶν ἀστρῶν κινήσεως τοῦ ἐπιόντος καιροῦ κατασκέψασθαι τὴν ποιότητα· ἦν γὰρ οὐ μετρίως ὑπὸ τοῦ πατρὸς ἅπασαν τὴν τοιαύτην ἐξασκηθεὶς ἐπιστήμην. καὶ δὴ μετὰ τὴν ἐκάστου τῶν ζητουμένων διάγνωσιν, συνίησι περιττὴν ἅπασαν εἶναι τὴν τοιαύτην περιεργίαν· δύνασθαι γὰρ αὐθις τὸν θεόν, εἰ βούλοιο, μετασκευσάσαι πρὸς τὸ οἰκεῖον βούλημα τὰ προεγνωσμένα. Cf. Book of Jashar (op. cit. ii. 1106). Some such idea seems to have been present to Philo, De Migr. Abr. xxxii.-xxxiii.

19. And Thee and Thy Dominion, etc. The MSS put this line at the end of ver. 19.

20. Deliver me from the hands of evil spirits who have sway over the thoughts of men's hearts,
 And let them not lead me astray from Thee, my God.
 And stablish Thou me and my seed for ever
 That we go not astray from henceforth and for evermore."

21. And he said, "Shall I return unto Ur of the Chaldees who seek my face that I may return to them, or am I to remain here in this place? The right path before Thee prosper it in the hands of Thy servant that he may fulfil (it) and that I may not walk in the deceitfulness of my heart, O my God." 22. And he made an end of speaking and praying, and behold the word of the Lord was sent to him through me, saying: "Get thee up from thy country, and from thy kindred and from the house of thy father unto a land which I shall show thee, and I shall make thee a great and numerous nation.

23. And I shall bless thee
 And I shall make thy name great,
 And thou wilt be blessed in the earth,
 And in Thee will all families of the earth be blessed,
 And I shall bless them that bless thee,
 And curse them that curse thee.

24. And I shall be a God to thee and thy son, and to thy son's son, and to all thy seed: fear not, from henceforth and unto all generations of the earth I am thy God." 25. And the Lord God said: "Open his mouth and his ears, that he may hear and speak with

 This implies separation from Terah (see

 (x. 26) the knowledge of the Hebrew language was lost till the 75th year of his own system of chronology, he

his mouth, with the language which has been revealed"; for it had ceased from the mouths of all the children of men from the day of the overthrow (of Babel). 26. And I opened his mouth, and his ears and his lips, and I began to speak with him in Hebrew in the tongue of the creation. 27. And he took the books of his fathers, and these were written in Hebrew, and he transcribed them, and he began from henceforth to study them, and I made known to him that which he could not (understand), and he studied them.

1953 A.M. during the six rainy months. 28. And it came to pass in the seventh year of the sixth week that he spoke to his father, and informed him that he would leave Haran to go into the land of Canaan to see it and return to him. 29. And Terah his father said unto him; "Go in peace:

Ἀβραὰμ ἔτη βα' (=2001: so Rönisch: MSS βν'). ὁ ἄγγελος ὁ λαλῶν τῷ Μωϋσῇ εἶπεν αὐτῷ, ὅτι τὸν Ἀβραὰμ ἐγὼ ἐδίδαξα τὴν Ἑβραϊδα γλῶσσαν κατὰ τὴν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς κτίσεως, λαλεῖν τὰ πάτρια πάντα, ὡς ἐν Λεπτῇ κεῖται Γενέσει. The above reckoning agrees exactly with our text if we take into account the fact that Syncellus wrongly takes a jubilee as 50 years instead of 49 years. Syncellus thus finds that on the 1st year of the 41st jubilee, 2001 years have elapsed from Adam till the 85th year of Abram. According to our text Abram was 75 years old in 1951 and therefore 85 in 1961. Now 40 jubilees + 1 = 1961, but Syncellus, reckoning the jubilee at 50 years, wrongly made the total 2001. A curtailed form of the above statement is reproduced by Cedrenus, i. 48. Again the writer of the Clementine Recognitions, i. 30, knew the substance of our text: Quinta decima generatione primo omnium homines idolum statuentes adoraverunt, et usque ad illud tempus divinitus humano generi data Hebraeorum lingua tenuit monarchiam.

A different tradition from that in our text appears in the Catena Nicephori, i. col. 177, on Gen. xi. 8, where Heber is said to have alone retained the Hebrew language, because he took no part in the building of Babel. In the next colophon of the same work the same statement is attributed to Diodorus of Antioch (378-394 A.D.). A similar view is set forth in Augustine, De Civ. Dei, xvi. 11, and in Cedrenus, i. 22: φασὶ δὲ ὅτι μόνος ὁ Ἑβερὸς τοῦ Φάλεκ πατὴρ οὐ συνέθετο τῇ πράξει τῆς πυργοποιίας διὰ καὶ τῆς τῶν ἄλλων φωνῆς συγχεθείσης ἢ τοῦ Ἑβερ οὐκ ἀπώλετο. According to Malan, Book of Adam and Eve, p. 245, this view was propounded by Bar-hebraeus (Syr. p. 9).

29-31. Singer (Das Buch der Jubiläen, p. 170) is no doubt right in saying that this passage owes its existence to the author's wish to protect Abram against the reproach of leaving his aged father (see Ber. rabba 39).

May the eternal God make thy path straight,
 And the Lord [(be) with thee, and] protect thee from
 all evil,
 And grant unto thee grace, mercy and favour before
 those who see thee,
 And may none of the children of men have power over thee to harm thee ;
 Go in peace.

30. And if thou seest a land pleasant to thy eyes to dwell in, then arise and take me to thee and take Lot with thee, the son of Haran thy brother, as thine own son : the Lord be with thee. 31. And Nahor thy brother leave with me till thou returnest in peace, and we go with thee all together."

Abram journeys from Haran to Shechem in Canaan, thence to Hebron and thence to Egypt, 1-14a. And Abram journeyed from Haran, and he took Sarai, his wife, and Lot, his brother Haran's son, to the land of Canaan, and he came into †Asshur†, and proceeded to Shechem, and dwelt near a lofty oak. 2. And he saw, and, behold, the land was very pleasant from the entering of Hamath to the lofty oak. 3. And the Lord said to him :

Accordingly, Abram is to return and fetch his father. As Terah is still alive at the age of 147 (see xi. 10, 15) it follows that our author accepts 205 years in Gen. xi. 32 (Mass., LXX) as the age of Terah when he died. The Samaritan here has 145, and this is the text presupposed by Acts vii. 4. It is accepted by Budde and Dillmann.

And (Abram) armed his household servants. Gen. xiv. 14. For "armed" (α β δ), c corruptly reads "made atonement for." Onkelos (ורין) supports the rendering which our text gives of ירק in Gen. xiv. 14. The LXX ἡρίθμησε and Vulg. numeravit which presuppose ירק the text of the Samaritan.

first-fruits to the Lord, and the Lord ordained it as an ordinance for ever that they should give it to the priests who served before Him, that they should possess it for ever. 26. And to this law there is no limit of days; for He hath ordained it for the generations for ever that they should give to the Lord the tenth of everything, of the seed and of the wine and of the oil and of the cattle and of the sheep. 27. And He gave (it) unto His priests to eat and to drink with joy before Him. 28. is anacolouthic. c removes the anacolouthon by changing 'astarasaja = "armed" of abā into 'astasēraja = "made atonement for." Thus instead of "(Abram) armed his household servants . . . for Abram" we have "his household servant made atonement for Abram." But this change is against the best MSS, which are likewise supported by Gen. xiv. 14 (see note on ver. 24), and it does not dispense with the necessity of assuming a lacuna at the close of ver. 24. The lacuna, drawn attention to in our text, would naturally contain an account of Abram's pursuit of the kings and recovery of the captives and spoil. It no doubt told also of Melchizedek; for ver. 25 presupposes Gen. xiv. 18^b-20^c by declaring that the tithes belong to the priests. In Nedar 32^b it is said that the priestly office passed from Melchizedek's successors to those of Abraham because Melchizedek sinned in blessing Abraham before he blessed God (Beer, Buch der Jubiläen, p. 74). Since Beer had before him the corrupt reading of c, which tries to obviate the anacolouthic nature of the text, he assumed that the text contained no reference to Melchizedek. It is true that this passage has always been a stumbling-block to strict Jews. Thus it was urged against them by Justin (Dial. c. Tryph. 19: ἀπερίμνητος ἦν ὁ ἱερεὺς τοῦ ὑψίστου Μελχισεδέκ, ᾧ καὶ δεκάτας προσφοράς ἔδωκεν Ἀβραάμ) that Melchizedek was uncircumcised to whom Abram gave tithes, and also by Tertullian, Adv. Jud. iii.: Patriarchae incircumcisi fuerunt, ut Melchisedech qui ipsi Abrahae jam circumciso . . . panem et vinum obtulit incircumcisis. To evade such attacks some Jewish writers declared that Melchizedek was born circumcised (Ber. rabba 43; for other references see Singer, p. 122 note); also that Melchizedek was identical with Shem (Targum Jon. and Jerus. on Gen. xiv. 18; Nedar 32^b; Ber. rabba 44: Book of Jashar (Dict. des Apocr. ii. 1125); see Beer, Leben Abrahams, 142; Singer, Das Buch der Jubiläen, 122 note for further references). These evasions were apparently unknown to Philo and Josephus. In connection with the fact that Melchizedek was called "a priest of the most high God" (Gen. xiv. 18) we should remember that the Maccabeans called themselves by this title (see note on xxxii. 1). Now since our author (see Introd. § 21) is an apologist of the Maccabean dynasty, it is not probable that he would omit all reference to Melchizedek who first bore the title they afterwards assumed.

Instead of "the son of Mâsêq" we should have "the possessor." Next, "the son of my handmaid" = ὁ οἰκογενής μου. Hence our text = בן־טַשֶּׁק בן־בִּיתִי. Subsequent tradition made much of Eliezer. He was said to be one of the seven righteous men who had not tasted of death (Baba bathra 58 a).

12. The pieces. The MSS have here "that which was spread out" = ταθέντα, which I have taken to be a corruption of τμηθέντα: cf. LXX τὰ διχοτομήματα. This would imply the reading נורים. But ταθέντα might possibly be a corruption of καταθέντα = פנירים as in Mass. text. In that case we should render "carcases." Observe that LXX (= ἐπὶ τὰ σώματα ἐπὶ τὰ διχοτομήματα) had clearly על-הפירות על-נורים before it.

But in the fourth generation they will return hither; for the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full." 17. And he awoke from his sleep, and he arose, and the sun had set; and there was a flame, and behold! a furnace was smoking, and a flame of fire passed between the pieces. 18. And on that day the Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying: "To thy seed will I give this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates, the Kenites, the Kenizzites, the Kadmonites, the Perizzites, and the Rephaim, the Phakorites, and the Hivites, and the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Gergashites, and the Jebusites." 19.

in Exod. vi. 18, 20, and Moses at the time of the Exodus, vii. 7; tradition early assumed that the above periods include the sojourn of the patriarchs in Canaan before the migration. Thus the LXX in Exod. xii. 40 insert the words καὶ ἐν γῇ Χανάαν after ἐν γῇ Αἰγύπτῳ, and the same addition is found in the Samaritan Pentateuch. The period of 400 or 430 years was reckoned from the date of its announcement in Gen. xv. 13, according to St. Paul, Gal. iii. 16, 17; Joseph. Ant. ii. 15. 2; Ps.-Jon. in Exod. xii. 40, but our text reckons the 430 years from Isaac's birth. On the other hand, Philo (Quis rer. div. her. 54) sets down the actual sojourn of Israel in Egypt at 400 years, and likewise Josephus (Ant. ii. 9. 1; Bell. Jud. v. 9. 4). According to Ps.-Jon. on Exod. xii. 40, 41 the 430 years are explained as follows: 400 years elapsed between Isaac's birth, which took place when Abraham was 100 years old (Gen. xxi. 5), and the Exodus; and 430 between the date of God's promise to Abraham (Gen. xv. 13) and the Exodus; for this promise was given 30 years before Isaac's birth. Thus 430 years = 30 (years between promise in Gen. xv. 13 and birth of Isaac) + 60 (years from birth of Isaac to birth of Jacob) + 130 (being age of Jacob on his arrival in Egypt, Gen. xlvii. 9) +

210 (years of sojourn in Egypt). According to this chronology it follows that Abram was 70 years old when he witnessed the vision in Gen. xv. 7-21. But according to Gen. xii. 4 Abram was already 75 when he left Haran. This difficulty obliged later Jewish exponents to assume that Abram had paid an earlier visit in his 70th year to Canaan, and that Gen. xv. 7-21 belongs to that earlier visit and that its present context is accordingly wrong. This method of exposition is followed in the Book of Jasher where Gen. xv. 7-21 is first recounted (Dict. des Apocr. ii. 1119) and subsequently Gen. xv. 1-6 (ii. 1125-1126). The double journey to Canaan is referred to by R. Nehemiah in Ber. rabba 39. For other references to later Jewish literature on this question see Beer, Leb. Abr. 118-120.

Of this later form of exposition our book knows nothing.

XV. 1. †Fourth† (a c d). b reads "seventh." It should be "third," here jubilee, in the third month, in the middle of the month, Abram celebrated the feast of the first-fruits of the grain and in xvi. 15, as Dillmann recognised. Cf. xvii. 1.

In the third month, in the middle of the month. From a comparison of xv. 1 and xlv. 4, 5 (see notes also on i. 1, vi. 17-18, xiv. 20) it follows that the feast of weeks was celebrated on the fifteenth of the third month (Sivan). Since this reckoning deviates from that of the Pharisees about the beginning of the Christian era, and as there were many divergent views in Judaism about, before, and after that period, we must here inquire briefly into the origin and nature of these views.

To begin with, it is clear that they all arose from the various meanings attached to the word "Sabbath" in Lev. xxiii. 15, 16. In these verses it is ordained that the feast of weeks should fall on the fiftieth day after the offering of the Paschal wave-sheaf. Now this sheaf was waved "on the morrow after the Sabbath" (Lev. xxiii. 11, 15, כַּמָּחֳרָה הַשְּׁבִיעִתָּה). In what sense, then, are we to take the word "Sabbath"? Two ways are possible:—(1) It may be taken to mean merely a feast day. (2) It may be taken in its strict sense as the weekly Sabbath.

(1) First the word "Sabbath" is taken in the general sense of a feast-day. Now the first day of unleavened bread (Lev. xxiii. 7) was such a day; but the seventh (Lev. xxiii. 8) was no less so. Hence two different computations arise from this interpretation of the word, (i) the first of which interprets the first day of unleavened bread as the Sabbath, and (ii) the second which interprets it of the seventh day.

(i) The first interpretation, which took the Sabbath to be the first day of unleavened bread (Nisan 15), naturally understood the phrase "the morrow after the Sabbath" to designate Nisan 16, without regard to the day of the week. This was the interpretation of the Pharisees in our Lord's time. This view is first attested in the LXX, where the phrase in question is rendered by τη ἐπαύριον τῆς πρώτης (here ἡ πρώτη = השבת), exactly as in Ps.-Jon. on Lev. xxiii. 15, כַּמָּחֳרָה יוֹמָא טַבָּא קַמָּא; in the Targum of Onkelos (כַּמָּחֳרָה יוֹמָא טַבָּא) where "the Sabbath"

is simply rendered "the feast day"; in Josephus, Ant. iii. 10. 5, τῇ δὲ δευτέρᾳ τῶν ἀζύμων ἡμέρᾳ; in Philo, De Septenar. 20, where the day for waving the sheaf is said to be the second day of unleavened bread: Ἐορτὴ δὲ ἔστιν ἡ μετὰ τὴν πρώτην εὐθὺς ἡμέρα. The Mishna, also (Chag. ii. 4; Menach. x. 1-3), maintains this interpretation against conflicting expositions.

Since on this view the sheaf-waving took place on Nisan 16, the feast of weeks, fifty days later, was usually celebrated on Sivan 6, without regard in either case to the day of the week.

(ii) But others took the Sabbath to mean the seventh day of unleavened bread, which was also a day of rest. As the Sabbath in this case was Nisan 21, the morrow after the Sabbath was Nisan 22. This is actually the course pursued by the (a) Falashas or Abyssinian Jews. They reckon the fifty days from Nisan 22 and thus the feast of weeks falls on Sivan 12 as they use alternate months of thirty and twenty-nine days (see d'Abbadie in Univ. Isr. Juillet 1851, p. 482). (b) Again this view is attested by the Syriac version of Lev. xxiii. 11, 15, as existing before 100 A.D. Thus it renders the Hebrew phrase כַּמָּחֳרָה יוֹמָא טַבָּא קַמָּא = "after the second (feast) day," that is Nisan 21. (c) But the usage is as early as the second cent. B.C.; for it appears in our text. At the beginning of this note we found that the feast of weeks took place on the Sivan 15. If we count back fifty days (reckoning the second month at twenty-eight days), we arrive at Nisan 22 when the wave-sheaf was offered. Thus Jubilees also interpreted the phrase "the morrow after the Sabbath" as meaning the day after the seventh day of unleavened bread, which was a special day of rest.

(2) But on the fact that the simple term "Sabbath" stands elsewhere only as the weekly Sabbath, are based other early uses among the Jews as well as certain modern speculations. Thus the Baithusians (Menachoth 65 a) took "the morrow after the Sabbath" to be the day after the weekly Sabbath which occurred during the feast of unleavened harvest. 2. And he offered new offerings on the altar, the first-fruits of the produce, unto the Lord, an heifer and a goat and a sheep on the altar as a burnt sacrifice unto the Lord; their fruit-offerings and their drink-offerings he offered upon the altar with frankincense. 3. And the Lord appeared to Abram, and said unto him: "I am God Almighty; approve thyself before Me and be thou perfect. 4. And I will make My covenant between Me and thee, and I will multiply thee exceedingly." 5. And Abram fell on his face, and God talked with him, and said:

6. "Behold My ordinance is with thee,

And thou wilt be the father of many nations.

7. Neither will thy name any more be called Abram,

But thy name from henceforth, even for ever, shall be Abraham.

For the father of many nations have I made thee.

8. And I shall make thee very great,

And I shall make thee into nations,

And kings will come forth from thee.

9. And I shall establish My covenant between Me and thee, and thy seed after thee, throughout their generations, for an

The Karaite Jews (Trigland, Diatribes de Secta Karaeorum, 1703; Fürst, Geschichte des Karäerthums, 1865) and likewise the Samaritans follow the strict interpretation of the term Sabbath in this connection. Very many modern scholars hold strongly to some form of this theory, as Hitzig (Ostern u. Pfingsten, 1837 and Ostern u. Pfingsten im zweiten Dekalog, 1838), who maintained that in the Hebrew calendar Nisan 14 and 21 were always Sabbaths and that "the morrow after the Sabbath" was Nisan 22. Knobel (on Lev. xxiii. 11) agreed with Hitzig, save that he identified the day of the sheaf-waving with Nisan 15. Saalschütz (Das Mos.

Recht,² 1853, p. 420), Fürst (Heb. u. chald. Wörterbuch, 1863, under word שבת), Wellhausen (Jahr. f. deutsch. Theol. xxii.), Dillmann (on Lev. xxiii. 11), von Orelli (Herzog's *Real Encyc.*² xi. 264) accept in one form or another the Sadducean interpretation. In addition to the above literature, see the Articles on Pentecost (Pfingstfest) in Hasting's Bible Dictionary; Herzog's *Real Encyc.*² and Schenkel's Bibel-Lexicon.

And the child on the eighth day ye will circumcise, every male throughout your generations, him that is born in the house, or whom ye have bought with money from any stranger, whom ye have acquired who is not of thy seed. 13. He that is born in thy house will surely be circumcised, and those whom thou hast bought with money will be circumcised, and My covenant will be in your flesh for an eternal ordinance. 14. 10. (And I shall give to thee and to thy seed after thee). These words, lost through homoioteleuton, I have restored from Gen. xvii. 8.

11-13. Cf. Gen. xvii. 9-13.

12. The child (or "children") on the eighth day ye will circumcise. This form of Gen. xvii. 12 is found only in the Eth. vers. of that passage and in our text. It seems to be a deliberate change of "the child of eight days ye shall circumcise," as in Gen. xvii. 12. See on ver. 14.

14. Cf. Gen. xvii. 14.

On the eighth day. These words, which are not found in the Mass., Syr., and Vulg., are, however, attested by the Sam. and LXX. Also in Origen's Commentary in Ep. ad Rom. ii. 13 (Lommatzsch, vi. 123-124): Incircumciscus masculus, qui non fuerit circumciscus in carne praeputii sui die octavo, exterminabitur anima illa; and in Ambrose, Epist. 72, who remarks on Aquila's statement that this clause is wanting in the Hebrew. See on ver. 26.

As the Sabbath is the first, so circumcision is the second cardinal command of Judaism. In opposition to the laxity introduced by Greek culture the command in Gen. xv. 14 is enunciated afresh and the requirement added that it should be performed on the eighth day of the child's life. Owing to Greek influences, even before the reign of Antiochus IV., many Jews of noble birth had undergone surgical operations in order to appear like Greeks when undressed (1 Macc. i. 15; Assumpt. Mos. viii. 3; Joseph. Ant. xii. 5. 1). Subsequently Antiochus had taken the severest measures to prohibit circumcision (1 Macc. i. 48, 60, ii. 46). To withstand the Hellenising attitude towards circumcision our author emphasises what was apparently the current view of his time, i.e., that circumcision should be performed on the eighth day—the current view; for he has broken My covenant." 15. And God said unto Abraham: "As for Sarai thy wife, her name will no more be called Sarai, but Sarah will be her name. 16. And I shall bless her, and give thee a son by her, and I shall bless him, and he will become a nation, and kings of nations will proceed from him." 17. And Abraham fell on his face, and rejoiced, and said in his heart: "Shall a son be born to him that is a hundred years old, and shall Sarah, who is ninety years old, bring forth?" 18. And Abraham said unto God: "O that Ishmael might live before thee!" 19. And God said: "Yea, and Sarah also will bear thee a son, and thou wilt call his name Isaac, and I shall establish My covenant with him, an everlasting covenant, and for his seed after the words enjoining it were in both Jewish and Samaritan copies of the Hebrew text of Gen. xvii. 14 (see above). This strict view was subsequently relaxed. Thus, according to Shabb. xix. 5: "A child could be circumcised on the 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, or 12th day, neither earlier nor later. How so? Usually it is circumcised on the 8th day. Should it be born on the evening, it is circumcised on the 9th: should it be born on Friday evening it is circumcised on the 10th: should the Sunday be a festival, on the 11th: should the Sunday and Monday be New Year's days, on the 12th. If the child is ill, it is not circumcised till well." But the Samaritans have held fast to the severer regulation to the present day. In letters of the Samaritans communicated by de Sacy to T. Scaliger (Eichhorn's Repertor, xiii. 261) it is said: "We circumcise the male on the eighth day and do not defer circumcision a single day (לא נאחריו יום אחד) . . . but the Jews defer it one day or more." That the severer form of the halacha prevailed among the Jews themselves as late as the second cent. A.D. might be inferred from Justin Martyr (Dial. c. Tryph. 27): "Did God wish those to sin who are circumcised or do circumcise on the Sabbaths? for He commands that on the eighth day—even though it happen to be a Sabbath—those who are born should always be circumcised (τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ ὁγδόῃ ἐκ παντὸς περιτέμνεσθαι τοὺς γεννηθέντας ὁμοίως κὰν ἡ ἡμέρα τῶν σαββάτων;). Could not He have the infants circumcised one day before or one day after the Sabbath, if He knew that it was a sinful act on the Sabbath?" This custom is also regarded as obligatory by the Falashas or Abyssinian Jews. Cf. Abbadie, Univ. Isr. Avr. p. 481, 1851 (quoted by Singer, p. 289 note). We might observe here that our book knows nothing of the later traditions that the patriarchs such as Adam, Seth, Enoch, Noah, Shem, Terah, Jacob and six others were born circumcised (Midrash Tillin 10b, Sotah 10b, quoted by Hershon, Treasures of Talmud, 238, 240, 241). Ber. rabba 43 affirms this of Melchizedek. For other references see Singer, p. 301 note.

We might observe here that our book knows nothing of the barbarous mode of circumcision ordered by the Talmudists and Bar Cochba, in order to make it impossible to obliterate the signs of it by any such surgical operation as is referred to above. This mode was known as the פריעה, or "the laying bare." This mutilation after the removal of the foreskin is still practised. See Hershon, Genesis, p. 304.

16. I shall bless him. So also the Sam., LXX, Syr. and Vulg. of Gen. xvii. 16, whereas the Sam. makes the rest of

him. 20. And as for Ishmael also have I heard thee, and behold I shall bless him, and make him great, and multiply him exceedingly, and he will beget twelve princes, and I shall make him a great nation. 21. But My covenant shall I establish with Isaac, whom Sarah will bear to thee, in these days, in the next year." 22. And He left off speaking with him, and God went up from Abraham. 23. And Abraham did according as God had said unto him, and he took Ishmael his son, and all that were born in his house, and whom he had bought with his money, every male in his house, and circumcised the flesh of their foreskin. 24. And on the selfsame day was Abraham circumcised, and all the men of his house, (and those born in the house), and all those, whom he had bought with money from the children of the stranger, were circumcised with him. 25. This law is for all the generations for ever, and there is no circumcision of the days, and no omission of one day out of the eight days; for it is an eternal ordinance, ordained and written on the heavenly tables. 26. And every one that is born, the flesh of whose foreskin is not circumcised on the eighth day, belongs not to the children of the covenant which the Lord made with Abraham, but to the children of destruction; nor is there, moreover, any sign on him that he is the Lord's, but (he is destined) to be destroyed and slain from the verse, and the Mass. and Onk. make the entire verse refer to Sarah.

20. Princes. So Mass. (נָשִׁים) and Vulg. LXX, $\xi\theta\nu\eta = \text{נָשִׁים}$.

23-24. Cf. Gen. xvii. 23-27.

24. On the selfsame day, i.e., on the 15th of Sivan; see ver. 1. According to the Yalkut Chadash 121 a Abraham was circumcised on the 13th or 15th of Nisan, or on the Day of Atonement, or on the New Moon of January (Beer, Leb. Abr. 63, 152).

(And those born in the house). Restored with Lat.

25. See note on ver. 14.

No omission of one day out of the eight days. I take this clause to be parallel in meaning to the preceding. In no case is the circumcision to be performed before the eighth day. The word translated "omission" is the same as that translated "neglecting" or "transgressing" in vi. 31.

On the eighth day. MSS and Latin have "till the eighth day." But since this verse is simply an emphatic and enlarged form of ver. 14, for "till" we should clearly have "on." Besides, "till" gives the wrong sense; for the

the earth, and to be rooted out of the earth, for he has broken the covenant of the Lord our God. 27. For all the angels of the presence and all the angels of sanctification have been so created from the day of their creation, and before the angels of the presence and the angels of sanctification He hath sanctified Israel, that they should be with Him and with His holy angels. 28. And do thou command the children of Israel and let them observe the sign of this covenant for their generations as an eternal ordinance, and they will not be rooted out of the land. 29. For the command is ordained for a covenant, that they should observe it for ever among all the children of Israel. 30. For Ishmael and his sons and his brothers and Esau, the Lord did not cause to approach Him, and he chose them not because they are the children of Abraham, because He knew them, but He chose Israel to be His people. 31. And He sanctified it, and gathered it from amongst all the children circumcision is to be performed on the eighth day. The error can be explained by the corruption of ׁ into ׃ or ׃ into ׃ in the Hebrew.

And to be rooted out of the earth. ad and Latin omit, possibly through homoioteleuton.

27. There are two classes of angels mentioned here: the angels of the presence (see i. 29 note, ii. 2 note, 18, xxxi. 14) and the angels of sanctification (see ii. 2 note, 18 ["holy ones," "sancti," xxxi. 14]), according to the Ethiopic text; but three or four according to the Latin: angeli vultus, archangeli benedictionis, angeli sanctificationis, angeli sanctorum ipsius. But the last does not constitute a distinct order. It is simply a comprehensive term for the two (or three) highest orders, since it occurs in the following context: ut esset simul cum ipso et cum angelis sanctorum ipsius. Here ipso means "God," and the angelis sanct. ipsius sums up the orders mentioned in the earlier part of the sentence. Since in ii. 18 the Ethiopic speaks so clearly of only two classes, I am inclined to believe that "benedictionis" is simply an alternative rendering that has ousted the true reading, "sanctificationis," and that the context deals only with two orders of angels. The two orders mentioned here in the Ethiopic text are the same two who are said to unite with God and Israel in observing the Sabbath (ii. 18, 19, 21). The inferior angels of service did not enjoy this privilege. Now just as the highest angels shared with Israel in the privilege of the Sabbath, so they shared also in the privilege of circumcision. They were created circumcised, just as, according to later Judaism, many of the patriarchs of Israel were born so. (See note on ver. 14.) Such a belief was not difficult to believers in the loves of the angels for the daughters of men (v. 1 sqq.). In Debarim rabba on i. 2 it is said that the angels of service, i.e. the inferior orders, sought to know the Law, but it was hidden from them (see Weber, *Jüd. Theol.*² 25).

30. Chose them. The Ethiopic reproduces the Hebrew idiom בחר. The Latin gives elegit ex ipsis.

of men ; for there are many nations and many peoples, and all are His, and over all hath He placed spirits in authority to lead them astray from Him. \ 32. But over Israel He did not appoint any angel or spirit, for He alone is their ruler, and He will preserve them and require them at the hand of His angels and His spirits, and at the hand of all His powers in order that He may preserve them and bless them, and that they may be His and He may be theirs from henceforth for ever. 33. And now I announce unto thee that the children of Israel will not keep true to this ordinance, and they will not circumcise their sons according to all this law ; for in the flesh of their circumcision they will omit this circumcision of their sons, and all of them,

God's portion but that the Gentiles were placed under the dominion of angels, goes back to an old (possibly the oldest) form of the text of Deut. xxxii. 8-9, which, reading לַאֲ instead of לְיִשְׂרָאֵל, is reproduced in the LXX :

ὅτε διεμέριζεν ὁ Ὑψιστος ἔθνη . . .
 ἔστησεν ὅρια ἔθνῶν
 κατὰ ἀριθμὸν ἀγγέλων θεοῦ.
 καὶ ἐγενήθη μέρος Κυρίου λαὸς αὐτοῦ
 Ἰακώβ.

This view next appears in Sir. xvii. 17 :

ἐκάστω ἔθνει κατέστησεν ἡγούμενον,
 καὶ μέρος Κυρίου Ἰσραὴλ ἐστίν :

and in Dan. x. 13, 20, 21, xii. 1, where, however, all the nations including even Israel are understood to be under the patronage of angels, Israel being under Michael. According to Eth. Enoch lxxxix. Israel was placed for purposes of discipline for a time under the charge of seventy angels, who are no doubt the angelic patrons of the seventy nations of the world. The appointment of these seventy angels to be the heads of the nations is recorded in the Ps.-Jon. of Deut. xxxii. 8. They may be referred to as demons in 1 Cor. x. 19, or as τὰ στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου in Gal. iv. 3, 9 ; Col. ii. 20.

31. To lead them astray. In x. 3, 8, xix. 28, this is the function assigned to the demons, who were the spirits that went forth from the slaughtered children of the Watchers and the daughters of men (see v. 1, 7-9, x. 5, 8, 9). But in the present passage it is said that God gave the hegemony of the nations to angels for this purpose. The condemnation of the seventy angelic patrons for their evil treatment of Israel is described in Eth. Enoch xc. 22, 23, and also in Isaiah xxiv. 21, 22, though in the latter passage the cause is not assigned. I think we may assume that the statement in our text is made on the same principle as many in the Scriptures (cf. Is. vi. 9 ; Matt. xiii. 14 ; Mark iv. 12, etc.), in which the ultimate result of an action or a series of actions is declared to have been the immediate object of them.

In later Judaism at all events the seventy angels are described as the rulers of the nations. These angels share in the fortunes, whether favourable or unfavourable, of the nations over which they bear sway. They are likewise the sources of corruption to their subject peoples, introducing idolatry and impurity. See Eisenmenger, Entdecktes Judenthum, i. 805-820.

And there will be great wrath from the Lord against the children of Israel, because they have forsaken His covenant and turned aside from His word, and provoked and blasphemed, inasmuch as they do not observe the ordinance of this law; for they have treated their members like the Gentiles, so that they may be removed and rooted out of the land. And there will no more be pardon or forgiveness unto them [so that there should be forgiveness and pardon] for all the sin of this eternal error.

And in the sixth year of the †fourth† week we came to Abraham, to the Well of the Oath, and we appeared unto him [as we had told Sarah that we should return to her, and she would have conceived a son. 16. And we returned in the seventh month, and found Sarah with child before us] and we blessed him, and we announced to him all the things which had been decreed concerning him, that he should not die till he should beget six sons more, and should see (them) before he died; but (that) in Isaac should his name and seed be called: 17. And (that) all the seed of his sons should be Gentiles, and be reckoned with the Gentiles; but from the sons of Isaac one should become a holy seed, and should not be reckoned among the Gentiles. 18. For he should become the portion of the Most High, and all his seed had fallen into the possession of God, that it should be

13. Birth of Isaac on the 15th of Sivan. According to the Rosh ha-Shanah 10*b*, Isaac was born on the Passover Feast; according to the Midrash Tanchuma on Exodus (Beer, Leb. Abr. 168), on the first of Nisan.

15. †Fourth†. This should be "third" as in xv. 1. Abram was in his eighty-sixth year when Ishmael was born (xiv. 24), that is, in the fifth year of the first week of the forty-first jubilee. Fifteen years later Isaac was born in the hundredth year of Abraham.

15-16. The words bracketed in these verses contain a gloss that destroys the sense of the context. They proceed from a corrupt reading in ver. 4 and misunderstanding of text generally.

16. Blessed him. For "him" Eth.

reads "her." Similarly after "announced to." The Latin is followed here.

Six sons more. Abraham had six sons by Keturah: Gen. xxv. 2. See xx. 1 of our text.

In Isaac should his name, etc. Gen. xxi. 12. See xvii. 6 of our text.

17. All the descendants of Abraham save Jacob and his posterity belong to the Gentiles. See xv. 30. In Sanh. 59*b* there is a discussion as to whether circumcision was obligatory on Ishmael's and Keturah's sons in consequence of Gen. xvii. 9, 10. Owing to Gen. xxi. 12 it was held that the obligation did not extend to the descendants of Esau. See above xv. 30.

18. Portion of the Most High. See note on xv. 31-32.

unto the Lord a people for (His) possession above all nations and that it should become a kingdom and priests and a holy nation. 19. And we went our way, and we announced to Sarah all that we had told him, and they both rejoiced with exceeding great joy. 20. And he built there an altar to the Lord who had delivered him, and who was making him rejoice in the land of his sojourning, and he celebrated a festival of joy in this month seven days, near the altar which he had built at the Well of the Oath. 21. And he built booths for himself and for his servants on this festival, and he was the first to celebrate the feast of tabernacles on the earth. 22. And during these seven days he brought

A people for (His) possession = hezba terit (cf. xxxiii. 20), emended from hezba (a b c) tersit (b c) tirsita, a) = "people of magnificence." d reads "people of inheritance" (hezba rest), cf. Deut. iv. 20; Latin, populum sanctificatum. This last = λαδὸν ὄσιον, which may be corrupt for λαδὸν οὐσίας (or περιούσιον) = עם סגלה (Deut. vii. 6), a frequent O.T. phrase; cf. Exod. xix. 5, which was clearly before our author, as the closing clause of our verse shows. See also Deut. vii. 6, xiv. 2, xxvi. 18, where the full phrase עם סגלה is found. In xix. 18 of our text the same difficulties recur. If tersit is right, we might compare Deut. xxvi. 19.

A kingdom and priests (cf. xxxiii. 20) = βασιλεία καὶ ἱερεῖς, whereas the Latin has regnum sacerdotale = βασιλεία ἱερατική = ממלכת כהנים. The phrase is from Exod. xix. 6, of which the Latin gives the correct rendering and not the Ethiopic version. Yet the latter seems to represent the Hebrew original of our text, as we shall see presently. First of all we observe that it is incorrectly translated in the LXX and it is reproduced in two forms in the N.T. closely akin to those above. The LXX translates it incorrectly by βασιλειον ἱεράτευμα (a hierarchy consisting of kings), and this rendering is adopted in 1 Pet. ii. 9. In Rev. v. 10 we have βασιλειαν καὶ ἱερεῖς exactly as in our Ethiopic text, and in i. 6 βασιλειαν ἱερεῖς. Thus our Ethiopic text and Rev. i. 6, v. 10 agree in giving practically the same rendering of ממלכת כהנים in Exod. xix. 6, and in inserting either the copula or a pause between the two Hebrew words. This is an ancient Jewish way of treating this phrase. Thus we find it given in Onkelos as מלכין כהנים (as in Rev. i. 6); in Ps.-Jon. קטירי כלילא מלכין כהנים (= kings with crowns and ministering priests); in the Jer. Targ. מלכין וכהנים; and the Syr. version ܡܠܟܝܢ ܕܟܗܢܝܢ; exactly as in our Ethiopic text and in Rev. v. 10. Thus we conclude that the Ethiopic text represents the Hebrew original and that the Latin regnum sacerdotale is borrowed by the Latin translator of Jubilees from the Vulgate.

20-31. The account of the feast of tabernacles in our text is peculiar. As regards the number of victims it presents some points of agreement and many of disagreement with the account given in Num. xxix. 12-40. I cannot offer any explanation of these phenomena. Verses 20-22 were before Cedrenus i. 50: μετὰ ταῦτα τῆς κατὰ Μαβρῆ δρυὸς ἀπαναστὰς ὁ Ἀβραὰμ ἐπὶ τὸ φρέαρ κατασκευοῖ τοῦ ὄρκου. ἐαυτῷ δὲ ἰδίᾳ καὶ τοῖς οἰκέταις αὐτοῦ κατὰ συγγενείας πηξάμενος σκηνάς, τότε πρῶτον Ἀβραὰμ τῆς σκηνοπηγίας ἐπὶ ἑπτὰ ἡμέρας ἐπιτελεῖ τὴν ἐορτήν.

22. Two different sacrifices are here recorded: a burnt-offering (עולה) and a sin-offering (חטאת).

each day to the altar a burnt-offering to the Lord, two oxen, two rams, seven sheep, one he-goat, for a sin-offering, that he might atone thereby for himself and for his seed. 23. And, as a thank-offering, seven rams, seven kids, seven sheep, and seven he-goats, and their fruit-offerings and their drink-offerings; and he burnt all the fat thereof on the altar, a chosen offering unto the Lord for a sweet smelling savour. 24. And morning and evening he burnt fragrant substances, frankincense and galbanum, and stackte, and nard, and myrrh, and spice, and costum; all these seven he offered, crushed, mixed together in equal parts (and) pure. 25. And he celebrated this feast during seven days, rejoicing with all his heart and with all his soul, he and all those who were in his house; and there was no stranger with him, nor any that was uncircumcised. 26. And he blessed his Creator who had created him in his generation, for He had created him according to His good pleasure; for He knew and perceived that from him would arise the plant of right-

Two oxen or "bullocks." According to Num. xxix. 13-33 thirteen bullocks were sacrificed on the first day, twelve on the second, eleven on the third, and soon, the number being diminished by one each day.

Two rams. So in Num. xxix. 13.

Seven sheep. In Num. xxix. 13 fourteen he-lambs.

One he-goat. So in Num. xxix. 16.

23. Thank-offering = θυσία σωτηρίου = זבח שלמים. The victims in this case correspond in kind and number with those offered by Hezekiah in 2 Chron. xxix. 21, but in the latter passage they constitute a sin-offering for the kingdom.

24. Fragrant substances = ἡδύσματα = כסמים. Our author is here making use of Exod. xxx. 34, and not of Num. iv. 16; Lev. iv. 7 etc. as the Latin implies, which has incensum compositionis = θυμίαμα τῆς συνθέσεως from Lev. iv. 7, xvi. 13; Num. iv. 16 (קטרת הכסמים). The Ethiopic appears to be right.

Frankincense, galbanum, etc. The first four of these are mentioned in Exod. xxx. 34, לִבְנָה (= λίβανος = libanus, thus), חֲלָבֵנָה (= χαλβάνη = galbanum), שֵׁט (= στακτή = stacte), נֹדָה (= ὄνυξ = nardus). All seven are enumerated in Sir. xxiv. 15:

ὥς κιννάμωμον καὶ ἀσπάλαθος ἀρωμάτων δέδωκα ὁσμὴν, καὶ ὥς σμύρνα ἐκλεκτὴ δέδωκα εὐωδίαν, ὥς χαλβάνη καὶ ὄνυξ καὶ στακτή, καὶ ὥς λίβανου ἀτμὶς ἐν σκηνῇ.

Here χαλβάνη, ὄνυξ, στακτή, λίβανου ἀτμὶς correspond to the first four in our text but in a different order, and κιννάμωμον, ἀσπάλαθος ἀρωμάτων, σμύρνα to the last three. These seven fragrant constituents of the incense offering are mentioned in Jer. Joma iv. 5; Keritot 6a b (Singer, 75 note; Nowack, Hebr. Archäol. ii. 248).

26. Plant of righteousness. See xxi. 24; Eth. Enoch x. 16; xciii. 5, 10, where the same expression is found. Cf. also lxxxiv. 6, xciii. 2 in the same work.

eousness for the eternal generations, and from him a holy seed, so that it should become like Him who had made all things. 27. And he blessed and rejoiced, and he called the name of this festival the festival of the Lord, a joy acceptable to the Most High God. 28. And we blessed him for ever, and all his seed after him throughout all the generations of the earth, because he celebrated this festival in its season, according to the testimony of the heavenly tables. 29. For this reason it is ordained on the heavenly tables concerning Israel, that they shall celebrate the feast of tabernacles seven days with joy, in the seventh month, acceptable before the Lord—a statute for ever throughout their generations every year. 30. And to this there is no limit of days; for it is ordained for ever regarding Israel that they should celebrate it and dwell in booths, and set wreaths upon their heads, and take leafy boughs, and willows from the brook. 31. And Abraham took branches of palm trees, and the fruit of goodly trees, and every day going round the altar with the branches seven times [a day] in the morning, he praised and gave thanks to his God for all things in joy.

Expulsion of Hagar and Ishmael, 1-14. Mastēmā proposes that God should require Abraham to sacrifice Isaac in

28. All his seed. Latin omits "all."

29. A statute for ever, etc. Lev. xxiii. 41.

30. Cf. Lev. xxiii. 40.

Set wreaths upon their heads. This is unknown to tradition in connection with the feast. The custom of wearing chaplets at feasts is referred to in Wisdom ii. 7-8; Joseph. Ant. xix. 9. 1 (cf. 3 Macc. iv. 8), but it cannot be established as a Jewish one. Bridegrooms, however, were adorned with myrtles and roses, Gittin 7 a, Sota 49 b (Beer, Buch d. Jub. 47). The metaphorical use of "crown" or "wreath"

as ὁ στέφανος τῆς ζωῆς (Rev. ii. 10; cf. 2 Tim. iv. 8) is familiar also in Judaism; cf. Megilla 15 b.

31. Branches of palm trees. Text lebba dabart and Latin corde palmarum go back as Dillmann recognised to לולבי (לולב) was wrongly taken as לבב by the Greek translator. We might observe that the Targums on Lev. xxiii. 40 have here simply לולבין.

Every day . . . seven times. According to Sukka iv. 5 it was only on the seventh day that the worshippers went round the altar seven times (Beer, Buch der Jubiläen, 46; Singer, 75).

order to test his love and obedience: Abraham's ten trials, 15-18. (Cf. Gen. xxi. 8-21.)

XVII. And in the first year of the †fifth† week Isaac 1982 A.M. was weaned in this jubilee, and Abraham made a great banquet in the third month, on the day his son Isaac was weaned. 2. And Ishmael, the son of Hagar, the Egyptian, was before the face of Abraham, his father, in his place, and Abraham rejoiced and blessed God because he had seen his sons and had not died childless. 3. And he remembered the words which He had spoken to him on the day on which Lot had parted from him, and he rejoiced because the Lord had given him seed upon the earth to inherit the earth, and he blessed with all his mouth the Creator of all things. 4. And Sarah saw Ishmael playing and dancing, and Abraham rejoicing with great joy, and she became jealous of Ishmael and said to Abraham, "Cast out this bondwoman and her son; for the son of this bondwoman will not be heir with my son, Isaac." 5. And the thing was grievous in Abraham's sight, because of his maidservant and because of his son, that he should drive them from him. 6. And God said to Abraham "Let it not be grievous in thy sight, because of the child and because of the bondwoman; in all that Sarah hath said unto thee, hearken to her words and do (them); for in Isaac shall thy name and seed be called. 7. But as for the son of this bondwoman I will make him a great nation, because he is of thy seed." 8. And Abraham rose up early in the morning, and took bread and a bottle

XVII. 1. Cf. Gen. xxi. 8.

See a similar error in xvi. 15.

2. Because he had seen his sons, etc.
Cf. xvi. 16.

3. See xiii. 19 sqq.

4-13. Cf. Gen. xxi. 9-21.

4. And dancing. Since the Latin has cum Isaac, wa-yezafen may be corrupt for ba-yeshaq = "with Isaac." These words are found in the LXX and Vulg. of Gen. xxi. 9 but not in the Mass. or Sam.

of water, and placed them on the shoulders of Hagar and the child, and sent her away. 9. And she departed and wandered in the wilderness of Beersheba, and the water in the bottle was spent, and the child thirsted, and was not able to go on, and fell down. 10. And his mother took him and cast him under an olive tree, and went and sat her down over against him, at the distance of a bow-shot; for she said, "Let me not see the death of my child," and as she sat she wept. 11. And an angel of God, one of the holy ones, said unto her, "Why weepest thou, Hagar? Arise take the child, and hold him in thine hand; for God hath heard thy voice, and hath seen the child." 12. And she opened her eyes, and she saw a well of water, and she went and filled her bottle with water, and she gave her child to drink, and she arose and went towards the wilderness of Paran. 13. And the child grew and became an archer, and God was with him; and his mother took him a wife from among the daughters of Egypt. 14. And she bare him a son, and he called his name Nebaioth; for she said, "The Lord was nigh to me when I called upon him."

2003 A.M. 15. And it came to pass in the seventh week, in the first year thereof, in the first month in this jubilee, on the twelfth of this month, there were voices in heaven regarding Abraham, that he was faithful in all that He told him, and that he loved the Lord, and that in every affliction he was faithful. 16. And the prince Mastêmâ came and said

10. An olive tree. Instead of ἐλάτας LXX has ἐλάτης.

12. She opened. We should with Gen. xxi. 19 expect "he."

14. Nebaioth. Eth.=Nâbêwôt. Cf. Gen. xxv. 13.

Was nigh. We should expect the original behind "was nigh" to contain some of the consonants in "Nebaioth."

15. Isaac is thus twenty-three when he was offered up by Abraham (cf.

xvi. 12 and xvii. 15). According to the Seder Olam, Isaac was thirty-seven.

16. Here as elsewhere (cf. xlviii. 2, 17) our author attributes to Mastêmâ the conduct which he deems unworthy of God but which is ascribed to Him by Gen. xxii. 1. Cf. also James i. 13. We might compare with our text the following passage from Sanh. 89b 'Satan spake before the Holy One, blessed be He. 'Lord of the World, Thou hast given fruit of the body to before God, "Behold, Abraham loves Isaac his son, and he delights in him above all things else; bid him offer him as a burnt-offering on the altar, and Thou wilt see if he will do this command, and Thou wilt know if he is faithful in everything wherein Thou dost try him. 17. And the Lord knew that Abraham was faithful in all his afflictions; for He had tried him through his country and with famine, and had tried him with the wealth of kings, and had tried him again through his wife, when she was torn (from him), and with circumcision; and had tried him through Ishmael and Hagar, his maid-servant, when he sent them away. 18. And in everything wherein He had tried him, he was found faithful, this old man of 100 years, and yet in all the feasts celebrated by him, he has never offered in sacrifice to Thee a bullock or a young dove.' God answered him: . . . 'If I were to say to him, Sacrifice thy son, he would sacrifice him, etc.'" Cf. also Bk. of Jashar (ii. 1139).

17. According to xix. 8 Abraham was submitted to ten trials. Seven are mentioned in this verse: 1. The going forth from his country. 2. Famine. 3. The wealth of kings. 4. The seizure of his wife by the king of Egypt. 5. Circumcision. 6, 7. The dismissal of Ishmael and Hagar. In xix. 3, 8 the burial of Sarah is specially mentioned as the tenth. The eighth and ninth though not specifically reckoned as such in our text are the unfruitfulness of Sarah, xiv. 21, and the sacrifice of Isaac, xviii. This enumeration agrees closely with those of Maimonides, Jona Girondi and Simon Duran which are given below. From Beer's Leben Abr. 190-192 I draw the account in Pirke R. Eliezer, ch. 26 sq.: 1. Nimrod's attempt on his life. 2. Ten years imprisonment in Cutha and Khadr. 3. Departure from his country. 4. Famine. 5. Seizure of his wife. 6. War with the kings. 7. Covenant between the pieces. 8. Circumcision. 9. Rejection of Ishmael. 10. Offering of Isaac. The account given in Fabricius, Col. Pseud. V.T. i. 398, differs slightly from the above. According to Pirke R. Nathan, ch. 33, two trials were sustained when he was bidden to leave his home (Gen.

xii. 1) and to go to Mt. Moriah to sacrifice Isaac (xx. 2): two in connection with his sons: two in connection with his wives: one with the kings: one between the sacrificial pieces: one in the furnace of the Chaldees: one in circumcision. According to the reckoning of Maimonides (see Fabricius (ibid. 399); Rönsch, 383) the trials were: 1. Going forth from his country. 2. Famine. 3. Seizure of his wife. 4. War with the kings. 5. Unfruitfulness of Sarah. 6. Circumcision. 7. Second seizure of his wife. 8, 9. Expulsion of Hagar and Ishmael. 10. Sacrifice of Isaac. It will be remarked that this last list corresponds best with our text; but the correspondence of the following lists is closer: Beer (Leben Abr. 191) writes: Die meisten späteren Aboth-Commentatoren schlossen sich den Pirke des R. Elieser an, blos darin variirend, dass Einige (Obadia Bertinoro and Menachem Meiri) anstatt des unterirdischen Aufenthaltes in Abraham's Kindheit den Vorfall mit Abimelech besonders zählen und Andere (R. Jona Girondi, Simon Zemach Duran) den Bund zwischen den Stücken nicht unter die Versuchungen aufnehmen, aber an dessen Stelle gegen alle früheren Referate, welche die Zehnzahl mit der Opferung Isaak's schliessen, die Beer-digung Sara's als zehnte Versuchung hinstellten. Thus Jona Girondi and Simon Duran agree with our text in making the burial of Sarah the tenth trial of Abraham.

and his soul was not impatient, and he was not slow to act ; for he was faithful and a lover of the Lord.

Saerifice of Isaac : Mastêmâ put to shame, 1-13. Abraham again blessed : returns to Beersheba, 14-19. (Cf. Gen. xxii. 1-19.)

XVIII. And God said to him, "Abraham, Abraham"; and he said, "Behold, (here) am I." 2. And He said, "Take thy beloved son whom thou lovest, (even) Isaac, and go unto the high country, and offer him on one of the mountains which I will point out unto thee." 3. And he rose early in the morning and saddled his ass, and took his two young men with him, and Isaac his son, and clave the wood of the burnt-offering, and he went to the place on the third day, and he saw the place afar off. 4. And he came to a well of water, and he said to his young men, "Abide ye here with the ass, and I and the lad shall go (yonder), and when we have worshipped we shall come again to you." 5. And he took the wood of the burnt-offering and laid it on Isaac his son, and he took in his hand the fire and the knife, and they went both of them together to that place. 6. And Isaac said to his father, "Father"; and he said, "Here am I, my son." And he said unto him, "Behold the fire, and the knife, and the wood; but where is the sheep for the burnt-offering, father?" 7. And he said, "God will provide for himself a sheep for a burnt-offering, my son." And he drew near to the place of the mount of God. 8. And he built an altar, and he placed the wood on the altar, and bound Isaac his son, and placed him on the wood which was upon the altar, and stretched forth his hand to take the knife to slay Isaac

XVIII. 1-17. Cf. Gen. xxii. 1-19.

2. Beloved son. So LXX τὸν ἀγαπητὸν = יְדִיד instead of Mass., Sam., Syr. יְדִיד.

The high country (a d. b c = "mountain") = (Gen. xxii. 2) LXX τὴν γῆν τῆς ὑψηλότητος. Mass. = "Land of Moriah."

7. Of the mount of God. Gen. xxii. 9 reads: "which God had told him of."

his son. 9. And I stood before him, and before the prince of the Mastêmâ, and the Lord said, "Bid him not to lay his hand on the lad, nor to do anything to him, for I have shown that he fears the Lord." 10. And I called to him from heaven, and said unto him: "Abraham, Abraham"; and he was terrified and said: "Behold, (here) am I." 11. And I said unto him: "Lay not thy hand upon the lad, neither do thou anything to him; for now I have shown that thou fearest the Lord, and hast not withheld thy son, thy first-born son, from me." 12. And the prince of the Mastêmâ was put to shame; and Abraham lifted up his eyes and looked, and, behold, a single ram caught . . . by his horns, and Abraham went and took the ram and offered it for a burnt-offering in the stead of his son. 13. And Abraham called that place "The Lord hath seen," so that it is said "(in the mount) the Lord hath seen": that is Mount Sion. 14. And the Lord called Abraham by his name a second time from heaven, as he caused us to appear to speak to him in the name of the Lord. 15. And He said: "By Myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, Because thou hast done this thing, And hast not withheld thy son, thy beloved son, from Me,

Shown. Or "known," but see note on 11.

11. I have shown=Latin version, manifestavi (=יִרְעָתִי). The Eth. could also be rendered "I have known," as Mass. and Sam. of Gen. xxii. 12 יִרְעָתִי, but the Latin, manifestavi, is unmistakeable and this rendering is supported by both Eth. and Latin in ver. 16. The Syr. has the very same rendering: ܐܕܐܝܢܐ=I have shown. Ps.-Jon. has ܐܕܐܝܢܐ=manifestatum est. "I have shown" is suitable to the context. God proves Abraham's faithfulness to Mastêmâ and to others (ver. 16).

12. Caught. All the MSS add "and he came"=wa-yêmaš'ê, (?) corrupt for ba'êdaw="in a thicket."

13. (In the mount). Added from Latin. It is found in Mass. and LXX of Gen. xxii. 14.

Hath seen. Syr. and Vulg.= "will see," "seeth." The verb is passive in the Mass. (יִרְאֶה) and LXX, and also in the Latin version of Jubilees—visus est.

14. He caused us to appear (b). a "he caused him (c "me") to appear"; d "we appeared." Latin=fuimus is corrupt.

15. Thy beloved son (a d)=τοῦ ἀγαπητοῦ σου=יִרְיָךְ. Lat., tuo unigenito=τοῦ μονογενεοῦς σου=יְחִידְךָ. Hence Hebrew text seems to have had a dittographical text just as LXX(A) of Judges xi. 34: αὐτῇ μονογενεῖς αὐτῷ ἀγαπητῇ, and LXX and Vulg. of Gen. xxii. 2, 12, 16 postulate similar dittographies of the same Hebrew word in Hebrew text. On the other hand b c under influence of ver.

 the Lord according to the seven days during which he went ordained and written on the heavenly tables regarding Israel and its seed that they should observe this festival seven days with the joy of festival.

in the first year of the †third† week of this jubilee the days of the life of Sarah were accomplished, and she died in Hebron. 3. And Abraham went to mourn over her and bury her, and we tried him [to see] if his spirit were patient and he were not indignant in the words of his mouth; and he was found patient in this, and was not disturbed. 4. For in patience of spirit he conversed with the children of Heth, to the intent that they should give him a place in which to bury his dead. 5. And the Lord gave him grace before all who saw him, and he besought in gentleness the sons of Heth, and they gave him the land of the double cave over against Mamre, that is Hebron, for four hundred pieces of silver. 6. And they besought him, saying, "We shall give it to thee for nothing"; but he would not take it from their hands for nothing, for he gave the price of the place, the money in full, and he bowed down before them twice; and after this he buried his dead in the double cave. 7. And all the days of the life of Sarah were one hundred and twenty-seven years, that is, two jubilees and four weeks and one year: these are the days of the years of the life of Sarah. 8. This is the tenth trial wherewith Abraham was tried, and he was found faithful, patient in spirit. 9. And he said not a single word regarding the rumour in the land how that God had said that He would give it to him and to his seed after him, and he begged a place there to bury his dead; for he was found faithful, and was recorded on the heavenly tables as the friend of God. 10. And in the fourth year 2020 A.M.

2. †Third†. Read "second." Isaac married (xix. 10) at the age of 40 (Gen. xxv. 20) after Sarah's death. Hence he married in the fourth year of the second week.

2, 4. Cf. Gen. xxiii. 3, 4.

5-6. Cf. Gen. xxiii. 11-16.

5. Double cave = τὸ σπήλαιον τοῦ διπλοῦν (LXX) = מערת המכפלה, "the cave of Machpelah."

Four hundred. So Latin. Eth. wrongly gives "forty."

Of the years. a and Latin omit.

8. Tenth trial. In addition to the references on xvii. 17 see also the Sayings of the Fathers,² v. 3 (Taylor's edition, p. 80), which speaks of the ten trials of Abraham.

9. Friend of God. Cf. xxx. 20, 21. This expression springs from the O.T.:

thereof he took a wife for his son Isaac and her name was Rebecca [the daughter of Bethuel, the son of Nahor, the brother of Abraham] the sister of Laban and daughter of Bethuel; and Bethuel was the son of Mêlcâ, who was the wife of Nahor, the brother of Abraham. 11. And Abraham took to himself a third wife, and her name was Keturah, from among the daughters of his household servants, for Hagar had died before Sarah. 12. And she bare him six sons, Zimram, and Jokshan, and Medan, and Midian, and Ishbak, and Shuah, in the two weeks of years. 13. And in 2046 A.M. the sixth week, in the second year thereof, Rebecca bare to Isaac two sons, Jacob and Esau, and Jacob was a smooth and upright man, and Esau was fierce, a man of the field, and hairy, and Jacob dwelt in tents. 14. And the youths grew, and Jacob learned to write; but Esau did not learn, cf. Is. xli. 8 "Abraham, My friend"; 2 Chron. xx. 7; LXX of Dan. iii. 35. It is found in Philo, De Sobrietate, 11: μη ἐπικαλύψω ἐγὼ ἀπὸ Ἀβραὰμ τοῦ φίλου μου; (Gen. xviii. 17); also in James ii. 23; Clem. Rom. x. 1, xvii. 2; Targ. Jer. on Gen. xviii. 17. In Book of Wisdom vii. 27 the designation φίλοι Θεοῦ is applied to the faithful generally, and likewise in Philo, Fragment ii. p. 652: πᾶς σοφὸς θεοῦ φίλος. This application of the phrase may be due to Plato, Legg. iv. 8, where the wise man is said to be θεῶ φίλος: cf. also Max. Tyr. xx. 6. For Rabbinical references Singer, p. 151 note.

Keturah . . . for Hagar had died before Sarah. Our author here explains why Abraham did not take Hagar back. Later tradition—Gen. rabba 61, Ps.-Jon. and Targ. Jer. on Gen. xxvii.—got over the difficulty by identifying Hagar and Keturah. This view is mentioned by Jerome, Quaest. Hebr. in Gen. xxv. 1: Cetura Hebraeo sermone copulata interpretatur aut juncta (al. vineta). Quam ob causam suspicantur Hebraei mutato nomine eandem esse Agar, quae Saraa mortua de concubina transierit in uxorem. According to the Book of Jashar (Dict. des Apoc. ii. 1147) Keturah was a Canaanitish woman. See Beer, Leben Abr. 83, 198; Singer, p. 118. Daughters. Emended with Latin. Text = "sons."

Sixth. This date harmonises with that in xxv. 1, 4, according to which Jacob was 63 in 2109 A.M., but disagrees with that in xlv. 13.

Smooth and upright. So b.c. Two different renderings of איש תם (Gen. xxv. 27) seem to be conjoined here. On the other hand, since the description of Esau is borrowed from Gen. xxv. 27 and xxvii. 11, it is probable that the description of Jacob is drawn from both also, and that we should here read: "Smooth and upright."

14. Jacob learned to write. On the phrase cf. John vii. 15; Acts xxvi. 24; Plato, Apol. 26 D. According to Onkelos for he was a man of the field and a hunter, and he learnt war, and all his deeds were fierce. 15. And Abraham loved Jacob, but Isaac loved Esau. 16. And Abraham saw the deeds of Esau, and he knew that in Jacob should his name and seed be called; and he called Rebecca and gave commandment regarding Jacob, for he knew that she (too) loved Jacob much more than Esau. 17. And he said unto her: "My daughter, watch over my son Jacob,

For he shall be in my stead on the earth,
And for a blessing in the midst of the children of men,
And for the glory of the whole seed of Shem.

18. For I know that the Lord will choose him to be a people for possession unto Himself, above all peoples that are upon the face of the earth. 19. And behold, Isaac my son loves Esau more than Jacob, but I see that thou truly lovest Jacob.

20. Add still further to thy kindness to him,
And let thine eyes be upon him in love;
For he will be a blessing unto us on the earth from

And let thy heart rejoice in thy son Jacob;
For I have loved him far beyond all my sons.
He will be blessed for ever,
And his seed will fill the whole earth.

To lay the foundations of the heaven,

And to strengthen the earth,

And to renew all the luminaries which are in the firmament."

26. And he called Jacob before the eyes of Rebecca his mother, and kissed him, and blessed him, and said:

27. "Jacob, my beloved son, whom my soul loveth, may God bless thee from above the firmament, and may He give thee all the blessings wherewith He blessed Adam, and Enoch, and Noah, and Shem; and all the things of which He told me, and all the things which He promised to give me, may He cause to cleave to thee and to thy seed for ever, according to the days of heaven above the earth. 28. And the spirits of Mastêmâ shall not rule over thee or over thy seed to turn thee from the Lord, who is thy God from henceforth for ever. 29. And may the Lord God be a father to thee and thou the first-born son, and to the people alway. Go in peace, my son." 30. And they both went forth together from Abraham. 31. And Rebecca loved Jacob, with all her heart and with all her soul, very much more than Esau; but Isaac loved Esau much more than Jacob.

24. This list of righteous patriarchs is peculiar for its omissions and its insertions. With regard to Mahalelel nothing special is known. On the other hand, the omission of Methuselah is strange. In later times opinions were divided as to the character of Adam. Some held him to be a saint (הַסֵּד Erub. 18b), others an atheist

That they should circumcise their sons, according to the covenant which He had made with them, and not deviate to the right hand or the left of all the paths which the Lord had commanded us; and that we should keep ourselves from all fornication and uncleanness, [and renounce from amongst us all fornication and uncleanness]. 4. XX. 1. †Seventh†. "Seventh" seems corrupt for "sixth." The present text makes the date 2052 or the year after Abraham's death. If we read "sixth" it would give 2045. See note on xxi. 1. Thus some time would intervene between the dismissal of Ishmael and his sons to their distant homes (xx. 11) and the return of Ishmael and Jacob to celebrate the feast of weeks (xxii. 1).

3. Circumcise their sons. Sanh. 59 b contains a discussion as to whether circumcision was obligatory on Ishmael's and Keturah's sons in conformity with Gen. xvii. 9. Owing to Gen. xxi. 12 it was held not to extend to Esau's descendants.

death by stoning, whereas death by fire was reserved for the priest's daughter who had played the whore, Lev. xxi. 9. On the other hand Gen. xxxviii. 24, where Judah proposes to burn Tamar, comes under neither of these regulations. XXI. And in the sixth year of the † seventh † week of this jubilee Abraham called Isaac his son, and commanded him, saying: "I am become old, and know not the day of my death, and am full of my days. 2. And behold, I am one hundred and seventy-five years old, and throughout all the days of my life I have remembered the Lord, and sought with all my heart to do His will, and to walk uprightly in all His ways. 3. My soul has hated idols, (and I have despised those that served them, and I have given my heart

XXI. 1. †Seventh†. Since Abraham was born in 1876 A.M. and lived 175 years, he must have died in 2051 A.M., whereas our text makes it 2057. Hence read "sixth." We should then have 2050.

Abraham called Isaac his son, and commanded him. Cf. Test. Levi 9: 'Ισαὰκ ἐκάλει με . . . τοῦ ὑπομνήσαι με νόμον Κυρίου. The rest of this chapter according to our author deals with Abraham's directions to Isaac regarding the various kinds of sacrifices, the woods to be used on the altar, the ablutions of the priest, the duty of avoiding fornication. Now it is quite clear that the author of Test. Levi 9 had either our text before him or else a source common to both. The converse hypothesis that our author had the Test. Levi before him is not workable. In any case the text of the Test. Levi is less original than that of our author. It represents Isaac as transmitting to Levi the same ritual commands that our text describes Abraham as giving to Isaac. The only point that can be urged in favour of the originality of the Test. Levi is that the words in Jubilees xxi. 1 "I am become old and know not the day of my death" are used by Isaac in Gen. xxvii. 2 and not by Abraham. But the two views are compatible. Our text represents Abraham as giving directions as to sacrifices, etc., to Isaac; and the Test. Levi represents Isaac as handing them on to Levi. The ὡς καὶ 'Αβραὰμ ἐδίδαξε support the view of our author. I will now give the portions of Test. Levi 9 which deal with the same matter as our text and insert after them the references to the parallels in our text. καὶ 'Ισαὰκ ἐκάλει με συνεχῶς τοῦ ὑπομνήσαι με νόμον Κυρίου (Jub. xxi. 1) . . . καὶ ἐδίδασκέ με νόμον ἱερωσύνης, θυσιῶν, ὀλοκαυτωμάτων, ἀπαρχῶν, ἐκουσίων, σωτηρίων (Jub. xxi. 7-9) . . . καὶ ἔλεγε· Μὴ πρόσεχε, τέκνον, ἀπὸ τοῦ πνεύματος τῆς πορνείας (xxi. 21-23) . . . καὶ πρὸ τοῦ εἰσελθεῖν εἰς τὰ ἅγια, λούου· καὶ ἐν τῷ θύειν, νίπτου· καὶ ἀπαρτίζων πάλιν τὴν θυσίαν, νίπτου (xxi. 16 almost word for word). Δώδεκα δένδρων αἰεὶ ἐχόντων φύλλα ἀναγε· Κυρίῳ, ὡς καὶ 'Αβραὰμ ἐδίδαξε (xxi. 12-13) . . . καὶ πᾶσαν θυσίαν ἄλατι ἀλείψ (xxi. 11).

I am become old, and know not the day of my death. These words are used by Isaac in Gen. xxvii. 2.

And am full. For "and" MSS read "for," but Latin rightly gives "et."

Full of my days. The pronoun is peculiar to this book and Eth. vers. and Syr. The Sam., LXX, Vulg. read "full of days" against Mass. and Onkelos of Gen. xxv. 8 which omit "of days." Cf. xxii. 7, xxiii. 8 of our text.

2. Cf. Gen. xxv. 7.

3. (And I have despised . . . and spirit). Supplied from Latin: probably lost in Ethiopic through homoioteleuton.

and spirit) that I might observe to do the will of Him who created me. 4. For He is the living God, and He is holy and faithful, and He is righteous beyond all, and there is with Him no accepting of (men's) persons and no accepting of gifts; for God is righteous, and executeth judgment on all those who transgress His commandments and despise His covenant. 5. And do thou, my son, observe His commandments and His ordinances and His judgments, and walk not after the abominations and after the graven images and after the molten images. 6. And eat no blood at all of animals or cattle, or of any bird which flies in the heaven. 7. And if thou dost slay a victim as an acceptable peace-offering, slay ye it, and pour out its blood upon the altar, and all the fat of the offering offer on the altar with fine flour (and the meat-offering) mingled with oil, with its drink-offering—offer them all together on the altar of burnt-offering; it is a sweet savour before the Lord. 8. And thou wilt offer the fat of the sacrifice of thank-offerings on the fire which is upon the altar, and the fat which is on the belly, and all the fat on the inwards and the two kidneys, and all the fat that is upon them, and upon the loins and liver thou shalt remove, together with the kidneys.

4. No accepting of (men's) persons and . . . gifts. Cf. Deut. x. 17.

6. Cf. Lev. vii. 26. See vi. 10, 12 of our text; also xxi. 17 sqq.

7. Cf. Lev. iii. 7-10.

Peace-offering = θυσία ειρηνικαί = ובח שלמים, 1 Sam. x. 8, xi. 15 etc., but the Hebrew phrase is more usually rendered (ḥ) θυσία (τοῦ) σωτηρίου, Lev. iii. 3, 6, 9, iv. 26 etc.

(And the meat-offering). Latin omits the meat-offering. The phrase is most probably genuine as Littmann urges, though I rejected it in my Ethiopic text.

Mingled with oil. Cf. Lev. ii. 4, בשמים.

8. And thou wilt offer the fat of the sacrifice of thank-offerings . . . and the fat. So Latin. For "and . . . and" in the above the Ethiopic reads "as . . .

as." Lev. iii. 9-10, which our author has before him, supports the Latin: "And he shall offer of the sacrifice of peace-offerings an offering made by fire . . . and the fat which covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards and the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, which is by the loins . . . with the kidneys shall he take away." On the phrase "thank-offerings" see note on ver. 7.

On the belly, . . . on the inwards = ἐπὶ τῆς κοιλίας . . . ἐπὶ τῶν ἐντοσθίων (ἐντέρων). The Latin has super ventrum . . . super interanea. This variation is strange, since the Hebrew has קרב and the LXX κοιλία in both cases in Lev. iii. 10.

And upon the loins. Lev. iii. 10 has "which is by the loins."

9. And offer all these for a sweet savour acceptable before the Lord, with its meat-offering and with its drink-offering, for a sweet savour, the bread of the offering unto the Lord, 10. And eat its meat on that day and on the second day, and let not the sun on the second day go down upon it till it is eaten, and let nothing be left over for the third day; for it is not acceptable [for it is not approved] and let it no longer be eaten, and all who eat thereof will bring sin upon themselves; for thus I have found it written in the books of my forefathers, and in the words of Enoch, and in the words of Noah. 11. And on all thy oblations thou shalt strew salt, and let not the salt of the covenant be lacking in all thy oblations before the Lord. 12. And as regards the wood of the sacrifices, beware lest thou bring (other) wood

9. Bread of the offering unto the Lord. From Lev. iii. 11.

10. [For it is not approved]. I have bracketed this clause as a dittography.

Let it no longer be eaten = jētbālā'ē, emended from jētbahal (ab). cd = "thou shalt not eat."

Written in the books of my forefathers. According to x. 14 Noah gave all his secret books to Shem, who may have passed them on to Abraham, as, according to rabbinic tradition, Abraham attended the school of Shem. According to xii. 27, however, Abram is said to have been a "home" student, and to have studied the books of his fathers. Singer (p. 126 note) states that according to Pirke R. El. viii., Jalk. Gen. § 41, Abraham received from Shem the knowledge of the calendar which was imparted to Adam from heaven, and which had come down to Shem through Enoch and Noah. The present passage in our text as well as vii. 38 and Test. XII. Patriarch. Zeb. 3 trace back certain halachoth to commands or books of Enoch and Noah. None of the ancient books preserved under these names are of an halachic character. There was probably no ground for the statement made by our author.

11. On all thy oblations thou shalt strew salt. Cf. the parallel passage in Test. Levi 9: καὶ πᾶσαν θυσίαν ἀλατὶ ἀλειψῇ.

Salt of the covenant. Cf. Lev. ii. 13. MSS read "covenant of salt."

12. Beware lest thou bring (other) wood for the altar in addition to these. By a slight change (see my text, p. 75 note 30) we might read: "Be careful to offer on the altar the following woods (only)." This passage was written possibly to determine the meaning of עֵצֵי זֶבֶח in Exod. xxv. 5, 10 etc. Our text or the subject of it is referred to in Test. Levi 9: δώδεκα δένδρων αἰὲ ἐχόντων φύλλα ἀναγε Κυρίῳ, ὡς καμὲ Ἀβραὰμ ἐδίδαξε. The number here is probably corrupt. δώδεκα = 12, corrupt for 14. The Eth. Enoch iii. speaks of fourteen evergreen trees, and may be in that passage dependent on our text. With the list of fourteen trees in our text, cf. that in the Geoponica xi. 1: δένδρα ἀειθαλῆ ἐστὶ . . . ἰδ' (1) φοῖνιξ, (2) κίτριον, (3) στρόβιλος, (4) δάφνη, (5) ἐλαία, (6) κυπάρισσος, (7) κερατέα, (8) πίτυς, (9) πρίνος, (10) πύξος, (11) μυρσίνη, (12) κέδρος, (13) ἰτέα καὶ (14) ἄρκευθος. Of these fourteen, ten, i.e. nos.

for the altar in addition to these: cypress, dêfrân, sagâd, pine, fir, cedar, savin, palm, olive, myrrh, laurel, and citron, juniper, and balsam. 13. And of these kinds of wood lay upon the altar under the sacrifice, such as have been tested as to their appearance, and do not lay (thereon) any split or dark wood, (but) hard and clean, without fault, a sound and new growth; and do not lay (thereon) old wood, [for its fragrance is gone] for there is no longer fragrance in it as before. 14. Besides these kinds of wood there is none other that thou shalt place (on the altar), for the fragrance is dispersed, and the smell of its fragrance goes not up to heaven. 15. Observe this commandment and do it, my son, that thou mayst be upright in all thy deeds. 16. And at all times be clean in thy body, and wash thyself with water before thou approachest to offer on the altar, and wash thy hands and thy feet before thou drawest near to the altar; and when thou art done sacrificing, wash again thy hands and thy feet. 17. And let no blood appear upon you nor upon your clothes; be on thy guard, my son, against blood, be on thy guard exceedingly; cover it with dust. 18. And do not eat any blood, for it is the soul; eat no blood whatever. 19. And take no gifts for the blood of man, lest it be 6, 3, 8, 12, 1 (?), 5, 11, 4, 2 (or 7), 14, appear in our text. See my text, p. 75.

Dêfrân might be a corruption of πρίνος but that daprono (دافرون) is found in Syriac, and is a kind of fir.

Sagâd. This has been identified with the שקד, "the almond"; but wrongly, since the trees are all ever-green.

Citron. I have taken qêdâr as corrupt for κίτρινον. It may be a corruption of κερατέα. On wood for the sacrifices see Middoth ii. 5; Tamid 29 b; Sifra on Lev. i. 8 (Beer, Buch d. Jub. p. 35).

13. Nothing of this nature is found in the halacha. Tamid ii. 3 allows all kinds of wood but that of the olive and vine.

Clean = nēsûh, emended from šen'û'a (b) = "firm," šen'â (c). a omits.

[For its fragrance is gone]. I have bracketed this clause as originating in a dittography, or an interpolation from the next verse.

14. Goes not up. With Littmann I have inserted the negative.

16. On the duty of washing before approaching the altar, cf. Exod. xxx. 19-21, etc.

Wash again. Text = "return and wash," the familiar Hebrew idiom as Littmann has recognised.

17. Nor upon your clothes. ab omit "nor."

Be on thy guard, my son, against blood, . . . cover it with dust. Cf. Lev. xvii. 13.

18. Cf. Lev. xvii. 14; Deut. xii. 23.

shed with impunity, without judgment; for it is the blood that is shed that causes the earth to sin, and the earth cannot be cleansed from the blood of man save by the blood of him who shed it. 20. And take no present or gift for the blood of man: blood for blood, that thou mayest be accepted before the Lord, the Most High God; for He is the defence of the good: and that thou mayest be preserved from all evil, and that He may save thee from every kind of death.

21. I see, my son,

That all the works of the children of men are sin and wickedness,

And all their deeds are uncleanness and an abomination and a pollution,

And there is no righteousness with them.

22. Beware, lest thou shouldest walk in their ways

And tread in their paths,

And sin a sin unto death before the Most High God.

Else He will [hide His face from thee,

And] give thee back into the hands of thy transgression,

And root thee out of the land, and thy seed likewise from under heaven,

And thy name and thy seed will perish from the whole earth.

23. Turn away from all their deeds and all their uncleanness,

And observe the ordinance of the Most High God,

19. Causes the earth to sin. This goes back to הִנִּיף = "pollutes."

The earth cannot be cleansed, etc. Cf. vii. 33; Num. xxxv. 33.

20. That thou mayest be accepted. Emended (see my text, p. 76, note 1). b (d) = "and it will be accepted"; a "it will not be accepted"; c "and He will accept you."

21-24. This passage was written originally in Hebrew verse and the parallelism is still well preserved.

22. Sin unto death = $\text{ἀμαρτίαν θανάτου φέρων}$ = חַטֹּאת מוֹת , Num. xviii. 22. Cf. 1 John v. 16. See xxxiii. 18 of our text.

[Hide His face from thee, And]. I have bracketed this clause (cf. i. 13) as an interpolation, since it spoils the parallelism.

Give thee back into the hands of thy transgression. Has this vigorous expression been suggested by Gen. iv. 7 "If thou dost not well, sin is a lurker at the door"?

And do His will and be upright in all things.

24. And He will bless thee in all thy deeds,

And will raise up from thee the plant of righteousness through all the earth, throughout all generations of the earth,

And my name and thy name will not be forgotten
under heaven for ever.

25. Go, my son, in peace.

May the Most High God, my God and thy God, strengthen thee to do His will,

And may He bless all thy seed and the residue of thy seed for the generations for ever, with all righteous blessings,

That thou mayest be a blessing on all the earth."

24. Plant of righteousness. See xvi. 26.

25. I have with some hesitation arranged this verse as Hebrew poetry.

Mayest be a blessing. Cf. xx. 10.

XXII. 1. All the dates in this verse appear to be wrong. The total = 2116.

Dillmann suggests that for "forty-fourth" we should read "forty-third." But this would make the year of Abraham's death 2060, whereas (see on xxi. 1) he died in the year 2051. Hence I propose: "in the sixth week in the forty-second jubilee, in the seventh year" = 2051.

and to return to his father. 3. And in those days Ishmael came to see his father, and they both came together, and Isaac offered a sacrifice for a burnt-offering, and presented it on the altar of his father which he had made in Hebron. 4. And he offered a thank-offering and made a feast of joy before Ishmael, his brother : and Rebecca made new cakes from the new grain, and gave them to Jacob, her son, to take them to Abraham, his father, from the first-fruits of the land, that he might eat and bless the Creator of all things before he died. 5. And Isaac, too, sent by the hand of Jacob to Abraham a best thank-offering, that he might eat and drink. 6. And he eat and drank, and blessed the Most High God,

Who hath created heaven and earth,

Who hath made all the fat things of the earth,

And given them to the children of men

That they might eat and drink and bless their Creator.

7. " And now I give thanks unto Thee, my God, because thou hast caused me to see this day : behold, I am one hundred three score and fifteen years, an old man and full of days, and all my days have been unto me peace. 8. The sword of the adversary has not overcome me in all that Thou hast given me and my children all the days of my life until this day. 9. My God, may Thy mercy and Thy peace be upon Thy servant, and upon the seed of his sons, that they may be to Thee a chosen nation and an inheritance from amongst all the nations of the earth from henceforth unto all the days of the generations of the earth, unto all the ages." 10. And he called Jacob and said : " My son Jacob, may the God of all bless thee and strengthen thee to do righteousness, and His will before Him, and may He choose thee and thy seed that ye may become a people for His inheritance according to His will alway. And do thou, my son, Jacob, draw near and kiss me." 11. And he drew near and kissed him, and he said:

"Blessed be my son Jacob

And all the sons of God Most High, unto all the ages:

May God give unto thee a seed of righteousness;

And some of thy sons may He sanctify in the midst of the whole earth;

May nations serve thee,

And all the nations bow themselves before thy seed.

12. Be strong in the presence of men,

And exercise authority over all the seed of Seth.

Then thy ways and the ways of thy sons will be justified,

So that they shall become a holy nation.

13. May the Most High God give thee all the blessings

Wherewith He has blessed me

And wherewith He blessed Noah and Adam;

May they rest on the sacred head of thy seed from generation to generation for ever.

14. And may He cleanse thee from all unrighteousness and impurity,

10. God of all, i.e. God of the universe. See verses 4, 27.

May nations serve Thee, And all the nations, etc. From Gen. xxvii. 29—Isaac's blessing of Jacob.

12. Exercise. Eth. has "exercising" but Latin = "exercise."

All the seed of Seth, i.e. all mankind. The phrase is found also in Num.

xxiv. 17, כל בני-שֵׁחַ, where, however, שֵׁחַ is not to be taken as the name of the patriarch but as a contraction of שֵׁחָ = "confusion."

13. Blessings . . . wherewith He blessed Noah, etc. See xix. 27.

Rest on the sacred head. From Gen. xlix. 26, though with the Syr. it implies נוֹרַ instead of נוֹר. Cf. Num. vi. 9.

14. Unrighteousness and impurity. Emended with Latin inquinamento et injustitia. MSS = "impure defilement."

That thou mayest be forgiven all (thy) transgressions ;
(and) thy sins of ignorance.

And may He strengthen thee,
And bless thee.

And mayest thou inherit the whole earth,

15. And may He renew His covenant with thee,
That thou mayest be to Him a nation for His inheritance
for all the ages,
And that He may be to thee and to thy seed a God in truth and righteousness throughout all the days of the earth.

16. And do thou, my son Jacob, remember my words,
And observe the commandments of Abraham, thy father :
Separate thyself from the nations,
And eat not with them :
And do not according to their works,
And become not their associate ;
For their works are unclean,
And all their ways are a pollution and an abomination
and uncleanness.

17. They offer their sacrifices to the dead

Thou mayest be forgiven. Lat. = "He may forgive." The "thy" and "and" are supplied from the Latin.

15. Renew His covenant. See ver. 30.

Nation for His inheritance. See on ver. 9.

16. The exclusiveness of Judaism is here traced to Abraham. The very existence of Judaism in 200-150 B.C. made such exclusiveness indispensable.

Separate thyself from the nations. Cf. Is. lii. 11.

Eat not with them. A Jew could not eat with a Gentile ; for the animals might not have been slaughtered according to the prescriptions of the Law (Deut. xii. 23, 24) or might have been amongst those that were forbidden to the Jew (Lev. xi. 4-7, 10-12, 13-20) or the meat and wine might have been offered to idols (cf. 1 Cor. x. 20, 27-

29). Antiochus IV. tried to force the Jews to eat of unclean food, 1 Macc. i. 47-48, 62-63 ; 2 Macc. vi. 18-21, vii. 1. See Driver's Commentary on Daniel i. 8-10 note. Cf. Matt. ix. 11 ; Mk. ii. 16 for the Pharisaic attitude.

Their ways are a pollution. Cf. ver. 19. Observe how frequently this conception returns in all accounts of the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes and his successors : μιαίνειν in 1 Macc. i. 46, 63, iv. 45, vii. 34, xiv. 36 ; μιασμός, 1 Macc. iv. 43 ; ἀκάθαρτος, 1 Macc. i. 48, iv. 43 ; ἀκαθαρσία, 1 Macc. xiii. 48, xiv. 7 ; μύσος, 2 Macc. vi. 19, 25 ; μολύνω, 1 Macc. i. 37 ; 2 Macc. vi. 2, xiv. 3 ; μολυσμός, 2 Macc. v. 27 ; βεβηλώω, 1 Macc. i. 43, 45, 48, 63, ii. 12, 34, iii. 51, etc. ; βεβήλωσις, 1 Macc. i. 48.

17. Offer their sacrifices to the dead. Cf. Deut. xxvi. 14 ; Ps. cvi. 28 ; Sir. vii.

And they worship evil spirits,
 And they eat over the graves,
 And all their works are vanity and nothingness.

18. They have no heart to understand
 And their eyes do not see what their works are,
 And how they err in saying to a piece of wood: 'Thou art my God,'
 And to a stone: 'Thou art my Lord and thou art my deliverer.'
 [And they have no heart.]

19. And as for thee, my son Jacob,
 May the Most High God help thee
 And the God of heaven bless thee
 And remove thee from their uncleanness and from all their error.

20. Be thou ware, my son Jacob, of taking a wife from any 33; Tob. iv. 17, which allude to such sacrifices as being offered by Israel. They are derided Sir. xxx. 18, 19; Ep. Jer. 31, 32; Wisdom xiv. 15, xix. 3; Or. Sibyl. viii. 382-384. The Pirke Aboth iii. 4 speaks of "sacrifices to the dead" (זבחי המתים).

Worship evil spirits. Some of the Jews at the bidding of Antiochus Epiphanes consented to worship idols and offer them sacrifices, 1 Macc. i. 43. For other references to such worship generally see Deut. xxxii. 17; Lev. xvii. 7; Ps. cvi. 37; Eth. Enoch xix. 1; Baruch iv. 7; 1 Cor. x. 20: ἀλλ' ὅτι ἃ θύουσιν τὰ ἔθνη, δαιμονίοις . . . θύουσιν. See note on i. 11-13 of our text.

Eat over the graves. Just as the worshipper of Yahweh partook of the sacrifices offered to Him, so those who offered sacrifices to the dead partook of such sacrifices. These sacrifices were placed over the grave: see references given under "offer sacrifices to the dead" in earlier part of the verse: also Schwally, Das Leben nach dem Tode, 21-24.

For all his seed, etc. This line recurs in ver. 21^b; for the two Ethiopic verbs are not infrequently renderings of the same word in Greek.

And none springing from him will be saved on the day of judgment.

22. And as for all the worshippers of idols and the profane
(b) There will be no hope for them in the land of the living ;

(e) And there will be no remembrance of them on the earth ;

(c) For they will descend into Sheol,

(d) And into the place of condemnation will they go,

As the children of Sodom were taken away from the earth
So will all those who worship idols be taken away.

And be not dismayed, O son of Abraham :

May the Most High God preserve thee from destruction,
And from all the paths of error may He deliver thee.

24. This house have I built for myself that I might put my name upon it in the earth : [it is given to thee and to thy seed for ever], and it will be named the house of Abraham ; it is given to thee and to thy seed for ever ; for thou wilt build my house and establish my name before God for ever : thy seed and thy name will stand throughout all generations of the earth."

heart rejoiced over him. 27. And he blessed him with all his heart and said: "The Most High God, the God of all, and Creator of all, who brought me forth from Ur of the Chaldees, that He might give me this land to inherit it for ever, and that I might establish a holy seed—blessed be the Most High for ever." 28. And he blessed Jacob and said: "My son, over whom with all my heart and my affection I rejoice, may Thy grace and Thy mercy be lift up upon him and upon his seed alway. 29. And do not forsake him, nor set him at nought from henceforth unto the days of eternity, and may Thine eyes be opened upon him and upon his seed, that Thou mayst preserve him, and bless him, and mayest sanctify him as a nation for Thine inheritance; 30. And bless him with all Thy blessings from henceforth unto all the days of eternity, and renew Thy covenant and Thy grace with him and with his seed according to all Thy good pleasure unto all the generations of the earth."

27. This verse looks like an interpolation. It professes to give Abraham's blessing of Jacob, and yet does not mention him at all. Jacob's blessing begins in ver. 28. This verse follows well upon ver. 26. On the other hand some mention of the sacred name is required in ver. 28 if 27 is omitted.

God of all. See on verses 4, 10.

Creator of all, i.e., of the universe. See on ver. 4. See Neh. ix. 6.

Brought me forth from Ur of the Chaldees. Cf. Gen. xv. 7; Neh. ix. 7. Instead of "brought" 3rd sing. of a d, b c read "brought" 2nd sing.

Blessed be the Most High for ever, or

"that the Most High may be blessed for ever." The latter is the more natural translation; but if we adopt it, there is no principal verb.

28. Over whom with all my heart . . . I rejoice (c d). But a b read "rejoice" in 3rd sing. This reading presupposes "heart and affection" as the subject of "rejoice," just as in ver. 26. In that case if instead of zaba (twice) we read baza (twice) we have as follows: "over whom all my heart and my affection rejoice." In either case we must reject ba'ella as corrupt.

Be lift up upon him. Cf. Num. vi. 26; Ps. iv. 6.

And he placed two fingers of Jacob on his eyes, and he blessed the God of gods, and he covered his face and stretched out his feet and slept the sleep of eternity, and was gathered to his fathers. 2. And notwithstanding all this Jacob was lying in his bosom, and knew not that Abraham, his father's father, was dead. 3. And Jacob awoke from his sleep, and behold Abraham was cold as ice, and he said: "Father, father"; but there was none that spake, and he knew that he was dead. 4. And he arose from his bosom and ran and told Rebecca, his mother; and Rebecca went to Isaac in the night, and told him; and they went together, and Jacob with them, and a lamp was in his hand, and when they had gone in they found Abraham lying dead. 5. And Isaac fell on the face of his father, and wept and kissed him. 6. And the voices were heard in the house of Abraham, and Ishmael his son arose, and went to Abraham his father, and wept over Abraham his father, he and all the house of Abraham, and they wept with a great weeping. 7. And his sons Isaac and Ishmael buried him in the double cave, near Sarah his wife, and they wept for him forty days, all the men of his house, and Isaac and Ishmael, and all their sons, and all the sons of Keturah in their places; and the days of weeping for Abraham were

XXIII. 1. He placed two fingers of Jacob. Cf. Gen. xlv. 4. The closing of the eyes was generally done by the eldest son, and according to Shabbath 151b it was strictly forbidden till death had ensued (Singer, 107 note).

The days of weeping = יְמֵי בְכָיָה (cf. Deut. xxxiv. 8; Gen. i. 4). b = "the lamentation of the weeping" = נְהִי בְכָיָה (cf. Jer. xxxi. 15) which I take to be a corruption of יְמֵי בְכָיָה. d reads "lamentation and weeping" and ac "weeping."

ended. 8. And he lived three jubilees and four weeks of years, one hundred and seventy-five years, and completed the days of his life, being old and full of days. 9. For the days of the forefathers, of their life, were nineteen jubilees; and after the Flood they began to grow less than nineteen jubilees, and to decrease in jubilees, and to grow old quickly, and to be full of their days by reason of manifold tribulation and the wickedness of their ways, with the exception of Abraham. 10. For Abraham was perfect in all his deeds with the Lord, and well-pleasing in righteousness all the days of his life; and behold, he did not complete four jubilees in his life, when he had grown old by reason of the wickedness, and was full of his days. 11. And all the generations which will arise from this time until the day of the great judgment will grow old quickly, before they complete two jubilees, and their knowledge will forsake them by reason of their old age [and all their knowledge will vanish away]. 12. And in those days, if a man live a jubilee and a-half of years, they will say regarding him: "He has lived long, and the greater part of his days are pain and sorrow and tribulation, and there is no peace:

8. Cf. Gen. xxv. 8. See xxi. 1 of our text.

9. Men's years grow less, pari passu, with the growing corruption.

Days of the forefathers, of their life. Probably we should read "days of the life of the forefathers."

To decrease in jubilees, and to grow old quickly, and to be full of their days. The Latin has senescere celerius et minui dies vite ipsorum. The Latin seems right. For a possible explanation of the corruption in the Eth. see my text, pp. 81-82.

10. When he had grown old. Both Eth. and Latin give "until" instead of "when." The error, I take it, arose from the corruption of $\omega\varsigma$ = "when" into $\epsilon\omega\varsigma$ = "until."

By reason of the wickedness. Abraham grew old early because of the wickedness of others. He was himself "perfect," according to our author.

11. Generations which will arise . . . until the day of the great judgment. Here the judgment seems to precede the Messianic kingdom; but see note on ver. 30.

Their knowledge will forsake them by reason of their old age. Lat. = erunt transeuntes ab ipsis spiritus intellectus ipsorum, where spiritus and intellectus may be duplicate renderings of the same word. Otherwise it should correspond to the phrase "by reason of their age." I here withdraw the emendation in my text.

12. The greater part of his days are pain and sorrow. Ps. xc. 10. Our text gives the same rendering of רַבָּהּ as the LXX, Syr., Chald., and Vulg.

13. For calamity follows on calamity, and wound on wound, and tribulation on tribulation, and evil tidings on evil tidings, and illness on illness, and all evil judgments such as these, one with another, illness and overthrow, and snow and frost and ice, and fever, and chills, and torpor, and famine, and death, and sword, and captivity, and all kinds of calamities and pains." 14. And all these will come on an evil generation, which transgresses on the earth: their works are uncleanness and fornication, and pollution and abominations. 15. Then they will say: "The days of the forefathers were many (even), unto a thousand years, and were good; but, behold, the days of our life, if a man has lived many, are three score years and ten, and, if he is strong, four score years, and those evil, and there is no peace in the days of this evil generation." 16. And in that generation the sons will convict their fathers and their elders of sin and unrighteousness, and of the words of their mouth and the great wickednesses which they perpetrate,

16. This verse points most probably to the rise of the Chasids. These proceed to challenge the creed and conduct of their fathers and the elders (the spiritual rulers of Judaism). From their ranks (see Eth. Enoch xc. 7) arise the Maccabees. The armed resistance of the latter to the Hellenising party is represented in ver. 20. Finally after years of strife the Messianic era begins to set in and the years of men to grow many, till at last they become a thousand.

We have herein an adumbration of the actual history and the expectations of the Chasids in the second cent. B.C. Bousset (Z. f. NTliche Wissensch. 1900, p. 199) has already recognised that this chapter deals with the Maccabean movement. The conclusiveness of this interpretation will grow stronger as we proceed. It is no little confirmation of our view that we find the same events in Judaism depicted in allegorical language in Eth. Enoch xc. 6-7: "But behold lambs were borne by those white sheep, and they began to open their eyes and to see and to cry to the sheep. But the sheep did not cry to them and did not hear what they said to them, but were exceedingly deaf, and their eyes were exceedingly and forcibly blinded." Here "the white sheep" are the faithful adherents of the theocracy; the "lambs" are the Chasids, a new and distinct party among the Jews. The Chasids appeal unavailingly to the nation at large. In the next verse (xc. 8) there is a symbolical description of Syria's attack on Judah.

and concerning their forsaking the covenant which the Lord made between them and Him, that they should observe and do all His commandments and His ordinances and all His laws, without departing either to the right hand or the left.

17. For all have done evil, and every mouth speaks iniquity and all their works are an uncleanness and an abomination, and all their ways are pollution, uncleanness and destruction.

18. Behold the earth will be destroyed on account of all their works, and there will be no seed of the vine, and no oil; for their works are altogether faithless, and they will all perish together, beasts and cattle and birds, and all the fish of the sea, on account of the children of men.

19. And they will strive one with another, the young with the old, and the old with the young, the poor with the rich, and the lowly with the great, and the beggar with the prince, on account of the law and the covenant; for they have forgotten commandment, and covenant, and feasts, and months, and Sabbaths, and jubilees, and all judgments.

20. And they will stand (with bows and) swords and war to Forsaking the covenant. Cf. Dan. xi. 30 and 1 Macc. i. 15 where the same charge is brought against the Hellenising Jews.

Observe and do . . . without . . . either to the . . . or the left. Cf. Deut. v. 31, 32, xxviii. 13, 14. A similar statement is found in 1 Macc. ii. 21-22: "Heaven forbid that we should forsake the law and the ordinances . . . to go aside from our worship to the right hand or the left" (παρελθεῖν τὴν λατρίαν ἡμῶν δεξιὰν ἢ ἀριστεράν). The phrase is most probably historical.

17. All have done evil. Cf. 1 Macc. i. 52, 53, "And from the people were gathered unto them many, every one that had forsaken the law and they did evil things in the land."

Every mouth speaks iniquity. Cf. 1 Macc. ii. 6, "And (Mattathias) saw the blasphemies . . . in Judah and in Jerusalem."

Pollution, etc. See note on xxii. 16. 18-24. The Messianic woes.

Judgments, i.e. determinations, decisions.

20. This verse describes the warlike turn them back into the way; but they will not return until much blood has been shed on the earth, one by another. 21. And those who have escaped will not return from their wickedness to the way of righteousness, but they will all exalt themselves to deceit and wealth, that they may each take all that is his neighbour's, and they will name the great name, but not in truth and not in righteousness, and they will defile the holy of holies with their uncleanness and the corruption of their pollution. 22. And a great punishment will befall the deeds of this generation from the Lord, and He will give them over to the sword and to judgment and to captivity, and to be plundered and devoured. 23. And He will wake up against them the sinners of the Gentiles, who have neither mercy nor compassion, and who will respect the person of none, neither old nor young, nor efforts of Judas the Maccabee to force the apostates to return to Judaism. In the year 162, owing to internal divisions, Syria felt it advisable to make terms with the Jews and allow them "to walk after their own laws as aforetime" (1 Macc. vi. 55-62; 2 Macc. xiii. 23-26; Joseph. Ant. xii. 9. 6-7). This understanding was observed by all the subsequent kings of Syria. Hence from 162 onward the struggle was not so much to preserve Judaism against the attempts of Syria to crush it out of existence, as to determine the question whether the Hellenising faction or the national party should control the nation. Syria henceforth intervened in support now of the one now of the other of the two Jewish parties. (See Schurer, op. cit. i. 214; [Eng. transl.], I. i. 224 sq.)

The way. Cf. Is. xxx. 21, "This is the way, walk ye in it." Cf. the use of ἡ ὁδός in Acts ix. 2, xix. 9, 23, xxiv. 22.

21. Those who have escaped will not return . . . to the way of righteousness. By the treaty of 162 referred to in the preceding note, the religious liberties of Judaism were secured against Syria;

but the Hellenising party under the high priest Alkimus still pursued its own aims. This party is said in our text to "name the great name" and to "defile the holy of holies with their uncleanness." Though it embraced nearly the entire Sanhedrin, it was opposed by the Maccabees, the Chasids, and the great mass of the Jews.

Great name. Cf. Jos. vii. 9. On the phrase "name the . . . name," cf. LXX of Is. xxvi. 13; Acts xix. 13; 2 Tim. ii. 19.

22-23. These verses describe the sufferings of the nation during the civil wars and internal troubles that took place down to Simon's high priesthood (142-135 B.C.).

23. This verse refers in language borrowed from past prophecy to the frequent invasions of Palestine by the Syrians or possibly by some unknown nation from the north as in Zeph. i. 7; Jer. iii.-vi.; like Gog and Magog in Ezek. xxxviii.-xxxix.

Have neither mercy nor compassion. So Jeremiah (vi. 23) describes the nation that was to invade Judah: "they are cruel and have no mercy."

any one, for they are more wicked and strong to do evil than all the children of men.

And they will use violence against Israel and transgression against Jacob,

And much blood will be shed upon the earth,

And there will be none to gather and none to bury.

24. In those days they will cry aloud,

And call and pray that they may be saved from the hand of the sinners, the Gentiles ;

But none will be saved.

25. And the heads of the children will be white with grey hair,
And a child of three weeks will appear old like a man of one hundred years,

And their stature will be destroyed by tribulation and oppression.

26. And in those days the children will begin to study the laws,

And to seek the commandments,

And to return to the path of righteousness.

27. And the days will begin to grow many and increase amongst those children of men,

None to gather and none to bury, i.e., the fallen. The phrase is from Jer. viii. 2.

24. Of the sinners, the Gentiles = ἁμαρτωλῶν ἔθνων. The Ethiopic translator took these words to be in apposition. He ought rather to have taken the second as dependent on the first. Hence "sinners of the Gentiles." See verse 23 and Gal. ii. 15 where the phrase is reproduced somewhat differently: ἐξ ἔθνων ἁμαρτωλοί. To the writer the terms "Gentiles" and "sinners" were practically synonymous.

25. Heads of the children will be white, etc. Hesiod, Op. et Dies, 180-181, tells how in the iron age children will be born with hoary temples :

Ζεὺς δ' ὀλέσει καὶ τοῦτο γένος μερόπων
ἀνθρώπων

Εὖτ' ἀνγενόμενοι πολιοκρόταφοι τελέθωσιν.

This was to be one of the signs (as in our text) which foreshadowed the coming of the kingdom according to Sibyll. Or. ii. 155 :

Ἐκ γενετῆς παῖδες πολιοκρόταφοι γεγαῶτες.

See also Latin apocalyptic fragment in the Cambridge Texts and Studies, ii. 3, p. 154.

26. It might seem possible that ver. 16 originally followed ver. 26.

26-30. The renewed study of the Law followed by a change for the better and the gradual approach to Messianic blessedness. With this spiritual transformation of Israel (cf. l. 5) there will take place a corresponding transforma-

Till their days draw nigh to one thousand years,
And to a greater number of years than (before) was the number of the days.

28. And there will be no old man
Nor one who is not satisfied with his days,
For all will be (as) children and youths.

29. And all their days they will complete and live in peace and in joy,
And there will be no Satan nor any evil destroyer ;
For all their days will be days of blessing and healing.

30. And at that time the Lord will heal His servants, tion of the heaven and the earth. This idea appears also in Is. lxxv. 17 sqq. (See i. 29 note ; iv. 26.) This is their final renewal.

27. Nigh to one thousand years. In the Messianic kingdom men will attain to the age originally designed for them by God. Adam did not attain to 1000 years because of his sin ; see iv. 30.

28. The writer appears to have Is. lxxv. 20 before him but avoids making any reference to the presence of the wicked in the consummated kingdom, as is done in Isaiah. Yet apparently they are presupposed in ver. 30, though according to ver. 29 there are none such. They are gradually eliminated. Cf. Test. Levi 18.

Who is not satisfied. I have added the negative from a comparison of Is. lxxv. 20.

29. In joy. Cf. Is. lxxv. 14.

No Satan. Cf. Assumpt. Mos. x. 1. This statement need not mean very much : cf. xl. 9, xlvi. 2, l. 5.

Blessing and healing. Cf. i. 29.

30. If this verse refers to the resurrection, the righteous are raised to share in this (temporary ?) Messianic kingdom. If ver. 11 is correctly handed down and to be taken literally, it follows that the final judgment precedes the Messianic kingdom. But the nature of this kingdom precludes such a view. It is to be introduced gradually pari passu with the spiritual transformation of man. Such a gradual and progressive transformation does not admit of the insertion of the final judgment at any single point of its evolution. Nor is there a hint of such a judgment in verses 23-27. Hence the final judgment can occur only at the close of this kingdom. The kingdom is therefore of temporary duration—a conclusion which presents some difficulty in the face of i. 17, 18, 29, but which agrees best with all other passages referring to the final judgment in this book. In that case the resurrection of the righteous and the final judgment are disjoined, if this verse asserts that the righteous rise to share in the kingdom. The eschatology of our author would thus differ alike from that of Eth. Enoch lxxxiii.-xc. (before 161 B.C.), Test. Jud. 25, Sim. 6, Zeb. 10, Benj. 10, where the final judgment precedes the kingdom and the righteous are raised to enjoy it for ever, and from that of Eth. Enoch xci.-civ. (104-95 B.C.) where the final judgment comes in at the close of the kingdom and the righteous are not raised to share in it, but in a blessed immortality.

But the teaching of our text agrees rather with that of Eth. Enoch xci.-civ. ; for the words “will rise up” have apparently no reference to the resurrection, and mean merely that when God heals His servants (cf. Rev. xxii. 2) they become strong. The clauses in ver. 29, “all their days will be days of blessing and healing” and in i. 29, “for healing . . . for all the elect of Israel” render this view the most probable. In this case there is no resurrection to this temporary Messianic kingdom, and thus the eschatology harmonises perfectly with that of Eth. Enoch xci.-civ.

And they will rise up and see great peace,
And drive out their adversaries.

And the righteous will see and be thankful,
And rejoice with joy for ever and ever,
And will see all their judgments and all their curses on their enemies.

31. And their bones will rest in the earth,
And their spirits will have much joy,
And they will know that it is the Lord who executes
judgment,
And shows mercy to hundreds and thousands and to all that love Him.

32. And do thou, Moses, write down these words; for thus are they written, and they record (them) on the heavenly tables for a testimony for the generations for ever.

XXIV. And it came to pass after the death of Abraham, that the Lord blessed Isaac his son, and he arose from Hebron and went and dwelt at the Well of the Vision in the first year of the third week of this jubilee, seven years. 2073 A.M.
2. And in the first year of the fourth week a famine began 2080 A.M.

See great peace, i.e. "enjoy great peace." The word "peace" may go back to שָׁלוֹם: in that case the sense would be "enjoy sound health."

Drive out their adversaries. Such a conception is in keeping with the gradual growth of the kingdom.

31. After death there is no resurrection of the body, but a blessed immortality awaiting the spirit as in Eth. Enoch xci. 10, xcii. 3, ciii. 3, 4 (see my Eschatology, pp. 203 sqq.).

And to all (a c d). b reads "of all."

XXIV. 1. Well of the Vision. Cf. Gen. xxv. 11. The full name is Beer Lahai-roi = "the well of the living One that seeth me." Cf. also Gen. xvi. 14, xxiv. 62.

in the land, besides the first famine, which had been in the days of Abraham. 3. And Jacob sod lentil pottage, and Esau came from the field hungry. And he said to Jacob his brother: "Give me of this red pottage." And Jacob said to him: "Sell to me thy [primogeniture, this] birthright and I will give thee bread, and also some of this lentil pottage." 4. And Esau said in his heart: "I shall die; of what profit to me is this birthright?" And he said to Jacob: "I give it to thee." 5. And Jacob said: "Swear to me, this day," and he swore unto him. 6. And Jacob gave his brother Esau bread and pottage, and he eat till he was satisfied, and Esau despised his birthright; for this reason was Esau's name called Edom, on account of the red pottage which Jacob gave him for his birthright. 7. And Jacob became the elder, and Esau was brought down from his dignity. 8. And the famine was over the land, and Isaac departed to go down into Egypt in the second year of this week, and went to the king of the Philistines to Gerar, unto Abimelech. 9. And the Lord appeared unto him and said unto him: "Go not down into Egypt; dwell in the land that I shall tell thee of, and sojourn in this land, and I shall be with thee and bless thee. 10. For to thee and to thy seed shall I give all this land, and I shall establish My oath which I swore unto Abraham thy father, and I shall multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven, and shall give unto thy seed all this land. 11. And in thy seed will all the nations of the earth be blessed, because thy father obeyed My voice, and kept My charge and My commandments, and My laws, and

My ordinances, and My covenant; and now obey My voice and dwell in this land." 12. And he dwelt in Gerar three 2080-2101 weeks of years. 13. And Abimelech charged concerning A.M. him, and concerning all that was his, saying: "Any man that shall touch him or aught that is his shall surely die." 14. And Isaac waxed strong among the Philistines, and he got many possessions, oxen and sheep and camels and asses and a great household. 15. And he sowed in the land of the Philistines and brought in a hundred-fold, and Isaac became exceedingly great, and the Philistines envied him. 16. Now all the wells which the servants of Abraham had dug during the life of Abraham, the Philistines had stopped them after the death of Abraham, and filled them with earth. 17. And Abimelech said unto Isaac: "Go from us, for thou art much mightier than we"; and Isaac departed thence in the first year of the seventh week, and sojourned in the 2101 A.M. valleys of Gerar. 18. And they digged again the wells of water which the servants of Abraham, his father, had digged, and which the Philistines had closed after the death of Abraham his father, and he called their names as Abraham his father had named them. 19. And the servants of Isaac dug a well in the valley, and found living water, and the shepherds of Gerar strove with the shepherds of Isaac, saying: "The water is ours"; and Isaac called the name of the well "Perversity," because they had been perverse with us. 20. And they dug a second well, and they strove for 12. Isaac stayed at the Well of the Vision seven years and in Gerar twenty-one.

14-17. Cf. Gen. xxvi. 13-17.

14. Household. So Latin ministerium = עֲבָדָה. Our text renders loosely "possession."

18-20. Cf. Gen. xxvi. 18-22.

19. The water. Here Eth. has "this water" and the Latin merely "aqua," but the ze (=this) is merely a translation of the Greek article as is frequently the case. Hence Eth. and Lat. attest the same text.

Perversity. Gen. xxvi. 20 has פְּעִי, LXX, ἀδικία.

that also, and he called its name "Enmity." And he arose from thence and they digged another well, and for that they strove not, and he called the name of it "Room," and Isaac said: "Now the Lord hath made room for us, and we have increased in the land." 21. And he went up from thence 2108 A.M. to the Well of the Oath, in the first year of the first week in the forty-fourth jubilee. 22. And the Lord appeared to him that night, on the new moon of the first month, and said unto him: "I am the God of Abraham thy father; fear not, for I am with thee, and shall bless thee and shall surely multiply thy seed as the sand of the earth, for the sake of Abraham my servant." 23. And he built an altar there, which Abraham his father had first built, and he called upon the name of the Lord, and he offered sacrifice to the God of Abraham his father. 24. And they digged a well and they found living water. 25. And the servants of Isaac digged another well and did not find water, and they went and told Isaac that they had not found water, and Isaac said: "I have sworn this day to the Philistines and this thing has been announced to us." 26. And he called the name of that place the "Well of the Oath"; for there he had sworn to Abimelech and Ahuzzath his friend and Phicol the prefect of his host. 27. And Isaac knew that day that under constraint he had sworn to them to make peace with them. 28. And Isaac on that day cursed the

20. Enmity = šēl'ē emended with Latin (inimicitias) from šabâb = "narrow." The corruption is native to the text. It most probably arose from a scribe's wishing to make an antithesis between the name of this well and that of the next "Room."

21-26. Cf. Gen. xxvi. 23-25, 32-33.

24-25. There is mention of only one well in Gen. xxvi. 25.

25. The implication of our text is that owing to Isaac having made a covenant with Abimelech his servants failed to find water.

They had not found. Our text and the LXX thus imply אֵל בְּצַדִּיק in Gen. xxvi. 32, but Mass., Sam., Syr. read וְ instead of אֵל and connect it with the preceding verb.

26. Cf. Gen. xxvi. 33.

Ahuzzath. Eth. 'Akôzat.

28-32. The hatred expressed in these verses is hardly intelligible save in a contemporary of the wars waged by the Maccabeans against the Philistine cities. This passage is here introduced gratuitously into the narrative (so also Bousset, Z. f. NTliche Wissensch. 1890, p. 200). Of the five chief cities of the Philistines (Jos. xiii. 3) four were still in existence

Philistines and said: "Cursed be the Philistines unto the day of wrath and indignation from the midst of all nations; may God make them a derision and a curse and an object of wrath and indignation in the hands of the sinners the Gentiles and in the hands of the Kittim. 29. And whoever escapes the sword of the enemy and the Kittim, may the righteous nation root out in judgment from under heaven; for they will be the enemies and foes of my children throughout their generations upon the earth.

30. And no remnant will be left to them,

Nor one that will be saved on the day of the wrath of judgment;

For for destruction and rooting out and expulsion from the earth is the whole seed of the Philistines (reserved),

And there will no longer be left for these Caphtorim a name or a seed on the earth.

in Maccabean times, Askelon, Ashdod, Gaza and Ekron. Of these Ekron (Ἀκκαρών) was given by Alex. Balas to Jonathan for his services (1 Macc. x. 89; Joseph. Ant. xiii. 4. 4), and Askelon submitted to him (1 Macc. x. 60, xi. 60). Ashdod (Ἀζωτος) suffered severely under Judas the Maccabee (1 Macc. v. 68) and was captured, put to the sword, and burnt by Jonathan (147 B.C.); the temple of Dagon likewise and all that had taken refuge in it were burnt (1 Macc. x. 84; Joseph. Ant. xiii. 4. 4). It was again reduced to ashes by John Hyrcanus (1 Macc. xvi. 10). As regards Gaza its suburbs were burnt by Jonathan and the city forced to capitulate (1 Macc. xi. 61-62). It was afterwards destroyed by Alex. Jannaeus (Joseph. Ant. xiii. 13. 3). Our text reflects correctly the attitude of Judah towards the cities of the Philistines in the second cent. B.C.

28. Sinners, the Gentiles. The Latin has here "peccatoris populi." Cf. xxiii. 24. The Philistines suffered severely at the hands of the Assyrians and Egyptians—particularly the latter: see Herodotus i. 105, ii. 157, 159.

Kittim (כִּיִּיִם, Κίτιοις, Κίτιοι, Χετιέμ, Χετράν). These were descended from Javan according to Gen. x. 4 and, therefore, belonged to the Graeco-Latin races. Their country is usually identified with Cyprus. In Dan. xi. 30 the Kittim are undoubtedly the Romans, whereas in 1 Macc. i. 1, viii. 5 they are the Macedonians. It is to the Macedonians that our text refers. Gaza was captured by Alexander the Great (Joseph. Ant. xi. 8. 4).

29. The righteous nation. Judah under the Maccabees. See note on 28-32 above.

These Caphtorim. "These" = 'עַלְלָא emend. from kuēllā="all" with Latin. Text="all Caphtorim." According to Amos ix. 7; Deut. ii. 23; Jer. xlvii. 4, the Philistines came originally from Caphtor. On the various views as to its locality see Encyc. Bib. i. 698-699.

31. For though he ascend unto heaven,
 Thence will he be brought down,
 And though he make himself strong on earth,
 Thence will he be dragged forth,
 And though he hide himself amongst the nations,
 Even from thence will he be rooted out;
 And though he descend into Sheol,
 There also will his condemnation be great,
 And there also he will have no peace.
32. And if he go into captivity,
 By the hands of those that seek his life will they slay
 him on the way,
 And neither name nor seed will be left to him on all
 the earth;
 For into eternal malediction will he depart."

 on the heavenly tables, to do unto him on the day of judgment, so that he may be rooted out of the earth.

with all their unclean deeds: for all their deeds are fornication and lust, and there is no righteousness with them, for (their deeds) are evil. 2. And I, my son, love thee exceedingly, and my heart and my affection bless thee every hour of the day and watch of the night. 3. And now, my son, hearken to my voice, and do the will of thy mother, and do not take thee a wife of the daughters of this land, but only of the house of my father, and of my father's kindred. Thou wilt take thee a wife of the house of my father, and the Most High God will bless thee, and thy children will be a righteous generation and a holy seed." 4. And then spake Jacob to Rebecca, his mother, and said unto her: "Behold, mother, I am nine weeks of years old, and I neither know nor have I touched any woman, nor have I betrothed myself to any, nor even think of taking me a wife of the daughters of Canaan. 5. For I remember, mother, the words of Abraham, our father, for he commanded me not to take a wife of the daughters of Canaan, but to take me a wife from the seed of my father's house and from my kindred. 6. I have heard before that daughters have been born to Laban, thy brother, and I have set my heart on them to take a wife from amongst them. 7. And for this reason I have guarded myself in my spirit against sinning or being corrupted in all my ways throughout all the days of my life; for with regard to lust and fornication, Abraham, my father, gave me many commands. 8. And, despite all that he has commanded me, these two and twenty years my brother has

3. Cf. Gen. xxviii. 1, 2.

4. Nine weeks. If the date in ver. 1 is right, it follows that since Jacob was then sixty-three years old, he was born in 2046. This agrees with MSS reading in xix. 13; but the estimate based on that reading is at variance with that which follows from xlv. 13, which assigns Jacob's birth to the year 2041. With the statement as to Jacob's age cf. Ber. rabba 68: "Our father Jacob was sixty-three years old when he received the blessing: fourteen years he spent hidden in the house of Eber and seven years he served for Rachael: accordingly he was eighty-four when he married, but Esau was forty." See also Seder Olam ii.

I neither know . . . any woman. Syncellus (i. 197) wrongly attributes this statement to Josephus: 'Ἰωσηππὸς φησιν ὅτι ὁ Ἰακώβ ἐτῶν ὑπάρχων ξγ' οὐκ ἔγνω ὅλως γυναῖκα, ὡς αὐτὸς ἐξείπε τῇ μητρὶ Πεβέκκα.

striven with me, and spoken frequently to me and said: 'My brother, take to wife a sister of my two wives'; but I refuse to do as he has done. 9. I swear before thee, mother, that all the days of my life I will not take me a wife from the daughters of the seed of Canaan, and I will not act wickedly as my brother has done. 10. Fear not mother; be assured that I shall do thy will and walk in uprightness, and not corrupt my ways for ever." 11. And thereupon she lifted up her face to heaven and extended the fingers of her hands, and opened her mouth and blessed the Most High God, who had created the heaven and the earth, and she gave Him thanks and praise. 12. And she said: "Blessed be the Lord God, and may His holy name be blessed for ever and ever, who has given me Jacob as a pure son and a holy seed; for he is Thine, and Thine shall his seed be continually and throughout all the generations for evermore. 13. Bless him, O Lord, and place in my mouth the blessing of righteousness, that I may bless him." 14. And at that hour, when the spirit of righteousness descended into her mouth, she placed both her hands on the head of Jacob, and said:

15. "Blessed art thou, Lord of righteousness and God of the ages;

And may He bless thee beyond all the generations of men.

May He give thee, my son, the path of righteousness,

And reveal righteousness to thy seed.

16. And may He make thy sons many during thy life,

And may they arise according to the number of the months of the year.

Abraham . . . gave me many commands. Cf. xx. 4, xxxix. 6.

8. These two and twenty years. This agrees with the statement of Esau's age in Gen. xxvi. 34, where he is said to have been forty when he married. Esau was now sixty-three.

14. Spirit of righteousness (or "truth") = τὸ πνεῦμα τῆς ἀληθείας. Cf. John xiv. 17, xv. 26, xvi. 13. So abd. Cf. xxxi. 12. c reads "Holy Spirit." The latter is Jewish also: cf. Is. lxiii. 10, 11 "His holy Spirit" (רוח קדש). With the idea conveyed by

And may their sons become many and great beyond the

And their numbers be more than the sand of the sea.

17. And may He give them this goodly land—as He said He

And may they hold it as a possession for ever.

18. And may I see (born) unto thee, my son, blessed children

The womb of her that bare thee blesses thee,

[My affection] and my breasts bless thee

And my mouth and my tongue praise thee greatly.

And may thy seed be perfect in the joy of heaven and

And may thy seed rejoice,

And on the great day of peace may it have peace.

And may the Most High God be their God,

And may the God of righteousness dwell with them,

And by them may His sanctuary be built unto all the ages.

The words in Luke recall both Mic. vii. 20 and our text. Observe that this statement in Luke is added parenthetically or explanatorily as in our text.

Possession for ever. Cf. the Thucydidean phrase κτήμα ἐς αἰ.

19. Hast refreshed (ab). cd "has given thee rest."

†My†. Read "thy," as the sense requires it.

[My affection]. I have bracketed this phrase; for it comes in awkwardly between "womb," "breasts," "mouth," and "tongue." We should expect an "and" to precede it. It may be a dittography and have originated as a false alternative rendering of רֶחֶם, "womb."

As the heart of thy mother and her affection rejoice in thee and bless thee."
And she ceased from blessing.

Isaac sends Esau for venison, 1-4. Rebecca instructs Jacob to obtain the blessing, 5-9. Jacob under the person of Esau obtains it, 10-24. Esau brings in his venison and by his importunity obtains a blessing, 25-34. Threatens Jacob, 35. (Cf. Gen. xxvii.)

XXVI. And in the seventh year of this week Isaac called Esau, his elder son, and said unto him : "I am old, my son, and behold my eyes are dim in seeing, and I know not the day of my death. 2. And now take thy hunting weapons thy quiver and thy bow, and go out to the field, and hunt and catch me (venison), my son, and make me savoury meat, such as my soul loveth, and bring it to me that I may eat, and that my soul may bless thee before I die." 3. But Rebecca heard Isaac speaking to Esau. 4. And Esau went forth early to the field to hunt and catch and bring home to his father. 5. And Rebecca called Jacob, her son, and said unto him : "Behold, I heard Isaac, thy father, speak unto Esau, thy brother, saying : ' Hunt for me, and make me savoury meat, and bring (it) to me that I may eat and bless thee before the Lord before I die.' 6. And now, my son, obey my voice in that which I command thee : Go to thy flock and fetch me two good kids of the goats, and I will make them savoury meat for thy father, such as he loves, and thou shalt bring (it) to thy father that he may eat and bless thee before the Lord before he die, and that thou mayst be blessed." 7. And Jacob said to Rebecca his mother: "Mother, I shall not withhold anything which my father would eat, and which would please him: only I fear, my mother, that he will recognise my voice and wish to touch me. 8. And thou knowest that I am smooth, and Esau, my brother, is hairy, and I shall appear before his eyes as an evildoer, and shall do a deed which he had not commanded me, and he will be wroth with me, and I shall bring upon myself a curse, and not a blessing." 9. And Rebecca, his mother, said unto him: "Upon me be thy curse, my son only obey my voice." 10. And Jacob obeyed the voice of Rebecca, his mother, and went and fetched two good and fat kids of the goats, and brought them to his mother, and his mother made them (savoury meat) such as he loved. 11. And Rebecca took the goodly raiment of Esau, her elder son, which was with her in the house, and she clothed Jacob, her younger son, (with them), and she put the skins of the kids upon his hands and on the exposed parts of his neck. 12. And she gave the meat and the bread which she had prepared into the hand of her son Jacob. 13. And Jacob went in to his father and said: "I am thy son: I have done according as thou badest me: arise and sit and eat of that which I have caught, father, that thy soul may bless me." 14. And Isaac said to his son: "How hast thou found so quickly, my son?" 15. And Jacob said: "Because (the Lord) thy God caused me to find." 16. And Isaac said unto him: "Come near, that I may feel thee, my son, if thou art my son Esau or not." 17. And Jacob went near to Isaac, his father, and he felt him and said: 18. "The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau," and he discerned him not, because it was a dispensation from heaven to remove his power of perception and Isaac discerned not, for his hands were hairy as (his brother) Esau's, so that he blessed him. 19. And he said: "Art thou my son Esau?" and he said: "I am thy son": and he said, "Bring near to me that I may eat of that which thou hast caught, my son, that my soul may bless thee." 20. And he brought near to him, and he did eat, and he brought him wine and he drank. 21. And Isaac, his father, said unto him: "Come near and kiss me, my son." And he came near and kissed him. 22. And he smelled the smell of his raiment, and he blessed him and said: "Behold, the smell of my son is as the smell of a (full) field which the Lord hath blessed.

And of the dew of the earth, and plenty of corn and oil:

And peoples bow down to thee.

a = "helped me"; d = "caused me to see." Latin gives direxit. In my text I emended the phrase into 'artē'auī = direxit, comparing xxi. 2 where the Eth. has this verb as the equivalent of dirigere in the Latin. But the reading of b c may be right as Praetorius thinks.

18. Because it was a dispensation from heaven. This clause is borrowed from 1 Kings xii. 15; cf. 2 Chron. x. 15.

His power of perception, literally, "his spirit."

(His brother). Added from the Latin.

19. I am thy son. For an analogous evasion, Beer compares Ber. rabba 65: "I am Esau the first born" (Gen. xxvii. 24). R. Levi said: Jacob meant:

I am he who will receive the ten commandments (which begin with the words "I am"), but Esau is thy first born.

21. Come near. Latin adds "to me." So also LXX and Vulg. of Gen. xxvii. 26.

22. (Full). Added from the Latin. So Sam., LXX, and Vulg. of Gen. xxvii. 27. Mass. omits.

23. Give thee. b c d add "and multiply thee." a transposes it before "may the Lord give thee."

Dew of the earth. The same rendering of τῆς πύργου τῆς γῆς is found in the Eth. version of Gen. xxvii. 28.

And plenty. MSS add against parallelism and Gen. xxvii. 28 before "plenty" the clause "may He give plentifully to thee."

 And let thy mother's sons bow down to thee ;
 And may all the blessings wherewith the Lord hath blessed me and blessed Abraham, my father,
 Be imparted to thee and to thy seed for ever :

 And blessed be he that blesseth thee."

25. And it came to pass as soon as Isaac had made an end of blessing his son Jacob, and Jacob had gone forth from Isaac his father †he hid himself and† Esau, his brother, came in from his hunting. 26. And he also made savoury meat, and brought (it) to his father, and said unto his father : "Let my father arise, and eat of my venison that thy soul may bless me." 27. And Isaac, his father, said unto him : "Who art thou ?" And he said unto him : "I am thy first born, thy son Esau : I have done as thou hast commanded me." 28. And Isaac was very greatly astonished, and said : "Who is he that hath hunted and caught and brought (it) to me, and I have eaten of all before thou camest, and have blessed him : (and) he shall be blessed, and all his seed for ever." 29. And it came to pass when Esau heard the words of his father Isaac that he cried with an exceeding great and bitter cry, and said unto his father : "Bless me, (even) me also, father." 30. And he said unto him : "Thy brother came with guile, and hath taken away thy blessing." And he said : "Now I know why his name is named Jacob : behold, he hath supplanted me these two times : he took away my birth-right, and now he hath taken away my blessing." 31. And he said : "Hast thou not

And all his brethren have I given to him for servants,
And with plenty of corn and wine and oil have I

And thou wilt serve thy brother.

And it shall come to pass when thou becomest

And thy seed will be rooted out from under heaven."

33. Dew of the earth. See note on verse 23.

34. Becomst great = 'abaika (so b). ac = "refusest" ('abaika) which is (?) a corruption of the former. d is corrupt but supports b. The text here agrees with the Sam. תאריך (Gen. xxvii. 40) which is the niphal or hiphal of ארך. Mass. = תריך as to the meaning of which the versions vary. LXX has κατέλγης = חוריר from ירר.

34. Thou wilt sin a complete sin unto death, or "every sin unto death." This change is contrary to all tradition. In Onkelos we have: "And it will come to pass when his (Jacob's) sons transgress the words of the law, that thou wilt remove his yoke from off thy neck." Similarly in the Jerusalem and Ps.-Jon. Targums and in Ber. rabba 67. This passage in our text is attributed to Genesis by Syncellus, i. 202: τῷ Ἰσαὺ ἔφη ἐν ταῖς εὐλογίαις ὁ Ἰσαάκ, ἔσται δὲ ἡνίκα ἂν κατέλγης καὶ ἐκλύσης τὸν ζυγὸν αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ τοῦ τραχήλου σου· πλημμελήσης εἰς θάνατον. Glycas (p. 263) appears to assign it to Josephus: τότε οὖν ἐπληρώθη ἡ τοῦ Ἰσαάκ προφητεία ἡνίκα ἂν κατέλγης τὸν ζυγὸν τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ σου ἐκ τοῦ τραχήλου σου, πλημμέλειαν πλημμελήσεις θανάτου. καὶ τὰ μὲν τοῦ Ἰωσήπου τοιαῦτα.

Rebecca alarmed at Esau's threats, prevails on Isaac to send Jacob to Mesopotamia, 1-12. Isaac comforts Rebecca on the departure of Jacob, 13-18. Jacob's dream and vow at Bethel, 19-27. (Cf. Gen. xxviii.)

XXVII. And the words of Esau, her elder son, were told to Rebecca in a dream, and Rebecca sent and called Jacob her younger son, and said unto him: 2. "Behold Esau thy brother will take vengeance on thee so as to kill thee. 3. Now, therefore, my son, obey my voice, and arise and flee thou to Laban, my brother, to Haran, and tarry with him a few days until thy brother's anger turns away, and he remove his anger from thee, and forget all that thou hast done; then I will send and fetch thee from thence." 4. And Jacob said: "I am not afraid; if he wishes to kill me, I will kill him." 5. But she said unto him: "Let me not be bereft of both my sons on one day." 6. And Jacob said to Rebecca his mother: "Behold, thou knowest that my father has become old, and does not see because his eyes are dull, and if I leave him it will be evil in his eyes, because I leave him and go away from you, and my father will be angry, and will curse me. I will not go;

XXVII. 1-5. Cf. Gen. xxvii. 42-45.

1. Were told to Rebecca in a dream. In the Ps.-Jon. on Gen. xxvii. 42 it is said: "And the words of Esau her elder son were told to Rebecca by the Holy Spirit." In Ber. rabba on the same passage Rebecca is called a prophetess.

6. This verse like xii. 31 owes its existence, as Singer has pointed out, to the author's desire to protect his heroes

Abraham and Jacob from the reproach of leaving their fathers in their old age. Singer (p. 170) writes: In der Haggada wird nämlich Jakob darob getadelt, dass er so lange Zeit von seinen Eltern fernblieb und dadurch die Uebung der Kindespflichten verabsäumte (Megilla 16 b, Sed. Od. rabba 2, Tanch. u. Lek. Tob. Wagescheb in Raschi, Gen. xxxvii. 34), wogegen Esau in dieser Hinsicht sehr gepriesen und als Muster eines guten Kindes dargestellt wird (Ber. rabba 65, 82; Debarim rabba 1, Pesikta rab. xxiv.).

when he sends me, then only will I go." 7. And Rebecca said to Jacob: "I will go in and speak to him, and he will send thee away." 8. And Rebecca went in and said to Isaac: "I loathe my life because of the two daughters of Heth, whom Esau has taken him as wives; and if Jacob take a wife from among the daughters of the land such as these, for what purpose do I further live; for the daughters of Canaan are evil." 9. And Isaac called Jacob and blessed him, and admonished him and said unto him: 10. "Do not take thee a wife of any of the daughters of Canaan; arise and go to Mesopotamia, to the house of Bethuel, thy mother's father, and take thee a wife from thence of the daughters of Laban, thy mother's brother. 11. And God Almighty bless thee and increase and multiply thee that thou mayest become a company of nations, and give thee the blessings of my father Abraham, to thee and to thy seed after thee, that thou mayest inherit the land of thy sojournings and all the land which God gave to Abraham: go, my son, in peace." 12. And Isaac sent Jacob away, and he went to Mesopotamia, to Laban the son of Bethuel the Syrian, the brother of Rebecca, Jacob's mother. 13. And it came to pass after Jacob had arisen to go to Mesopotamia that the spirit of Rebecca was grieved after her son, and she wept. 14. And Isaac said to Rebecca: "My sister, weep not on account of Jacob, my son; for he goeth in peace, and in peace will he return. 15. The Most High God will

14. My sister. This term as applied by Isaac to his wife is used as an expression of tenderness. It is possible that Singer (p. 168 note) is right in stating that it is designed by our author to justify the fact of Isaac's having called her his sister at the Court of Abimelech. As instances of the former use we might quote Tobit's address to his wife (Tobit v. 21): μὴ λόγον ἔχει, ἀδελφὴ; also vii. 15, viii. 4, 7; also

Song of Solomon iv. 9, 10, 12, v. 1. This usage was common in the old Egyptian songs as Maspero and Spiegelberg have shown (see Budde, Das Hohenlied, pp. xvi-xvii). "Brother" was used in these songs also with a similar meaning. ἀδελφὴ in 1 Cor. ix. 5 has quite a different meaning. It denotes one who is connected by the tie of the Christian religion. The above usage, is according to Singer (p. 208 note), unknown in Rabbinic literature.

preserve him from all evil, and will be with him; for He will not forsake him all his days; 16. For I know that his ways will be prospered in all things wherever he goes, until he return in peace to us, and we see him in peace. 17. Fear not on his account, my sister, for he is on the upright path and he is a perfect man: and he is faithful and will not perish. Weep not." 18. And Isaac comforted Rebecca on account of her son Jacob, and blessed him. 19. And Jacob went from the Well of the Oath to go to Haran on the first year of the second week in the forty-fourth jubilee, and he came to Luz on the mountains, that is, Bethel, on the new moon of the first month of this week, 2115 A.M. and he came to the place at even and turned from the way to the west of the road that night: and he slept there; for the sun had set. 20. And he took one of the stones of that place and laid it (at his head) under the tree, and he was journeying alone, and he slept. 21. And he dreamt that night, and behold a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven, and behold, the angels of the Lord ascended and descended on it: and behold, the Lord stood upon it. 22. And He spake to Jacob and said: "I am the Lord God of Abraham, thy father, and the God of Isaac; the land whereon thou art sleeping, to thee shall I give it, and to thy seed after thee. 23. And thy seed will be as the dust of the earth, and thou wilt increase to the west and to the east, to the north and the south, and in thee and in thy seed will all the families of the nations be blessed. 24. And behold, I shall be with thee, and shall keep thee whithersoever thou goest, and I shall bring thee again into this land in peace; for I shall not leave thee until I do everything that I told thee of.” 25. And Jacob awoke from his sleep, and said, “Truly this place is the house of the Lord, and I knew it not.” And he was afraid and said: “Dreadful is this place which is none other than the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven.” 26. And Jacob arose early in the morning, and took the stone which he had put under his head and set it up as a pillar for a sign, and he poured oil upon the top of it. And he called the name of that place Bethel; but the name of the place was Luz at the first. 27. And Jacob vowed a vow unto the Lord, saying: “If the Lord will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and give me bread to eat and raiment to put on, so that I come again to my father’s house in peace, then shall the Lord be my God, and this stone which I have set up as a pillar for a sign in this place, shall be the Lord’s house, and of all that thou givest me, I shall give the tenth to thee, my God.”

unto him: "Give me my wife, for whom I have served thee seven years"; and Laban said unto Jacob: "I will give thee thy wife." 3. And Laban made a feast, and took Leah his elder daughter, and gave (her) to Jacob as a wife, and gave her Zilpah his handmaid for an handmaid; and Jacob did not know, for he thought that she was Rachel. 4. And he went in unto her, and behold, she was Leah; and Jacob was angry with Laban, and said unto him: "Why hast thou dealt thus with me? Did not I serve thee for Rachel and not for Leah? Why hast thou wronged me? Take thy daughter, and I will go; for thou hast done evil to me." 5. For Jacob loved Rachel more than Leah; for Leah's eyes were weak, but her form was very handsome; but Rachel had beautiful eyes and a beautiful and very handsome form. 6. And Laban said to Jacob: "It is not so done in our country, to give the younger before the elder." And it is not right to do this; for thus it is ordained and written in the heavenly tables, that no one should give his younger daughter before the elder—but the elder one gives first and after her the younger—and the man who does so, they set down guilt against him in heaven, and none is righteous that does this thing, for this deed is evil before the Lord. 7. And command thou the children of Israel that they do not this thing; let them neither take nor give the younger before they have given the elder, for it is very wicked. 8. And Laban said to Jacob: "Let the seven days of the feast of this one pass by, and I shall give thee Rachel, that thou

The sister of Zilpah. Bilhah and Zilpah appear as sisters also in Test. XII. Patriarch. Naph. i. ἐξῆς ἔτεκεν τὴν Βάλλαν. In later Jewish tradition they are still represented as sisters, but as daughters of Laban by a concubine: cf. Ps.-Jon. on Gen. xxix. 24, 29; Ber. rabba 74. Singer adds Pirke R. El. 36 on p. 118 note.

womb of Leah, and she conceived and bare Jacob a son, and he called his name Reuben, on the fourteenth day of the 2122 A.M.

confusion of , and ;) in Jub. xxviii. 24. In that case Joseph would be born in 2135 A.M. and his place in the Jubilees list would agree with those of the other authorities. But this date does not agree with what is required by xxxiv. 10 and xlvi. 1 of our text. For these passages when taken together imply that Joseph was born in the year 2132. See note on xxviii. 24.

Rönsch further supposes that the copyist transposed the dates for Judah and Dan, and again a corruption of seventh into sixth; and finally suggests in the case of Asher and Issachar that we should transpose the years of their births, and read fourth year in Asher's case and fifth in Issachar's. Thus we should have the following list:—

Reuben born	14th of 9th month in	1st year of the 3rd week =	2122
Simeon	„ 21st of 10th „ 3rd „ 3rd „	=	2124
Levi	„ 1st of 1st „ 6th „ 3rd „	=	2127
Judah	„ 15th of 3rd „ 7th „ 3rd „	=	2128
Dan	„ 9th of 6th „ 1st „ 4th „	=	2129
Naphtali	„ 5th of 7th „ 2nd „ 4th „	=	2131
Gad	„ 12th of 8th „ 3rd „ 4th „	=	2132
Asher	„ 2nd of 11th „ 4th „ 4th „	=	2133
Issachar	„ 4th of 5th „ 5th „ 4th „	=	2134
Zebulon	„ 7th of 7th „ 6th „ 4th „	=	2134
Joseph	„ 1st of 4th „ 7th „ 4th „	=	2135
Benjamin	„ 11th of 8th „ 1st „ 4th „	=	2143

This order, corrected as Rönsch proposes above, is found in Syncellus i. 198, though the dates differ from those in our text: καὶ δουλεύσας ἔτη 5' ἔλαβε τὴν Λείαν καὶ ἐγέννησε τὸν 'Ρουβὴν τῷ π' ἔτει καὶ τὸν Συμεὼν τῷ πα', τὸν δὲ Λευὶ τῷ πβ', τὸν 'Ιούδαν τῷ πγ', τὸν Δάν τῷ πέ', τὸν Νεφθαλεὶμ τῷ πς', τὸν 'Ιὰδ τῷ πζ', τὸν 'Ασὴρ τῷ πη', τὸν 'Ισσάχαρ τῷ πθ', τὸν Ζαβουλὼν καὶ τὴν Δείναν ἐκ Λείας τῷ 5', τὸν 'Ιωσήφ ἐκ τῆς 'Ραχὴλ τῷ 5α'.

The following imperfect list (derived undoubtedly from our text) of the twelve patriarchs with their ages and the days of the month on which they were born is found in Eppstein's edition of the Midrash Tadshe viii. lines 2-4: "The years of Rebecca were 133, of Rachel 36, of Lea 46. Reuben was born on the 14th of the 9th month and died 125 years old. Simeon was born on the 21st of the 10th month and died at the age of 120 years. Levi was born on the 1st of the 1st month and died at the age of 137. Dan was born on the 6th of the 9th month and died at the age of 125; Judah on 15th of 3rd and died 119 (?) (text indistinct); Naphtali on the 5th of the 3rd and died aged 133; Gad on the 10th of the 7th and died 125; Issachar on 4th of 5th month and died 122; Asher on 2nd of (corrupt text) and died 123; Joseph on the 1st of the 7th and died 110." It will be observed that more than half the above dates of the month correspond exactly to those in Jubilees, and nearly all the ages to those in Test. XII. Patriarchs (see below). The Book of Jashar (op. cit. ii. 1244, 1246, 1248) agrees with the Testament XII. Patriarch, in giving the same ages for Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Issachar, Gad, Joseph, but disagrees in the cases of Judah, Dan, Asher, Zebulon and Naphtali, to whom it ascribes respectively the following ages: 129, 124, 123, 114, 132.

In the Test. XII. Patriarchs the dates vary also. The facts have been collected by Dodwell and are found in Fabricius, Cod. Pseud. V.T. i. 749-754. See also Rönsch, 327-329. The chief are:—

And on account of all this Rachel envied Leah, for she did not bear, and she said to Jacob: "Give me children"; and Jacob said: "Have I withheld from thee the fruits of thy womb? Have I forsaken thee?" 17. And when Rachel saw that Leah had borne four sons to Jacob, Reuben and Simeon and Levi and Judah, she said unto him: "Go in unto Bilhah my handmaid, and she will

We must be content with these dates till a critical edition of this work is issued. For a different set of dates see Eusebius, Praep. Ev. ix. 21.

11. He called. In Gen. xxix. 32 it is "she called." Perhaps we should so read here and in verses 13, 14, 15, 18. In 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24 this form is actually found.

15. From the context (cf. verses 15 and 18) it is obvious that the dates in the text are corrupt. Judah was born before Rachel gave Bilhah to Jacob. Yet the text sets the birth of Bilhah's son two years before that of Judah. See note on 11-24.

conceive, and bear a son unto me." 18. (And she gave (him) Bilhah her handmaid to wife.) And he went in unto her, and she conceived, and bare him a son, and he called 2127 A.M. his name Dan, on the ninth of the sixth month, in the †sixth† year of the †third† week. 19. And Jacob went in again unto Bilhah a second time, and she conceived, and bare Jacob another son, and Rachel called his name Naphtali, on the fifth of the seventh month, in the second year of the fourth 2130 A.M. week. 20. And when Leah saw that she had become sterile and did not bear, she envied (Rachel) and she also gave her handmaid Zilpah to Jacob to wife, and she conceived, and bare a son, and Leah called his name Gad, on the twelfth of the eighth month, in the third year of the 2131 A.M. fourth week. 21. And he went in again unto her, and she conceived, and bare him a second son, and Leah called his name Asher, on the second of the eleventh month, in the 2133 A.M. †fifth† year of the fourth week. 22. And Jacob went in unto Leah, and she conceived, and bare a son, and she called his name Issachar, on the fourth of the fifth month, in the 2132 A.M. †fourth† year of the fourth week, and she gave him to a nurse. 23. And Jacob went in again unto her, and she conceived, and bare two (children), a son and a daughter, and she called the name of the son Zebulon, and the name of the daughter Dinah, in the seventh of the seventh month, in the sixth year 2134 A.M. of the fourth week. 24. And the Lord was gracious to Rachel, and opened her womb, and she conceived, and bare a son, and she called his name Joseph, on the new moon of the fourth month, in the †sixth† year in this fourth week. 2134 A.M.

18. On the date assigned to Dan see note on 11-24.

20. Become sterile and did not bear. Cf. Gen. xxx. 9 = "had left bearing." I here withdraw the emendation in my text.

Envied (Rachel) and she also gave. So MSS but the text is doubtful. My emendation of the text I here withdraw.

21-22. On the dates see note on 11-24.

24. According to xxxiv. 10 Joseph was sold into Egypt in 2149 at the age of seventeen (xlv. 3). Hence this would require the date in our text to be 2132. This change is required also by xlv. 1. This would require "fourth" instead of "sixth," but see note on 11-24.

25. And in the days when Joseph was born, Jacob said to Laban? "Give me my wives and sons, and let me go to my father Isaac, and let me make me an house; for I have completed the years in which I have served thee for thy two daughters, and I will go to the house of my father." 26. And Laban said to Jacob: "†Tarry with me for thy wages†, and pasture my flock for me again, and take thy wages." 27. And they agreed with one another that he should give him as his wages those of the lambs and kids which were born black and spotted and white, (these) were to be his wages. 28. And all the sheep brought forth spotted and speckled and black, variously marked, and they brought forth again lambs like themselves, and all that were spotted were Jacob's and those which were not were Laban's. 29. And Jacob's possessions multiplied exceedingly, and he possessed oxen and sheep and asses and camels, and menservants and maidservants. 30. And Laban and his sons envied Jacob, and Laban took back his sheep from him, and he observed him with evil intent.

26. †Tarry with me for thy wages.† Latin has: Expecta me in mercede. Both seem wrong. Gen. xxx. 28 has "Appoint (נקבה) me thy wages." Possibly "expecta" goes back to קָהַ and "tarry" to קָם, but neither of these takes us back to the right text.

Take thy wages. Latin: dabo tibi mercedem is better.

27. Cf. Gen. xxx. 32.

Those of. So b. abd = "all the sheep of."

Black and spotted = חום וטלוא. See my text for emendation.

White. This is a false rendering of δαλευκα = נָקָה (same false rendering in Eth. ver. of Gen. xxx. 39), or else it presupposes λευκόν which is itself wrong. We should render "speckled."

28. Cf. Gen. xxx. 39.

Speckled and black, variously marked. This agrees exactly with LXX of Gen. xxx. 39: ποικίλα καὶ σποδοειδῆ πάντα and Vulg. varia et diverso colore respersa. The Mass. has no equivalent of the σποδοειδῆ. See my text on this clause.

All that were spotted were Jacob's, etc. Cf. Gen. xxx. 32. Jerome (Quaest. Hebr. in loc.) seems to have had this passage in mind: Si quid igitur ex albis et nigris, quae unius coloris sunt, varium natum erit, meum erit; si quid vero unius coloris, tuum.

29. And sheep. So also LXX of Gen. xxx. 43. Mass., Sam., Syr., Vulg. omit.

Amorites (anciently of the Rephaim) destroyed in the time of the writer, 9-11. Laban departs, 12. Jacob is reconciled to Esau, 13. Jacob sends supplies of food to his parents four times a year to Hebron, 14-17, 19-20. Esau marries again, 18. (Cf. Gen. xxxi. 3, 4, 10, 13, 19-21, 23, 24, 46, 47, xxxii. 22, xxxiii. 10, 16.)

XXIX. And it came to pass when Rachel had borne Joseph, that Laban went to shear his sheep; for they were distant from him a three days' journey. 2. And Jacob saw that Laban was going to shear his sheep, and Jacob called Leah and Rachel, and spake kindly unto them that they should come with him to the land of Canaan. 3. For he told them how he had seen everything in a dream, even all that He had spoken unto him that he should return to his father's house; and they said: "To every place whither thou goest we will go with thee." 4. And Jacob blessed the God of Isaac his father, and the God of Abraham his father's father, and he arose and mounted his wives and his children, and took all his possessions and crossed the river, and came to the land of Gilead, and Jacob hid his intention from 2135 A.M. Laban and told him not. 5. And in the seventh year of the fourth week Jacob turned (his face) toward Gilead in the first month, on the twenty-first thereof. And Laban pursued after him and overtook Jacob in the mountain of Gilead in the third month, on the thirteenth thereof. 6. And the Lord did not suffer him to injure Jacob; for He appeared to him in a dream by night. And Laban spake to Jacob. 7. And on the fifteenth of those days Jacob made

10. It is difficult to understand why our author mentions these seats of the Rephaim unless it is that certain victories of the Maccabees over the Amorites who succeeded the Rephaim are connected with them. To these we shall draw attention as we proceed.

Karnaim and Ashtaroth. Eth. Qarânâ'im and Astarôs. In Gen. xiv. 5 these two appear as one name "Ashtaroth - Karnaim" = "Ashtaroth of the two horns" (?) in the Mass. and Sam. and some MSS of the LXX. On the other hand the Syr. and some MSS of the LXX support our text. Kuenen, Buhl and Siegfried accept this reading. Ashtaroth Karnaim appears simply as Ashtaroth in Deut. i. 4; Josh. ix. 10, xii. 4, xiii. 12, 31 along with Edrei as a chief city of Og, king of Bashan. This Og was of the remnant of the Rephaim, Deut. iii. 11. See Encyc. Bib. i. 335, 336.

Karnaim. Eth. Qarânâ'im. Cf. Gen. xiv. 5; Amos vi. 13. Karnaim a strong city (1 Macc. v. 26) was captured by Judas and its temple of Atargatis burnt and 25000 people put to the sword (1 Macc. v. 43, 44; 2 Macc. xii. 21, 26). The Rephaim were succeeded by the Amorites (ver. 11), and of these our text grimly declares that "they have no longer length of life on the earth." Judas must have nearly annihilated them.

Edrei. Eth. 'Adrâ'a. This is the biblical Edrei (אֲדְרַי, 'Eḏrai, 'Eḏra'ev), the Ἀδρα of Ptolemy and the Ἀδράα of Eusebius. It was the chief city of Og, king of Bashan, who dwelt at Ashtaroth and at Edrei, Josh. xii. 4, xiii. 12, 31. Although this town is not mentioned as attacked by Judas in his eastern campaign (1 Macc. v.) the fact that it is mentioned here as having been destroyed makes it probable that it did suffer at the hands of Judas.

Mîsûr = מֵיִסוֹר = מִישוֹר. Cf. Deut. iii. 10, where there is a list of the cities of the plain (מִישוֹר) belonging to Og which were captured by Joshua. This may be the same as the valley of Rephaim, Josh. xv. 8, xviii. 16.

Beon = בְּעֹן. Eth. Bêwôn. Cf. Num. xxxii. 3. It is the same as the Baal-meon (see Encyc. Bib. and Bible Dict. in loc.). It is most probably to be identified with the Maccabean Baiar which is described in the Onomastica 32. 40; 101. 32 as a πόλις τοῦ Ἀμορραίων. This suits our text exactly. Beon and its inhabitants were utterly destroyed by Judas (1 Macc. v. 4, 5; Joseph. Ant. xii. 8, 1).

malignant, and the Amorites dwelt in their stead, wicked and sinful, and there is no people to-day which has wrought to the full all their sins, and they have no longer length of life on the earth. 12. And Jacob sent away Laban, and he departed into Mesopotamia, the land of the East, and Jacob returned to the land of Gilead. 13. And he passed over the Jabbok in the ninth month, on the eleventh thereof. And on that day Esau, his brother, came to him, and he was reconciled to him, and departed from him unto the land of Seir, but Jacob dwelt in tents. 14. And in the first year of the fifth week in this jubilee he crossed the Jordan, 2136 A.M. and dwelt beyond the Jordan, and he pastured his sheep from the sea †of the heap† unto Bethshan, and unto Dothan and unto the †forest† of Akrabbim. 15. And he sent to his father Isaac of all his substance, clothing, and food, and meat, and drink, and milk, and butter, and cheese, and some dates of the valley, 16. And to his mother Rebecca also four times a year, between the times of the months,

11. The Amorites dwelt. Latin: habitare fecit.

13. Passed over the Jabbok. Cf. Gen. xxxii. 22.

He passed over the Jabbok . . . on the eleventh thereof. Latin has transivit Jacob et undecim filii ipsius, probably owing to Gen. xxxii. 22.

He was reconciled. Emended with Latin propitius (est) from takuânânû = "they were reconciled."

14. †Of the heap†. So a d. b c give fahahat a word of unknown meaning. Latin has salso. Hence Lat. = "from the Salt Sea."

Bethshan = Βαιθσάν (1 Macc. v. 52, xii. 40) = בֵּית שֵׁן (i.e. the Bethshan in 1 Sam. xxxi. 10; 1 Kings iv. 12). This town also is associated with Judas, but in a peaceful way: cf. 2 Macc. xii. 29-31, where it appears under a new name Σκυθῶν πόλις (cf. LXX Judg. i. 27, where B adds after Βαιθσάν the gloss ἡ ἐστὶν Σκυθῶν πόλις). In the Roman war 65 A.D. the heathen inhabitants of this city slaughtered their Jewish fellow-citizens to the number of 13,000 (Joseph. Bell. Jud. ii. 18. 3). Eth. has Bêtasan.

Dothan. Eth. Dôthâ'im = Δωθαίμ (Judith iv. 6, vii. 3, etc.) = דּוֹתָן, Gen. xxxvii. 17.

Unto the †forest†. Latin has aggruum which may be corrupt for arborem, seeing that the Eth. has 'oma (a) = "forest." b c d read simply "unto Akrabbim." We should expect "unto the ascent of Akrabbim" from Num. xxxiv. 4; Josh. xv. 3.

Akrabbim. Eth. 'Aqrâbêth. This name is found only in the phrase "Ascent of Akrabbim." See preceding note. 'Ακραβαττήνη, a district in Idumea, where Judas fought against the Edomites, 1 Macc. v. 3; Joseph. Ant. xii. 8. 1.

15-16. Jacob, in contrast to Esau who robs his father (ver. 18), sends presents to him and his mother four times a year. The four times may correspond, as Rönisch (p. 140) conjectures, to the four festivals instituted by Noah (see vi. 23 sqq.): the 1st between ploughing and reaping, and between autumn and the rain (season) and between winter and spring, to the tower of Abraham. 17. For Isaac had returned from the Well of the Oath and gone¹ up to the tower of his father Abraham, and he dwelt there apart from his son Esau. 18. For in the days when Jacob went to Mesopotamia, Esau took to himself a wife Mahalath, the daughter of Ishmael, and he gathered together all the flocks of his father and his wives, and went up and dwelt on Mount Seir, and left Isaac his father at the Well of the Oath alone. 19. And Isaac went up from the Well of the Oath and dwelt in the tower of Abraham his father on the mountains of Hebron, 20. And thither Jacob sent all that he did send to his father and his mother from time to time, all they needed, and they blessed Jacob with all their heart and with all their soul.

Dinah ravished, 1-3. Slaughter of the Shechemites, 4-6. Laws against intermarriage between Israel and the heathen, 7-17. 2143 A.M. XXX. And in the first year of the sixth week he went up to Salem, to the east of Shechem, in peace, in the fourth of the 4th month = "between the times of the months"; the 1st of the 7th = "between ploughing and reaping"; the 1st of the 10th month = "between autumn and the rain (season)"; the 1st of the 1st month = "between winter and spring."

16. Between autumn and the rain (season). Latin has: in medio autumni pluviarum. This is the former rain (יורה), which falls from the middle of October to the middle of December.

Between winter and spring. Latin has: in medio pluviarum veris. Eth. could be rendered "between the rain and spring." This is the latter rain (מלקוש), which falls in March and April.

18. Cf. Gen. xxviii. 9, xxxvi. 6, 8.

And there they carried off Dinah, the daughter of Jacob, into the house of Shechem, the son of Hamor, the Hivite, the prince of the land, and he lay with her and defiled her, and she was a little girl, a child of twelve years. 3. And he besought his father and her brothers that she might be given to him to wife. And Jacob and his sons were wroth because of the men of Shechem; for they had defiled Dinah, their sister, and they spake to them with evil intent and dealt deceitfully with them and beguiled them. 4. And Simeon and Levi came unexpectedly to Shechem and executed judgment on all the men of Shechem, and peace. This passage is based on Gen. xxxiii. 18 שלם יעקב וְיָחִיד. The LXX, Syr., Eusebius, and Jerome here take שלם as a proper name. The Sam. reads שלם. Our text combines both interpretations.

To the east. Gen. xxxiii. 18 has "city."

2-3. Cf. Gen. xxxiv. 2, 4, 7, 13.

2-6. The history of Jacob's connection with the Shechemites caused much trouble to our author. He could hardly approve of their slaughter after they had consented to circumcision. Accordingly he omits all reference to the circumcision of the Shechemites, as also does Josephus (Ant. i. 21. 1). On the other hand this is given as the reason for Jacob's anger against Simeon and Levi in Test. Levi 6: καὶ ἤκουσεν ὁ πατήρ, καὶ ὤργισθη, καὶ ἐλυπήθη, ὅτι κατεδέξαντο τὴν περιτομὴν καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα ἀπέθανον. Notwithstanding the severe disapprobation of Simeon and Levi in Gen. xlix. 5-7 for their conduct in this matter, it was highly extolled in the two centuries preceding the Christian era. This is done in our text and in Test. Levi 5 where the angel bids Levi: ποιήσον ἐκδίκησιν ἐν Συγχέμ ὑπὲρ Δίνας, καὶ γὰρ ἐσομαι μετὰ σου, ὅτι κύριος ἀπέσταλκέ με. καὶ συνετέλεσα τῷ καιρῷ ἐκείνῳ τοὺς υἱοὺς Ἑμμώρ, καθὼς γέγραπται ἐν ταῖς πλαξὶ τῶν οὐρανῶν; and in the Test. Levi 6-7, where Levi says that he saw that "the sentence of God had gone forth for evil against Shechem," and still more strongly:

ἔφθασε δὲ ἡ ὀργὴ κυρίου ἐπ' αὐτοὺς εἰς τέλος. Again in Judith (a Hebrew work of the first cent. B.C.) ix. 2: κύριε ὁ θεὸς τοῦ πατρὸς μου Συμεών, ᾧ ἔδωκας ἐν χειρὶ ῥομφαίαν εἰς ἐκδίκησιν ἀλλογενῶν, οὗ ἔλυσαν μήτραν παρθένου εἰς μίασμα καὶ ἐγύμνωσαν μηρὸν εἰς αἰσχύνην, κ.τ.λ. Again in Philo, De Migr. Abrahami, 39, Simeon and Levi are called οἱ φρονήσεως ἀκουσταὶ καὶ γνώριμοι for their action in this matter, and in the next few lines it is implied that Shechem was not circumcised. See also the Book of Jashar for a reproduction of the ancient favourable view of Simeon and Levi (Dict. des Apocr. ii. 1166-1168). In the late rabbinic tradition, however, Simeon and Levi are judged more in accordance with the sentence pronounced upon them in Gen. xlix. In Gen. rabba 80, it is true, there is some extenuation of their conduct; but in section 98 of the same work it is said that the fact that most of the poor were of the tribe of Simeon is to be traced to the curse in Gen. xlix. 7. Singer (p. 115 note) compares also Sifre on Deut. xxxiii. 8.

2. Child of twelve years. This agrees with the reckoning in Test. Levi 12. There Levi, who was six years older than Dinah, slew Shechem at the age of eighteen.

3. His father (ab). cd "her father." And beguiled them. And Simeon . . . to Shechem. Latin has: Et posuerunt in corde suo Symeon et Lenui exterminare eos.

4. Cf. Gen. xxxiv. 25-27.

slew all the men whom they found in it, and left not a single one remaining in it: they slew all in torments because they had dishonoured their sister Dinah. 5. And thus let it not again be done from henceforth that a daughter of Israel be defiled; for judgment is ordained in heaven against them that they should destroy with the sword all the men of the Shechemites because they had wrought shame in Israel. 6. And the Lord delivered them into the hands of the sons of Jacob that they might exterminate them with the sword and execute judgment upon them, and that it might not thus again be done in Israel that a virgin of Israel should be defiled. 7. And if there is any man who wishes in Israel to give his daughter or his sister to any man who is of the seed of the Gentiles he shall surely die, and they shall stone him with stones; for he hath wrought shame in Israel; and they shall burn the woman with fire, because she has dishonoured the name of the house of her father, and she shall be rooted out of Israel. 8. And let not an adulteress and no uncleanness be found in Israel throughout all the days of the generations of the earth; for Israel is holy unto the Lord, and every man who has defiled (it) shall surely die: they shall stone him with stones. 9. For thus has it been ordained and written in the heavenly tables regarding all the seed of Israel: he

5. Wrought shame in Israel. Cf. Gen. xxxiv. 7.

7. This statement does not agree quite with any in the O.T. The burning of the woman with fire, it is true, finds a precedent in Gen. xxxviii. 24, where Judah demands that such a punishment should be executed on Tamar—a punishment at variance with the later law in Lev. xxi. 9. See in note on xli. 17 the distortion of the biblical tradition had recourse to by the Rabbis in order to justify the demand of Judah. It is true that her crime is that of fornication, whereas our text deals merely with the marriage of a Hebrew woman and a Gentile. To who defileth (it) shall surely die, and he shall be stoned with stones. 10. And to this law there is no limit of days, and no remission, nor any atonement: but the man who has defiled his daughter shall be rooted out in the midst of all Israel, because he has given of his seed to Moloch, and wrought impiously so as to defile it. 11. And do thou, Moses, command the children of Israel and exhort them not to give their daughters to the Gentiles, and not to take for their sons any of the daughters of the Gentiles, for this is abominable before the Lord. 12. For this reason I have written for thee in the words of the Law all the deeds of the Shechemites, which they wrought against Dinah, and how the sons of Jacob spake, saying: "We shall not give our daughter to a man who is uncircumcised; for that were a reproach unto us." 13. And it is a reproach to Israel, to those who give, and to those who take the daughters of the Gentiles; for this is unclean and abominable to Israel. 14. And Israel will not be free from this uncleanness if it has a wife of the daughters of the Gentiles, or has given any of its

10. Has given of his seed to Moloch. This interpretation of Lev. xviii. 21: "Thou shalt not give any of thy seed to make them pass through the fire to Molech," as being equivalent to giving one's child in marriage to a Gentile, is found in Ps.-Jon. on this verse: "And of thy seed thou shalt not give to lie with a daughter of the Gentiles so as to draw him over to a strange worship." The Latin which gives alienigenae instead of Molech is an interpretation of the text but not the text itself. The same idea underlies the statement in Sanh. 82a: R. Chija b. Abija said: "Whoever cohabits with a Gentile woman is to be regarded as though he had made himself the son-in-law of the idol; for it is said: And he cohabited with the daughter of a strange God." In Sanh. ix. 6 it enacts that "the zealous may slay a man taken in fornication with a Gentile or Roman woman (ארמית)." Nearly the same statement as is quoted above from Ps.-Jon. is found in Megilla 25a. That such an interpretation was prevalent we see from Megil. iv. 9: האומר מורער לא תתן להעביר למולך ומורער לא תתן לאעבד בארמיותא = "Whoever translates 'Thou shalt not give of thy seed to pass through the fire to Molech' as 'Thou shalt not give of thy seed to cohabit with a Gentile woman,' bid him be silent." Singer (p. 200 note) says that this Mishna is directed against the Jewish Christians. However this may be, the interpretation was an ancient Jewish one to begin with. It may not be older than the Maccabean age. The circumstances of that time were such as to justify the extremest measures in order to save Judaism from annihilation.

For there will be plague upon plague, and curse upon curse, and every judgment and plague and curse will come (upon him): if he do this thing, or hide his eyes from those who commit uncleanness, or those who defile the sanctuary of the Lord, or those who profane His holy name, (then) will the whole nation together be judged for all the uncleanness and profanation of this (man). 16. And there will be no respect of persons [and no consideration of persons], and no receiving at his hands of fruits and offerings and burnt-offerings and fat, nor the fragrance of sweet savour, so as to accept it: and so fare every man or woman in Israel who defiles the sanctuary. 17. For this reason I have commanded thee, saying: "Testify this testimony to Israel: see how the Shechemites fared and their sons: how they were delivered into the hands of two sons of Jacob, and they slew them under tortures, and it was (reckoned) unto them for righteousness, and it is written down to them for righteousness. 18. 15. (Upon him). Added from the Latin.

Hide his eyes. This is the phrase in Lev. xx. 4, הָעֵינִים עֲנִים. The Latin, praeterierit et despexerit, seems to be a dittography.

Who commit uncleanness . . . defile the sanctuary of the Lord . . . profane His holy name. Cf. Lev. xx. 3, "Hath given of his seed unto Molech, to defile my sanctuary . . . to profane my holy name."

(Then) will the whole nation together, etc. In Lev. xx. 5 only the man's family is involved in his guilt. Our author's enlargement of the area of the guilt is to justify the action of Simeon and Levi in slaying all the Shechemites. Our text (ver. 2) makes the whole people share in the rape of Dinah. In Test. Levi 6 a very evil account of them is given: οὕτως ἐδίωξαν Ἀβραὰμ τὸν πατέρα ἡμῶν ξένον ὄντα, καὶ κατεπάτησαν τὰ πόλινια ὀγκομένα ὄντα ἐπ' αὐτόν· καὶ Ἰεβλαὶ τὸν οἰκογενῆ αὐτοῦ σφόδρα ἀκλίσαντο. καὶ γε οὕτως ἐποίησεν πάντας τοὺς ξένους, ἐν δυναστείᾳ ἀρπάζοντες τὰς γυναῖκας αὐτῶν.

Profanation of this (man). MSS read "this profanation." I have emended in accordance with the Latin.

16. [And no consideration of persons]. Bracketed as a dittography. Latin omits.

The fragrance of sweet savour. Latin: odorabitur odore suavitatis.

18. The ground for Levi's appointment to the priesthood is quite different in xxxii. 3. Levi is there consecrated to the work of the priesthood as the tithe or tenth in Jacob's family. Our author has thus made use of two conflicting traditions. Possibly a third is the priesthood, and to be Levites, that they might minister before the Lord, as we, continually, and that Levi and his sons may be blessed for ever; for he was zealous to execute righteousness and judgment and vengeance on all those who arose against Israel. 19. And so they inscribe as a testimony in his favour on the heavenly tables blessing and righteousness before the God of all: 20. And we remember the righteousness which the man fulfilled during his life, at all periods of the year; until a thousand generations they will record it, and it will come to him and to his descendants after him, and he has been recorded on the heavenly tables as a friend and a righteous man. 21. All this account I have written for thee, and have commanded thee to say to the children of Israel, that they should not commit sin nor transgress the ordinances nor break the covenant which has been ordained for them, (but) that they should fulfil it and be recorded as friends. 22. But if they transgress and work uncleanness in every way, they will be recorded on the heavenly tables as adversaries, and they will be destroyed out of the book of life, and they will be recorded in the book of those who will be destroyed and with those who will be rooted out of the earth. 23. And on the day when the sons of Jacob slew Shechem a writing was recorded in their favour in heaven that they had executed righteousness and uprightness and to be found in Test. Levi 4, where Levi's appointment seems to be in answer to his prayer: εἰσήκουσεν οὖν ὁ ὑψιστος τῆς προσευχῆς σου τοῦ διελεῖν σε ἀπὸ τῆς ἀδικίας καὶ γενέσθαι αὐτῷ . . . λειτουργὸν τοῦ προσώπου αὐτοῦ. Another tradition appears in Shem. rabba 19 to the effect that Levi received the priesthood because it held fast to the rite of circumcision in Egypt when all the other tribes neglected it (Weber, *Jüd. Theol.*² p. 309). For other reasons cf. Baba bathra 123 a and Bamidbar rabba 7. See Singer (p. 115 note).

vengeance on the sinners, and it was written for a blessing. 24. And they brought Dinah, their sister, out of the house of Shechem, and they took captive everything that was in Shechem, their sheep and their oxen and their asses, and all their wealth, and all their flocks, and brought them all to Jacob their father. 25. And he reproached them because they had put the city to the sword; for he feared those who dwelt in the land, the Canaanites and the Perizzites. 26. And the dread of the Lord was upon all the cities which are around about Shechem, and they did not rise to pursue after the sons of Jacob; for terror had fallen upon them.

Jacob goes to Bethel to offer sacrifice, 1-3 (cf. Gen. xxxv. 2-4, 7, 14). Isaac blesses Levi, 4-17, and Judah, 18-22. Jacob recounts to Isaac how God prospered him, 24. Jacob goes to Bethel with Rebecca and Deborah, 26-30. Jacob blesses the God of his fathers, 31-32.

XXXI. And on the new moon of the month Jacob spake to all the people of his house, saying: "Purify yourselves and change your garments, and let us arise and go up to Bethel, where I vowed a vow to Him on the day when I fled from the face of Esau my brother, because He has been with me and brought me into this land in peace, and put ye away the strange gods that are among

25. Reproached them. Text = ἐλάλησε πρὸς αὐτούς (so Latin, locutus est ad illos) = עָלַם לָהֶם, which, however, in this context the Greek translator should have rendered by ἐλάλησε κατ' αὐτών. The same wrong choice of the two possible renderings of this phrase is found also in the LXX of Jer. vi. 10,

xxv. 2, xxvi. 2, etc. I press the above correction of the translation because the context requires עָלַם לָהֶם and not יְמַחֵם לָהֶם as in Gen. xxxiv. 30 in the corresponding passage. With our text "reproached them because they had put the city to the sword," cf. Test. Levi 6: οἱ ἀδελφοὶ ἐπάταξαν τὴν πόλιν ἐν στόματι ῥομφαίας. καὶ ἤκουσεν ὁ πατήρ, καὶ ὠργίσθη, καὶ ἐλυπήθη.

you." 2. And they gave up the strange gods and that which was in their ears and which was †on their necks,† and the idols which Rachel stole from Laban her brother she gave wholly to Jacob. And he burnt and brake them to pieces and destroyed them, and hid them under an oak which is in the land of Shechem. 3. And he went up on the new moon of the seventh month to Bethel. And he built an altar at the place where he had slept, and he set up a pillar there, and he sent word to his father Isaac to come to him to his sacrifice, and to his mother Rebecca. 4. And Isaac said: "Let my son Jacob come, and let me see him before I die." 5. And Jacob went to his father Isaac and to his mother Rebecca, to the house of his father Abraham, and he took two of his sons with him, Levi and Judah, and he came to his father Isaac and to his mother Rebecca. 6. And Rebecca came forth from the tower to the front of it to kiss Jacob and embrace him; for her spirit had revived when she heard: "Behold Jacob thy son has come"; and she kissed him. 7. And she saw his two sons, and she recognised them, and said unto him: "Are these thy sons, my son?" and she embraced them and kissed them, and blessed them, saying: "In you shall the seed of Abraham become illustrious, and ye will prove a blessing on the earth." 8. And Jacob went in to Isaac his father, to the chamber where he lay, and his two sons were with him, and he took the hand of his father, and stooping down he kissed him, and Isaac clung to the neck

2. They gave up = maṭawēwômû. Emended from (a) b masawēwômû = "they melted." cā give a bad emendation masatēwômû = "they tore away."

And which was †on their necks†. Here kēsāwdihômû seems corrupt for 'ēdawihômû = "their hands," and the whole emended clause "which were in their hands" should be inserted after "strange gods."

Her brother. The MSS corruptly

give 'abûhâ = "her father" instead of 'ēhûhâ.

3-4. The same incident is referred to in Test. Levi 9, where it says of Isaac: οὐκ ἠθέλησε πορευθῆναι μεθ' ἡμῶν εἰς Βεθὴλ.

of Jacob his son, and wept upon his neck. 9. And the darkness left the eyes of Isaac, and he saw the two sons of Jacob, Levi and Judah, and he said: "Are these thy sons, my son? for they are like thee." 10. And he said unto him that they were truly his sons: "And thou hast truly seen that they are truly my sons." 11. And they came near to him, and he turned and kissed them and embraced them both together. 12. And the spirit of prophecy came down into his mouth, and he took Levi by his right hand and Judah by his left. 13. And he turned to Levi first, and began to bless him first, and said unto him: "May the God of all, the very Lord of all the ages, bless thee and thy children throughout all the ages. 14. And may the Lord give to thee and to thy seed †greatness and great glory†, and cause thee and thy seed, from among all flesh, to approach Him to serve in His sanctuary as the angels of the presence and as the holy ones. (Even) as they, will the seed of thy sons be for glory and greatness and holiness, and may He make them great

9. Part of this verse with the subject matter of ver. 5 and 10 sqq. is attributed by Syncellus (i. 202) to Josephus: Ἰωσήφου. τῷ ρηγ' ἔτει τοῦ Ἰσαὰκ ἐπαρήλθεν Ἰακώβ πρὸς αὐτὸν ἀπὸ Μεσοποταμίας. καὶ ἀναβλέψας Ἰσαὰκ καὶ ἰδὼν τοὺς υἱοὺς Ἰακώβ ἡλόγησε τὸν Λεὺν ὡς ἀρχιερέα καὶ τὸν Ἰούδαν ὡς βασιλέα καὶ ἄρχοντα.

10. Seen that they are truly my sons. The Latin has: Vidisti, pater, quoniam filii mei sunt, and is probably right; for 'amân="truly" may be corrupt for 'abâ="O father."

12. Spirit of prophecy. See note on xxv. 14.

13. Turned to Levi first, and began to bless him. Similarly in Test. Levi 9 it says of Isaac: καὶ εὐλόγησέ με ὁ πατήρ τοῦ πατρὸς μου, κατὰ πάντας τοὺς λόγους τῶν ὁράσεών μου ὧν εἶδον.

God of all. See note on xxii. 4.

14. To thy seed †greatness and great glory†. So c. b "to thy seed the great greatness of glory." a is corrupt but points in the direction of b. Latin = magno intellegere gloriam ejus. This is decidedly better than the Ethiopic. By a slight change we can arrive at it from b. Hence we should probably render: "to thy great seed to understand His glory," or else by another change "to thy seed to have great understanding of His glory."

Serve in His sanctuary as the angels of the presence and as the holy ones. On these two classes, see notes ii. 2, 18, xv. 27. Here "the holy ones" appear to form a distinct class, whereas in xv. 27 they are used as a comprehensive term for the two (or "three" according to the Latin) highest orders. Levi is to serve in the sanctuary as the two highest orders of angels serve in the highest heaven. One or two such orders are mentioned in Test. Levi 3 (Armenian vers. A) as λειτουργούντες.

May He make them great. Lat. has sanctificabit.

unto all the ages. 15. And they will be princes and judges, and chiefs of all the seed of the sons of Jacob ;

They will speak the word of the Lord in righteousness,
And they will judge all His judgments in righteousness.

And they will declare My ways to Jacob
And My paths to Israel.

The blessing of the Lord will be given in their mouths
To bless all the seed of the beloved.

16. Thy mother has called thy name Levi,
And justly has she called thy name ;

Thou wilt be joined to the Lord
And be the companion of all the sons of Jacob ;

15. In this verse a double function is assigned to the descendants of Levi : they are to rule the nation (to be "princes and judges and chiefs") and to be the priests of the nation ("The blessing of the Lord will be given in their mouths"). This description, combined with other facts peculiar to the Maccabean period, requires us to recognise here the early Maccabean princes. The blessing given to Judah (verses 18, 19) confirms this interpretation.

Princes and judges, and chiefs. The Latin omits "and chiefs." We might compare Test. Levi 8 : ἀρχιερεῖς καὶ κριταὶ καὶ γραμματεῖς, for the author of that work had either our text or a source common to both before him. In the same chapter of the Test. Levi there is, as Bousset (Z. f. NTliche Wissenschaft, 1900, pp. 165-167) has already pointed out, an undoubted description of Johannes Hyrcanus : Λεβὶ, εἰς τρεῖς ἀρχὰς διαιρεθήσεται τὸ σπέρμα σου εἰς σημεῖον δόξης κυρίου ἐπερχομένης (so MS P. Arm. = τῆς παρουσίας τοῦ κυρίου). These three offices to be administered by Levi's descendants are to be signs of the coming of the Messiah. What these are is described in the words that follow : ὁ πρῶτος κλῆρος ἔσται μέγας· ὑπὲρ αὐτὸν οὐ γενήσεται ἕτερος (MS R). ὁ δεῦτερος ἔσται ἐν ιερωσύνη (Arm. as Bousset remarks prob. = ἡ δὲ δευτέρα ἔσται ἱερατεία) : ὁ τρίτος ἐπικληθήσεται αὐτῷ ὄνομα κοινόν, ὅτι βασιλεὺς ἐν (so Arm. : Greek ἐκ) Ἰουδα ἀναστήσεται, καὶ ποιήσει ἱερατεῖαν νέαν. The first refers to Moses, the greatest of Levi's descendants ; the second denotes Aaron and the Aaronitic priesthood ; the third the Maccabean ruling priests, and in particular to Johannes Hyrcanus, for the subsequent words ἡ δὲ παρουσία αὐτοῦ ἀγαπητῇ, ὡς προφῆτης ὑψίστου point to his prophetic gifts. The three-fold offices of prophet, priest and king were never claimed for any Jewish ruler save this Maccabean prince. See Josephus, Ant. xiii. 10. 7 ; Bell. Jud. i. 2. 8.

The blessing of the Lord will be given in their mouths. Cf. Sir. l. 20 : δοῦναι εὐλογίαν κυρίῳ ἐκ χειλέων αὐτοῦ, and Test. Reuben 6 : πρὸς τὸν Λεβὶ ἐγγίσατε ἐν ταπεινώσει καρδίας, ἵνα δέξησθε εὐλογίαν ἐκ τοῦ στόματος αὐτοῦ.

16. Joined to the Lord . . . the companion, etc. In the first, if not in the second, there is a play on the name Levi, as in Gen. xxix. 34 "will my husband be joined to me (לֵוִי יִשָּׁא) . . . therefore was his name called Levi" (לֵוִי) : cf. also Num. xviii. 2, 4. Instead of "joined to the Lord" the Latin has

- Let His table be thine,
And do thou and thy sons eat thereof;
And may thy table be full unto all generations,
And thy food fail not unto all the ages.
17. And let all who hate thee fall down before thee,
And let all thy adversaries be rooted out and perish;
And blessed be he that blesses thee,
And cursed be every nation that curses thee.
18. And to Judah he said:
May the Lord give thee strength and power
To tread down all that hate thee;
A prince shalt thou be, thou and one of thy sons, over the sons of Jacob;
May thy name and the name of thy sons go forth and traverse every land and region.
Then will the Gentiles fear before thy face,

ad decorem Dei, which seems to refer to Levi as derived from לוי, "a crown" or "garland."

Let His table be thine, etc. Cf. Test. Levi 8:

καὶ ἔδεσθε πᾶν ὥραϊον ὁράσει
καὶ τὴν τράπεζαν κυρίου διανεμήσεται
τὸ σπέρμα σου.

Also Test. Judah 21: καὶ γὰρ αὐτὸν (Λεὺ) ὑπὲρ ὑμᾶς (Arm. Gk. σε) ἐξελέξατο Κύριος ἐγγίξειν αὐτῷ καὶ ἐσθίειν τράπεζαν αὐτοῦ.

18-19. In the note on ver. 15 we saw that according to the Test. Levi 8 the three great offices held in turn by the descendants of Levi were to be signs of the coming Messiah who was to spring from Levi or from Judah or from Judah and Levi combined (?). Thus according to Levi 18, Reuben 6, the Messiah (a Maccabean priest-king?) was to spring from Levi and to be the eternal High Priest and civil ruler of the nation. During his reign sin was gradually to come to an end just as our author supposes

(xxiii. 26-30), the gates of Paradise to be opened and the saints to eat of the tree of life, as in Eth. Enoch xxv. 5, in an eternal Messianic kingdom on earth, as in Eth. Enoch xc. 29-38. In Judah 24-25 and Dan 5 the Messiah is to spring not from Levi but from Judah, as in Eth. Enoch xc. See Art. "Testaments of the XII Patriarchs" (in Bible Dict. vol. iv.). It is very probable that this last view underlies our text. The words "a prince . . . thou and one of thy sons" admit most naturally of this interpretation. If this is right, then the Messiah is to spring from Judah. In a kingdom which attains to realisation only gradually (see notes on i. 29, xxiii. 26-30) and not catastrophically no rôle seems to be assigned to him, as is also the case in Eth. Enoch xc. On the other hand this seems to be the earliest instance of the presence of a Messiah in a temporary Messianic kingdom (see note on xxiii. 30).

And Isaac said unto Jacob his son: "I am not able to go with thee; for I am old and not able to bear the way: go, my son, in peace; for I am one hundred and sixty-five years this day; I am no longer able to journey; set thy mother (on an ass) and let her go with thee. 28. And I know, my son, that thou hast come on my account, and may this day be blessed on which thou hast seen me alive, and I also have seen thee, my son. 29. Mayest thou prosper and fulfil the vow which thou hast vowed; and put not off thy vow; for thou wilt be called to account as touching the vow; now therefore make haste to perform it, and may He be pleased who has made all things, to whom thou hast vowed the vow." 30. And he said to Rebecca: "Go with Jacob thy son"; and Rebecca went with Jacob her son, and Deborah with her, and they came to Bethel. 31. And Jacob remembered the prayer with which his father had blessed him and his two sons, Levi and Judah, and he rejoiced and blessed the God of his fathers, Abraham and Isaac. 32. And he said: "Now I know that I have an eternal hope, and my sons also, before the God of all"; and thus is it ordained concerning the two; and they record it as an eternal testimony unto them on the heavenly tables how Isaac blessed them.

XXXII. 1. According also to Test. Levi 8, Levi had this dream at Bethel, in which seven men appeared unto him and bade him: 'Ἀναστὰς ἐνδύσαι τὴν στολὴν τῆς ἱερατείας, καὶ τὸν στέφανον τῆς δικαιοσύνης . . . Ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν γίνου εἰς ἱερέα κυρίου, σὺ καὶ τὸ σπέρμα σου ἕως αἰῶνος. Cf. also Test. Levi 5. In ch. 9 of the same Testament Jacob is said to have had this dream also.

Priest of the Most High God. This was the specific title chosen by the Maccabean priest-kings. Thus they are called sacerdotes summi Dei in Assumpt. Mos. vi. 1 (where my emendation is wrong): Hyrcanus II. is designated ἀρχιερεὺς θεοῦ ὑψίστου by Joseph. (Ant. xvi. 6. 2), and the Rosh ha-Shanah 18b states that it used to be said: "In such a year of Johanan priest of the Most High God." This title, anciently borne by Melchizedek (Gen. xiv. 18), was revived by the new holders of the high priesthood. Our author has Gen. xiv. 18-20 before him; for in the next verse he adopts a clause from Gen. xiv. 20: "And he gave him a tenth of all." We have seen in the note on xxxi. 18-19 that the Messiah was to spring from this family according to Test. Levi 18. The same expectation seems to be at the base of Ps. cx. 1-4, which constitutes a Messianic hymn addressed to Simeon or Simon the Maccabee. As Bickell has recognised, this Ps. forms an acrostic on the name Simeon. On the frequency of this divine title "Most High" in the second cent. B.C. see note on xxxvi. 16.

Him and his sons for ever. This phrase in the same connection is found in Test. Levi 8, already quoted above.

2. Jacob rose early in the morning, etc. So also Test. Levi 9: καὶ ἀναστὰς τὸ πρωὶ ἀπεδεκάτωσε πάντα δι' ἐμοῦ τῷ κυρίῳ, though here the offering is said to be through Levi.

3. Jacob counted his sons from him (i.e., Benjamin) upwards and Levi fell to the portion of the Lord, etc. Our text in some form was before Cedrenus, i. 60: καὶ πάντα ἀποδεκατώσας ἃ ἐκέκτητο, τελευταῖον ὑποβάλλει κλήρω τοὺς παῖδας, καὶ τὸν Λευὶ τῷ Θεῷ ἀφιεροῖ, ἐτῶν ὑπάρχοντα ἡ' καὶ ἀρχιερέα ἀναδείκνυσι, δέκατον ὄντα ἀπὸ ἐσχάτου κατὰ τὸν τῆς ἀστρολογίας (λόγον). And still more clearly before his predecessor Syncellus, i. 200: Ἰακώβ ἀποδεκατώσας τὰ ἐαυτοῦ τὸν Λευὶ ἡ' ἐτῶν ὄντα ἀρχιερέα ἀνέδειξεν, ἰ' ὄντα ἀπὸ τοῦ ἐσχάτου κατὰ τὸν τῆς ἀναστροφῆς λόγον. Lord, and his father clothed him in the garments of the priesthood and filled his hands. 4. And on the fifteenth of this month, he brought to the altar fourteen oxen from amongst the cattle, and twenty-eight rams, and forty-nine sheep, and seven lambs, and twenty-one kids of the goats as a burnt-offering on the altar of sacrifice, well pleasing for a sweet savour before God. 5. This was his offering, in consequence of the vow which he had vowed that he would give a tenth, with their fruit-offerings and their drink-offerings. 6. And when the fire had consumed it, he burnt incense on the fire over the fire, and for a thank-offering two oxen and four rams and four sheep, four he-goats, and two sheep of a year old, and two kids of the goats; and thus he did daily for seven days. 7. And he and all his sons and his men were eating (this) with joy there during seven days' and blessing and thanking the Lord, who had delivered him out of all his tribulation and had

R. Eliez. ch. 37 (Beer, Buch d. Jub. 36-37), though the method of reckoning is different. Jacob is said to have separated the first four sons born of his four wives and to have counted his remaining sons from Simeon to Benjamin and then to have begun again with Simeon. Levi thus came to be the tenth.

Filled his hands. The technical expression for appointment to the priesthood. Cf. Exod. xxviii. 41, xxix. 9.

4. This celebration of the feast of tabernacles is peculiar as regards the number of victims. According to the Levitical law on each of the seven days a kid of the goats was offered as a sin-offering, and two rams and fourteen lambs as a burnt-offering. Throughout the seven days seventy bullocks were offered, beginning with thirteen on the first day, the number being diminished daily till on the seventh day seven were offered. See Num. xxix. 12-40; Lev. xxiii. 34-36, 39-44.

Seven lambs. MSS=60, but since Latin has "septem," and the heptadic system prevails, we may assume with Rönsch (p. 147) that the corruption arose from a confusion of ξ' and ζ'.

given him his vow. 8. And he tithed all the clean animals, and made a burnt sacrifice, but the unclean animals he gave (not) to Levi his son, and he gave him all the souls of the men. 9. And Levi discharged the priestly office at Bethel before Jacob his father in preference to his ten brothers, and he was a priest there, and Jacob gave his vow : thus he tithed again the tithe to the Lord and sanctified it, and it became holy unto Him. 10. And for this reason it is ordained on the heavenly tables as a law for the tithing again the tithe to eat before the Lord from year to year, in the place where it is chosen that His name should dwell, and to this law there is no limit of days for ever. 11. This ordinance is written that it may be fulfilled from year to year in eating the second tithe before the Lord in the place where it has been chosen, and nothing shall remain over from it from this year to the year following. 12. For in its year shall the seed be eaten till the days of the gathering of the seed of the year, and the wine till the days of the wine, and the oil till the days of its season. 13. And all that is left thereof and becomes old, let it be regarded as polluted : let it be burnt with fire, for it is unclean. 14. And thus let them eat it together in the sanctuary, and let them not suffer it to become old. 15. And all the tithes of the oxen and sheep shall be holy unto the Lord, and shall

8. The unclean animals he gave (not) to Levi. I have supplied the negative. In Test. Levi 9 Levi says that Jacob ἀπεδεκάτωσε πάντα δι' ἐμοῦ τῷ κυρίῳ. Our text would limit this to the clean animals.

Gave him all the souls of the men. Levi was to exercise his priestly functions on behalf of these.

9. Discharged the priestly office, or "was constituted a priest."

Tithed again the tithe to the Lord. Cf. Num. xviii. 26.

10. To eat before the Lord, etc. Our text holds closely to the law in Deut. xiv. 22 sq. Cf. Tobit i. 7.

11. The second tithe (so a). bcd "the tithe again."

15. The tithes of the oxen and sheep. These tithes are mentioned in the O.T. only in Lev. xxvii. 32 and 2 Chron. xxxi. 6. They were unknown to Nehemiah (x. 37-39, xii. 44-47, xiii. 5, 12). Our author took this law of tithing literally, but rabbinic tradition (Rosh ha-Shanah i. 1, quoted by Dillmann on Lev. xxvii. 32) sought to weaken the statement, and made it out to be merely a tithe of the yearly increase, but the context offers not the slightest justification for this step (see Bertholet on Lev. in loc.). See our text xiii. 26.

belong to His priests, which they will eat before Him from year to year; for thus is it ordained and engraven regarding the tithe on the heavenly tables. 16. And on the following night, on the twenty-second day of this month, Jacob resolved to build that place, and to surround the court with a wall, and to sanctify it and make it holy for ever, for himself and his children after him. 17. And the Lord appeared to him by night and blessed him and said unto him: 'Thy name shall not be called Jacob, but Israel shall they name thy name.' 18. And He said unto him again: "I am the Lord who created the heaven and the earth, and I shall increase thee and multiply thee exceedingly, and kings will come forth from thee, and they will judge everywhere wherever the foot of the sons of men has trodden. 19. And I shall give to thy seed all the earth which is under heaven, and they will judge all the nations according to their desires, and after that they will get possession of the whole earth and inherit it for ever." 20. And He finished speaking with him, and He went up from him, and Jacob looked till He had ascended into heaven. 21. And he saw in a vision of the night, and behold an angel descended from heaven with seven tablets in his hands, and he gave them to Jacob, and he read them and knew all that was written therein which would befall him and his sons throughout all the ages. 22. And he showed him all that was written on the tablets, and said unto him: "Do not build this place, and do not make it an eternal sanctuary, and do not dwell here; for this is not the place. Go to the house of Abraham thy father and dwell with Isaac thy father until the day of the death of thy father. 23. For in Egypt thou wilt die in peace, and in this land thou wilt be buried with honour in the sepulchre of thy fathers, with Abraham and Isaac. 24. Fear not, for as thou hast seen and read it, thus will it all be; and do thou write down everything as thou hast seen and read." 25. And Jacob said: "Lord, how can I remember all that I have read and seen?" And he said unto him: "I will bring all things to thy remembrance." 26. And he went up from him, and he awoke from his sleep, and he remembered everything which he had read and seen, and he wrote down all the words which he had read and seen. 27. And he celebrated there yet another day, and he sacrificed thereon according to all that he sacrificed on the former days, and called its name †"Addition,"† for †this day was added,† and the former days he called "The Feast." 28. And thus it was manifested that it should be, and it is written on the heavenly tables: wherefore it was revealed to him that he should celebrate it, and add it to the seven days

Our text seems to be the source of the words ascribed by Origen (Fabricius, Cod. Pseud. V.T. i. 761) to the Prayer of Joseph: Διόπερ ἐν τῇ προσευχῇ τοῦ Ἰωσήφ δύναται οὕτω νοεῖσθαι τὸ λεγόμενον ὑπὸ τοῦ Ἰακώβ. ἀνέγνων γὰρ ἐν ταῖς πλαξὶ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ὅσα συμβήσεται ὑμῖν καὶ τοῖς υἱοῖς ὑμῶν. Cf. xlv. 14.

25. Will bring all things, etc. Cf. John xiv. 26, where the Paraclete ὑπομνήσει ὑμᾶς πάντα.

27. †Addition†. This eighth day after the seven days of the feast of tabernacles was called הַיּוֹם הַשְּׁמִינִי (2 Chron. vii. 9), in New Hebrew הַיּוֹם הַשְּׁמִינִי (Joseph. Ant. iii. 10. 6, Ἀσάπρα): likewise the seventh day of the Passover feast. The translation in our text, "addition," points to some corruption in the Greek or Hebrew. The Latin "retentatio" is a possible rendering. Rōnsch suggests that ἐπίσχεσις stood in the Greek version but was corrupted into ἐπίθεσις in the copy before the Ethiopic translator. Hence we might render: "Called its name 'a keeping back' for on that day he was kept back." Thus our author connects the origin of this additional feast-day with Jacob's detention an eighth day in Bethel. In the Talmud (Chag. 18*a*) the idea of "keeping back" (in עצר) is connected with work. For it states that on the seventh day of the Passover "there must be a keeping back from every kind of work" (הַשְּׁבִיעִי עֲצֹר בְּכָל מְלָאכָה). See Levy's Neuhebr. Lexicon, iii. 680. Scholars are now generally agreed that the word עצרה means "sacred assembly."

†This day was added†. Here we must suppose ἐπετέθη as corrupt for ἐπεσχέθη. See rendering proposed in preceding note. The last clause of the next verse may have given rise to the corruption or wrong correction.

The Feast. This agrees exactly with rabbinic usage. The feast of tabernacles was called הַיּוֹם הַשְּׁמִינִי = "the Feast." Cf. Sukk. 42*b*, 48*a*. Josephus (Ant. viii. 4. 1) designates it as ἑορτὴ ἀγῶνιστῆς καὶ μεγίστης and Philo ἑορτῶν μεγίστης.

29. A very corrupt verse in the Ethiopic and partially corrupt in the Latin. The restored translation is given below.

of the feast. 29. And its name was called †“Addition,”† †because that† it was recorded amongst the days of the feast days, †according to† the number of the days of the year. 30. And in the night, on the twenty-third of this month, Deborah Rebecca’s nurse died, and they buried her beneath the city under the oak of the river, and he called the name of this place, “The river of Deborah,” and the oak, “The oak of the mourning of Deborah.” 31. And Rebecca went and returned to her house to his father Isaac, and Jacob sent by her hand rams and sheep and he-goats that she should prepare a meal for his father such as he desired. 32. And he went after his mother till he came to the land of Kabrâtân, and he dwelt there. 33. And Rachel bare a son in the night, and called his name “Son of my sorrow”; for she suffered in giving him birth: but his father called his name Benjamin, on the eleventh of the eighth month in the 2143 A. M. first of the sixth week of this jubilee. 34. And Rachel died there and she was buried in the land of Ephrath, the same is Bethlehem, and Jacob built a pillar on the grave of Rachel, on the road above her grave.

†Addition†. See note on ver. 27.

†Because that†. The Ethiopic has a peculiar phrase here ’esma ’enta which usually = nam quod, but since an analogous yet rare phrase kama enta = quasi occurs in xliii. 19, xlviii. 13, we may take it that ’esma ’enta = propter quod as the Latin version has it. But this gives no right sense. The reason of the name is not given here but in ver. 27. Hence I suggest that propter quod = διδρυ = ῥ, which the Greek translator should have rendered in this context by δρε.

It was recorded. Text of MSS ungrammatical, but by a change of vocalisation in one letter we arrive at the above.

Amongst the days = ba ’elâta emended with Latin “in dies” from basēm’a = “for a testimony” (b d). c has basalâm = “in peace.”

†According to†. Here we expect “in.” Accordingly I suggest that we have here an original corruption of ῥ into ῥ. Thus the whole verse should run: “And its name was called ‘a keeping back’ (i.e. עצרה), when it was recorded amongst the days of the feast-days in the number of the days of the year.”

30. Cf. Gen. xxxv. 8. Deborah dies on the eighth day of the feast of tabernacles.

Of this place. So d, Latin and Vulg. Gen. xxxv. 8 = “of this place.” b c = “of this river.” a omits.

32-34. Cf. Gen. xxxv. 16, 18-20.

32. Land of Kabrâtân. This goes back to נכרה הארץ = “some distance” in Gen. xxxv. 16, but the translation like that of the LXX (Χαβραθα) took נכרה to be a proper name.

34. Rachel died. According to Book of Jashar (Dict. des Apocr. ii. 1172) Rachel was only forty-five years old.

In the land of Ephrath. Gen. xxxv 19, “in the way to Ephrath.”

And Reuben saw Bilhah, Rachel's maid, the concubine of his father, bathing in water in a secret place, and he loved her. 3. And he hid himself at night, and he entered the house of Bilhah [at night], and he found her sleeping alone on a bed in her house. 4. And he lay with her, and she awoke and saw, and behold Reuben was lying with her in the bed, and she uncovered the border of her covering and seized him, and cried out, and discovered that it was Reuben. 5. And she was ashamed because of him, and released her hand from him, and he fled. 6. And she lamented because of this thing exceedingly, and did not tell it to any one. 7. XXXIII. 1. To the south of Magdalâ-drâ'êf. This name is a compression of מגדל-עדר אפרת, "the tower of Eder of Ephrath," Gen. xxxv. 21. See a probably corrupt form of this name in xxxiv. 15. In Test. Reuben 3, where the same scene is recounted, we have ἐν Γαδέρ πλησίον Ἐφραθά.

And he went to his father Isaac . . . 2. And Reuben saw Bilhah, etc. It was during Jacob's absence with Isaac that the outrage was done. So Test. Reuben 3: ἀπόντος γὰρ Ἰακώβ τοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν πρὸς Ἰσαὰκ τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῦ, ὄντων ἡμῶν ἐν Γαδέρ, πλησίον Ἐφραθὰ οἴκου Βηθλεέμ, Βάλλα . . . ἀκάλυφος κατέκειτο ἐν τῷ κοιτῶνι.

2. Saw Bilhah . . . bathing, etc. Cf. Test. Reuben 3: εἰ μὴ γὰρ εἶδον ἐγὼ Βάλλαν λουομένην ἐν σκεπινῶ τόπῳ, κ.τ.λ. A very different account of Reuben's conduct appears in later works: Gen. rabba 98, 99; Ps.-Jon. on Gen. xxxv. 22, Shabb. 55*b* and the Book of Jashar (op. cit. 1172). In these passages Reuben's guilt is denied absolutely. These writings state that on Rachel's death Jacob settled in the tent of Bilhah her handmaid, and that Reuben, being indignant on behalf of his mother Leah, went into Bilhah's tent and withdrew his father's couch from it, or threw Bilhah's couch into disorder etc., and that on this ground the Scripture held that he lay with Bilhah. In Shabb. 55*b* it is recounted that the earlier teachers, R. Joshua and R. Eliezer, accepted the narrative in Gen. xxxv. 22.

3. And he hid himself . . . house of Bilhah [at night]. Latin is preferable: Et introivit nocte occulte ad Ballan. The second "at night" is a dittography.

4. He lay with her, and she awoke. Test. Reuben 3 agrees with this: καὶ ἐλθὼν . . . ἔπραξα τὴν ἀσέβειαν, καὶ καταλιπὼν αὐτὴν κοιμωμένην, ἐξῆλθον.

5. She was ashamed because of him. Latin: confusus est ab ea.

him: "I am not clean for thee, for I have been defiled as regards thee; for Reuben has defiled me, and has lain with me in the night, and I was asleep, and did not discover until he uncovered my skirt and slept with me." 8. And Jacob was exceedingly wroth with Reuben because he had lain with Bilhah, because he had uncovered his father's skirt. 9. And Jacob did not approach her again because Reuben had defiled her. And as for any man who uncovers his father's skirt his deed is wicked exceedingly, for he is abominable before the Lord. 10. For this reason it is written and ordained on the heavenly tables that a man should not lie with his father's wife, and should not uncover his father's skirt, for this is unclean: they shall surely die together, the man who lies with his father's wife and the woman also, for they have wrought uncleanness on the earth. 11. And there shall be nothing unclean before our God in the nation which He has chosen for Himself as a possession. 12. And again, it is written a second time: "Cursed be he who lieth with the wife of his father, for he hath uncovered his father's shame"; and all the holy ones of the Lord said "So be it; so be it." 13. And do thou, Moses, command the children of Israel that they observe this word; for it (entails) a punishment of death; and it is unclean, and there is no atonement for ever to atone for the man who has committed this, but he is to be put to death and slain, and stoned with stones, and rooted out from the midst of the people of our God. 14. For to no man who does so in Israel is it permitted to remain alive a single day on the earth, for he is abominable and unclean. 15. And let them not say: to Reuben was granted life and forgiveness after he had lain with his father's concubine, and to her also though she had a husband, and her husband Jacob, his father, was still alive. 16. For until that time there had not been revealed the ordinance and judgment and law in its completeness for all, but in thy days (it has been revealed) as a law of seasons and of days, and an everlasting law for the everlasting generations. 17. And for this law there is no consummation of days, and no atonement for it, but they must both be rooted out in the midst of the nation: on the day whereon they committed it they shall slay them. 18. And do thou, Moses, write (it) down for Israel that they may observe it, and do according to these words, and not commit a sin unto death; for the Lord our God is judge, who respects not persons and accepts not gifts. 19. And tell them these words of the covenant, that they may hear and observe, and be on their guard with respect to them, and not be destroyed and rooted out of the land; for an uncleanness, and an abomination, and a contamination, and a pollution are all they who commit it on the earth before our God. 20. And there is no greater sin than the fornication which they commit on earth; for Israel is a holy nation unto the Lord its God, and a nation of inheritance, and a priestly and royal nation and for (His own) possession; and there shall no such uncleanness appear in the midst of the holy nation. 21. And in the third year of this sixth week Jacob and all 2145 A.M. his sons went and dwelt in the house of Abraham, near Isaac his father and Rebecca his mother. 22. Hiding themselves. Latin gives "et sederunt." This seems right; for there is no hint of their hiding in any of the other versions of this legend.

2-8. In these verses we have a short outline of an ancient legend which, already attested in Gen. xlviii. 22, tells of Jacob's conquest of Shechem (see xlv. 14 and notes on p. 201), and is probably here recast so as to call to mind some of the great victories of the Maccabees (see below). A fuller account of this legend is given in Test. Judah 3-7, and a still fuller in the Midrash Wajjissau which is translated by Gaster in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel, 1899, pp. 80-87. I have introduced some corrections into this translation from a comparison of the Hebrew MS in the Bodleian, though I have not seen the British Museum MS from which Gaster has drawn occasional phrases. A version almost identical with that of Gaster's has been preserved in the Jalkut Shimeoni i. 40 d-41 b, and has been reprinted by Jellinek in his Bet ha-Midrash, iii. 1-5. A German translation of part of this Midrash by Jellinek will be found in Rönsch, 390-394. From a comparison of the Hebrew text I have observed that this translation has been carelessly edited in one or more points. Thus on p. 393 line 11 instead of "Pasasi von Aram" we should read "Pasusi, König von Sartan, und Laban, König von Aram." A much enlarged and elaborated form of the legend is given in the Book of Jashar (see the French translation: Dict. des Apocr. ii. 1173-1184). So far as I have compared this translation and the text it is trustworthy. A short but interesting study of this subject has appeared from the pen of Bousset in the Z. f. NTliche Wissenschaft, 1890, pp. 202-204, but in some cases he has been misled by the translations, and in others I have been obliged to disagree with his identifications.

A full treatment of this legend belongs rather to the Test. Judah 3-7, where the order of events corresponds closely with that in the Midrash Wajjissau, and in many cases presupposes details which are found in that Midrash. That some form of this legend is very ancient is attested by the fact that it is referred to in Gen. xlviii. 22 where Jacob declares: "I have given to thee one portion (שָׁכָר)

(שָׁכָר) above thy brethren, which I took out of the hand of the Amorite with my sword and with my bow." So the Rev. Version following the rendering of Onkelos and the Syriac. But as most scholars are now agreed, שָׁכָר here refers to Shechem. So anciently also the LXX (Σικίμα) and Ps.-Jon. on Gen. xlviii. 22 (שָׁכָר, קרחה, the city of Shechem). Thus our verse points to an overthrow of Shechem by all Israel under Jacob's direction, and the fact that Jacob makes it over to one of his sons to the exclusion of the rest can only be justified by the further fact that he was the personal leader of the war and had captured Shechem with his sword and with his bow (see Holzinger's Commentary in loc.). Thus this form of the story differs clearly from that in Gen. xxxiv. There Jacob has no part whatever in the onslaught on Shechem and is subsequently hostile to its authors (xxxiv. 30, xlix. 5-7). But the possibly older account has survived in the present work as in Gen. xlviii. 22. Before we pass on, we might observe that later rabbinic tradition changed "sword and bow" into "merits and good deeds" Targ. Jerus. in loc.; Gen. rabba 97 (to these Beer (Buch d. Jub. p. 3) adds: Baba bathra 123 a), and in a corrupt text of Onkelos we find "prayer and supplication."

his father, and his own servants, and he went against them with six thousand men, who carried swords. 7. And he

Returning now to the legend in our text, I append here a table in which the proper names in the various authorities are compared.

3. Sorrowful. Latin is "pusill-animes."

4. King[s] of Tâphû. In this and all the other cases in this verse we should read "king" and not the plural. The Latin has the singular in all the instances but one. Tâphû is to be identified with Τεφών in 1 Macc. and this with Tappuah in Jos. xv. 53, xvi. 8. It was fortified by Bacchides against Jonathan (1 Macc. ix. 50).

†Arêsa.† This is corrupt for Aser (cf. Tobit i. 2, 'Ασήρ) or rather Asor, i.e., Hazor (חצור). See above table. At Hazor, according to 1 Macc. xi. 67 sqq.; Joseph. Ant. xiii. 5. 7, Jonathan won a great victory over the Syrians. Parathon, who was king of Hazor (see table above), is of the same name as one of the cities fortified by Bacchides (1 Macc. ix. 50).

Sêrâgân. In the Hebrew authorities this word appears as Sartan. I can discover nothing further about it.

Gâ'as. This may be the Gaash (גאש) in the hill-country of Ephraim, where Joshua was buried (Jos. xxiv. 30; Judg. ii. 9).

Bêthôrôn. The city Bethhoron was closely associated with the victories of the Maccabees. Thus Judas defeated Seron, a Syrian general, in the neighbourhood of Bethhoron and put 800 of his troops to the sword (1 Macc. iii. 13-24; Jos. Ant. xii. 7. 1). A few years later it was the scene of

And he prevailed over them, and imposed tribute on them that they should pay him tribute, five fruit products of their land, and he built Rôbêl and Tamnâtârês. 9. And Judas's great victory over Nicanor when 9000 Syrians were slain (1 Macc. vii. 39-47; Joseph. Ant. xii. 10. 5). It was subsequently fortified by Bacchides against Jonathan (1 Macc. ix. 50; Joseph. Ant. xiii. 1. 3).

6. Six thousand (abd). c gives 800.

7. According to our text six kings were slain out of the seven. This agrees with Test. Jud. 4.

8-9. With this passage cf. Test. Jud. 7: ἐδεήθησαν τοῦ πατρὸς μου καὶ ἐποίησεν εἰρήνην μετ' αὐτῶν, καὶ οὐκ ἐποίησαμεν αὐτοῖς οὐθέν κακόν, ἀλλ' ἐποίησαμεν αὐτοὺς ὑποσπόνδους, καὶ ἀπεδώκαμεν αὐτοῖς πᾶσαν τὴν αἰχμάλωσιαν. καὶ ὥκοδόμησα ἐγὼ τὴν Θάμνα καὶ ὁ πατήρ μου τὴν 'Ραβαήλ (O, 'Ροβαήλ P). It will be observed that whereas in our text Jacob recovers his herds, in the Test. Jud. the sons of Jacob restore to the Amorites the herds which they had taken from them. This divergence in the tradition is seen also in the Hebrew versions. Thus the Yalkut (in Jellinek's Bet ha-Midrash) supports our text: "All the Amorites . . . came without arms . . . and besought them to make peace, and they made peace with them and gave them Timna (תמנא) and all the land of Hararya (הרריא). And then Jacob made peace with them, and they delivered up to the sons of Jacob all the cattle which they had taken from them, (returning) two for each one, and they gave them tribute, and returned (החזירו) to them all the booty; and Jacob turned to Timnah and Judah to Arbael (ארבאל)." On the other hand Gaster's translation of the Chronicles of Jerahmeel (pp. 83-84) supports the view in the Test. Jud.: "All the Amorites came without arms and promised to keep peace (and friendship, and they gave unto Jacob Timna and the whole land of Hararyah). Then Jacob made peace with them, and the sons of Jacob restored them all the sheep they had captured from them, and in returning them gave double, two for one. And Jacob built Timnah (תמנא) and Judah built Zabel (זבאל)." This translation does not represent the Bodleian MS, which (fol. 30 a) runs as follows: "All the Amorites . . . came to them without arms and surrendered themselves to be their hirelings, and they made peace with them, and they gave a present and they restored to them Jacob (sic, here I think the ungrammatical יעקב להם is corrupt rather for לבני יעקב: hence "restored to the sons of Jacob" as in the Yalkut and our text; or for בני יעקב: hence "the sons of Jacob restored" as we presume is the text of the British Museum MS occasionally used by Gaster) all the cattle which they had captured twice over, and they restored (reading החזירו instead of the intransitive חזירו) the booty and Jacob built (sic) and also Judah (sic)." The Bodleian MS mentions no towns. The view represented in the Test. Jud. has thus no indubitable support in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel. It has such, however, in the Book of Jashar (op. cit. ii. 1184): Les fils de Jacob . . . leur rendirent tous les hommes qu'ils avaient emmenés prisonniers . . . et autre butin."

8. Rôbêl. This is most probably corrupt for Arbael, cf. Yalkut (ארבאל) quoted in preceding note. Thus Arbael appears in Test. Jud. 7 as 'Ραβαήλ (O) or 'Ροβαήλ (P), 'Ραμβαήλ (CR); זבאל apparently in the Brit. Museum

he returned in peace, and made peace with them, and they became his servants, until the day that he and his sons went down into Egypt. 10. And in the seventh year of 2149 A.M. this week he sent Joseph to learn about the welfare of his brothers from his house to the land of Shechem, and he found them in the land of Dothan. 11. And they dealt treacherously with him, and formed a plot against him to slay him, but changing their minds, they sold him to Ishmaelite merchants, and they brought him down into Egypt, and they sold him to Potiphar, the eunuch of Pharaoh, the chief of the cooks, priest of the city of 'Ēlêw. 12. And the sons of Jacob slaughtered a kid, and dipped the coat of Joseph in the blood, and sent (it) to Jacob their father on the tenth of the seventh month. 13. And he mourned all that night, for they had brought it to him in the evening, and he became feverish with mourning for his death, and he said: "An evil beast hath devoured Joseph"; and all the members of his house [mourned with him that day, and they] were grieving and mourning with him all that day. 14. And his sons and

MS used by Gaster but not in the Bodleian (see preceding note). We have here most probably the stronghold Arbela mentioned in 1 Macc. ix. 2, where it is said that Bacchides and Alcimus "went by the way that leadeth to Galgala and encamped against Mesaloth which is in Arbela (Μεσσαλῶθ τῇ ἐν Ἀρβήλοις) and got possession of it" (cf. Joseph. Ant. xii. 11. 1). Here it seems best with Tuch and Wellhausen to read Μεσαδωθ = מצודות = "strongholds" (see Encyc. Bib. i. 291). Arbela is mentioned in the Book of Jashar (op. cit. ii. 1178) as one of the cities put to the sword by the sons of Jacob in this war.

Tamnâtârês = Θαμναθάρες = תַּמְנַת־חָרִים, Judg. ii. 9. This appears as Timna (תַּמְנָה) in the Jalkut: see note on verses 8-9. It was one of the cities fortified by Bacchides against Jonathan (1 Macc. ix. 50).

9. Made peace with them, and they became his servants. The Hebrew for these words is preserved in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel; see note on verses 8-9.

10-11. Cf. Gen. xxxvii. 12, 13, 17, 20, 28, 36.

10. Dothan. Eth. Dôthâ'im.

11. Eunuch of Pharaoh. Here "Eunuch" goes back to כְּרִים. But this word need not be taken literally but simply as meaning "a court official"; cf. 2 Kings xxv. 19.

Chief of the cooks. Cf. xxxix. 2, 14, xl. 10. Our text and the LXX of Gen. xxxvii. 36 wrongly take שַׂר־הַמִּטְבָּחִים as = ἀρχιμάγειρος. It should be "captain of the body-guard."

City of 'Ēlêw = Ἐλίου πόλεως (cf. LXX Gen. xli. 45, 50, xli. 20), i.e. On (אֵן).

12-14. Cf. Gen. xxxvii. 31-35.

his daughter rose up to comfort him, but he refused to be comforted for his son. 15. And on that day Bilhah heard that Joseph had perished, and she died mourning him, and she was living in †Qafrâtêf,† and Dinah also, his daughter, died after Joseph had perished. And there came these three mournings upon Israel in one month. 16. And they buried Bilhah over against the tomb of Rachel, and Dinah also, his daughter, they buried there. 17. And he mourned for Joseph one year, and did not cease, for he said "Let me go down to the grave mourning for my son." 18. For this reason it is ordained for the children of Israel that they should afflict themselves on the tenth of the seventh month—on the day that the news which made him weep for Joseph came to Jacob his father—that they should make atonement for themselves thereon with a young goat on the tenth of the seventh month, once a year, for their sins; for they had grieved the affection of their father regarding Joseph his son. 19. And this day has been ordained that they should grieve thereon for their sins, and for all their transgressions and for all their errors, so that they might cleanse themselves on that day once a year. 20. And after Joseph perished, the sons of Jacob took unto themselves wives. The name of Reuben's wife is 'Adâ; and the name of Simeon's wife is 'Adîbâ'a, a Canaanite; and the

15. Qafrâtêf (b and so almost a). c reads Qarâftîfâ. These may be corruptions of "Eder of Ephrath," which was at one time the abode of Jacob. See xxxiii. 1 note. Or more probably Qafrâtêf is the same as Kabrâtân in xxxii. 32, where see note.

Dinah. According to Gen. rabba 80 Dinah married Simeon; according to Ps.-Philo, Ant. bibl. Lib. p. 51, she married Job.

17. Cf. Gen. xxxvii. 35.

18-19. Cf. Lev. xvi. 29, 34, 15, 16.—Haggada knows nothing of this institution of the Day of Atonement. See notes on v. 17-18 which possibly belong to this context.

18. Afflict themselves. This phrase (= ταπεινοῦν τὴν ψυχὴν, שָׁפַל נַפְשׁוֹ) is a technical designation for fasting: see Lev. xvi. 31, xxiii. 27, 32; Ezra viii. 21; Dan. x. 12. So used in the Mishna: נִפְּיָהּ = "fasting."

20. For the list of these names in the Syriac Fragment see my text, p. 183. A different list is given in the Book of Jashar, Dict. des Apocr. ii. 1198.

'Adâ. So Syriac Fragment. Book of Jashar gives Elioram, daughter of Havi, a Canaanitess.

'Adîbâ'a, a Canaanite. This is referred to in Gen. xlvi. 10; Exod. vi. 15 where Shaul a son of Levi is said to be the son of a Canaanitish woman. Since such a marriage was an abomination for which death was the penalty, cf. xxx. 7 sq., it is to our author's credit that he has not sought to explain away the statement in Gen. xlv. 10. 'Adibâa may be corrupt; for the Syriac Fragment has ܐܕܒܐ, and Book of Jashar "Buna." Later rabbinic tradition sought to explain this away. According to Gen. rabba 80 Shaul the son of the Canaanitish woman is said to be the son of Dinah, who was deflowered by Shechem. The Rabbis say that Simeon married her (so also Book of Jashar, op. cit. ii. 1198). Another evasion is found in Ps.-Jon. on Gen. xlv. 10 where Shaul is said to be "Zimri who did the work of the Canaanites in Shittim"; and in Sanh. 82b, Shaul is said to have been called "the son of a Canaanite" "because he had committed an act like that of Canaan" (see Beer, Buch der Jubiläen, p. 51 sq.).

name of Levi's wife is Mēlkâ, of the daughters of Aram, of the seed of the sons of Terah; and the name of Judah's wife, Bêtasû'êl, a Canaanite; and the name of Issachar's wife, Hêzaqâ; and the name of Zebulon's wife, †Nî'imân†; and the name of Dan's wife, 'Ēglâ; and the name of Naphtali's wife, Rasû'û, of Mesopotamia; and the name of Gad's wife, Mâka; and the name of Asher's wife, 'Îjônâ; and the name of Joseph's wife, Asenath, the Egyptian; and the name of Benjamin's wife, 'Îjasaka. 21. And Simeon repented, and took a second wife from Mesopotamia as his brothers.

Mēlkâ. So also in Test. Levi 11 and Syriac Fragment. Bk. of Jashar "Adina," daughter of Jobab, son of Joctan, son of Heber.

Terah. Eth. Târân.

Betasû'êl. Cf. xli. 7. So also in Test. Jud. 8, 13, 16 where the name appears variously as Βησσούς, Βησουέ, Βισσουέ. These are all derived from בַּת-שׁוּא, "the daughter of Shua": see Gen. xxxviii. 2 and Syriac Fragment ܒܬ ܫܘܐ. The Bk. of Jashar gives her personal name as "Habith." She is here and in Test. Jud. 13, 16 and Bk. of Jashar called a Canaanitess. Here again the rabbinic tradition felt this an offence. Accordingly in some of the MSS of Onkelos on Gen. xxxviii. 2 אִישׁ כְּנַעֲנִי is rendered by גִּבּוֹר מִכְּנָעַן, "a merchant." Similarly in Ps.-Jon. on the same passage: also in Gen. rabba 85; Pessach. 50a. Simeon ben Lakish (circ. 200-250 A.D.) gave this interpretation on the ground of Hosea xii. 7, where he evidently took כְּנַעֲנִי in the sense of "trader," "merchant."

Hêzaqâ. Syr. Frag. ܚܙܩܐ. Bk. of Jashar, "Arida."

†Nî'imân†. Since abd omit this name it may be the invention of an Ethiopic scribe. Furthermore the Syr. Frag. gives ܐܕܢܝ, "Adni." Bk. of Jashar, "Marusa."

'Ēglâ. Syr. Frag. ܐܓܠܐ. Bk. of Jashar, "Aphlalath."

Rasû'û. Syr. Frag. ܪܫܘܐ. Bk. of Jashar, "Merimath."

Mâka. Syr. Frag. ܡܟܐ. Bk. of Jashar, "Usith," a daughter of Emoram, son of Hus, son of Nachor." The Syr. Frag. makes Ma'aka also to be of the house of Nachor.

'Îjônâ. Syr. Frag. ܐܝܝܢܐ. Bk. of Jashar, first "Edon" and next "Hadora."

Asenath. Eth 'Asnêth. Cf. Gen. xli. 45.

'Îjasaka. Syr. Frag. ܐܝܝܫܐܟܐ. Bk. of Jashar, "Mahalia" and "Harbath."

Rebecca's admonition to Jacob and his reply, 1-8. Rebecca asks Isaac to make Esau swear that he will not injure Jacob, 9-12. Isaac consents, 13-17. Esau takes the oath and likewise Jacob, 18-26. Death of Rebecca, 27.

XXXV. And in the first year of the first week of the 2157 A.M. forty-fifth jubilee Rebecca called Jacob, her son, and commanded him regarding his father and regarding his brother, that he should honour them all the days of his life. 2. And Jacob said: "I will do everything as thou hast commanded me; for this thing will be honour and greatness to me, and righteousness before the Lord, that I should honour them. 3. And thou too, mother, knowest from the time I was born until this day, all my deeds and all that is in my heart, that I always think good concerning all. 4. And how should I not do this thing which thou hast commanded me, that I should honour my father and my brother! 5. Tell me, mother, what perversity hast thou seen in me and I shall turn away from it, and mercy will be upon me." 6. And she said unto him: "My son, I have not seen in thee all my days any perverse but (only) upright deeds. And yet I shall tell thee the truth, my son: I shall die this year, and I shall not survive this year in my life; for I have seen in a dream the day of my death, that I should not live beyond a hundred and fifty-five years: and behold I have completed all the days of my life which I am to live." 7. And Jacob laughed at the words of his mother, because his mother had said unto him that she should die; and she was sitting opposite to him in possession of her strength, and she was not infirm in her strength; for she went in and out and saw, and her teeth were strong, and no ailment had touched her all the days of her life. 8. And Jacob said unto her: "Blessed am I, mother, if my days approach the days of thy life, and my strength remain with me thus as thy strength: and thou wilt not die, for thou art jesting idly with me regarding thy death." 9. And she went in to Isaac and said unto him: "One petition I make unto thee: make Esau swear that he will not injure Jacob, nor pursue him with enmity; for thou knowest Esau's thoughts that they are perverse from his youth, and there is no goodness in him; for he desires after thy death to kill him. 10. And thou knowest all that he has done since the day Jacob his brother went to Haran until this day; how he has forsaken us with his whole heart, and has done evil to us; thy flocks he has taken to himself, and carried off all thy possessions from before thy face. 11. And when we implored and besought him for what was our own, he did as a man who was taking pity on us. 12. And he is bitter against thee because thou didst bless Jacob thy perfect and upright son; for there is no evil but only goodness in him, and since he came from Haran unto this day he has not robbed us of aught, for he brings us everything in its season always, and rejoices with all his heart when we take at his hands, and he blesses us, and has not parted from us since he came from Haran until this day, and he remains with us continually at home honouring us." 13. And Isaac said unto her: "I, too, know and see the deeds of Jacob who is with us, how that with all his heart he honours us; but I loved Esau formerly more than Jacob, because he was the first-born; but now I love Jacob more than Esau, for he has done manifold evil deeds, and there is no righteousness in him, for all his ways are unrighteousness and violence, [and there is no righteousness around him]. 14. And now my heart is troubled because of all his deeds, and neither he nor his seed is to be saved, for they are those who will be destroyed from the earth, and who will be rooted out from under heaven, for he has forsaken the God of Abraham and gone after his wives and after their uncleanness and after their error, he and his children. 15. And thou dost bid me make him swear that he will not slay Jacob, his brother; even if he swear he will not abide by his oath, and he will not do good but evil only. 16. But if he desires to slay Jacob, his brother, into Jacob's hands will he be given, and he will not escape from his hands, [for he will descend into his hands.] 17. And fear thou not on account of Jacob; for the guardian of Jacob is great and powerful and honoured, and praised more than the guardian of Esau." 18. And Rebecca sent and called Esau, and he came to her, and she said unto him: "I have a petition, my son, to make unto thee, and do thou promise to do it, my son." 19. And he said: "I will do everything that thou sayest unto me, and I will not refuse thy petition." 20. And she said unto him: "I ask you that the day I die, thou wilt take me in and bury me near Sarah, thy father's mother, and that thou and Jacob will love each other, and that neither will desire evil against the other, but mutual love only, and (so) ye will prosper, my sons, and be honoured in the midst of the land, and no enemy will rejoice over you, and ye will be a blessing

13. [And there is no righteousness around him.] This is either a corruption or, as I take it, a dittography.

16. [For he will descend into his hands.] Here jēwarēd = "will descend" is corrupt for jēwadēq = "will fall." I have bracketed the clause as a gloss from xxxvi. 9.

17. Guardian of Jacob. We seem here to have the idea of men's guardian angels. In that case it is the earliest distinct reference to this belief. Cf. Mt. xviii. 10; Acts xii. 15; Heb. i. 14; Edersheim, Jesus the Messiah, ii. 752.

and a mercy in the eyes of all those that love you." 21. And he said: "I will do all that thou hast told me, and I shall bury thee on the day thou diest near Sarah, my father's mother, as thou hast desired that her bones may be near thy bones. 22. And Jacob, my brother, also, I shall love above all flesh; for I have not a brother in all the earth but him only: and this is no great merit for me if I love him; for he is my brother, and we were sown together in thy body, and together came we forth from thy womb, and if I do not love my brother, whom shall I love? 23. And I, myself, beg thee to exhort Jacob concerning me and concerning my sons, for I know that he will assuredly be king over me and my sons, for on the day my father blessed him he made him the higher and me the lower. 24. And I swear unto thee that I shall love him, and not desire evil against him all the days of my life but good only." And he swore unto her regarding all this matter. 25. And she called Jacob before the eyes of Esau, and gave him commandment according to the words which she had spoken to Esau. 26. And he said: "I shall do thy pleasure; believe me that no evil will proceed from me or from my sons against Esau, and I shall be first in naught save in love only." 27. And they eat and drank, she and her sons that night, and she died, three jubilees and one week and one year old, on that night, and her two sons, Esau and Jacob, buried her in the double cave near Sarah, their father's mother.

XXXVI. And in the sixth year of this week Isaac called 2162 A.M. his two sons, Esau and Jacob, and they came to him, and he said unto them: "My sons, I am going the way of my fathers, to the eternal house where my fathers are. 2. Wherefore bury me near Abraham my father, in the double cave in the field of Ephron the Hittite, where Abraham purchased a sepulchre to bury in; in the sepulchre which I digged for myself, there bury me. 3. And this I command you, my sons, that ye practise righteousness and uprightness on the earth, so that the Lord may bring upon you all that the Lord said that he would do to Abraham and to his seed. 4. And love one another, my sons, your brothers as a man who loves his own soul, and let each seek in what he may benefit his brother, and act together on the earth; and let them love each other as their own souls. 5. And concerning the question of idols, I command and admonish you to reject them and hate them, and love them not; for they are full of deception for those that worship them and for those that bow down to them. 6. Remember ye, my sons, the Lord God of Abraham your father, and how I too worshipped Him and served Him in righteousness and in joy, that He might multiply you and increase your seed as the stars of heaven in multitude, and establish you on the earth as the plant of righteousness which will not be rooted out unto all the generations for ever. 7. And now I shall make you swear a great oath—for there is no oath which is greater

And that each will love his brother with affection and righteousness, and that neither will desire evil against his brother from henceforth for ever all the days of your life, so that ye may prosper in all your deeds and not be destroyed. 9. And if either of you devises evil against his brother, know that from henceforth every one that devises evil against his brother will fall into his hand, and will be rooted out of the land of the living, and his seed will be destroyed from under heaven. 10. But on the day of turbulence and execration and indignation and anger, with flaming devouring fire as He burnt Sodom, so likewise will He burn his land and his city and all that is his, and he will be blotted out of the book of the discipline of the children of men, and not be recorded in the book of life, but in that which is appointed to destruction, and he will depart into eternal execration; so that their condemnation may be always renewed in hate and in execration and in wrath and in torment and in indignation and in plagues and in disease for ever. 11. I say and testify to you, my sons, according to the judgment which will come upon the man who wishes to injure his brother.” 12. And he divided all his possessions between the two on that day, and he gave the larger portion to him that was the first-born, and the tower and all that was about it, and all that Abraham possessed at the Well of the Oath. 13. And he said, “This larger portion I shall give to the first-born.” 14. And Esau said, “I have sold to Jacob and given my birthright to Jacob; to him let it be given, and I have not a single word to say regarding it, for it is his." 15. And Isaac said, "May a blessing rest upon you, my sons, and upon your seed this day, for ye have given me rest, and my heart is not pained concerning the birthright, lest thou shouldest work wickedness on account of it. 16. May the Most High God bless the man that worketh righteousness, him and his seed for ever." 17. And he ended commanding them and blessing them, and they eat and drank together before him, and he rejoiced because there was one mind between them, and they went forth from him and rested that day and slept. 18. And Isaac slept on his bed that day rejoicing; and he slept the eternal sleep, and died one hundred and eighty years old. He completed twenty-five weeks and five years; and his two sons Esau and Jacob buried him. 19. And Esau went to the land of Edom, to the mountains of Seir, and dwelt there. 20. And Jacob dwelt in the mountains of Hebron, in the tower of the land of the sojournings of his father Abraham, and he worshipped the Lord with all his heart and according to the visible commands according as

16. Most High God. This divine title is frequently used by our author: see vii. 36, xii. 19, xiii. 29, xvi. 18, 27, xx. 9, xxi. 20, 22, 23, 25, xxii. 6, 11, 13, 19, 23, 27 (twice), xxv. 3, 11, 21, xxvii. 15, xxxii. 1, xxxvi. 16, xxxix. 6. Cf. Test. Levi 3, 4, 5 (twice), 8, 18. This frequency is characteristic of many writings of the second cent. B.C. Thus it is found forty-eight times in Sirach and thirteen times in Daniel. On the other hand it appears only once in the Prophets, six times in the Pentateuch (and of these four times in Gen. xiv. in connection with Melchizedek), in the Pss. twenty-one times. From the close of the second cent. B.C. till after the Christian era it is rare. Thus in Eth. En. xci.-civ. (before 79 B.C.) it is found nine times, four in xxxvii.-lxx., three times in Tobit, once in Judith, not at all in the Pss. of Solomon, twice in Wisdom, twice in the Assumption of Moses, nine times in the N.T. It is frequent in the Apocalypse of Baruch—twenty-three times, and also in 4 Ezra.

From the above facts it follows that this title of God was most used in the second cent. B.C., though rare in some characteristic writings of that century such as Eth. Enoch i.-xxxvi. (twice), lxxii.-xc. (once) and 1 Macc. (not at all). After a long period of comparative disuse it again became prominent in writings of the latter half of the first cent. A.D.

20. According to the visible commands according as He had divided. (a d). b c almost wholly wanting. Latin: "secundum praecepta visibilia secundum divisionem temporum generationum ejus." The commands here referred to were made visible to Jacob on the seven tablets which the angel showed him in a vision: see xxxii. 21. All the history of Jacob's descendants was recorded here in their successive time divisions (so also Röscher, p. 152).

He had divided the days of his generations. 21. And Leah forty-fifth jubilee, and he buried her in the double cave near

 father's mother. 22. And all her sons and his sons came to mourn over Leah his wife with him, and to comfort him regarding her, for he was lamenting her. 23. For he loved her exceedingly after Rachel her sister died; for she was perfect and upright in all her ways and honoured Jacob, and all the days that she lived with him he did not hear from her mouth a harsh word, for she was gentle and peaceable and upright and honourable. 24. And he remembered all her deeds which she had done during her life, and he lamented her exceedingly; for he loved her with all his heart and with all his soul.

XXXVII.-XXXVIII. These two chapters give in some respects the fullest and in others an abridged form of an ancient legend dealing with the wars between the sons of Jacob and Esau. The legend is elsewhere found in the Test. Judah 9, in the Jalkut Shimeoni i. 132 (reprinted in Jellinek's Bet ha-Midrash, iii. 3-5 and on pp. 180-182 of my Ethiopic text of Jubilees), in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel, pp. 80-87, and in the Book of Jashar (op. cit. ii. 1236-1238). Our text preserves the oldest form. The same form though very abbreviated is presupposed in the Test. Judah 9: yet even this preserves some details on the capture of Adora (?) not found in any of the others. The account in the Jalkut and the Chronicles of Jerahmeel comes very close to—at times reproduces verbally—that in our text, though most probably with later amplifications. They show however a deliberate attempt to adapt the legend to later times. Thus Adora or Adoraim (אֲדֹרַיִם) is changed to Arodin (in the Jalkut) or Merodin (אֲרֹדִין, a.l. מֵרֹדִין in the Chron. of Jerah.) where the M of the latter is due to a change of א into מ. This Arodin is Herodion built by Herod the Great. Gaster has recognised this fact, and on this ground would assign the origin of the legend to the beginning of the Christian era. He takes this legendary story to be a piece of contemporary

the portion of the elder to his younger son Jacob and they were very angry. 2. And they strove with their father, saying: "Why has thy father given Jacob the portion of the elder and passed over thee, although thou art the elder and Jacob the younger?" 3. And he said unto them "Because I sold my birthright to Jacob for a small mess of lentils; and on the day my father sent me to hunt and catch and bring him something that he should eat and bless me, he came with guile and brought my father food and drink, and my father blessed him and put me under his hand. 4. And now our father has caused us to swear, me and him, that we shall not mutually devise evil, either against his brother, and that we shall continue in love and in peace each with his brother and not make our ways corrupt." 5. And they said unto him, "We shall not hearken unto thee to make peace with him; for our strength is greater than his strength, and we are more powerful than he; we shall go against him and slay him, and destroy him and his sons. And if thou wilt not go with us, we shall do hurt to thee also. 6. And now history, "a reflex of the Jewish wars against Herod" (Chron. of Jerah. p. lxxxiii.). But the legend does not owe its origin to the times of Herod, but only this adaptation of it. We should observe also that there were two places called Herodion: the first was a fort built near Jerusalem by Herod (Joseph. Ant. xiv. 13. 9, xv. 9. 6, xvii. 8. 3), in which he was subsequently buried. The second was likewise a fort built in Idumea on the confines of Arabia (Joseph. Ant. xvi. 2. 1; Bell. Jud. i. 21. 10). Our legend underwent a further adaptation—indeed a complete recasting—in the Book of Jashar, which has here borrowed its materials from the Midrash in Josippon (see Bousset, Z. f. NTliche Wissenssch. 1900, p. 205). The events recorded are placed after Jacob's death, and the story presupposes the struggles of the Idumean house of Antipater, by which through the help of Rome—here called "Aeneas"—it rose to royal power.

Thus the oldest form of the legend is found in our text and in the Test. Jud. 9; the next oldest in the Jalkut and Chronicles of Jerahmeel, and the latest in the Book of Jashar.

XXXVII. 1. On the day that Isaac . . . died. The sons of Esau began their opposition to Jacob from the day of Isaac's death (2162 A.M.), but did not attack him till Leah died (2167 A.M.). See ver. 14.

2-8, 11-12. The favourable view presented here of Esau contrasts strongly with that found in Jalkut Shimeoni reprinted in Jellinek's Bet ha-Midrash, iii. 3-5, or in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel, xxxvii. 1. According to our text, it was not Esau but Esau's sons that were primarily to blame for this fraternal war.

5. Him and his sons. Emended with Latin from "his sons" (bcd). Text of a, though ungrammatical, = "him his sons."

And their father said unto them, "Do not go and do not make war with him lest ye fall before him." 8. And they said unto him, "This too, is exactly thy mode of action from thy youth until this day, and thou art putting thy neck under his yoke. We shall not hearken to these words." 9. And they sent to Aram, and to 'Adurâm to the friend of their father, and they hired along with them one thousand fighting men, chosen men of war. 10. And there came to them from Moab and from the children of Ammon, those who were hired, one thousand chosen men, and from Philistia, one thousand chosen men of war, and from Edom and from the Horites one thousand chosen fighting men, and from the Kittim mighty men of war. 11. And they said unto their father: "Go forth with them and lead them, else we shall slay thee." 12. And he was filled with wrath and indignation on seeing that his sons were forcing him to go before (them) to lead them against Jacob his brother. 13. But afterward he remem-

6-10. To these verses the only equivalent in the Test. Jud. 9 is: ἐπῆλθεν ἡμῖν Ἡσαῦ, ὁ ἀδελφὸς τοῦ πατρὸς μου, ἐν λαῷ βαρεῖ καὶ ἰσχυρῷ. For that in the Jalkut see note on verses 14-16.

6. The names of the nations mentioned here recur in verses 9-10.

9-10. Against nearly all the nations mentioned here the Maccabees waged war. With Aram or Syria they were at strife for many decades. The Ammonites were invaded by Judas (1 Macc. v. 6-8; Joseph. Ant. xii. 8. 1), and discomfited in several battles. On the complete subjugation of the Philistines by the Maccabees see notes on xxiv. 23-32. As regards the Edomites Judas fought against them and smote them with great slaughter, 1 Macc. v.

3, 65. The Syrians invaded Judah frequently by Edom (1 Macc. iv. 29, 61), and were helped by the latter against Israel. Later John Hyrcanus wrested Adora and Mareshah out of the hands of the Edomites and compelled the whole nation to accept circumcision (Joseph. Ant. xiii. 9. 1, xv. 7. 9; Bell. Jud. i. 2. 6). As regards the Kittim, see note on xxiv. 28. These may have been Greek auxiliaries of the Syrians.

bered all the evil which lay hidden in his heart against Jacob his brother; and he remembered not the oath which he had sworn to his father and to his mother that he would devise no evil all his days against Jacob his brother. 14. And notwithstanding all this, Jacob knew not that they were coming against him to battle, and he was mourning for Leah, his wife, until they approached very near to the tower with four thousand warriors and chosen men of war. 15. And the men of Hebron sent to him saying, "Behold thy brother has come against thee, to fight thee, with four thousand girt with the sword, and they carry shields and weapons"; for they loved Jacob more than Esau. So they told him; for Jacob was a more liberal and merciful man than Esau. 16. But Jacob would not believe until they came very near to the tower. 17. And he closed the gates of the tower; and he stood on the battlements and spake to his brother Esau and said, "Noble is the comfort wherewith thou hast come to comfort me for my wife who has died. Is this the oath that thou didst swear to thy father and again to thy mother before they died? Thou hast broken the oath, and on the moment that thou didst swear to thy

14-16. These verses are found in the Jalkut Shimeoni (Jellinek's Bet ha-Midrash, iii. 3): "It was the year when Leah died and Jacob and his sons were mourning and some of their children had come to comfort them. Then came (Esau) against them with a mighty army of warriors, clad in armour of iron and brass, all armed with shields and bows and swords, 4000 warriors. All these surrounded the tower, in which were Jacob and his sons together with their servants, children and all their possessions; for they had all assembled there in order to comfort Jacob in his mourning for Leah. They were sitting there peacefully, and none imagined that any force had come upon them to contend with them, nor did they discover it till the whole host had encompassed the tower, in which there were only Jacob and his sons and their 200 servants." Similarly in Chron. of Jerahmeel, p. 84.

17-25. Jacob's attempt to bring about peace and Esau's reply are not referred to in the Test. Jud. 9, but are shortly summarised in the Yalkut: "When therefore Jacob saw that Esau had emboldened himself to come against him in war in order to put those in the tower to the sword, and that he shot arrows against them, Jacob stood upon the wall of the tower, and spake to Esau his brother words of peace, friendship and brotherliness (אֶחָוָה); but Esau would have none of them." Similarly in Chron. of Jerah. p. 84.

father wast thou condemned." 18. And then Esau answered and said unto him, "Neither the children of men nor the beasts of the earth have any oath of righteousness which in swearing they have sworn (an oath valid) for ever; but every day they devise evil one against another, and how each may slay his adversary and foe. 19. And thou dost hate me and my children for ever. And there is no observing the tie of brotherhood with thee. 20. Hear these words which I declare unto thee,

If the boar can change its skin and make its bristles
as soft as wool,

Or if it can cause horns to sprout forth on its head
like the horns of a stag or of a sheep,

Then shall I observe the tie of brotherhood with thee.

[And if the breasts separated themselves from their mother; for thou hast not been a brother to me.]

21. And if the wolves make peace with the lambs so as not

And if their hearts are towards them for good,

Then there will be peace in my heart towards thee.

19. The tie of brotherhood. See this phrase in quotation in preceding note.

20. Boar. In Eth. Enoch lxxxix. 12, 42 sq., 49, 66, the boar is used to denote Esau symbolically. Cf. Ps. lxxx. 13. There is no doubt some such reference here.

Make . . . soft. Instead of 'adkama we should expect jâdakēm.

It can cause horns to sprout forth. So a. b c d = "horns were to sprout forth."

[And if (ab omit) the breasts separated themselves from their mother; for thou hast not been a brother to me.] So a b c d save that for "thou hast not been a brother to me" d reads "I shall not be a brother to thee." These words do not belong to their present context; for the tristichs before and after deal with ideas taken only from the animal world. Nor do the words as they stand form a distich. If they belong to the text at all, they are corrupt. It is not improbable that originally they followed immediately after ver. 19^a "thou dost hate me and my children for ever." By transposing the two clauses and by reading 'ēm'ama tafalta atbū'ē 'ēm'ēmômû instead of wa'ēma tafalta 'atbât 'ēm'ēmôn, we should get the following excellent sense in ver. 19 "And thou dost hate me and my children for ever; for thou hast not been a brother to me since the twins were separated from their mother. Yea, there is no observing the tie of brotherhood with thee."

22. And makes peace with him. This clause which c d omit is added by a b after "ploughs with him." With the

24. And when Jacob saw that he was (so) evilly disposed towards him with his heart, and with all his soul as to slay him, and that he had come springing like the wild boar which comes upon the spear that pierces and kills it, and recoils not from it; 25. XXXVIII. And after that Judah spake to Jacob, his father, and said unto him: "Bend thy bow, father, and send forth thy arrows and cast down the adversary and slay the enemy; and mayst thou have the power, for we shall not slay thy brother, for he is such as thou, and he is like thee: let us give him (this) honour." 2. Then guidance of the parallelism I have transposed it as above.

23. The râzâ. The râzâ is according to Isenberg, Amharic Dictionary, p. 48, "a large white bird which eats grasshoppers." Dillmann both in his Lexicon and translation took râzâ here to mean "rice," oryza, but there can be no doubt that the above is right. Littmann has followed my rendering.

XXXVIII. 1. In the Jalkut (cf. the Chron. of Jerah. p. 84) Judah says: "How long wilt thou extend words of peace and friendship to him, when he comes against us as an enemy with his mail-clad troops to slay us."

Let us give him = Nahabô (so read in my text instead of Nehabô). Emended with Lat. "demus illi" from baḥabêna = "with us."

Jacob bent his bow and sent forth the arrow and struck Esau, his brother, (on his right breast) and slew him. 3. And again he sent forth an arrow and struck 'Adôrân the Aramaean, on the left breast, and drove him backward and slew him. 4. And then went forth the sons of Jacob, they and their servants, dividing themselves into companies on the four sides of the tower. 5. And Judah went forth in front, and Naphtali and Gad with him and fifty servants with him on the south side of the tower, and they slew all they found before them, and not one individual of them escaped. 6. And Levi and Dan and Asher went forth on the east side of the tower, and fifty (men) with them, and they slew the fighting men of Moab and Ammon. 7. And Reuben and Issachar and Zebulon went forth on the north side of the tower, and

2-3. These two verses are found in the reverse order in the Jalkut and the Chron. of Jerah. pp. 84-85. The former runs: "When Jacob heard this, he seized his bow and slew Adoram the Edomite. And again he seized his bow and smote Esau on the right breast." In the Test. Jud. 9 it is said shortly of Esau: ἔπαισεν ἐν τῷ ἔξῳ Ἰακώβ τὸν Ἡσαῦ.

2. (On his right breast). Supplied from the Latin and the Yalkut. See preceding note.

Slew him. A later tradition attributed the death of Esau to Chushim, son of Dan. See Ps.-Jon. on Gen. l. 13; Book of Jashar (op. cit. ii. 1235); Sota 13 a. Beer (Buch der Jubiläen, p. 6) quotes also Pirke R. Eliezer 39.

3. 'Adôrân, the Aramaean. This is consistent with the statement in xxxvii. 9. The Jalkut and the Chron. of Jerah. on the other hand make him an Edomite.

4-9. Here the sons of Jacob and their 200 servants (cf. Jalkut translated in note on xxxvii. 14-16) go forth from the four sides of the tower to meet the 4000 soldiers of Esau. So we find it exactly in the Yalkut: "And then Judah went forth first and Naphtali and Gad with him to the south of the tower, and 50 servants of the servants of Jacob their father with them. And Levi and Dan and Asher went forth on the east of the tower and 50 servants with them. And Reuben and Issachar and Zebulon went forth on the north of the tower and 50 servants with them. And Simeon and Benjamin and Enoch the son of Reuben went forth on the west of the tower and 50 servants with them." After a long tedious account of the achievements of the various brothers which are not alluded to in our text the Jalkut again comes into touch with it: "400 men that were warriors who had opposed Simeon fell and the remaining 600 fled, and amongst them were the four sons of Esau—Reuel, Jeush, Jolam, Korah . . . And the sons of Jacob pursued after them to the city Arodin, and they left their father Esau lying dead in Arodin, and they fled to Mount Seir to the ascent of 'Aqabbim. And the sons of Jacob entered and rested there that night and they found Esau's dead body and they buried it out of respect for their father." The Test. Jud. 9 says shortly of Esau: καὶ πορευόμενος ἐν Ἀρονιράμ (O. Ἀρονιράμ, P) ἀπέθανεν. The Armenian version of this Testament = ἐτάφη ἐν Ἀνανιράμ.

fifty men with them, and they slew the fighting men of the Philistines. 8. And Simeon and Benjamin and Enoch, Reuben's son, went forth on the west side of the tower, and fifty (men) with them, and they slew of Edom and of the Horites four hundred men, stout warriors; and six hundred fled, and four of the sons of Esau fled with them, and left their father lying slain, as he had fallen on the hill which is in 'Adûrâm. 9. And the sons of Jacob pursued after them to the mountains of Seir. And Jacob buried his brother on the hill which is in 'Adûrâm, and he returned to his house. 10. And the sons of Jacob pressed hard upon the sons of Esau in the mountains of Seir, and bowed their necks so that they became servants of the sons of Jacob. 11. And they sent to their father (to inquire) whether they should make peace with them or slay them. 12. And Jacob sent word to his sons that they should make peace, and they made peace with them, and placed the yoke of servitude upon them, so that they paid tribute to Jacob and to his sons always. 13. And they continued to pay tribute to Jacob until the day that he went down into Egypt. 14. And the sons of Edom have

'Adûrâm. This appears as Adurin in the Latin, and as 'Ανοριάμ in Test. Jud. 9 (see note on verses 4-9): in the Yalkut as אורין which is corrupt for אוריים. This is the 'Αδωρα mentioned by Joseph. Ant. xiii. 15. 4, along with Μάρισα (cf. 1 Macc. xiii. 20). These two towns of Edom were captured by Hyrcanus and forced to accept circumcision (Joseph. Ant. xiii. 9. 1; Bell. Jud. i. 2. 6).

10-13. The Yalkut is as follows: "In the morning the sons of Jacob armed themselves and pursued after them and pressed them hard on Mount Seir on the ascent of Aqrabbim. The sons of Esau and all the men who had fled with them came forth and fell down before the sons of Jacob and laid themselves prostrate and prayed them till they made peace with them. And they made them servants to tribute." Similarly in the Chron. of Jerah. p. 87. Test. Jud. 9 gives certain details of the siege of Adora, and then proceeds: τότε αἰτοῦσιν ἡμᾶς τὰ πρὸς εἰρήνην· καὶ γενόμενοι βουλῆς τοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν, ἔδεξάμεθα αὐτοὺς ὑποφόρους. καὶ ἦσαν δίδοντες ἡμῖν πυροῦ κόρους διακοσίους . . . ἕως ὅτε κατήλθομεν εἰς Αἰγύπτον.

butler and chief baker whose dreams Joseph interprets, 14-18. (Cf. Gen. xxxvii. 2, xxxix. 3-8, 12-15, 17-23, xl. 1-5, 21-23, xli. 1.)

XXXIX. And Jacob dwelt in the land of his father's sojournings in the land of Canaan. 2. These are the generations of Jacob. And Joseph was seventeen years old when they took him down into the land of Egypt, and Potiphar, an eunuch of Pharaoh, the chief cook bought him. 3. And he set Joseph over all his house, and the blessing of the Lord came upon the house of the Egyptian on account of Joseph, and the Lord prospered him in all that he did. 4. And the Egyptian committed everything into the hands of Joseph; for he saw that the Lord was with him, and that the Lord prospered him in all that he did. 5. And Joseph's appearance was comely and very beautiful was his appearance, and his master's wife lifted up her eyes and saw Joseph, and she loved him, and besought him to lie with her. 6. But he did not surrender his soul, and he remembered the Lord and the words which Jacob, his father, used to read from amongst the words of Abraham, that no man should commit fornication with a woman who has a husband; that for him the punishment of death has been ordained in the heavens before the Most High God, and the sin will be recorded against him in the eternal books continually before the Lord. 7. And Joseph remembered these words and refused to lie with her. 8. And she besought him for a year, but he refused and would not listen. 9. But she embraced him and held him fast in the house in order to force him to lie with her, and closed the doors of the house and held him fast; but he left his garment in her hands and broke through the door and fled without from her presence. 10. And the woman saw that he would not lie with her, and she calumniated him in the presence of his lord, saying: "Thy Hebrew servant, whom thou lovest, sought to force me so that he might lie with me; and it came to pass when I lifted up my voice that he fled and left his garment in my hands when I held him, and he brake through the door." 11. And the Egyptian saw the garment of Joseph and the broken door, and heard the words of his wife, and cast Joseph into prison into the place where the prisoners were kept whom the king imprisoned. 12. And he was there in the prison; and the Lord gave Joseph favour in the sight of the chief of the prison guards and compassion before him, for he saw that the Lord was with him, and that the Lord made all that he did to prosper. 13. And he committed all things into his hands, and the chief of the prison guards knew of nothing that was with him, for Joseph did every thing, and the Lord perfected it. 14. And he remained there two years. And in those days Pharaoh, king of Egypt, was wroth against his two eunuchs, against the chief butler and against the chief baker, and he put them in ward in the house of the chief cook, in the prison where Joseph was kept. 15. And the chief of the prison guards appointed Joseph to serve them; and he served before them. 16. And they both dreamed a dream, the chief butler and the chief baker, and they told it to Joseph. 17. as he interpreted to them so it befell them, and Pharaoh restored the chief butler to his office, and the (chief) baker he slew, as Joseph had interpreted to them. 18. But the chief butler forgot Joseph in the prison, although he had informed him what would befall him, and did not remember to inform Pharaoh how Joseph had told him, for he forgot.

XL. And in those days Pharaoh dreamed two dreams in one night concerning a famine which was to be in all the land, and he awoke from his sleep and called all the interpreters of dreams that were in Egypt, and magicians, and told them his two dreams, and they were not able to declare (them). 2. And then the chief butler remembered Joseph and spake of him to the king, and he brought him forth from the prison, and he told his two dreams before him. 3. And he said before Pharaoh that his two dreams were one, and he said unto him: "Seven years will come (in which there will be) plenty over all the land of Egypt, and after that seven years of famine, such a famine as has not been in all the land. 4. And now let Pharaoh appoint overseers in all the land of Egypt, and let them store up food in every city throughout the days of the years of plenty, and there will be food for the seven years of famine, and the land will not perish through the famine, for it will be very severe.” 5. And the Lord gave Joseph favour and mercy in the eyes of Pharaoh, and Pharaoh said unto his servants: “We shall not find such a wise and discreet man as this man, for the spirit of the Lord is with him.” 6. And he appointed him the second in all his kingdom and gave him authority over all Egypt, and caused him to ride in the second chariot of Pharaoh. 7. And he clothed him with byssus garments, and he put a gold chain upon his neck, and (a herald) proclaimed before him “’Êl ’Êl wa ’Abîrër, and he placed a ring on his hand and made him ruler over all his house, and magnified him, and said unto him: “Only on the throne shall I be greater than thou.” 8. And Joseph ruled over all the land of Egypt, and all the princes of Pharaoh, and all his servants, and all who did the king’s business loved him, for he walked in uprightness, for he was without pride and arrogance, and he had no respect of persons, and did not accept gifts, but he judged in uprightness all the people of the land. 9. And the land of Egypt was at peace before Pharaoh because of Joseph, for the Lord was with him, and gave him favour and mercy for all his generations before all those who knew him and those

Before him. MSS add against Latin “and he said.”

’Êl ’Êl wa ’Abîrër = אֱלֹהִים אֱלֹהִים וְאַבִּירֶר, “God, God, the mighty one of God.” The Latin has Elel et Habirel. This is a peculiar expansion of the term אֲבִירֶר in Gen. xli. 43. With the interpretation of that term we have no concern here, but only with its derivation in our text. The phrase “mighty one of God” clearly designates Joseph, and, indeed seems to be a technical designation for a great magician. Thus in Acts viii. 10 Simon Magus is called ἡ δύναμις τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡ μεγάλη (or ἡ καλουμένη μεγάλη). In a late Christian version of a Jewish legend “The History of Asenath” (see Fabricius, Codex Pseud. V.T. i. 774-784, ii. 85-102; Batiffol, Studia Patristica, 1889), Joseph is twice (chaps. iii. and xv.) spoken of as “the mighty one of God,” Ἰωσήφ ὁ δυνατὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ. The following apt parallel may be cited from Pap. Par. Bibl. nat. 1275 sqq.; Wessely, i. 76 (quoted by Deissmann, Bible Studies, p. 336 note), ἐπικαλοῦμαι σε τὴν μεγίστην δύναμιν τὴν ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ ὑπὸ κυρίου Θεοῦ τεταγμένην.

who heard concerning him, and Pharaoh's kingdom was well ordered, and there was no Satan and no evil person (therein). 10. And the king called Joseph's name Sēphântî-phâns, and gave Joseph to wife the daughter of Potiphar, the daughter of the priest of Heliopolis, the chief cook. 11. And on the day that Joseph stood before Pharaoh he was thirty years old [when he stood before Pharaoh]. 12. And in that year Isaac died. And it came to pass as Joseph had said in the interpretation of his two dreams, according as he had said it, there were seven years of plenty over all the land of Egypt, and the land of Egypt produced abundantly, one measure (producing) eighteen hundred measures. 13. And Joseph gathered food into every city until they were full of corn until they could no longer count and measure it for its multitude.

10. Sēphântîphâns, i.e. פִּתְּנָה פְּעֻנָּה. Gen. xli. 45. Latin Judaism took this to mean "revealer of secrets." Cf. Onk., גברא רטמין גלין ליה. So also Ps.-Jon. and Syr.

Daughter of Potiphar . . . priest of Heliopolis. Our author has rightly identified פוטיפר in Gen. xxxvii. 36 and פוטי פר in xli. 45 as being one and the same name. He takes the two to refer to one and the same person: cf. xxxiv. 11, xliv. 24. Origen (Cat. Niceph. i. 463) refers to our book for this view: οἰήσεται δέ τις ἕτερον εἶναι τοῦτον (i.e. Φουρτιφάρ) παρὰ τὸν ὠνησάμενον τὸν Ἰωσήφ· οὐ μὴν οὕτως ὑπειλήφασιν Ἑβραῖοι· ἀλλ' ἐξ ἀποκρύφου λέγουσι τὸν αὐτὸν εἶναι καὶ δεσπότην καὶ πενθερὸν γενέσθαι. Later Judaism was offended with this marriage of Joseph to the daughter of a heathen priest.

Hence Ps.-Jon. on Gen. xli. 45 represents Asenath as a daughter of Dinah by Shechem, who was reared by the wife of Potiphar, prince of Tanais. Singer (p. 119 note) states that this view is put forward in the Pirke R. Eliezer 36, 38. This was likewise the view of the Jewish legend which formed the basis of the Greek romance of "History of Asenath" (see Hasting's Bible Dict. i. 162; and Issaverden's translation of Uncanonical Writings of the Old Testament, 1901, Venice, pp. 94-96). In these later writings, however, Asenath is no longer represented as a Jewess by birth except in a single passage in the Syriac version.

XLI. And in the forty-fifth jubilee, in the second week, (and) in the second year, Judah took for his first-born Er, a wife from the daughters of Aram, named Tamar. 2. But he hated, and did not lie with her, because his mother was of the daughters of Canaan, and he wished to take him a wife of the kinsfolk of his mother, but Judah, his father, would not permit him. 3. And this Er, the first-born of Judah, was wicked, and the Lord slew him. 4. And Judah said unto Onan, his brother: "Go in unto thy brother's wife and perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her, and raise up seed unto thy brother." 5. And Onan knew that the seed would not be his, (but) his brother's only, and he went into the house of his brother's wife, and spilt the seed on the ground, and he was wicked in the eyes of the Lord, and He slew him. 6. And Judah said unto Tamar, his daughter-in-law: "Remain in thy father's house as a widow till Shelah my son be grown up, and I shall give thee to him to wife." 7. And he grew up; but Bêdsû'êl, the wife of Judah, did not permit her son Shelah to marry. And Bêdsû'êl, the wife of Judah, died in the fifth year of this week. 8. And in the sixth year Judah went up to shear his sheep at 2169 A.M. Timnah. And they told Tamar: "Behold thy father-in-law goeth up to Timnah to shear his sheep." 9. And she put off her widow's clothes, and put on a veil, and adorned herself, and sat in the gate adjoining the way to Timnah. 10. And as Judah was going along he found her, and thought her to be an harlot, and he said unto her: "Let me come in unto thee"; and she said unto him: "Come in," and he went in. 11. And when she had completed three months, it was manifest that she was with child, and they told Judah, saying: “Behold Tamar, thy daughter-in-law, is with child by whoredom.” 17. And Judah went to the house of her father, and said unto her father and her brothers: “Bring her forth, and let them burn her, for she hath wrought uncleanness in Israel.” 18. And it came to pass when they brought her forth to burn her that she sent to her father-in-law the ring and the necklace, and the staff, saying: “Discern whose are these, for by him am I with child.” 19. And Judah acknowledged, and said: “Tamar is more righteous than I am. And therefore let them burn her not.” 20. And for that reason she was not given to Shelah, and he did not again approach her. 21. unto him.” Perhaps we should read with Latin “dicens: Non inveni eam,” “And said: I have not found her,” as I have done in my text.

17. Let them burn her. See note on xxx. 7. In Ber. rabba 85 R. Meir of the second cent. states that Tamar was a daughter of the priest-king Shem. Hence her destruction by fire came under the law in Lev. xxi. 9, which prescribes this penalty for the sin of fornication in the daughter of a priest.

and he began to lament and to supplicate before the Lord because of his transgression. 24. And we told him in a dream that it was forgiven him because he supplicated earnestly, and lamented, and did not again commit it. 25. And he received forgiveness because he turned from his sin and from his ignorance, for he transgressed greatly before our God; and every one that acts thus, every one who lies with his mother-in-law, let them burn him with fire that he may burn therein, for there is uncleanness and pollution upon them; with fire let them burn them. 26. And do thou command the children of Israel that there be no uncleanness amongst them, for every one who lies with his daughter-in-law or with his mother-in-law hath wrought uncleanness; with fire let them burn the man who has lain with her, and likewise the woman, and He will turn away wrath and punishment from Israel. 27. And unto Judah we said that his two sons had not lain with her, and for this reason his seed was established for a second generation, and would not be rooted out. 28. For in singleness of eye he had gone and sought for punishment, namely, according to the judgment of Abraham, which he had commanded his sons, Judah had sought to burn her with fire.

25. Received forgiveness because he turned from his sin and from his ignorance. Something seems wrong. We ought to have the idea expressed in Test. Jud. 19: συνέγνω ὅτι ἐν ἀγνοίᾳ ἐποίησα. Cf. 1 Tim. i. 13: ἡλεήθην, ὅτι ἀγνοῶν ἐποίησα. δ transposes "because he turned" after "ignorance." If we transpose the clauses "because . . . sin" and "from his ignorance," we should have an excellent sense: "received forgiveness because of his ignorance and because he turned from his sin"; for the Eth. preposition emna means either "from" or "because of."

Every one who lies with his mother-in-law, let them burn him with fire. So Lev. xx. 14 enacts.

26. Lies with his daughter-in-law. Cf. Lev. xviii. 15, xx. 12. The punishment ordained for this offence is death in the passages referred to in Leviticus; but the form of death is not specified. On the other hand, death by fire is the penalty presupposed for this offence in Gen. xxxviii. 24. Our text (xx. 4) enjoins this penalty for adultery or fornication.

28. According to the judgment of Abraham. See note on xx. 4.

Owing to the famine Jacob sends his sons to Egypt for corn, 1-4. Joseph recognises them and retains Simeon, and requires them to bring Benjamin when they returned, 5-12. And the earth grew barren, but in the land of Egypt there was food, for Joseph had gathered the seed of the land in the seven years of plenty and had preserved it. 3. And the Egyptians came to Joseph that he might give them food, and he opened the store-houses where was the grain of the first year, and he sold it to the people of the land for gold. 4. (Now the famine was very sore in the land of Canaan), and Jacob heard that there was food in Egypt, and he sent his ten sons that they should procure food for him in Egypt; but Benjamin he did not send, and (the ten sons of Jacob) arrived (in Egypt) among those that went (there). 5. And Jacob said: "Ye have bereaved of my children! Joseph is not and Simeon also is not, and ye will take Benjamin away. On me has your wickedness come." 11. And he said: "My son will not go down with you lest perchance he fall sick; for their mother gave birth to two sons, and one has perished, and this one also ye will take from me. If perchance he took a fever on the road, ye would bring down my old age with sorrow unto death." 12. For he saw that their money had been returned to every man in his sack, and for this reason he feared to send him. 13. And the famine increased and became sore in the land of Canaan, and in all lands save in the land of Egypt, for many of the children of the Egyptians had stored up their seed for food from the time when they saw Joseph gathering seed together and putting it in storehouses and preserving it for the years of famine. 14. he said unto his sons: "Go again, and procure food for us that we die not." 16. And they said: "We shall not go; unless our youngest brother go with us, we shall not go." 17. And Israel saw that if he did not send him with them, they should all perish by reason of the famine. 18. And Reuben said: "Give him into my hand, and if I do not bring him back to thee, slay my two sons instead of his soul." And he said unto him: "He will not go with thee." 19. And Judah came near and said: "Send him with me, and if I do not bring him back to thee, let me bear the blame before thee all the days of my life." 20.

2172 A.M. And he sent him with them in the second year of this week on the first day of the month, and they came to the land of Egypt with all those who went, and (they had) presents in their hands, stacte and almonds and terebinth nuts and pure honey. 21. And they went and stood before Joseph, and he saw Benjamin his brother, and he knew him, and said unto them: "Is this your youngest brother?" And they said unto him: "It is he." And he said: "The Lord be gracious to thee, my son!" 22. And he sent him into his house and he brought forth Simeon unto them and he made a feast for them, and they presented to him the gift which they had brought in their hands. 23. And they eat before him and he gave them all a portion, but the portion of Benjamin was seven times larger than that of any of theirs. 24. And they eat and drank and arose and remained with their asses. 25. And Joseph devised a plan whereby he might learn their thoughts as to whether thoughts of peace prevailed amongst them, and he said to the steward who was over his house: "Fill all their sacks with food, and return their money unto them into

XLIII. And he did as Joseph had told him, and filled all their sacks for them with food and put their money in their sacks, and put the cup in Benjamin's sack. 2. And early in the morning they departed, and it came to pass that, when they had gone from thence, Joseph said unto the steward of his house: "Pursue them, run and seize them, saying, 'For good ye have requited me with evil; you have stolen from me the silver cup out of which my lord drinks.' And bring back to me their youngest brother, and fetch (him) quickly before I go forth to my seat of judgment." 3. And he ran after them and said unto them according to these words. 4. And they said unto him: "God forbid that thy servants should do this thing, and steal from the house of thy lord any utensil, and the money also which we found in our sacks the first time, we thy servants brought back from the land of Canaan. 5. How then should we steal any utensil? Behold here are we and our sacks; search, and wherever thou findest the cup in the sack of any man amongst us, let him be slain, and we and our asses will serve thy lord." 6. And they rent their garments, and laded their asses, and returned to the city and came to the house of Joseph, and they all bowed themselves on their faces to the ground before him. 9. And Joseph said unto them: "Ye have done evil." And they said: "What shall we say and how shall we defend ourselves? Our lord hath discovered the transgression of his servants; behold we are the servants of our lord, and our asses also." 10. And Joseph said unto them: "I too fear the Lord; as for you, go ye to your homes and let your brother be my servant, for ye have done evil. Know ye not that a man delights in his cup as I with this cup? And yet ye have stolen it from me." 11. And Judah said: "O my lord, let thy servant, I pray thee, speak a word in my lord's ear; two brothers did thy servant's mother bear to our father; one went away and was lost, and hath not been found, and he alone is left of his mother, and thy servant our father loves him, and his life also is bound up with the life of this (lad). 12. And it will come to pass, when we go to thy servant our father, and the lad is not with us, that he will die, and we shall bring down our father with sorrow unto death. 13. Now rather let me, thy servant, abide instead of the boy as a bondsman unto my lord, and let the lad go with his brethren, for I became surety for him at the hand of thy servant our father, and if I do not bring him back, thy servant will bear the blame to our father for ever."

And he said unto them: "Weep not over me, but hasten and bring my father to me; and ye see that it is my mouth that speaketh, and the eyes of my brother Benjamin see. 17. For behold this is the second year of the famine, and there are still five years without harvest or fruit of trees or ploughing. 18. And tell my father of all my glory, and all the riches and glory that the Lord hath given me." 21. And by the command of the mouth of Pharaoh he gave them chariots and provisions for the way, and he gave them all many-coloured raiment and silver. 22. And to their father he sent raiment and silver and ten asses which carried corn, and he sent them away. 23. And they went up and told their father that Joseph was alive, and was measuring out corn to all the nations of the earth, and that he was ruler over all the land of Egypt. 24. Jacob celebrates the feast of first-fruits, and encouraged by a vision goes down to Egypt, 1-10. Names of his descendants, 11-34. (Cf. Gen. xlv. 1-28.)

XLIV. And Israel took his journey from †Haran †from his house on the new moon of the third month, and he went on the way of the Well of the Oath, and he offered a sacrifice to the God of his father Isaac on the seventh of this month. 2. And Jacob remembered the dream that he had seen at Bethel, and he feared to go down into Egypt. 3. And while he was thinking of sending word to Joseph to come to him, and that he would not go down, he remained there seven days, if perchance he should see a vision as to whether he should remain or go down. 4. And he celebrated the harvest festival of the first-fruits with old grain, for in all the land of Canaan there was not a handful of seed (in the land), for the famine was over all the beasts and cattle and birds, and also over man. 5. And on the sixteenth the Lord appeared unto him, and said unto him, "Jacob, Jacob"; and he said, "Here am I." And He said unto him: "I am the God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham and Isaac; fear not to go down into Egypt, for I will there make of thee a great nation.

24. It is enough for me. The Ethiopic is here a literal equivalent of the LXX, Gen. xlv. 28, μέγα μοι ἔστιν, which is in its turn a literal rendering of רַב לִּי. LXX, Syr., Vulg. (sufficit mihi) and Onkelos presuppose the רַב, which however the Mass. and Sam. omit.

And Israel rose up from the Well of the Oath on the sixteenth of this third month, and he went to the land of Egypt. 9. And Israel sent Judah before him to his son Joseph to examine the Land of Goshen, for Joseph had told his brothers that they should come and dwell there that they might be near him. 10. And this was the goodliest (land) in the land of Egypt, and near to him, for all (of them) and also for the cattle. 11. And these are the names of the sons of Jacob who went into Egypt with Jacob their father. 12. Reuben, the first-born of Israel; and these are the names of his sons: Enoch, and

12-33. Our text makes the number of Jacob's descendants together with himself seventy. This was the view of the writer of Gen. xvi. 26 and of Joseph. Ant. ii. 7. 4. On the other hand in Gen. xvi. 15, 18, 21, 25 Jacob is expressly not included in the number seventy. Cf. Exod. i. 5. That chapter has admittedly undergone revision. Our text makes up the number seventy by a method somewhat different from that in Gen. xvi. Thus whereas Dan and Naphtali have respectively one and four sons in Gen., our text assigns them five each. On the other hand Gen. includes in its reckoning two grandchildren of Asher, Er, Onan, two sons of Perez, and Dinah against Jubilees. The numbers in our text may be represented as follows:—

Leah's children	Reuben and 4 sons	5
	Simeon and 6 sons	7
	Levi and 3 sons	4
	Judah, 1 son, 2
	grandsons	4
	Issachar and 4 sons	5
	Zebulun and 3 sons	4
		29

Zilpah's	„	Gad and 7 sons	8
		Asher, 4 sons; and 1 daughter	6
			14

Rachel's	„	Joseph and 2 sons	3
		Benjamin and 10 sons	11

Bilhah's	„	Dan and 5 sons	6
		Naphtali and 5 sons	6

29 + 14 + 14 + 12 = 69. Thus the number 70 includes Jacob. It is noteworthy that the LXX reads 75 in Gen. xvi. 27: likewise in Exod. i. 5, while in Deut. x. 22 most MSS give 70 but some give 75. The number 75 in Acts vii. 14 is of course due to the LXX.

And the years of the famine were accomplished, and Joseph gave to the people in the land seed and food that they might sow (the land) in the eighth year, for the river had overflowed all the land of Egypt. 10. For in the seven years of the famine it had not overflowed and had irrigated only a few places on the banks of the river, but now it overflowed and the Egyptians sowed the land, and it bore much corn that year. 11. Of the corn of the harvest = 'em'êkl zazar'û. So the text should be translated. Zar'û is not a verb here, but zar'e (which here = seges, γεννήματα) with the suffix, which goes back to medr = "land" in verse 10, just as αὐτῆς after τὰ γεννήματα in LXX of Gen. xlvii. 24 goes back to γῆν in the preceding sentence. But since the Latin has de omnibus quidquid natum est, it is possible that for em'ekl zazar'û we should read 'emkuellû zar'û = "of all the harvest." I hereby withdraw the emendation in my text.

Gad 8 which says that the body of Gad was buried in Hebron five years after his death: ἐκοιμήθη ἐν εἰρήνῃ. καὶ μετὰ πέντε ἔτη ἀνήγαγον αὐτὸν καὶ ἐθῆκαν αὐτὸν εἰς Χεβρών, we could arrive at the date to which the authors of Jubilees and the Testaments assigned this war between Egypt and Canaan. Since Gad died at the age of 125 (Test. Gad, 1 (MS O); Midrash Tadshe and Book of Jashar, op. cit. ii. 1246) and was 40 when he went down into Egypt

(see note on xxviii. 11-24), his burial in Hebron took place 90 years after the descent into Egypt in the year of the world 2262. But this date would be too early for Levi and Benjamin. The statement in Benj. 12 that this expedition to Hebron was in the 91st year (Greek MSS) before the exodus, is not supported by the Armenian version. Our text fixes it at 2263. Notwithstanding it seems clearly to have been the view of the author of the Testaments that the bones of all the patriarchs save those of Joseph were buried in Hebron on the occasion of a war between Egypt and Canaan. Thus, in addition to the statements in Simeon, Gad and Benjamin, observe that after mentioning the death of Levi, Zebulon and Dan, the Testaments (Lev. 19; Zeb. 10; Dan 7) add that "afterwards" (ὕστερον) they were buried in Hebron. Josephus (Ant. ii. 8. 2) appears to have held the same view, though he makes no mention of the war. He states: "His (Joseph's) brethren also died . . . and their posterity and sons carried their bodies after some time (κομίσαντες μετὰ χρόνον) and buried them in Hebron." St. Stephen is beholden to this tradition for the statement in Acts vii. 15-16.

Merenptah (about this date?) waged war against Palestine. See Articles on Egypt in Encyc. Bib. ii. and Bible Dictionary, i. 662, 665. But our text, he knew that the Egyptians would not again bring forth and bury him in the land of Canaan, for Mâkamârôn, king of Canaan, while dwelling in the land of Assyria, fought in the valley with the king of Egypt and slew him there, and pursued after the Egyptians to the gates of 'Êrmôn. 7. But he was not able to enter, for another, a new king, had become king of Egypt, and he was stronger than he, and he returned to the land of Canaan, and the gates of Egypt were closed, and none went out and none came into Egypt. 8. And Joseph died in the forty-

2242 A.M. sixth jubilee, in the sixth week, in the second year, and they buried him in the land of Egypt, and all his brethren died after him. 9. And the king of Egypt went 2263 A.M. forth to war with the king of Canaan in the forty-seventh jubilee, in the second week in the second year, and the children of Israel brought forth all the bones of the children of Jacob save the bones of Joseph, and they buried them in the field in the double cave in the mountain. 10. And the most (of them) returned to Egypt, but a few of them remained in the mountains of Hebron, and which emphasises the weakness of Egypt, points rather to the period of the successors of Rameses III. when Egypt lost her Syrian dependencies.

In Josephus (Ant. ii. 10) there is an account of a war between Cush and Egypt in which the latter prevails under the generalship of Moses. An enlarged form of this legend, having many details in common with that in Josephus, is given in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel, xlv. Here the war is between Cush and Syria and the people of the East. Another form appears in the Palaea Historica (Vassiliev, Anecdota Graeco-Byzantina, i. 228), where Egypt is at strife with India. A later and still more elaborate, and still more grotesque, edition is found in the Book of Jashar (op. cit. ii. 1244-1253). The oldest form of the tradition is that in our text where the war is between Egypt and Canaan. The account in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel comes nearest to this in representing Cush and Canaan as the opposing countries.

6. 'Êrmôn, i.e. Heroônpolis which stood close to the Desert on the canal of Ramses. I cannot identify Mâkamârôn.

8. All his brethren died after him. This statement holds even if we accept the birth-dates in our text (see p. 171 note), and the ages assigned to the twelve sons of Jacob by the Test. XII. Patriarchs (see p. 172 note).

9. The date 2263 is not late enough to allow of all the sons of Jacob being dead if we accept the ages assigned to them by the Test. XII. Patriarchs. Thus Benjamin was born in the year 2143 and as he lived 125 years (see note on p. 172) the date of his death would be 2268.

10. According to Beer there is no other mention of this stay of Amram in Canaan. To Josephus (see Ant. ii. 8. 2), however, some such legend may have been known.

Amram thy father remained with them. 11. And the king of Canaan was victorious over the king of Egypt, and he closed the gates of Egypt. 12. And he devised an evil device against the children of Israel of afflicting them; and he said unto the people of Egypt: 13. "Behold the people of the children of Israel have increased and multiplied more than we. Come and let us deal wisely with them before they become too many, and let us afflict them with slavery before war come upon us and before they too fight against us; else they will join themselves unto our enemies and get them up out of our land, for their hearts and faces are towards the land of Canaan." 14. And he set over them taskmasters to afflict them with slavery; and they built strong cities for Pharaoh, Pithom and Raamses, and they built all the walls and all the fortifications which had fallen in the cities of Egypt. 15. And they made them serve with rigour, and the more they dealt evilly with them, the more they increased and multiplied. 16. And the people of Egypt abominated the children of Israel.

week, in the sixth year thereof, in the forty-eighth jubilee; this was the time of tribulation on the children of Israel. 2. And Pharaoh, king of Egypt, issued a command regarding them that they should cast all their male children which were born into the river. 3. And they cast them in for seven months until the day that thou wast born. And thy mother hid thee for three months, and they told regarding her. 4. And she made an ark for thee, and covered it with pitch and asphalt, and placed it in the flags on the bank of the river, and she placed thee in it seven days, and thy mother came by night and suckled thee, and by day Miriam, thy sister, guarded thee from the birds. 5. And in those days Tharmuth, the daughter of Pharaoh, came to bathe in the river, and she heard thy voice crying, and she told her maidens to bring thee forth, and they brought thee unto her. 6. And she took thee out of the ark, and she had compassion on thee. 7. And thy sister said unto her: "Shall I go and call unto thee one of the Hebrew women to nurse and suckle this babe for thee?" And she said (unto her): "Go." 8. And she went and called thy mother Jochebed, and she gave her wages, and she nursed thee. 9. And

3. For seven months. Cedrenus (i. 85) takes our text as stating that the casting of the children of the Hebrews went on for "ten" months, i.e., until Pharaoh's daughter adopted Moses: ὅτι ἐν τῇ λεπτῇ γενέσει κεῖται μόνους δέκα μῆνας ριφῆναι τὰ βρέφη τῶν Ἰσραηλιτῶν ἐν τῷ ποταμῷ ἕως οὗ ἀνελήφθη Μωϋσῆς ὑπὸ τῆς βασιλίσσης· διὰ τοῦτο δέκα πηληγαὶ ἐδόθησαν ἐν δέκα μηνσι τοῖς Αἰγυπτίοις, καὶ τέλος ἐν τῇ θαλάσῃ κατεστράφησαν ὃν τρόπον τὰ βρέφη τῶν Ἑβραίων ἐν τῷ ποταμῷ ἀπέπνιγον, χιλιῶν ἀνδρῶν ἀπονιγόντων ἰσχυρῶν Αἰγυπτίων ἀνθ' ἐνὸς βρέφους Ἰσραηλιτικοῦ.

And thou wast three weeks 2351-2372 A.M. of years at court until the time when thou didst go forth from the royal court and didst see an Egyptian smiting thy friend who was of the children of Israel, and thou didst slay him and hide him in the sand. 11. And on the second day thou didst find two of the children of Israel striving together, and thou didst say to him who was doing the wrong: "Why dost thou smite thy brother?" 12. And he was angry and indignant, and said: "Who made thee a prince and a judge over us? Thinkest thou to kill me as thou killedst the Egyptian yesterday?" And thou didst fear and flee on account of these words.

And I delivered thee out of his hand, and thou didst perform the signs and wonders which thou wast sent to perform in Egypt against Pharaoh, and against all his house, and against his servants and his people. 5. And the Lord executed a great vengeance on them for Israel's sake, and smote them through (the plagues of) blood and frogs, lice and dog-flies, and malignant boils breaking forth in blains; and their cattle by death; and by hail-stones, thereby He destroyed everything that grew for them; and by locusts which devoured the residue which had been left by the hail, and by darkness; and (by the death) of the first-born of men and animals, and on all their idols the

2. We have in this verse another instance (cf. also ver. 17) where our author has followed the example of the Chronicler in 1 Chron. xxi. 1, where he assigns to Satan the action that in 2 Sam. xxiv. 1 is ascribed to Yahweh. The LXX and the Targums replace the divine name by the phrase "an angel of the Lord." We have already called attention to an earlier instance as xvii. 16, where our author has similarly got rid of the offence in the Biblical text. On Mastêmâ see note on x. 8.

On the way when thou didst meet him at the lodging-place. Here the Eth. is hopelessly corrupt. c which represents an attempt at emendation="on the feast of tabernacles." abd are unintelligible. It is best therefore to follow the Latin: "in via in qua praeteristi eum in refectiōne," and Exod. iv. 24, בִּרְדֵּךְ בַּמֶּלֶךְ יִפְנֹשְׁהוּ.

3. Our author here quite explains away the true meaning of the incident in Exod. iv. 24 sqq. This is followed more faithfully by the Ps.-Jon. in loc. and the Chron. of Jerah. xlvii. 1, 2 where the angel seeks to slay Moses for not circumcising his son. It is explained, however, that it was owing to Jethro that the child had not been circumcised.

5. We have here an enumeration of the ten plagues of Egypt.

And (by the death) of the first-born. I have supplied the words in brackets. They are wanting both in the Eth. and Lat. The Lat. has simply "primitivorum" and so ab. cd have prefixed "and." Hence there was a lacuna here in the Greek version. Only for the concluding words "and burned them with fire" we might connect the clause with the words that follow and merely supply a preposition: "(on) the first-born." But the genitive "primitivorum" is also against this.

Lord took vengeance and burned them with fire. 6. And everything was sent through thy hand, that thou shouldst declare (these things) before they were done, and thou didst speak with the king of Egypt before all his servants and before his people. 7. And everything took place according to thy words; ten great and terrible judgments came on the land of Egypt that thou mightest execute vengeance on it for Israel. 8. And the Lord did everything for Israel's sake, and according to His covenant, which He had ordained with Abraham that He would take vengeance on them as they had brought them by force into bondage. 9. And the prince of the Mastêmâ stood up against thee, and sought to cast thee into the hands of Pharaoh, and he helped the Egyptian sorcerers, and they stood up and wrought before thee. 10. The evils indeed we permitted them to work, but the remedies we did not allow to be wrought by their hands. 11. And the Lord smote them with malignant ulcers, and they were not able to stand, for we destroyed them so that they could not perform a single sign. 12. And notwithstanding all (these) signs and wonders the prince of the Mastêmâ was not put to shame because he took courage and cried to the Egyptians to pursue after thee with all the powers of the Egyptians, with their chariots, and with their horses, and with all the hosts of the peoples of Egypt. 13. And I stood between the Egyptians and Israel, and we delivered Israel out of his shame until he took courage." As this fails to give a good sense, I omitted the negative in my text. Thus we should have: "was put to shame until he took courage." Cf. xviii. 12. I now think that the corruption lies in the "until he took courage" = ער־אשר, where I take ער־אשר to be corrupt for על־אשר = "because." Instead of hajjala = "took courage," a reads halaja = "took thought."

18. The fourteenth. So we should read with b. ad = "the seventeenth,"

but sabû'ē in ad is corrupt for rabû'ē in b. c gives "the fifteenth." Cedrenus (i. 87), who has cited our text but a few sentences before, confirms b: τῇ ἰδ' τούτου τοῦ μηνὸς σκυλεύσαντες τοὺς Αἰγυπτίους ἐξῆλθον. This would admit of the Israelites setting out on the 15th of Nisan as in Joseph. (Ant. ii. 14. 6; 15. 2), where it states Israel went forth from Egypt on the 15th of Nisan having already received gifts from the Egyptians (ii. 14. 6): so also in Shabb. 87 b. Our text then supposes that the Israelites marched from the 15th to the 18th, and that on the 19th Mastema and his powers were let loose. Beer points out that in the Mechilta on Exod. xiv. 3 it is stated that the Egyptians pursued after Israel from the 19th of the first month.

Remember the commandment which the Lord commanded thee concerning the passover, that thou shouldst celebrate it in its season on the fourteenth of the first month, that thou shouldst kill it before it is evening, and that they should eat it by night on the evening of the fifteenth from the time of the setting of the sun. 2. For on this night—the beginning of the festival and the beginning of the joy—ye were eating the passover in Egypt, when all the powers of Mastêmâ had been let loose to slay all the first-born in the land of Egypt, from the first-born of Pharaoh to the first-born of the captive maid-servant in the mill, and to the cattle. 3. And this is the sign which the Lord gave them: Into every house on the lintels of which they saw the blood of a lamb of the first year, into (that) house they should not enter to slay, but should pass by (it), that all those should be saved that were in the house because the sign of the blood was on its lintels. 4. And they shall not cook it with water, nor shall they eat it raw, but roast on the fire: they shall eat it with diligence, its head with the inwards thereof and its feet they shall roast with fire, and not break any bone thereof; for †of the children of Israel no bone shall be

12. Slay it . . . during the period (or "time") bordering on the evening. According to our text the Passover victim might be slain "during the period bordering on the evening." This is the meaning it attaches to the phrase "between the evenings" (בֵּין הָעֶרְבַּיִם).

It corresponds well with Deut. xvi. 6, which gives directions for the sacrificing of the passover "at even, at the going down of the sun." But in ver. 10 of our text, a wider definition is given—"from the third part of the day to the third part of the night." The Pharisees and the Sadducees differed in the interpretation of the phrase "between the evenings." The former said it meant from the time when the sun inclined towards his setting till his final disappearance, i.e., from 3 to 6 p.m., but according to the latter it was the time between actual sunset and darkness, i.e., 6 and 7 p.m. (Pesachim v. 1). The hours (the 9th to the 11th) assigned by Josephus (Bell. Jud. vi. 9. 3) agree with the Pharisaic determination (θύουσιν μὲν ἀπὸ ἐνάτης ὥρας μέχρις ἐνδεκάτης). If then we combine the statements in verses 10 and 12 of our text we may infer that the slaughtering of the victim might take place any time during "the third part of the day" before sunset; and this harmonises on the whole with the rabbinic tradition. The Samaritans and Karaite Jews support the usage of the Sadducees in limiting

Eat it at the time of the evening until the third part of the night. Night was divided into three parts 6 to 10 p.m., 10 p.m. to 2 a.m. and 2 to 6 a.m. Hence the time for eating seems to be from 6 to 10 p.m. The rabbinic rule fixed midnight as the hour when the eating must be concluded (Berachoth i. 1; Pesach. x. 9).

†Of the children of Israel no bone shall be crushed†. The Latin differs and is to be followed: "Non erit tribulatio in filiis Istrahel in die hac." If we might suppose two distinct Greek versions of the Hebrew and that the original of "in die hac" was בעצם היום הזה, we could explain the Eth. by supposing the loss of היום הוה and the change of בעצם into עצם. But the cor-

For this reason the Lord commanded the children of Israel to observe the passover on the day of its fixed time, and they shall not break a bone thereof; for it is a festival day, and a day commanded, and there may be no passing over from day to day, and month to month, but on the day of its festival let it be observed.

15. And do thou command the children of Israel to observe the passover throughout their days, every year, once a year on the day of its fixed time, and it will come for a memorial well pleasing before the Lord, and no plague will come upon them to slay or to smite in that year in which they celebrate the passover in its season in every respect according to His command.

16. And they shall not eat it outside the sanctuary of the Lord, but before the sanctuary of the Lord, and all the people of the congregation of Israel shall celebrate it in its appointed season. 17. And every man who has come upon its day shall eat it in the sanctuary of your God before the Lord from twenty years old and upward; for thus is it written and ordained that they should eat it in the sanctuary of the Lord. 18. ruption seems native to the Ethiopic. If the text referred here to the "breaking" of a bone, it would most probably have used sabara as in the clause before and in the verse after, where the Latin uses frangere and confringere respectively. In this clause, therefore, ʾijēt-qataqat (= "will not be crushed") is to be taken metaphorically = the Latin "non erit tribulatio." This idea, that no evil will befall on the day of the right celebration of the Passover, recurs in ver. 15 in an intensified degree.

15. Every year, once a year. Cf. verses 7-8.

No plague will come upon them, etc. Cf. Exod. xii. 13.

In every respect according to His command. Latin seems better: "secundum universa praecepta ejus."

16. Before the sanctuary of the Lord. Cf. ver. 17 and see note on ver. 20.

17. Your God. Latin has Dei nostri, but the phrase recurs in ver. 22.

From twenty years old, etc. Rabbinic tradition determines fourteen years and upwards as the qualifying age. The determination in our text may be based on such passages as Exod. xxx. 14; Num. i. 32 which prescribe that in numbering the people only the males from twenty years old and upwards should be taken account of. Man was not accountable for the first twenty their tribes until the sanctuary of the Lord has been built in the land, let them come and celebrate the passover in the midst of the tabernacle of the Lord, and let them slay it before the Lord from year to year. 19. And in the days when the house has been built in the name of the Lord in the land of their inheritance, they shall go there and slay the passover in the evening, at sunset, at the third part of the day. 20. And they will offer its blood on the threshold of the altar, and shall place its fat on the fire which is upon the altar, and they shall eat its flesh roasted with fire in the court of the house which has been sanctified in the name of the Lord. 21. And they may not celebrate the passover in their cities, nor in any place save before the tabernacle of the Lord, or before His house where His name hath dwelt; and they will not go astray from the Lord. 22. And do thou, Moses, command the children of Israel to observe the ordinances of the passover, as it was commanded unto thee; declare thou unto them every year †and the day of its days, and† the festival of unleavened bread, that they should eat unleavened bread seven days, (and) that they should observe its festival, and that they bring an oblation every day during those seven days of joy before the Lord on the altar of your God.

20. Eat its flesh . . . in the court of the house, etc. This direction can be justified by an appeal to Deut. xvi. 7 (cf. 6) "thou shalt eat it in the place which the Lord thy God shall choose." But the Mishna extended this privilege to Jerusalem at large (Sebach. v. 8; Makkoth iii. 3). This extension was necessitated by the vast multitudes which came up to this feast (cf. Joseph. Bell. Jud. vi. 9. 3, ii. 14. 3).

21. May not. Here Eth. and Latin (poterunt) = οὐ δυνήσονται, which is a faulty rendering of לא יוכלו, where the phrase denotes moral inability. The text is based on Deut. xvi. 5, where the LXX (οὐ δυνήσῃ) and the Vulg. (non poteris) render in the same faulty manner לא תוכל.

In any place. Eth. prefixes "and," which I have omitted with the Latin.

Will not go astray from the Lord. Cf. Zeph. i. 6.

22. Every year = 'āmata (c) la'amatât (d). So Latin "per singulos . . . annos." a b = "its year every year."

†And the day of its days, and†. Here the Latin "in tempore dierum suorum" is most probably right, and we should render "during its days and during."

(And) that. "And" supplied from the Latin.

During those. Latin omits "those." Hence it probably represents the Greek article.

23. For ye celebrated this festival with haste when ye went forth from Egypt till ye entered into the wilderness of Shur; for on the shore of the sea ye completed it.

Laws regarding the jubilees, 1-5, and the Sabbath, 6-13.

L. And after this law I made known to thee the days of the Sabbaths in the desert of Sin[ai], which is between Elim and Sinai. 2. And I told thee of the Sabbaths of the land on Mount Sinai, and I told thee of the jubilee years in the sabbaths of years: but the year thereof have I not told thee till ye enter the land which ye are to possess. 3. And the land also will keep its sabbaths while they dwell upon it, and they will know the jubilee year. 4. Wherefore I have ordained for thee the year-weeks and the years and the jubilees: there are forty-nine jubilees 2410 A.M. from the days of Adam until this day, and one week and two years: and there are yet forty years to come (lit.

2450 A.M. "distant") for learning the commandments of the Lord, until they pass over into the land of Canaan, crossing the Jordan to the west. 5. And the jubilees will pass by, until Israel is cleansed from all guilt of fornication, and uncleanness, and pollution, and sin, and error, and dwells with confidence in all the land, and there will be no more a Satan or any evil one, and the land will be clean from that time for evermore.

6. And behold the commandment regarding the Sabbaths—I have written (them) down for thee—and all the judgments

23. With haste. See note on ver. 13. Cf. Exod. xii. 11. For Shur (Eth. Sûr) see Exod. xv. 22.

L. 1. Sin[ai], which is between Elim and Sinai. Cf. Exod. xvi. 1. Sin[ai] corrupt for Sin.

2. Jubilee years. Cf. Lev. xxv. 8.

3. Cf. Lev. xxvi. 34, etc.

4. Year-weeks, i.e., seven years.

Jubilees. Our author assumes jubilee periods of 49 years each, as R. Jehuda (Nedarim 61 a), whereas the majority of Jewish writers reckoned it at 50 years (Beer, Buch d. Jub. p. 38).

5. Forecast of the Messianic kingdom. A gradual transformation: cf. i. 29 note; xxiii. 26-28 note.

A Satan or any evil one. See note on xxiii. 29.

of its laws. 7. Six days wilt thou labour, but on the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord your God. In it ye shall do no manner of work, ye and your sons, and your men-servants and your maid-servants, and all your cattle and the sojourner also who is with you. 8. And the man that does any work on it shall die: whoever desecrates that day, whoever lies with (his) wife, or whoever says he will do something on it, that he will set out on a journey thereon in regard to any buying or selling: and whoever draws water thereon which he had not prepared

7. Cf. Exod. xx. 9, 10.

8-12. On the Talmudic laws relating to the Sabbath see Schürer, History of N.T. Times, II. ii. 96-105; Edersheim, Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah,² ii. 777-787; and the Bible Dictionaries, in loc.

8. The man that does any work on it shall die. This statement found in Exod. xxxv. 2 makes death the penalty for any and every breach of the Sabbath.

Whoever lies with (his) wife. This law sprung probably from the fanatical period referred to in Sanh. 46*a*, the period of the Syro-Grecian domination, when a man was put to death for riding a horse. That certain regulations of this nature existed we must infer from our text, as well as from the Talmudic treatise Nidda 38*a*. Early Chasids refrained from cohabitation with their wives from the close of the Sabbath to the fourth day of the week, in order that their wives might not desecrate the Sabbath 271 to 273 days later by child-bearing. Against this ascetic attitude towards marriage a reaction set in which resulted in the laws of the Mishna on this subject. Thus the cohabitation of husband and wife is enjoined on the Sabbath in Nedar iii. 10, viii. 6, while in Baba kamma 82*a* it is stated that one of the ordinances instituted by Ezra directed that a man should "eat garlic" (i.e. cohabit) on the eve of the Sabbath. The severer usage is followed by the modern Samaritans (Eichhorn's Repertorium, xiii. 257, 282; de Sacy, Notices et extraits de la Bible, xii. 175: also by the Abyssinian Falashas (Univ. Isr.

1851, p. 482) and the Karaite Jews (see Singer, pp. 198-199 note). The Karaite Jews inferred the unlawfulness of cohabitation on the Sabbath from a literal interpretation of Exod. xxxiv. 21. As regards the usage of the ancient Samaritans there has been some diversity of opinion. Karo (Beer, Buch der Jubiläen, p. 54) argues that the text in Nedar iii. 10 speaks for the existence of the strict law having existed among the Samaritans at a date anterior to the time of the Karaite Jews, but this is disputed by Frankel (Einfluss d. pal. Exeg. 252 sq.).

That he will set out on a journey thereon (b d). ac omit "thereon." This command was derived from Exod. xvi. 29, where the people are bidden "to abide every man in his place . . . on the seventh day" and not to go in quest of manna. Permission was given to go a distance of 2000 cubits (Erubin iv. 3, 1, v. 7), which was called the "Sabbath limit" (תחום השבת) or simply "limit" (תחום), or Sabbath-day's journey (Σαββάτου ὁδός, Acts i. 12). See Lightfoot, Exercitations on the Acts, i. 12; Buxtorf and Levy's Lexicons on תחום; Schürer, History of the New Testament Times, II. ii. 102-103. Josephus (Ant. xiii. 8. 4) speaks of this halacha: οὐκ ἔξεστι δ' ὑμῖν οὐτε τοῖς σαββάτοις οὐτ' ἐν τῇ ἑορτῇ ὁδεύειν.

In regard to any buying or selling. All the MSS prefix "and." The true text is uncertain and probably transposed. Buying and selling are prohibited in Neh. x. 31, xiii. 16, 17.

Whoever draws water. This was forbidden by the Karaite Jews (Jost, for himself on the sixth day, and whoever takes up any burden to carry it out of his tent or out of his house shall die. 9. Ye shall do no work whatever on the Sabbath day save what ye have prepared for yourselves on the sixth day, so as to eat, and drink, and rest, and keep Sabbath from all work on that day, and to bless the Lord your God, who has given you a day of festival, and a holy day: and a day of the holy kingdom for all Israel is this day among their days for ever. 10. For great is the honour which the Lord has given to Israel that they should eat and drink and be satisfied on this festival day, and rest thereon from all labour which belongs to the labour of the children of men, save burning frankincense and bringing oblations and sacrifices before the Lord for days and for Sabbaths. 11. This work alone shall be done on the Sabbath-days in the sanctuary of the Lord your God; that they may atone for Israel with sacrifice continually from day to day for a memorial well-pleasing before the Lord, and that He may receive them always from day to day according as thou hast been commanded. 12. And every man who does any work thereon, or goes a journey, or tills (his) farm, whether in his house or any other place, and whoever lights a fire, or rides on any beast, or travels by ship on

Which he had not prepared on the sixth day. This clause comes in awkwardly. A command against "eating or drinking anything" may have originally preceded this clause in our text. Cf. ii. 30, note.

Takes up any burden to carry it, etc. See note on ii. 29. This is the 39th form of work forbidden in the treatise Shabbath. If a man dropped his false teeth it would be unlawful to lift and carry them; for they would constitute a "burden." Similarly as much ink as would suffice for writing two letters (Edersheim, Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah,² ii. 782, 784).

9. See note on ii. 29.

10. Cf. ii. 21.

11. Cf. Num. xxviii. 9, 10; Matt. xii. 5.

12. Goes a journey. See note on ver. 8.

Tills (his) farm. Ploughing and harvesting are forbidden in Exod. xxxiv. 21; Shabb. vii. 2.

Whether in his house or any other place. These words seem to be in their wrong place. They would give good sense if they were read immediately after "every man who does any work thereon."

Lights a fire. Forbidden in Exod. xxxv. 3; Shabb. vii. 2. The man who gathers sticks for this purpose is to be stoned. Num. xv. 32, 33.

the sea, and whoever strikes or kills anything, or slaughters a beast or a bird, or whoever catches an animal or a bird or a fish, or whoever fasts or makes war on the Sabbaths: 13. The man who does any of these things on the Sabbath shall die, so that the children of Israel shall observe the Sabbaths according to the commandments regarding the Sabbaths of the land, as it is written in the tables, which He gave into my hands that I should write out for thee the laws of the seasons, and the seasons according to the division of their days.

Herewith is completed the account of the division of the days.

Rides on any beast. This is forbidden in Beza v. 2: also in Sanh. 46 a, which states that during the Syro-Grecian domination an offender against this law was arraigned before the judicial court and sentenced to death by stoning: cf. Jebam. 90 b.

Strikes or kills anything. Killing any animal is the 26th forbidden Sabbatical offence (Shabb. vii. 2).

Fasts. Israel is to "eat and drink" on the Sabbath (see ver. 9). This law was observed by Judith (Judith viii. 6, a book which in its shorter form probably goes back to the early Maccabean times). The injunction against fasting in our text is not in harmony with the severe ascetic law against the marriage-bed on the Sabbath.

Makes war. This prohibition of all warfare, which is found also in the Mishna, Shabb. vi. 2, 4, was observed literally before and during the outbreak of the Maccabean wars (1 Macc. ii. 31-38; 2 Macc. vi. 11; Joseph. Ant.

xii. 1; 2 Macc. xv. 1; cf. Joseph. Ant. xiii. 12. 4, xviii. 9. 2 for later occasions). But on the urgent representations of Mattathias this prohibition of warfare, offensive and defensive, was abandoned, and defensive measures were declared legitimate (1 Macc. ii. 41; Joseph. Ant. xii. 6. 2): but offensive warfare was still forbidden (2 Macc. viii. 26). Jonathan's battle against Bacchides (1 Macc. ix. 43 sqq.) can be justified from the new standpoint. This emended law was in force when Pompey besieged Jerusalem (Joseph. Ant. xiv. 4. 2), but as it only allowed of an active resistance against an active assault, it did not permit of the destruction of fortified works raised by the enemy on the Sabbath, and so exposed the Jews to defeat (op. cit. xiv. 4. 2). Once during the final war with Rome the Jews broke through this Sabbatical law, and successfully attacked the Romans (Joseph. Bell. Jud. ii. 19. 2).

PREFACE

I HAD hoped to issue this Commentary on the Book of Jubilees quite six years ago, as a sequel to my edition of the Ethiopic and other fragmentary versions of this work ; but after writing a large portion of it, I was obliged to abandon the task, as I felt that somehow I had failed to give a satisfactory interpretation of the text, though at the time I could not understand wherein my disability lay. A year or two later when making a special study of the Testaments of the XII. Patriarchs, I came to discover that the source of my failure lay in my acceptance of the traditional view that Jubilees was written in the first century of the Christian era. So long as I wrote from this standpoint, my notes became more and more a laboured apologetic for the composition of this work in the first century. The earliest approximation to the right date appeared in my article on the "Testaments of the XII. Patriarchs" in the Encyclopædia Biblica, i. 241, 1899, where, after giving grounds for the view that the main bulk of that work was written before 100 B.C., I concluded that we should "regard both works (i.e. the Testaments and Jubilees) as almost contemporary, and as emanating from the same school of thought." This view was advocated in the following year by Bohn and by Bousset on various grounds, and it is from this standpoint that the present Commentary is written. The difficulties that beset almost every page of Jubilees vanish for the most part when once we understand that it was written by a Pharisaic upholder of the Maccabean dynasty, who was also probably a priest.

It is difficult to exaggerate the value of Jubilees. The fact that it is the oldest commentary in the world on Genesis, is in itself a distinction. But it is not on this ground that we value it, but rather for the insight it gives us into the religious beliefs of Judaism in the second century B.C. Its interests are many sided. It appeals to the textual critic, as it attests the form of the Hebrew text, which was current in that century. It appeals to the Old Testament scholar, as exhibiting further developments of ideas and tendencies which are only in their incipient stages in the Old Testament. It appeals to the New Testament scholar, as furnishing the first literary embodiment of beliefs which subsequently obtained an entrance into the New Testament, and as having in all probability formed part of the library of some of the apostolic writers. It appeals to the student of theological doctrine, as providing certain indispensable links in the process of development. Finally, to the Jewish scholar, a Pharisaic work of the second century B.C. cannot fail to be of transcendent interest, as it gives the earlier forms of certain legislative enactments that appear in the Mishna, and of legends which in later Judaism have undergone much transformation.

Although half a century has elapsed since the discovery of Jubilees in its complete form in the Ethiopic Version, no scholar has hitherto attempted a commentary on the entire work. Some thirty years ago Rönsch edited a very learned and laborious work on the Latin Fragments, which constitute slightly more than one-fourth of the original writing, but since his time scholars have contented themselves with short studies on various views of our author.

I cannot conclude without thanking Mr. Cowley for his help in verifying references in the Talmud.

INTRODUCTION

§ 1. SHORT ACCOUNT OF THE BOOK

THE Book of Jubilees was written in Hebrew by a Pharisee between the year of the accession of Hyrcanus to the high-priesthood in 135 and his breach with the Pharisees some years before his death in 105 B.C. It is the most advanced pre-Christian representative of the midrashic tendency, which had already been at work in the Old Testament Chronicles. As the Chronicler had rewritten the history of Israel and Judah from the basis of the Priests' Code, so our author re-edited from the Pharisaic standpoint of his time the history of events from the creation to the publication, or, according to the author's view, the republication, of the law on Sinai. In the course of re-editing he incorporated a large body of traditional lore, which the midrashic process had put at his disposal, and also not a few fresh legal enactments, that the exigencies of the past had called forth. His work constitutes an enlarged Targum on Genesis and Exodus, in which difficulties in the biblical narrative are solved, gaps supplied, dogmatically offensive elements removed, and the genuine spirit of later Judaism infused into the primitive history of the world. His object was to defend Judaism against the attacks of the hellenistic spirit that had been in the ascendant one generation earlier and was still powerful, and to prove that the law was of everlasting validity.

From our author's contentions and his embittered attacks on the paganisers and apostates, we may infer that Hellenism had urged that the levitical ordinances of the law were only of transitory significance, that they had not been observed by the founders of the nation, and that the time had now come for them to be swept away, and for Israel to take its place in the brotherhood of the nations. Our author regarded all such views as fatal to the very existence of Jewish religion and nationality. But it is not as such that he assailed them, but on the ground of their falsehood. The law, he teaches, is of everlasting validity. Though revealed in time it was superior to time. Before it had been made known in sundry portions to the fathers it had been kept in heaven by the angels, and to its observance henceforward there was no limit in time or in eternity.

Writing in the palmiest days of the Maccabean dominion, he looked for the immediate advent of the Messianic kingdom. This kingdom was to be ruled over by a Messiah sprung, not from Levi—that is, from the Maccabean family, as some of his contemporaries expected—but from Judah. This kingdom would be gradually realised on earth, and the transformation of physical nature would go hand in hand with the ethical transformation of man till there was a new heaven and a new earth. Thus, finally, all sin and pain would disappear and men would live to the age of 1000 years in happiness and peace, and after death enjoy a blessed immortality in the spirit world.

§ 2. THE VARIOUS TITLES OF THE BOOK

Our book was known by two distinct titles even in Hebrew. These were :

(a) "Jubilees" = τὰ Ἰωβηλαῖα or οἱ Ἰωβηλαῖοι = יְיֻבְלָיִם;¹ and

(b) "The Little Genesis" = ἡ λεπτὴ Γένεσις = מִשְׁנֵה גֵּנֶזִיס.²

(c) Apocalypse of Moses and other alleged names of our book.

(a) Jubilees.—According to the citation of Epiphanius (Haer. xxxix. 6), ἐν τοῖς Ἰωβηλαίοις εὑρίσκεται, τῇ καὶ λεπτῇ Γένεσει, the name Jubilees would seem to have been its more usual designation, and "the little Genesis" its less usual. This name is found in the Syriac Fragment entitled "Names of the Wives of the Patriarchs according to the Hebrew Book called Jubilees" (see Ceriani, Mon. Sacra, ii. Fasc. i. 9-10; also my Ethiopic Text of Jubilees, p. 183).

This name is admirably adapted to our book as it divides into jubilee periods of forty-nine years each the history of the world from the creation to the legislation on Sinai. By his peculiar redaction of the biblical history down to this period, our author has shown that the law was already in force before its republication as a whole on Sinai. Moreover, his chronological heptadic system has received a perfectly symmetrical development. Israel enters Canaan at the close of the fiftieth jubilee, i.e. 2450. In the Assumption of Moses, where a jubilee period of fifty years is used, Israel enters Canaan in the year 2500 (see p. lxviii).

(b) *The Little*³ Genesis.—The fact that our book was

² Cf. Treuenfels, "Die kleine Genesis" in Fürst's Literaturblatt des Orients, 1846, No. 6, p. 81.

³ The epithet "little" does not refer to the extent, for it is larger than the canonical Genesis, but rather to the character of Jubilees. It deals more fully with the details and minutiae (i.e. τὰ λεπτά) than the biblical work. Severus of Antioch, ob. 542 A.D., after an account of the death of Moses and the strife between Michael and the evil angels for Moses' body, adds that these matters were said to be described in a book which gave a more detailed account of the known in Greek, not only as ἡ λεπτή Γένεσις but also ἡ Μικρογένεσις, points quite clearly to an authoritative Hebrew title, בְּרֵאשִׁית וַשְׁמִי, which was variously rendered in Greek. There were, indeed, four renderings of the Hebrew :

1. ἡ λεπτή Γένεσις (or Λεπτὴ Γένεσις).
2. ἡ Λεπτογένεσις.
3. τὰ λεπτὰ Γενέσεως.
4. ἡ Μικρογένεσις.

1. ἡ λεπτή Γένεσις.—This title is found sixteen times : in Epiphanius, Haer. xxxix. 6 (twice); Syncellus i. 7, 183, 192; Cedrenus i. 6, 9, 16, 48, 53, 85, 87; Zonaras, p. 18 (twice); Glycas, 206 (twice). As Λεπτὴ Γένεσις in Syncellus i. 5, 185, 203 and Cedrenus i. 7. As ἡ λεγομένη λεπτή Γένεσις in Glycas, pp. 198, 392. For the above passages see pp. lxxvii-lxxx.

2. ἡ Λεπτογένεσις.—This form of the title is found in Didymus of Alexandria (see p. lxxvii) and in one of the MSS of Epiphanius, Haer. xxxix. 6 (τῇ καὶ Λεπτογενέσει), where the Cod. Venet. has τῇ καὶ λεπτῇ Γενέσει. On the other hand, it follows from the Decree of Gelasius (see p. lxxviii) that this form was current among Latin writers.

3. τὰ λεπτὰ Γενέσεως.—This form is found in Syncellus i. 13 (see p. lxxix).

4. ἡ Μικρογένεσις.—This designation is found only in Jerome, Epist. 78 ad Fab. See my note on p. 83, where, instead of Λεπτὴ (a.l. Μικρογένεσις), we should read simply Μικρογένεσις. This is Jerome's independent rendering of the Hebrew title, for Jerome was acquainted with the original of Jubilees.

creation : Ταῦτα δὲ ἐν ἀποκρύφῳ βιβλίῳ λέγεται κείσθαι λεπτοτέραν ἔχοντι τῆς Γενέσεως ἤτοι τῆς κτίσεως τὴν ἀφήγησιν.

- (c) 1. The Apocalypse of Moses.
 2. The Testament of Moses.
 3. The Book of Adam's Daughters.
 4. The Life of Adam.

1. The Apocalypse of Moses.—This title is found in Syncellus i. 5 and repeated from him in Cedrenus i. 7 : λεπτή . . . Γενέσει, ἣν καὶ Μωϋσέως εἰναί φασί τινες ἀποκαλύψει : and in Syncellus i. 49 : ἐν τῇ Μωϋσέως λεγομένη ἀποκαλύψει. From the words φασί τινες and λεγομένη we conclude that this title had some currency in Syncellus' time. It was undoubtedly a very appropriate designation, since our author makes Moses the recipient of all the disclosures in his work (see the Greek scholion in my note on ii. 1). Cedrenus i. 16 speaks of Jubilees as ἡ λεπτή Μωσέως Γένεσις. The Apocalypse of Moses mentioned in Syncellus i. 48, from which he says Gal. vi. 15 (οὔτε περιτομή τι ἔστιν οὔτε ἀκροβυστία, ἀλλὰ καινὴ κτίσις) was derived, can have nothing to do with Jubilees, the main aim of which is the glorification of circumcision.

2. The Testament of Moses = ἡ διαθήκη τοῦ Μωϋσέως.—This was an older title than the preceding. Thus it is found in the Catena of Nicephorus i. 175, where the words ἡ διαθήκη precede a quotation from Jubilees x. 21 (see note in loc.). Here ἡ διαθήκη, as Rönsch (p. 275) has rightly argued, stands for ἡ διαθήκη τοῦ Μωϋσέως. It is impossible to determine whether the Testament of Moses which is here to be identified with Jubilees has anything to do with the διαθήκη Μωϋσέως mentioned in four catalogues of the canonical and uncanonical writings. Rönsch (pp. 480-481) argues for their identification on the ground that the Assumption of Moses forms a suitable close to the Book of Jubilees ; that they are found together in this order in the Latin MS which was edited by Ceriani ; that the Testament of Moses and the Assumption are enumerated together and in this order in the Catalogues of Nicephorus, the Ps. Athanasius and of the Sixty Canonical Books. If, however, the number of stichoi—1100—assigned to this Testament of Moses by the first catalogue is right, then this Testament cannot be the same as Jubilees; for Jubilees is longer than Genesis which, according to the same catalogue, has 4300 stichoi.

On the other hand, there may have been in circulation a Testament of Moses which was an expansion of Jubilees ii.-iii. To such a work—one-fourth the size of Genesis—the quotation given in my note on ii. 1 may possibly point, and probably the statement made by Severus of Antioch (see footnote on p. xv), and the quotation from a Catena on the Pentateuch in Fabricius ii. 121-122: Est quidem in apocrypho mysticoque codice legere, ubi de creatis rebus subtilius agitur, nubem lucidam, quo tempore mortuus est Moses, locum sepulchri complexam oculos circumstantium perstrinxisse ita, ut nullus neque morientem legislatorem neque locum videre potuerit, ubi cadaver conderetur. Here we have a combination of the Testament of Moses and the Assumption of Moses (see my Assumption of Moses, pp. xlv. sqq.).

3. The Book of Adam's Daughters.—This book is identified with Jubilees in the Decree of Gelasius (see p. lxviii): Liber de filiabus Adae, hoc est Leptogenesis, Apocryphus. The designation is far from inappropriate for our book, as it aims at giving the names of the wives of all the patriarchs from Adam onwards. On the other hand, it may not have been applied to the entire Book of Jubilees but to a short work based on Jubilees, and consisting mainly or solely of the names (and histories) of the women mentioned in Jubilees. Such a collection we find in the Syriac with the title: "Names of the Wives of the Patriarchs according to the Hebrew Book called Jubilees" (see p. xxix). The glosses in the LXX MS used by Holmes and Parsons, and later by Lagarde (see p. lxxxii), may point to such a collection; for these glosses relate to the wives of the patriarchs and go back ultimately to Jubilees. It is possibly worth while to call attention to the fact that some of these names are found in the Annals of the Arabic writer Tabari (see Lidzbarski, De propheticiis, quae dicuntur, Legendis Arabicis, 1893, pp. 11-12).

4. The Life of Adam.—This designation is found only three times, so far as I am aware, in Syncellus i. 7, and always as ὁ λεγόμενος Βίος Ἀδάμ. According to Syncellus this life of Adam recounted the number of days it took Adam to number the various creatures, the making of Eve, the entrance of Adam into Paradise, and the subsequent admission of Eve, etc. (i. 7-9): κεῖται γοῦν ἐν τῷ λεγομένῳ Βίῳ Ἀδὰμ ὁ τῶν ἡμερῶν ἀριθμὸς τῆς τε ὀνομασίας τῶν θηρίων καὶ τῆς πλάσεως τῆς γυναικὸς καὶ τῆς εἰσόδου αὐτοῦ Ἀδὰμ ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ· καὶ τῆς περὶ τοῦ ξύλου τῆς βρώσεως ἐντολῆς τοῦ θεοῦ πρὸς αὐτόν, καὶ τῆς μετὰ τούτου εἰσόδου Εὔα ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ, τὰ τε τῆς παραβάσεως καὶ τὰ μετὰ τὴν παράβασιν, ὡς ὑποτέτακται . . . ταῦτα ἐκ τοῦ Βίου λεγόμενον Ἀδὰμ φιλομαθίας χάριν ἐν συντόμῳ ἐστοιχειώσαμεν. If Syncellus is right here as to the contents of the Life of Adam, it treated of the same subjects as Jubilees ii. 1-29. It may, therefore, have been an excerpt from or a section of Jubilees, as Rönisch suggests (475-477). Accordingly, he accepts Treuenfels' proposal that the words in Syncellus occurring just before the above extract—ἐκ τῆς λεπτῆς Γενέσεως καὶ τοῦ λεγομένου Βίου Ἀδάμ—should be rendered: "from the Leptogenesis, that is, from the so-called Life of Adam." Since the statements in the Life of Adam are fuller than in Jubilees, the former would be an enlarged edition of a portion of the latter. Both may have been before Syncellus. From the Life of Adam—the fuller account—he quotes on pp. 7-9, and continues his narrative on

pp. 13-15 from Jubilees. Rönsch quotes in support of this view the statement of Jellinek, Bet ha-Midrash ii. 7, anm. 3: "Ein Theil derselben (der Kleinen Genesis), der von Adam handelt, wurde das Leben Adam's genannt und war den Alten als ספרא דאדם הראשון (Zunz, Die gottesdienstl. Vorträge der Juden, p. 128; J. Fürst im Lbl. des Orients, 1848, p. 589) bekannt."

§ 3. THE ETHIOPIC MSS

There are four MSS of this book in Europe, a, b, c, d, which belong respectively to the National Library in Paris, the British Museum, the University Library of Tübingen, and to the collection of M. d'Abbadie. Of these a b (of the fifteenth and sixteenth cent. respectively) are the most valuable, but in not a few readings the true text is preserved by c d (both of recent date). d is more nearly allied to a and c to b. b is the most trustworthy of the four. For a full description of these MSS the reader can consult Charles's Ethiopic Version of the Hebrew Book of Jubilees, pp. xii sqq.

§ 4. EDITIONS OF THE ETHIOPIC VERSION

DILLMANN, Mashafa küfdlé sive Liber Jubilaeorum, qui idem a Graecis Ἡ Λεπτή Γένεσις inscribitur, aethiopice ad duorum librorum manuscriptorum fidem primum edidit Dillmann, 1859.

This edition is based on MSS c d.

CHARLES, The Ethiopic Version of the Hebrew Book of Jubilees—otherwise known among the Greeks as Ἡ Λεπτή Γένεσις—edited from four MSS and critically revised through a continuous comparison of the Massoretic and Samaritan Texts, and the Greek, Syriac, Vulgate and Ethiopic

Versions of the Pentateuch, and further emended and restored in accordance with the Hebrew, Syriac, Greek and Latin fragments of this book, which are here published in full, Clarendon Press, Oxford, 1895.

This edition is based on the only four MSS hitherto known. It is from this text that my translation is made. In some dozen or more passages, however, to which attention is called in the notes, I have withdrawn emendations which I had introduced into the text—some in deference to criticisms of Drs. Praetorius and Littmann and others as a result of further study of the text and subject-matter. On the other hand, I have been enabled, from the much larger knowledge I now have of the literature than I had in 1893-1895, to discover the true text underlying corruptions that had defied detection, and likewise to recognise the occurrence of many dittographies and not a few lacunae (see § 11). The criticism of the text has been further greatly advanced by my discovery of a large poetical element in the book (see § 12).

DILLMANN, Das Buch der Jubiläen oder die kleine Genesis, aus dem Aethiopischen übersetzt (Ewald's Jahrbücher der bibl. Wissensch. 1850-51, Band ii. 230-256; iii. 1-96). This translation is based on only one MS.

SCHODDE, The Book of Jubilees, translated from the Ethiopic (Bibliotheca Sacra, 1885-1887).

CHARLES, The Book of Jubilees translated from a text based on two hitherto uncollated Ethiopic MSS (Jewish Quarterly Review, 1893, vol. v. 703-708; 1894, vi. 184-217, 710-745; 1895, vii. 297-328).

The above translation agrees for the most part with the text which I published subsequently. It is, however, untrustworthy in some passages, and is now superseded by the very much improved edition of it which appears in the present volume.

LITTMANN, Das Buch der Jubiläen (Kautzsch's Apokryphen und Pseudepigraphen des A. Testaments, 1900, ii. 31-119).

This admirable translation is based mainly on my Ethiopic text of Jubilees, but occasionally Dr. Littmann prefers to follow the readings of c d in Dillmann's text, and in some cases the grounds for this preference are so good that I have followed his lead. His translation is on the whole very accurate, though there are of course some passages where corrections will be introduced on the occasion of a second edition. To Dr. Littmann I owe many corrections of my English translation in the Jewish Quarterly.

FABRICIUS, J. A., Codex Pseudepigraphus Veteris Testamenti, 1713, i. 849-864. Fabricius here collects under the head of Parva Genesis, passages in Jerome and Greek writers which are expressly assigned to our book. At the close of this collection he adds: "Non dubito tum apud Hieronymum Quaest. et tradit. Hebraeicis in Genesin, tum apud Georgium Syncellum et Cedrenum plura legi ex parva Genesi repetita: quoniam tamen diserte illa non indicant, haec satis esse volui."

TREUENFELS, Die kleine Genesis בְּרֵאשִׁית וְגֵ' (Fürst's Literaturbl. des Orients, 1846, Nr. 1-6; 1851, Nr. 15). Treuenfels ascribes our book to a Jewish author, who wrote most probably before the Christian era.

DILLMANN, Das Buch der Jubiläen (Ewald's Jahrbücher der bibl. Wissensch. 1851, iii. 72-96). These pages consist of a series of learned and masterly notes which throw great light on the text and its interpretation. Dillmann was of opinion that Jubilees was written originally in Hebrew or Aramaic in the first cent. A.D. before the fall of Jerusalem.

—— Zeitschrift der deutschen morgenländ. Gesellsch. 1857, xi. 161-163.

—— “Pseudepigraphen des A. Testaments” (Herzog’s Real-Encyc.⁽²⁾ xii. 364-365). Here Dillmann sets the composition of Jubilees at the beginning of the Christian era and regards a still earlier date as possible.

—— “Beiträge aus dem Buche der Jubiläen zur Kritik des Pentateuch Textes” (Sitzungsberichte der Königlich Preussischen Akademie der Wissenschaften zu Berlin, 1883, pp. 323-340). With this contribution to the criticism of the Ethiopic text and its value in determining the criticism of the Pentateuch I have already dealt (Ethiopic Vers. of Heb. Bk. of Jubilees, pp. xviii-xix).

JELLINEK, Ueber das Buch der Jubiläen und das Noah-Buch, Leipzig, 1855 (a reprint from the third volume of his Bet ha-Midrash). Although the main contention of this treatise, that Jubilees is of Essene origin, cannot be sustained, Jellinek’s observations on its relations to Jewish Midrashim (i.e. Wajissau and Tadshe) and legends generally are most illuminating and helpful. Jellinek justly recognises that Jubilees was written when the essential character of the Jewish calendar was not definitely fixed.

BEER, Das Buch der Jubiläen und sein Verhältniss zu den Midraschim, Leipzig, 1856; Noch ein Wort über das Buch der Jubiläen, 1857. The former work is the ablest contribution from the Jewish side that has yet been made towards the interpretation of Jubilees. On pp. 25-39 he deals with the points of similarity existing between Jubilees and Jewish tradition, and on pp. 39-56 the points of divergence. Beer ascribes our book to a Samaritan, who made use of the Samaritan Pentateuch, the LXX, and

Jewish tradition, and wrote in Africa. This Samaritan authorship was shown to be impossible by Ewald (Jahrb. d. bibl. Wissensch. 1856, viii. 184 sq.), in a short review of Beer's work, and Dillmann (ZDMG, 1857, xi. 161-163). In the Monatsschrift f. Gesch. d. Judenthums, 1855, pp. 59-65 and his Leben Abrahams, 1859; Leben Moses, 1863, Beer has made many valuable indirect contributions to the exegesis of Jubilees.

FRANKEL, Monatsschrift für Gesch. und Wissensch. des Judenthums, 1856, pp. 311-316, 380-400. Frankel sought to prove that Jubilees was of Egyptian origin and representative of the cult at the Onias Temple at Leontopolis. To this view of Frankel, Beer rejoined in the treatise cited above under his name: Noch ein Wort über das Buch der Jubiläen.

KRÜGER, "Die Chronologie im Buche d. Jubiläen" (ZDMG, 1858, xii. 279-299. Krüger ascribes the composition of Jubilees to the year 320 B.C., but such a view has rightly failed to obtain a single suffrage.

LANGEN, Das Judenthum in Palästina, 1866, pp. 84-102. Jubilees according to this writer is to be assigned to the years 30-60 A.D. (p. 100).

RÖNSCH, Zeitschrift f. wissenschaft. Theologie, 1871, pp. 60-98; Das Buch der Jubiläen, Leipzig, 1874. Rönsch assigned our book to the years 50-60 A.D. It was directed against the rising Christianity, and was an attempt to draw together all the opposing parties in Judaism against the new religion.

KUENEN, Gesammelte Abhandlungen, 1894, pp. 113 sqq.

SCHÜRER, Gesch. des Jüd. Volkes,⁽³⁾ 1898, iii. 274-280. Schürer follows the ordinary view as to the date of Jubilees: "It may with considerable probability be assigned to the first cent. of the Christian era." Notwithstanding its many divergencies from Pharisaic usage and doctrine at that period he holds that in its essential aspects it represents the prevailing Pharisaic standpoint. A good bibliography closes the article.

SINGER, Das Buch der Jubiläen oder die Leptogenesis, I. Theil; Tendenz und Ursprung, zugleich ein Beitrag zur Religionsgeschichte, Stuhlweissenburg (Ungarn), 1898. Rönsch, as we have seen above, was of opinion that Jubilees was directed against Christianity, but Singer thinks that he can establish that it was the work of a Jewish Christian, written (about 58-60 A.D.) with a polemic purpose against the teaching of St. Paul—especially against his doctrine of the abrogation of the law. This work exhibits much learning both in the field of Judaism and Christianity. But the main thesis is not in any sense proved by him nor is it possible of proof.

BOHN, "Die Bedeutung des Buches der Jubiläen (Theol. Stud. und Kritiken, 1900, pp. 167-184). This article shows admirable insight. Its writer recognises rightly that the book belongs to the second cent. B.C. He ascribes its composition to 150 B.C. or thereabouts.

LITTMANN, Kautzsch's Apokryphen und Pseudepigraphen des Alten Testaments, 1900, ii. 31-38. We have here as good an introduction to our author as was possible from the stage of criticism at the time, and one that is meritorious alike for its learning and judgment. In 1899 Littmann reviewed Singer's book (see above) in the ZDMG, pp. 368 sqq.

§ 7. THE VERSIONS OF JUBILEES—GREEK, ETHIOPIC, LATIN, SYRIAC

1. The Greek Version.—Numerous fragments of this version have come down to us in J. Martyr (? see note on p. 41), Origen (see notes on pp. 194, 227), Diodorus of Antioch (see p. 85), Isidore of Alexandria (see p. lxxxix), Epiphanius (see notes on pp. 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 18, 32, 33, 47, 59, 61, 68, 69, 73, 74, 75, 77, 84, 86), John Malala (see notes on pp. 37, 41, 66), Anastasius Sinaita (flor. seventh cent.—preserved only in Latin; see note on p. 23), Syncellus (see notes on pp. 41, 59, 66, 68, 69, 71, 73, 74, 78, 85, 89, 93, 95, 191, 192. It is remarkable that Syncellus attributed to Genesis what comes from our text—see note on p. 164, and similarly to Josephus—see notes on pp. 157, 186, 208), Cedrenus (see notes on pp. 37, 41, 66, 67, 86, 87, 88, 93, 94, 116, 191, 252), Suidas (see note on p. 91), Zonaras (see p. 35), Glycas (see notes on pp. 37, 84, 85, 164), Joel (see notes on pp. 37, 67).

For probable mistranslations in this version see notes on xxx. 25, xliii. 11, xlvi. 9; for corruptions in the MSS before the Ethiopic and Latin translators, see notes on i. 29, ii. 2, v. 4, xiv. 12, xxiii. 10, xxxii. 27, 29.

This version is the parent of the Ethiopic and the Latin, as we shall prove below.

2. The Ethiopic Version.—This version is most accurate and trustworthy and indeed as a rule servilely literal. It has, of course, suffered from the corruptions naturally incident to transmission through MSS. Thus dittographies are frequent and lacunae are of occasional occurrence (see § 11), but the version is singularly free from the glosses and corrections of unscrupulous scribes, though the temptation must have been great to bring it into accord with the Ethiopic version of Genesis. To this source, indeed, we must trace a few perversions of the text: “my wife” in iii. 6 instead of “wife”; xv. 12 (see note); xvii. 12 (“her bottle” instead of “the bottle”); xxiv. 19 (where the words “a well” are not found in the Latin version of Jubilees, nor in the Mass., Sam., LXX, Syr., and Vulg. of Gen. xxvi. 19). In the above passages the whole version is influenced, but in a much greater degree has this influence operated on MS a. Thus in iii. 4, 6, 7, 19, 29, iv. 4, 8, v. 3, vi. 9, etc., the readings of the Ethiopic version of Genesis have replaced the original text. In the case of b I can discover only one instance of this nature in xv. 15 (see my Text, pp. xii. sqq.).

For instances of corruption native to this version, see notes on ii. 2, 7, 21, vi. 21, vii. 22, x. 6, 21, xvi. 18, xxiv. 20, 29, xxxi. 2, xxxix. 4, xli. 15, xlv. 4, xlviii. 6.

3. The Latin Version.—This version, of which about one fourth has been preserved, was first published by Ceriani in his Monumenta sacra et profana, 1861, tom. i. fasc. i. 15-62. It contains the following sections: xiii. 10^b-21; xv. 20^b-31^a; xvi. 5^b-xvii. 6^a; xviii. 10^b-xix. 25; xx. 5^b-xxi. 10^a; xxii. 2-19^a; xxiii. 8^b-23^a; xxiv. 13-xxv. 1^a; xxvi. 8^b-23^a; xxvii. 11^b-24^a; xxviii. 16^b-27^a; xxix. 8^b-xxx. 1^a; xxxi. 9^b-18, 29^b-32; xxxii. 1-8^a, 18^b-xxxiii. 9^a, 18^b-xxxiv. 5^a; xxxv. 3^b-12^a; xxxvi. 20^b-xxxvii. 5^a; xxxviii. 1^b-16^a; xxxix. 9-xl. 8^a; xli. 6^b-18; xlii. 2^b-14^a; xlv. 8-xlvi. 1, 12-xlviii. 5; xlix. 7^b-22. This version was next edited by Rösensch in 1874, Das Buch der Jubiläen . . . unter Beifügung des revidirten Textes der . . . lateinischen Fragmente. This work attests enormous industry and great learning, but is deficient in judgment and critical acumen. Rösensch was of opinion that this Latin version was made in Egypt or its neighbourhood by a Palestinian Jew about the middle of the fifth cent. (pp. 459-460). In 1895 I edited this text afresh in conjunction with the Ethiopic in the Oxford Anecdota (The Ethiopic Version of the Hebrew Book of Jubilees). To this work and that of Rösensch above the reader must be referred for a fuller treatment of this subject. Here we may draw attention to the following points. This version, where it is preserved, is almost of equal value with the Ethiopic. It has, however, suffered more at the hands of correctors. Thus it has been corrected in conformity with the LXX in xlv. 14 where it adds "et Oon" against all other authorities. The Eth. version of Exod. i. 11 might have been expected to bring about this addition in our Ethiopic text but it did not. Two similar instances will be found in xvii. 5, xxiv. 20. Again the Latin version seems to have been influenced by the Vulgate in xxix. 13, xlii. 11 (canos meos where our Ethiopic text = μου τὸ γῆρας as in LXX of Gen. xlii. 38); and probably also in xlvii. 7, 8, and certainly in xlv. 12 where it reads in tota terra for in terra. Of course there is the possibility that the Latin has reproduced faithfully the Greek and that the Greek was faulty; or in case it was correct, that it was the Greek presupposed by our Ethiopic version that was at fault.

Two other passages are deserving of attention, xix. 14 and xxxix. 13. In the former the Latin version "et creverunt et juvenes facti sunt" agrees with the Eth. version of Gen. xxv. 27 against the Ethiopic version of Jubilees and all other authorities on Gen. xxv. 27. Here the peculiar reading can be best explained as having originated in the Greek. In the second passage, the clause "eorum quae fiebant in carcere" agrees with the Eth. version of Gen. xxxix. 23 against the Ethiopic version of Jubilees and all other authorities on Gen. xxxix. 23.

On the other hand, there is a large array of passages in which the Latin version preserves the true text over against corruptions or omissions in the Ethiopic version: cf. xvi. 16, xix. 5, 10, 11, xx. 6, 10, xxi. 3, xxii. 3, etc. (see my Text, p. xvi.).

4. The Syriac Version.—The evidence as to the existence of a Syriac is not conclusive. It is based on the fact that a British Museum MS (Add. 12,154, fol. 180) contains a Syriac fragment entitled, "Names of the Wives of the Patriarchs according to the Hebrew Book called Jubilees." It was first published by Ceriani in his Monumenta Sacra, 1861, tom. ii. fasc. i. 9-10, and reprinted by me as Appendix III. to my Text of Jubilees (p. 183).

§ 8. THE ETHIOPIC AND LATIN VERSIONS—TRANSLATIONS FROM THE GREEK

Like all the biblical literature Jubilees was translated into Ethiopic from Greek. We have seen above (p. xxvi) that the Greek version had a very wide currency. To show that our text is a translation from the Greek version it will be sufficient to point out that in xxxiv. 11 we have a transliteration of ἡλίου ("of the sun"); that in i. 29, ii. 2, v. 4, xiv. 12, xxiii. 10, xxviii. 27, xxxii. 4, 27, 29, xlvii. 5 (see notes in loc.) we must retranslate into Greek before we can discover the source of the various corruptions. Further, Greek words such as δρύς, βάλανος, λίψ, σχῖνος, φάραγξ, etc. are transliterated in the Ethiopic. The Greek article is rendered by the demonstrative ii. 2, iii. 25, xxiv. 19, 29. Finally, proper names are transliterated as they appear in Greek and not in Hebrew: viii. 5, x. 18, etc.

It is no less obvious that the Latin is also a translation from the Greek. Thus in xxxix. 12, timoris = δειλίας, a corruption of δουλείας; in xxxviii. 13, honorem = τιμὴν, which should have been rendered by tributum (so Eth.); in xxxii. 26, celavit = ἐκρυψε, corrupt for ἔγραψε (so Eth.). Again, in xxxi. 30, orasti orationem is a mistranslation of ἡὔξω εὐχὴν, which here = vovisti votum; in xxxii. 30, sub glande = ὑπὸ τῆς βαλάνου, which here = sub quercu. The Greek article is often rendered by the Latin demonstrative as in the Ethiopic version: hujus Abrahæ, xxix. 16; huic Jacob . . . huic Istraël, xxxi. 15. Greek constructions are reproduced: memor fuit sermones, xvii. 3 = ἐμνήσθη τοὺς λόγους; consummavit loquens, xv. 22 = συντετέλεσε λαλῶν; in omnibus quibus (for quæ) dedisti, xxii. 8 = ἐν πᾶσιν οἷς ἔδωκας. We should observe also the extraordinary mistranslation of μήποτε = (ne forte) by ne quando in xlii. 11. (See Rönsch, pp. 439 sqq.)

We have seen above (pp. xxviii-xxix) that the Ethiopic and Latin versions presuppose in some cases different forms of the Greek version.

The early date and place of composition speak for a Semitic original, and the following evidence for such an original is irresistible.

But the question at once arises: was this original Aramaic or Hebrew? Certain proper names in the Latin version ending in -in seem to bespeak an Aramaic, as Cettin, xxiv. 28; Adurin, xxxviii. 8, 9; Filistin, xxiv. 14-16. But since in all these cases the Ethiopic transliterations end in -m and not in -n, it is not improbable that this Aramaising in the Latin version is due to the translator, who, as Rönsch has concluded on other grounds, was a Palestinian Jew. Moreover, it is most dangerous to conclude from Aramaic proper names to an Aramaic original; for Aramaic forms occur not infrequently in the Greek versions of the Old Testament. Thus this very word Cettim (כֶּתִים) appears as Χεττάν in Symmachus (Gen. x. 4), Χεττείν in the LXX (B) and Lucian of Judg. i. 26, Χεττιείν in the LXX (B) of 1 Kings x. 33. As regards Adurin (which in the Eth. version = 'Adûrâm), we should observe that this word appears as 'Ανουράμ, i.e. 'Αδουράμ, in the sister work Test. Iud. 9. Thus we may here again conclude to an original Hebrew form. It is noteworthy also that whereas in xxxviii. 3 of the Latin we have Adoram, in the Ethiopic we have 'Adôrân. Another Aramaic form is Mastêmâ (מַסְתֵּמָא) [Μαστιφάμ in Syncellus, Μαστιφάτ in Cedrenus, and Mastima in the Latin version, xviii. 12, xlvi. 2], from the hiphe! participle, מַסְתֵּם). But the presence of such a proper name in a Semitic document is inconclusive as we have shown above. Cf. Littmann, in Kautzsch's Apok. u. Pseud. ii. 34.

The grounds, on the other hand, for a Hebrew original are weighty and numerous :

1. A work which claims to be from the hand of Moses would naturally be written in Hebrew.—Hebrew, our author teaches, was the sacred and national language (see notes on xii. 25-26 ; xliii. 15).

2. The revival of the national spirit of the nation is universally, so far as we know, accompanied by a revival of the national language.—Thus the Psalms of Solomon (70-40 B.C.) were written in Hebrew, and the Similitudes in the Ethiopic Enoch (xxxvii.-lxx.), as I hope to prove later. As regards the sections of Enoch which were written before the revival of the national spirit under the Maccabees other grounds must decide.

3. The text must be retranslated into Hebrew in order to explain unintelligible expressions and restore the true text.—Thus in xliii. 11 lâ'êlêja = ἐν ἐμοί, which is a mistranslation of בִּי בִי in this context = δέομαι, "pray," as in Gen. xliv. 18, which our text reproduces almost word for word. In xvi. 31 lebba dabart (Lat. Vers. corde palmarum) = לִבִּי דַּבַּרְתִּי, where לִבִּי is corrupt for לִלְבִּי. In xlvii. 9 the text = domum Faraonis, but the context demands filiam Faraonis. Hence the Greek translator here misread בַּת־פֿ as בֵּית־פֿ or בַּת־פֿ. The true Aramaic word for daughter is בַּרְתָּ. See also notes on ii. 29, iii. 15, vi. 35, xlviii. 12.

Under this head also we might draw attention to the presence of dittographies already existing in the Hebrew text. See notes on iii. 16, xviii. 15, xxx. 1.

4. Hebraisms survive in the Ethiopic and Latin versions.—Thus in ii. 9, 25 the Ethiopic wahaba = "gave" goes back to בָּרַח, which must here be translated "appointed." In xxii. 10 eligere in te is a reproduction of בָּחַר ; in xxiv. 25 sermo hic = "this thing" = הַדָּבָר הַזֶּה, a purely Hebrew expression ; in xix. 8 in qua . . . in ipsa (so also Eth.)

= ἐν ᾧ . . . ἐν αὐτῇ = אֵל אֱלֹהִים; in xl. 7 (see note) we have a transliteration of a Hebrew phrase 'Êl 'Êl wa 'Abîrêr where we should read 'Abîrêl. Again in iv. 4 nûḥa is a corrupt transliteration of נח. See also vi. 35, xxxiii. 1, xl. 10.

5. Many paronomasiae discover themselves on retranslation into Hebrew.—Thus in iv. 9 there is a play on Enoch the son of Cain; on Jared in iv. 15, on Noah in iv. 28, on Peleg in viii. 8, on Reu in x. 18, on Serug in xi. 6, on Terah in xi. 12 (see notes in loc.).

6. Many passages of this book are preserved in rabbinic writings, such as the Hebrew Book of Noah, the Midrash Wajjissau, the Chronicles of Jerahmeel, the Book of Jashar, and the Midrash Tadshe. It has also much matter in common with the Testaments of the XII. Patriarchs which was also originally written in Hebrew.

§ 10. TEXTUAL AFFINITIES OF THE TEXT OF THE BOOK OF JUBILEES

In order to understand the position which the Hebrew text of Jubilees occupied in relation to the texts and versions of the Pentateuch, it will be necessary to summarise briefly its affinities with them. We shall now discover that our text agrees in turn with the Samaritan (twice?), LXX, Syriac, Vulgate, and with Onkelos.

In the following list, where the corresponding passages in Jubilees and the Pentateuch are given without further comment, the details will be found in the notes accompanying the translation. Thus in the first sub-heading i. (a), where xxvi. 34 of our text is equated with Gen. xxvii. 40, the needful information is given in the notes on xxvi. 34. On the other hand, where the notes do not supply such details the reading given by our text and its supporters and the opposing text and its authorities are supplied in brackets. Thus we are to interpret the statement "xli. 14 ('his shepherd')—Gen. xxviii. 40 ('his friend')," which occurs under the sub-heading ii. (η), "It agrees with the LXX and Vulg. against the Mass., Sam., and Syr.," as meaning that our text, supported by the LXX and Vulg. of Gen. xxviii. 40, reads "his shepherd," whereas the Mass., Sam., and Syr. read "his friend." For fuller information the reader can refer to my Ethiopic Text.

i. First as to its agreement with individual authorities in opposition to the rest:

(α) It agrees with the Sam. against the Mass., LXX, Syr., Onk. in iv. 7 ("he called")—Gen. iv. 25 ("she called"); xxvi. 34 (?)—Gen. xxvii. 40.

(β) It agrees with the LXX against the Mass., Sam., Syr., Vulg. in iii. 24 ("thy pains")—Gen. iii. 16 ("thy conception"); v. 1—Gen. vi. 2; vii. 8—Gen. ix. 22; viii. 1—Gen. xi. 13; xiii. 2—Gen. xii. 6; xiv. 2, 12—Gen. xv. 2, 11; xv. 15 ("her name will be called")—Gen. xvii. 15 ("thou shalt call her name"); xviii. 2—Gen. xxii. 2; xxiv. 25—Gen. xxvi. 32; xxvi. 25 (+ "his son")—Gen. xxvii. 30 (see my Text, p. 97, note 20); xxviii. 11 (+ Jacob)—Gen. xxix. 32; xxviii. 29—Gen. xxx. 43; xxix. 4—Gen. xxxi. 20; xlvi. 14 ("he set over")—Exod. i. 11 ("they set over").

(γ) It agrees with the Syriac version against the Mass., Sam., LXX, Vulg. in xii. 15 ("went forth" in sing.)—Gen. xi. 31 (Mass. = "went forth" in pl., Sam., LXX, Vulg. = "led forth"); xviii. 11 ("I have shown")—Gen. xxii. 12 ("I know"); xliii. 21 ("by the command of the mouth of Pharaoh")—Gen. xlv. 21 ("by the mouth of Pharaoh"); xlvii. 7—Exod. ii. 7; xlix. 9 ("the guilt")—Num. ix. 13 ("his guilt").

(δ) It agrees with the Vulg. against Mass., Sam., LXX, Syr. in vii. 9 ("their shoulders")—Gen. ix. 23 ("both their shoulders"); xiv. 1 ("and thy reward")—Gen. xv. 1 ("thy reward"); xiv. 22 ("shall build up")—Gen. xvi. 2 ("shall be builded up"); xxiv. 3 ("give me")—Gen. xxv. 30 ("feed me"); xxiv. 19 ("living water")—Gen. xxvi. 19 ("well of water"); xxvi. 31 ("Isaac")—Gen. xxvii. 39 ("Isaac his father").

(ε) It agrees with the Targum of Onkelos against the Mass., Sam., LXX, Syr., Vulg. in xiii. 20 ("not be numbered")—Gen. xiii. 16 ("be numbered"); xiii. 24—Gen. xiv. 14; xv. 17 ("rejoiced")—Gen. xvii. 17 ("laughed").

ii. We shall next give its affinities with two or more of the above authorities in opposition to the rest.

(a) Its agreement with the Mass. and Sam. :

It agrees with the Mass. and Sam. against the LXX, Syr., Vulg. in iii. 3—Gen. ii. 20; vi. 7 ("with the life thereof with the blood")—Gen. ix. 4 (LXX ἐν αἵματι ψυχῆς).

It agrees with the Mass. and Onk. against the Sam., LXX, Syr., Vulg., Ps.-Jon. in iii. 7—Gen. ii. 24.

(β) Its agreement with the Mass., Sam., Syr., or with these + Vulg. or + Vulg. and Onk. :

It agrees with Mass., Sam., and Syr. against the LXX and Vulg. in iii. 25 ("for thy sake," בְּעִבְרָךְ)—Gen. iii. 17 (LXX (and Vulg.) ἐν τοῖς ἔργοις σου = בְּעִבְרָךְ); vi. 8 ("by man")—Gen. ix. 6 (LXX ἀντὶ τοῦ αἵματος αὐτοῦ); xxvi. 27 ("thy firstborn")—Gen. xxvii. 32 (LXX + Vulg. om. "thy"); xxvi. 29 ("unto his father")—Gen. xxvii. 34 (LXX + Vulg. om.); xxvii. 21 ("behold")—Gen. xxviii. 13 (LXX + Vulg. om.).

It agrees with the Mass., Sam., Syr., Vulg. against the LXX in v. 27 ("prevailed")—Gen. vii. 24 (LXX ὑψώθη);

xii. 15 ("from Ur")—Gen. xi. 31 (LXX ἐκ τῆς χώρας);
 xiv. 3 ("out of thine own bowels")—Gen. xv. 4 (LXX ἐκ σοῦ = 𐤒𐤌𐤍 instead of 𐤒𐤌𐤍𐤍); xiv. 12—Gen. xv. 11; xv. 3 ("Almighty")—Gen. xvii. 1 (LXX σου).

It agrees with the Mass., Sam., Syr., Vulg., and Onk.
 against the LXX in xv. 20—Gen. xvii. 22; xxvi. 23 ("peoples")—Gen. xxvii. 29 (LXX ἄρχοντες = 𐤀𐤕𐤓𐤕𐤕 corrupt for 𐤀𐤕𐤓𐤕); xxvi. 24 ("brethren")—Gen. xxvii. 29 (LXX τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ σου).

It agrees with the Mass., Sam., Syr., Aq., Symm., Vulg., and Onk. against the LXX in xiii. 10 ("towards the south")
 —Gen. xii. 9 (LXX ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ).

(γ) Its agreement with the Sam. and LXX or with these
 + Syr. or + Onk. or + Vulg. or + Syr. and Vulg.:

It agrees with the Sam. and LXX against the Mass.,
 Syr., Vulg. in xiv. 18—Gen. xv. 20; xv. 14—Gen. xvii. 14;
 xvii. 1 ("his son")—Gen. xxi. 8 (om.); xxvii. 11 ("my father")—Gen. xxviii. 4 (om.).

It agrees with the Sam., LXX, and Syr. against the Mass., Vulg., and Onk. in ii. 16—Gen. ii. 2.

It agrees with the Sam., LXX, Syr., and Vulg. against Mass., Onk., and Ps.-Jon. in xii. 23 ("them that curse")—
 Gen. xii. 3 ("him that curses"); xvii. 7—Gen. xxi. 13;
 xxviii. 8 ("I shall give")—Gen. xxix. 27 ("we will give");
 xliii. 12 ("with us")—Gen. xliv. 31 (om.).

It agrees with the Sam., LXX, Syr., and Vulg. against the Mass. and Onk. in xv. 16—Gen. xvii. 16; xv. 19 ("and
 for his seed")—Gen. xvii. 19 ("for his seed").

It agrees with the Sam., LXX, and Onk. against Mass.,
 Syr., and Vulg. in iii. 6—Gen. ii. 23.

It agrees with the Sam., LXX, and Vulg. against the Mass.
 and Syr. in xiv. 13 ("it was said")—Gen. xv. 13 ("He said").

(δ) Its agreement with the Sam. and Syr. + the Vulg.
 or others:

It agrees with the Sam., Syr., Ps.-Jon., Graec.-Ven. against the Mass., Vulg., and Itala in xviii. 12 ("a single (= רם) ram")—Gen. xxii. 23 ("behind (אחור) him a ram"). Onk. combines both readings.

It agrees with the Sam., Syr., Vulg., Onk. against Mass. and LXX in xliv. 16 ("Phûa")—Gen. xlv. 13 ("Puvvah").

(ε) Its agreement with the Sam. version + LXX or with the Sam. version + Syr. and others :

It agrees with the Sam. vers., LXX, Syr. (?), Onk. against Mass., Sam., Vulg. in xviii. 15—Gen. xxii. 17.

It agrees with the Sam. Vers., Syr., Vulg. (and possibly Sam.) against Mass. and LXX in xviii. 13 ("hath seen" or "seeth")—Gen. xxii. 14 (Mass. "will be seen" or "provided") (LXX ὡφθη).

(ζ) Its agreement with the LXX and Syr. and with these + others :

It agrees with the LXX and Syr. against Mass., Sam. in iii. 24 ("thy return")—Gen. iii. 16 ("thy desire"); xiv. 2 ("son of my handmaid")—Gen. xv. 2 ("of my house"?); xli. 9—Gen. xxxviii. 14.

It agrees with the LXX and Syr. and, in the main, with the Sam. and Vulg. against the Mass. and Onk. in vi. 32 ("beasts and cattle and birds and every moving thing"; LXX πάντα τὰ θηρία καὶ πάντα τὰ κτήνη καὶ πᾶν πετεινὸν καὶ πᾶν ἔρπετον κινούμενον. So Syr. save that it omits καὶ after πετεινόν; Sam. and Vulg. agree with LXX save that Vulg. omits καὶ πᾶν πετεινόν and Sam. omits καὶ πάντα τὰ κτήνη)—Gen. viii. 19 ("every beast, every creeping thing, and every fowl, whatsoever creepeth").

It agrees with the LXX, Syr., and Vulg. against the Mass. and Sam. in v. 8 ("will . . . abide")—Gen. vi. 3 ("will . . . strive"); xiv. 4 ("said unto him")—Gen. xv. 5 ("said"); xv. 16—Gen. xvii. 16; xxiv. 3 ("said to him")

—Gen. xxv. 31 (“said”); xliii. 12 (“our father”)—Gen. xliv. 30 (Mass. “my father”).

(η) Its agreement with the LXX and Vulg.:

It agrees with the LXX and Vulg. against the Mass., Sam., and Syr. (+ “and dancing”) xvii. 4—Gen. xxi. 9; xxvii. 8—Gen. xxvii. 46 (+ “of the daughters of Heth”); xxvii. 11 (“after thee”)—Gen. xxviii. 4 (“with thee”); xxviii. 1 (“land of the east”)—Gen. xxix. 1 (“land of the sons of the east”); xli. 14 (“his shepherd” = רִעָדוֹ)—Gen. xxviii. 20 (“his friend” = רִעָדוֹ).

It agrees with the LXX, Vulg., and Onk. in xv. 14 (“for he has broken”)—Gen. xvii. 14 (“he has broken”).

(θ) It agrees with the LXX (d^{sil}e, πατρός μου, but other MSS give πατρός σου as in the Sam. and Eth. vers.) against the Mass., Syr., and Vulg. in xxvii. 11—Gen. xxviii. 4 (om.).

Though the above list is not exhaustive it is sufficiently so for our purposes. It follows from it that our book attests an independent form of the Hebrew text of the Pentateuch. Thus it agrees at times with the Sam. or LXX or Syr. or Vulg. or even with Onk. against all the rest. Similarly it agrees with various combinations of these against the rest.

In the next place we infer from the following phenomena that our book represents some form of the Hebrew text of the Pentateuch midway between the forms presupposed by the LXX and the Syriac. For it agrees more frequently with the LXX, see i. (β), or with combinations into which the LXX enters, see ii. (γ), (ε), (η), (θ), than with any other single authority or with any combination excluding the LXX. Next to the LXX it agrees most often with the Syriac, see i. (γ), or with combinations into which the Syriac enters, see ii. (β), (δ). On the other hand its independence of the LXX is shown by such passages as i. (α), (γ), (δ), (ε), and its actual superiority in a large array of readings, ii. (α), (β), where it has the support of the Sam. and Mass., or of these with various combinations of Syr., Vulg. and Onk.

If to the above considerations we add the facts that, so far as I am aware, (1) it never agrees against all the rest with the Mass., which is in some respects the latest form of the Hebrew text; (2) that it agrees in a few cases with Onk., oftener with the Vulg., and still oftener with the Syr., and oftenest with the LXX, against all the rest; (3) that, when it enters combinations, it is almost universally in attestation of the earlier reading, it may be reasonably concluded that the textual evidence points to the composition of our book at some period between 250 B.C. (LXX version of Pentateuch) and 100 A.D., and at a time nearer the earlier date than the latter.

Lacunae.—In addition to the occasional small lacunae which are supplied from the Latin version or other independent sources, there are four larger lacunae in ii. 22, iii. 23, vii. 37, xiii. 25. The first consists of two clauses according to the Greek authorities: "As there were two and twenty letters, and two and twenty books," but, according to the Midrash Tadshe, only of one: "As there were two and twenty letters" (see ii. 23 notes). Since the earliest testimony elsewhere to this reckoning of the books of the Old Testament as twenty-two is that of Josephus (c. Apion. i. 8), it is possible that the clause in question in Epiphanius and Syncellus may be an addition to the text of Jubilees. This reckoning is mentioned also by Origen, Athanasius, Cyril of Jerusalem, in the Canons of the Council of Laodicea, Jerome, etc. (see Ryle, Canon of the Old Testament, 1892, p. 221). On the other hand, it is

¹ Since writing the above I have come across the following excerpt from the Greek version of Jubilees in Lambros' Catalogue of the Greek MSS on Mt. Athos, vol. i., pp. 292, which confirms my view. It is: 'Ιωάννου ἀναγνώστου Κωνσταντινουπόλεως Λεπτῆς Γενέσεως. 'Εν τῇ ψα' [Α]π' ὧδε διαλαμβάνει βιβλίον τὸ καλούμενον λεπτή γενέσις. 'Εν τῷ κειμένῳ· "Ἔργα ὡς λέγει ἔκτησεν (read ἔκτισεν) ὁ Θεὸς ἐν ταῖς ἑξ ἡμέραις, δι' ὃ καὶ κβ' γράμματα παρ' Ἑβραίοις καὶ κβ' βιβλία καὶ κη' γενεαρχαὶ ἀπὸ Ἀδὰμ ἕως Ἰακώβ. Κάιν, ὡς λέγει, τῆς οἰκίας πεσοῦσης ἐπ' αὐτὸν ἀπέθανεν. Lambros wrongly prints κβ' as κη' twice in the above passage. I owe the corrections to Mr. Lake, who has just collated it afresh for me on Mt. Athos. The excerpt is from a thirteenth-cent. MS. The last sentence regarding Cain is from Jub. iv. 31.

The third lacuna in vii. 37 appears to have extended to two or more verses, which dealt with the right of eating the fruit of trees in the fifth year after they were planted, and of sowing and reaping the land during six years and the duty of letting it lie fallow on the seventh (see notes in loc.). The greatest loss which our book has sustained is that which occurs in xiii. 25. Here the text still stands in a mutilated condition. The subject of the lost verses was undoubtedly Abram's pursuit of the kings, his recovery of the captives, and his meeting with Melchizedek. Since on other grounds it appears that the Maccabean princes claimed in some respects to represent the priesthood of Melchizedek, this loss is most deplorable (see notes on xiii. 25, xxxii. 1, xxxvi. 16).

Dittographies.—We have already drawn attention to three passages where dittographies most probably existed already in the Hebrew text. These are far from infrequent in the Ethiopic version. Thus in i. 29, vi. 33, viii. 6, 16, ix. 1, xv. 34, xix. 10, xxii. 24, xxxi. 18, xxxiv. 13, xxxv. 13, the dittographies are verbal repetitions of clauses in immediate or mediate juxtaposition. Some of these repetitions may, of course, have already occurred in the Greek. But there is another class of dittographies present in our version which are due to incorporation in the text of duplicate renderings. Thus in xxx. 16 the clause "and no consideration of persons" follows immediately on "And there will be no respect of persons," and both are alternative renderings of καὶ οὐκ ἔσται προσωποληψία or some such phrase. This conclusion is confirmed by the Latin version which shows no such dittography. We have the evidence of the same version for excising the dittography in xxiii. 11. Other duplicate renderings, which have found their way into the Ethiopic version, our text exhibits in xx. 3, xxi. 10, 13, xxiv. 3. Possibly in xxxii. 21 "read and read," which I have emended with the Latin legit et cognovit into "read and knew," should be regarded as a simple dittography within the Ethiopic; and legit et cognovit as due to two alternative renderings of ἀνέγνω, where the first is right.

Dislocations.—A most probable instance of this nature occurs in xxxvii. 20^{ef}. These two prose lines intervene in the midst of a poem. They are corrupt in all the MSS, but by an easy emendation could be adapted to follow after the first clause of the preceding verse. See note in loc.

Another passage is v. 17-18 which deals with the Day of Atonement. I have treated it as interpolated or else as transposed from after xxxiv. 18-19, which treats of the first institution of this festival. It is possible, however, that these verses did belong to the original. Thus 10^b-12 refer to the final judgment and the renewal of the world. The subject of the final judgment is there further dealt with in its general character in 13-16, and in 17-18 the writer turns aside to show the special grace accorded to Israel on that day if they observe the Day of Atonement. But I still incline to the view that 17-18 are foreign to their present context.

Again, i. 28 should probably be read before i. 26, and xxiii. 16 after xxiii. 19.

§ 12. POETICAL ELEMENT IN JUBILEES

Just before completing my commentary on Jubilees, I was so fortunate as to discover that no small proportion of it was originally written in verse. Accordingly the reader will find the following passages arranged as verse: x. 3; xii. 2-5, 18-20, 23, 29; xv. 6-8; xviii. 15-16; xix. 17, 20-22, 25; xx. 6-10; xxi. 21-25; xxii. 11-23; xxiii. 23-31; xxiv. 30-32; xxv. 15-23; xxvi. 23-24, 31-34;

xxxi. 15-20 ; xxxvii. 20-23. This discovery not only adds to the interest of the book but also illuminates many a dark passage, suggests the right connections of wrongly separated clauses, and forms an admirable instrument of criticism generally. Thus, if the reader turns to xxxvii. 20-23 he will find a poem—probably an old one—consisting of five stanzas of three lines each. Our recognition of this fact enables us to excise as an interpolation the unintelligible words occurring in the MSS at the close of the first stanza. Even if we emended these words we should only have a distich, which would be suspicious in the midst of a poem consisting of tristichs. But not only is the form against their genuineness here, but also their subject matter (see notes in loc.). Again, in xxxi. 18 we reject a line both on the ground of the parallelism and of its being a dittography, and in xxi. 22 a line on the ground of the parallelism. The most important of these poems is the apocalypse in xxiii. 23-31 which consists of ten stanzas, the first nine of which are tristichs and the last a tetrastich. Of the rest some are composed in distichs, as xii. 23, 29 ; xviii. 15-16 ; xx. 6-10 ; xxii. 11-23 ; xxv. 15-23, xxvi. 23-24, 31-34 ; xxxi. 15-20 ; some in tristichs xix. 17, 25 ; xxi. 21-25 ; xxxvii. 20-23 ; and the rest partly in distichs and partly in tristichs in xii. 18-20 (consisting of a tristich + distich + tristich + 2 distichs) ; xv. 6-8 (distich + 2 tristichs) ; xix. 20-22 (2 tristichs + 2 distichs). While on the one hand it must be confessed that in xv. 6-8 ; xviii. 15-16 ; xxxi. 20, and in one or more other passages, it is difficult to arrive at a satisfactory arrangement ; on the other it seems most probable that much of the first chapter was originally written in verse ; also vii. 10^b-12 ; xxvii. 23-24 ; xxxii. 18-19, and many passages elsewhere.

Our book is the work of one author, but is largely based on earlier books and traditions. The narrative of Genesis forms, of course, the bulk of the book, but every page of it contains materials characteristic of the age of our author. By referring to Index I. the reader will see at a glance the books of the Old Testament laid under contribution.

But our present chief interest is the relation of our author to non-canonical Jewish literature. Thus he borrows vii. 20-39, x. 1-15 from the Book of Noah. Of this book happily the greater part of x. 1-2, 9-14 is still preserved in the Hebrew Book of Noah (see Jellinek's Bet ha-Midrash, iii. 155, and my Text of Jubilees, p. 179). Our author had before him also the greater part of the Book of Enoch vi.-xvi., xxiii.-xxxvi., lxxii.-xc.

Besides these he also made use of current traditions and legends, which were already reduced to writing, and have come down to us in Hebrew and Greek in other independent works. Thus the war of Jacob and his sons against the Amorite kings, xxxiv. 1-9, is found in the Test. Judah 3-7, a contemporary work, in the Midrash Wajjissau, which contains if not the original legend, at all events a very early recast of it, and in the Book of Jashar—a late work. Again, our author drew on existing writings for his description of the fratricidal war between Jacob and Esau in xxxvii.-xxxviii. Here the only contemporary authority that still exists for our text is Test. Jud. 9. But with a few reservations the same statement may be made of the Hebrew document preserved in the Jalkut Shimeoni i. 132 and the Chronicles of Jerahmeel (see my notes on pp. 214-215).

Other incidents in our text, which are attested also in the contemporary Testaments of the XII. Patriarchs, are the story of Bilhah's dishonour at the hands of Reuben during Jacob's absence (Jub. xxxiii. 1-9—Test. Reuben 3); Levi's dream as to the priesthood (xxxii. 1—Test. Levi 2, 4, 5, 8, 9), and his consecration to it by Isaac (xxxi. 13-17—Test. Levi 9); the names of the wives of Levi and Judah (xxxiv. 20—Test. Levi 11; Test. Jud. 8, 13, 16); the story of Tamar, Er and Onan, and Judah's repentance (xli. —Test. Jud. 10, 12, 14, 19); the burial of Jacob's sons in Hebron (xlvi. 9—Test. Reub. 7, Levi 19, Jud. 26 Zeb. 10, Dan. 7, Naph. 9, Gad 8, Asher 8; cf. Jos. Ant. ii. 8. 2) during a war between Egypt and Canaan (xlvi. 9—Test. Sim. 8, Benj. 12 [Arm. Vers.]). Also the insertion of Kâinâm in vii. 1 is supported by the LXX of Gen. xi. 13.

Other legendary matter in Jubilees, for which contemporary or earlier documents are, as a rule, not at hand, though most probably belonging to ancient tradition, furnishes us with a large number of proper names—particularly the names of women—'Âwân, wife of Cain (iv. 9), 'Azûra, wife of Seth (iv. 11), Mûalêlêth, the wife of Kenan (iv. 14), and the wives of the various patriarchs down to Terah (see iv. 15, 16, 20, 27, 28, 33; vii. 14, 15, 16; viii. 1, 5, 6, 7; xi. 9, 14, etc.), and of the twelve sons of Jacob (xxxiv. 20), and the daughter of Pharaoh (xlvii. 5). As other proper names of persons we might observe: Barâkî'êl (iv. 15), Râsûjâl (iv. 16), Dânel (iv. 20), and so on for the fathers of the wives mentioned above (iv. 27, 28, 33; viii. 1, 5, 6, etc.); also Mâkamârôn, king of Canaan (xlvi. 6), and the Êljô¹ (vii. 22). Again, as names of places: 'Êldâ (iii. 32), the mount of the East (iv. 26), the three cities built by Noah's sons (vii. 14, 15, 16), the various mountains, islands, towns, rivers, and seas mentioned in viii. 12-ix. 13 (most of which can, however, be identified with actual places), 'Ērmôn (= Heroonpolis, xlvi. 6).

Other legendary matter was in many instances (see notes in loc.), and possibly in all, the source of the following statements and incidents: the period of five days spent by Adam in naming the creatures (iii. 1-3), the common language of all animals before the Fall (iii. 28), the number of Adam's sons, i.e. twelve (iv. 10), his burial—the first that was made in the earth (iv. 29), the manner of Cain's death (iv. 31), Kâinâm's discovery of writings of the Watchers (viii. 1-4), the detailed account of the tower of Babel and its destruction by a mighty wind (x. 21-26), the beginning of wars and idolatry in Serug's time (xi. 2-4), the history of Abraham's early days and exploits (xi. 16-24), his campaign against idolatry and burning of a heathen temple, death of Haran, Abraham's astronomical knowledge and miraculous acquisition of Hebrew (xii. 1-8, 12-14, 16-21, 25-27), Abraham's ten temptations (xvii. 17), the fact of Zilpah and Bilhah being sisters (xxviii. 9), and of Zebulon and Dinah being twins (xxviii. 23), rape of Dinah at the age of twelve (xxx. 1-3), Jacob's presents to his parents four times a year (xxix. 14-17, 19-20), Isaac's blessing of Levi and Judah (xxxi. 13-20), appointment of Levi to the priesthood as the tenth son (xxxii. 2-3), the deaths of Bilhah and Dinah after news of Joseph's death (xxxiv. 15-16), Simeon's marriage to a woman of Mesopotamia on his repentance (xxxiv. 21), after having first married a woman from Zephath (xliv. 13), the years of famine traced to the failure of the Nile (xlv. 9), the temporary stay of many Israelites in Canaan after burial of the patriarchs (xlvi. 10), the number of months during which the Hebrew children were cast into the river (xlvii. 2), the burning of the Egyptian gods (xlviii. 5), destruction of 1000 Egyptians in the Red Sea for every Hebrew child that was cast into the river (xlviii. 14).

§ 14. JUBILEES—A PRODUCT OF THE MIDRASHIC TENDENCY AT WORK IN THE OLD TESTAMENT CHRONICLER, BUT REPRESENTED BY ITS AUTHOR AS AN ESOTERIC TRADITION

Our book represents an extreme product of the midrashic process which is apparent on most pages of the Old Testament Chronicler. (a) The Chronicler, as we know, to a certain extent rewrote with an object the earlier history of Israel and the history of Judah already recounted in Samuel and Kings. In his hands the history of the nation is so recast as to make it a history of the church, the temple and its cultus, and to represent David and his pious successors as observing all the prescripts of the law according to the Priests' Code. (b) In the course of this process facts that will not square with the writer's presuppositions are omitted or transformed in character. This applies particularly to breaches of the Priests' Code; also to statements such as that in 2 Sam. xxiv. 1, which ascribes David's temptation to Yahweh. This temptation the Chronicler attributes to Satan (1 Chron. xxi. 1).

(a) Now the author of Jubilees sought to do for Genesis¹ what the Chronicler had done for Samuel and Kings (observe especially his recasting of 2 Kings xi. in 2 Chron. xxii. 10-xxiii. 21), and so he rewrote it in such a way as to show that the law had been rigorously observed, even by the patriarchs.

(b) Like the Chronicler our author found many statements in Genesis that did not square with his presuppositions, and accordingly we find that in many instances he alters the text before him,¹ and in others he simply omits. Thus he omits² the sending out of the raven (Gen. viii. 7) possibly on the ground of its being an unclean bird (Lev. xi. 15), and of the doves, Abraham's entertainment of the angels (Gen. xviii. 2-8), his intercession for Sodom (xviii. 22-33), the mention of Lot's wife and many details regarding the destruction of Sodom (Gen. xix. 1-24), Abraham's deception of the Egyptians (xii. 11-14, 18), and of Abimelech in regard to Sarah (Gen. xx. 2-3), Isaac's prayer that Rebecca may have offspring, etc. (Gen. xxv. 21-26), his deception of Abimelech in regard to Rebecca (Gen. xxvi. 7-10), Jacob's meeting with Rachel and his welcome by Laban (Gen. xxix. 2-15), the story of the mandrakes (Gen. xxx. 14-16), Jacob's devices to increase his flocks at the expense of Laban (Gen. xxx. 37-42), the mutual recriminations of Jacob and Laban (Gen. xxxi. 26-32, 36-42), Jacob's meeting with the angels (Gen. xxxii. 1-2), his wrestling with the angel (xxxii. 24-32), his fear of Esau and efforts to propitiate him (Gen. xxxii.-xxxiii.), the circumcision of the Shechemites and their covenant with Jacob (Gen. xxxiv. 14-24). The omissions in the history of Joseph are numerous, but they can be explained almost wholly on the ground of the author's desire for brevity. But as regards Gen. xlix. the case is different. It is purposely suppressed because of its severity on Levi and its giving the pre-eminence to Judah. Our author throughout reverses this relation, and everywhere sets Levi before Judah.

Again, like the Chronicler he takes offence at the frequent mention of men being tempted or slain by God in Genesis and Exodus, and after the example of the Chronicler he represents the temptation of Abraham to offer Isaac (Gen. xxii.) as due to Mastêmâ (Jub. xvii. 16), the attempt on Moses's life (Exod. iv. 24) as made by the same evil agent; likewise the hardening of the hearts of the Egyptians (xlvi. 17—Exod. xiv. 8), and the slaying of the first-born (xlix. 2—Exod. xii. 29), he ascribes to the activities of Mastêmâ and his angels.

Again, just as we must not suppose that the peculiar impress which the Chronicler gave to his historical materials was the result of his individual activity but rather the outcome of a process, which in the course of successive generations had in many respects been transforming history into legend, so we must be careful to recognise in our author's book only a more advanced stage of the process above referred to. Possibly this process would not, in the natural course of things, have thrust the completed law further back than the time of Moses, but the exigencies of our author's time and the corroding influences of Hellenism seemed to him to demand the recognition of the law as superior to time, though revealed in time, and valid not only unto eternity but from eternity. The materials which suggested such a view were already at hand. If the earthly tabernacle was only a copy of a heavenly original (Exod. xxv. 9-40, xxvi. 30), it was but natural to infer that the various elements of the law, which were established in the course of tradition, were likewise copies of divine originals engraven on the heavenly tables. Such a view seemed to be called for by the necessities of the time. Hellenism had for many a decade been undermining circumcision and the observance of the Sabbath,¹ which were the bulwarks of Judaism, before these destructive tendencies came to a head in the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes (see note on xv. 14). Our author is a late representative of the strong reactionary movement which asserted the everlasting validity and sanctity of these elements of the law. Thus he teaches that, though circumcision was first ordained in Abraham's time, it had been ordained in heaven from the beginning, for the two highest orders of the angels had been created circumcised, and that Israel was through circumcision sanctified together with them (xv. 27 note). Similarly the Sabbath, though first ordained in Jacob's time (see ii. 23, 31 notes), was originally celebrated in heaven by God and by the same two chief orders of angels. Israel was to unite with these angels in observing it. It was to be a sign like circumcision marking off Israel from all the other nations of the earth (ii. 19-21), and making them one with the two chief orders of angels in heaven.

Jubilees—an Esoteric Tradition according to its Author.

—The Book of Jubilees claims as a whole to be a revelation of God to Moses, and thus to form a supplement to, and an interpretation of, the Pentateuch, which it calls "the first law" (vi. 22). According to 4 Ezra xiv. 6 Moses was to reveal the latter but not the former. This second appears from our author to have embraced in a final authenticated form various revelations which had been made to the patriarchs, and constituted in their hands an esoteric tradition. This secret tradition had been handed down from father to son. Thus Enoch committed it to Methuselah, and Methuselah to Lamech, and Lamech to Noah (vii. 38, xxi. 10). Noah in turn entrusted all his books to his eldest son, Shem (x. 14). Between Shem and Abram the knowledge of the sacred language was lost. But the latter was taught this language by an angel, and he thereupon studied "the books of his fathers" (xii. 27). From these books of his forefathers embracing the writings of Enoch and Noah, Abraham instructed Isaac (xxi. 10). These books contained regulations regarding sacrifices as well as other matters (vii. 38, xxi. 10; cf. Test. Zeb. 3). To Jacob also Abraham transmitted the traditions directly (xxv. 7, xxxix. 6). Again, Jacob educated Joseph from the writings of Abraham (xxxix. 6-7), and finally handed over "all his books and the books of his fathers to Levi his son that he might preserve them and renew them for his children until this day" (xlv. 16). Thus this secret tradition was to be preserved in the hands of the priesthood till the time should come for its publication. From this last statement it would not be unreasonable to infer that our author was a member of the priestly caste.

The object of our author is to defend Judaism against the disintegrating effects of Hellenism.

Our author defends Judaism (a) by glorifying the law as an eternal ordinance and representing the patriarchs as models of piety; (b) by glorifying Israel and insisting on its separation from the Gentiles; and (c) by denouncing the Gentiles generally and particularly Israel's national enemies.

(a) Our author glorifies the law.—We have already (p. 1) drawn attention to our author's glorification of circumcision and the Sabbath, the bulwarks of Judaism, as

heavenly ordinances, the sphere of which was so far extended as to embrace Israel on earth. The law, as a whole, was to our author the realisation in time of what was in a sense timeless and eternal. He is careful to set forth the historical occasions when the various elements of the law were first celebrated on earth, and herein he followed a tendency already well established in post-exilic Judaism. We shall now enumerate these briefly. The levitical law of purification after childbirth was enacted after the creation of Adam and Eve (iii. 8-14). On the expulsion of Adam from Eden the law of covering one's shame was enacted (iii. 30-32). This law does not belong to the Mishna or later Jewish legislation. It was manifestly levelled against the custom of baring the person in the Greek games, and is not explicable of any other than the early Maccabean period. The daily incense-offering began after Adam's expulsion from Eden (iii. 27). The law relating to the jubilees was first set forth by Enoch (iv. 18). The law of retribution in kind—"an eye for an eye"—was first carried out in the case of Cain (iv. 31-32). Noah instituted the feast of weeks, which had been observed in heaven since the creation (vi. 17-22), also the feasts on the new moons (vi. 23-27); he offered sacrifices, which anticipate later ritual (vi. 1-4, vii. 3-5), and enunciated the laws regarding fruit-trees and the land keeping Sabbath (vii. 2, 35-37), though he ascribed these laws to Enoch (vii. 38). Abram enacted the law of tithes (xiii. 25-29); celebrated the feast of first-fruits of the grain harvest on the 15th of the third month (xv. 1-2) and instituted the feast of tabernacles (xvi. 20-31), ordained peace-offerings and the regulations relating to the use of salt, wood for sacrifices, washing before sacrifices, and the duty of covering blood (xxi. 7-17), and forbade all intermarrying with the Canaanites (xxii. 20, xxv. 5), and adultery (xxxix. 6). Laban set forth the law—unknown to

Jewish tradition—that the younger sister should not be given in marriage before the elder (xxviii. 6). The penalty of death was ordained for intermarriage with the heathen in connection with the destruction of Shechem (xxx. 7-17). Levi was ordained priest by Jacob at the feast of tabernacles (xxx. 18-23, xxxii. 2-3), and blessed by Isaac as such (xxxi. 13-17). Jacob offered tithes through Levi at the feast of tabernacles—also the second tithe (xxxii. 4-9), and re-enacted the law of tithes (xxxii. 10-15; see xiii. 25-29); added the eighth day to the feast of tabernacles as a permanent institution (xxxii. 27-29). The law regarding incest was published in connection with Reuben's outrage (xxxiii. 10-20). The day of Atonement was instituted as a day of fasting and mourning in commemoration of the day when the news of Joseph's death arrived (xxxiv. 18-19; cf. v. 18). The law of incest was re-enacted and extended in connection with Judah's sin with Tamar (xli. 25-26). Jacob celebrated the feast of the first-fruits (xliv. 1, 4).¹

Glorification of the patriarchs.—This glorification of the patriarchs was also characteristic of the Priests' Code (see Carpenter, Hexateuch, i. 123). They are transformed into saints by our author. It is for this reason that Gen. xii. 11-13 (which tells of Abram's representing Sarai as his sister) is omitted, and likewise Isaac's lie about Rebecca, Gen. xxvi. 7. Abram, according to our author, knew the true God from his youth (xi. 16, 17, xii. 1 sqq.). Jacob is represented as a model of filial affection and obedience¹ (xxv. 4 sqq., xxxv. 9-12). The passages relating to Jacob's devices for increasing his flocks (Gen. xxx. 35-38) and his fear of and measures for propitiating Esau (Gen. xxxii.-xxxiii.) are omitted. Indeed our author represents Jacob as declaring that he was not afraid (xxvii. 4) and as ultimately killing Esau (xxxviii. 2). The text in Gen. xlv. 15 is changed in order to clear Joseph from the charge of divination, and the word "Esau" omitted in Gen. xxvii. 24 in order to cover Jacob's lie, and the words "his brother is dead" (Gen. xlv. 20) are changed into "one went away and was lost" (xliii. 11) in order to avoid making Joseph's brethren tell a deliberate lie.²

(b) Glorification of Israel and its separation from the Gentiles.—Whereas the various nations of the Gentiles were subject to angels, Israel was subject to God alone (xv. 32). Not Japheth (Gen. ix. 27) but God was to dwell in the tents of Shem (vii. 12). Israel, moreover, was God's son; and not only did the nation stand in this relation to God, but also its individual members (i. 24, 25, 28, xix. 29). Israel was to receive circumcision as a sign that they were the Lord's (xv. 26), a privilege which they were to enjoy in common with the two chief orders of angels (xv. 27). They were also to unite with God and these two orders in the observance of the Sabbath (ii. 18, 19, 21). Finally, the destinies of the world were bound up with Israel. The world was to be renewed in the creation of the true man Jacob (xix. 24-25, ii. 22), and its final renewal to synchronize with the setting up of God's sanctuary on Zion and the establishment of the Messianic kingdom (i. 29, iv. 26, v. 12).

Israel to be separate from the Gentiles.—Israel was not in any way to imitate the conduct of the Gentiles (xv. 34, xxii. 16); not to eat with them (xxii. 16), nor to form leagues with them (xxiv. 25, 27), nor to intermarry with them; for he that gave his daughter to a Gentile, gave her to Moloch (xxii. 20, xxv. 9, xxx. 7, 10, 11, 13).

(c) The Gentiles denounced generally and particularly Israel's national enemies.—With the immeasurable arrogance of Judaism there went necessarily, hand in hand, an immeasurable hatred and contempt of the Gentiles. Tacitus, more than two centuries later, called attention to this characteristic of the Jews ("adversus omnes alios hostile odium," Hist. v. 5). Judaism regarded its own attitude to the Gentiles as not only justifiable but also just, because it was but a reflection of the divine. God had placed the nations under the authority of spirits or angelic guardians with the object of compassing their destruction (xv. 31). Here, most probably, the ultimate result of an action is declared to be the immediate object of it. Our author denounces particularly the national enemies of Israel, and these, as we shall have more than once occasion to observe, were the very nations with whom Israel was frequently at war in the second century B.C. First of all our author's maledictions are fulminated against the Philistines both in this world and in the next. The chief cities of this nation were either subjected or destroyed by the Maccabean princes (see xxiv. 28-32 notes). Next they are directed against Edom. Thus Isaac is represented as declaring in the blessing of Esau, that, if Esau's seed rebelled against Israel, they should be "rooted out from under heaven" (xxvi. 34). A war between Jacob and Esau is described in xxxviii. 1-14, in which Edom was reduced to servitude "until this day." Edom was thoroughly subdued by John Hyrcanus and forced to accept circumcision (xxxviii. 8 note). Again, in a description of a war between Jacob and seven kings of the Amorites, the writer forecasts the Maccabean victories of later times (xxxiv. 1-9). In an earlier passage he enumerates the chief seats of the Amorites. These were associated with Maccabean victories, in which the Amorites were all but annihilated (xxix. 10-11). Of the Amorites who were "wicked and sinful" and had "wrought to the full all their sins," our author grimly remarks "they have no longer length of life on earth" (xxix. 11). This was practically the result of the Maccabean wars.

§ 16. ANGELOLOGY AND DEMONOLOGY OF JUBILEES

Angelology.—The angelology of the author, like that of the Ethiopic Enoch, is in an advanced stage. There are two supreme classes, the angels of the presence and the angels of sanctification (ii. 2, 18), and a very large order of inferior angels who presided over natural phenomena (ii. 2 note). The two first classes joined with Israel in observing the Sabbath and circumcision (see p. 1) and other elements of the law, as the feast of weeks (vi. 18). In addition to the above there were the (seventy) angels who formed the angelic patrons of the nations (xv. 31), and the angels who were the guardians of individuals (xxxv. 17).

The duties assigned to the angels in connection with mankind are numerous. They brought Adam into the Garden of Eden and afterwards Eve (iii. 9, 12), and instructed Adam in tillage in the Garden (iii. 15). They report to God all the sin committed on the earth (iv. 6). The order called "Watchers" descended in the days of Jared to instruct the children of men (iv. 15), and afterwards sinned with the daughters of men (iv. 22). The angels showed to Enoch all that was "on earth and in the heavens" during 294 years (iv. 21), and conducted him into the Garden of Eden (iv. 23). They bound the fallen Watchers in the depths of the earth (v. 6); took to Noah the animals that were to enter the ark (v. 23). In the presence of an angel the earth was divided among Noah's sons (viii. 10). Angels bound nine-tenths of the demons in the place of condemnation (x. 9-11), and instructed Noah in the remedies against all diseases (x. 12); they accompanied the Lord in visiting the tower of Babel (x. 23). An angel bade Abram to go to the land of promise (xii. 22), and instructed him in the knowledge of Hebrew, and explained to him what he found unintelligible (xii. 26, 27). Angels announced to Abraham the birth of Isaac and admonished Sarah for laughing (xvi. 1-4); saved Lot from Sodom (xvi. 7); blessed Abraham and disclosed to him what had been decreed about him (xvi. 16). An angel comforted Hagar (xvii. 11), and withheld Abraham's hand from sacrificing Isaac (xviii. 10). Angels tested Abraham's patience after the death of Sarah (xix. 3). The angels will remember unto a thousand generations Levi's righteous judgment on Shechem (xxx. 20). An angel showed Jacob in a vision of the night seven tablets which recorded all that would befall him and his posterity, and bade him copy them (xxxii. 21, 24-25). Angels disclosed to Judah that he was forgiven for his sin with Tamar (xli. 24). An angel delivered Moses out of the hands of Mastêmâ (xlvi. 2-4). Angels prevented the magicians from furnishing any remedies to the Egyptians (xlvi. 10), and delivered the Israelites out of the hands of the Egyptians (xlvi. 13), and bound Mastêmâ from the 14th to the 18th and let him loose on the 19th, when they led Israel forth (xlvi. 15-19). An angel made known to Moses the Sabbaths, year-weeks, and jubilees, etc. (l. 1-4).

Demonology.—Over against the angelic kingdom stands a well-organised demonic or satanic kingdom. This kingdom is governed by "the prince of the Mastêmâ,"¹ where Mastêmâ is in point of derivation and meaning the equivalent of Satan. His subjects comprise both satans and demons. The demons are the spirits which went forth from the bodies of the slain children of the Watchers and the daughters of men (x. 5; Eth. En. xvi.). According to Eth. En. liv. 6 the guilt of the Watchers originated in their becoming subject to Satan. By means of these demons the prince of the satans is able to compass his evils, which are the seduction and destruction of men. But these have no power over the righteous and over Israel (see note on x. 8).

§ 17. THE DATE OF JUBILEES

The date of our book can only be established by a series of indirect evidence. But this evidence is so plentiful and powerful, when apprehended, that no room is left for reasonable doubt.

i. First of all the book was written during the pontificate

of the Maccabean family, and not earlier than 135 B.C.—Thus in xxxii. 1 Levi is called a “priest of the Most High God.” Now, the only Jewish high-priests who ever bore this title were the Maccabean (see note on xxxii. 1). They appear to have assumed it as reviving the order of Melchizedek when they displaced the Zadokite order of Aaron. Jewish tradition ascribes the assumption of this title to John Hyrcanus, but it seems to have been already assumed by Simon; cf. Ps. cx. 4: “Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek,” and 1 Macc. xiv. 41. If, however, we follow the Jewish tradition in this matter, we must fix on 135 B.C., when Hyrcanus became high-priest, as the earliest possible date for the composition of Jubilees. Notwithstanding the objections of the Pharisees to this title, it was used by the Maccabean princes down to the time of Hyrcanus II. (Jos. Ant. xvi. 6. 2).

ii. Next, it was written before 96 B.C., or some years earlier in the reign of Hyrcanus.—Since our author is of the strictest sect a Pharisee, and at the same time approves of the Maccabean pontificate, Jubilees cannot have been written later than 96 B.C., when the Pharisees and Alexander Jannæus came to open strife. Indeed, it is hard to conceive of its composition after the public breach between Hyrcanus and the Pharisees which is described in Josephus (Ant. xiii. 10. 5-6), and in the Talmud (Kiddush. 66a) with some variations in names and details. After that event—unfortunately the year is not given by any authority—Hyrcanus joined the Sadducean party, and forbade, under penalties, the observance of Pharisaic ordinances. Hence we may conclude that our book was written between 135 and the year of Hyrcanus’ breach with the Pharisees.

The above conclusions are confirmed by a large mass of evidence, which may be arranged under seven heads. Of these the first four point definitely to the latter half of the second century B.C. as the date of the composition of Jubilees; the remaining three give various grounds for postulating a pre-Christian date at any rate.

i. Our book points to the period—already past—of stress and persecution that preceded the recovery of national independence under the Maccabees.—Thus, it is impossible to ascribe to any other period the causes which led to the enactment or accentuation of the following laws:

(a) The Jews (“those who know . . . the law”) were forbidden to expose their persons by a law “prescribed on the heavenly tables.” This law was devised to forbid Jews taking part in the Greek games established by Jason the high-priest (see iii. 30-31, notes). It was not unnaturally derived from Gen. iii. 21, and was probably current for a generation before embodied by our author in his book.

(b) The law of circumcision is affirmed under the severest penalties (xv. 11-14, 26, 28). This law was observed in the creation of the highest angels (xv. 27). Yet Israel will, our author says, neglect it and “treat their members like the Gentiles” (xv. 33-34). Antiochus forbade circumcision under the penalty of death (1 Macc. i. 48, 60, 61; 2 Macc. vi. 10). There may be a reference also in our text to the Jews uncircumcising themselves, a practice which they resorted to under Antiochus Epiphanes in order to escape the scoffs of the heathen in the palaestra (1 Macc. i. 15; Joseph. Ant. xii. 5. 1).

(c) The Sabbath is re-enacted and its profanation is to be followed by the death penalty (ii. 17-32, l. 6-13). Non-observance of the Sabbath had been prevalent according to our author (xxiii. 19). Antiochus had forbidden the Jews to keep it (1 Macc. i. 39, 45; 2 Macc. vi. 6). Our text lays down the strictest sabbatical laws, such as were not in force at any time save in the second century B.C. or earlier. Thus war is absolutely forbidden (l. 12), and this prohibition was carried out, as we know, in the early Maccabean wars (see l. 12, note). But it was soon found impossible in practice (see note just referred to), and warfare on the Sabbath was subsequently permitted under a variety of circumstances (Bab. Shabb. i. 8; Shabb. 19*a*; Erub. 45*a*).

Again, a man is forbidden to cohabit with his wife (l. 8). This was the practice of the early Chasids; but this ascetic attitude to marriage is abandoned in the Mishna (see l. 8, note).

Again, riding on any beast is forbidden (l. 12). The enforcement of the law during the Syro-Grecian suzerainty is mentioned in the Talmud.

(d) Intermarriage with the heathen is absolutely prohibited by the penalty of death (xxx. 7-17). To give one's daughter to a Gentile was to give her to Moloch (xxx. 10, note). This question had for a long time before our author's date been of vital importance to Israel. But at no time could the danger from this source have been greater than during 200-160 B.C., when the destructive tendencies of Hellenism on Jewish character and religion had come to a head.

ii. Our book presupposes as its historical background the most flourishing period of the Maccabean hegemony.

(a) Only such a period could explain the assured spirit of triumph which led our author to anticipate a world-wide dominion and introduce that expectation into God's promise to Jacob in Gen. xxxv. 11-12: "I shall . . . multiply thee exceedingly, and kings will come forth from thee, and they will judge the sons of men wherever their foot has trodden.¹ And I shall give to thy seed all the earth which is under heaven . . . and they will get possession of the whole earth and inherit it for ever" (Jub. xxxii. 18-19).

(b) Only such a period could explain the pre-eminence assigned by our book to Levi over Judah. We have seen above (p. xlviii) that our author omitted Gen. xlix. because of the absolute pre-eminence above his brethren which is there assigned to Judah and the denunciation of Levi. But he goes further. Thus he ascribes to Levi's descendants the supreme offices of high-priest and civil ruler (xxxi. 14-17), but in regard to Judah, only Judah himself and one of his descendants (i.e. the Messiah) are mentioned as holding civil authority (xxxi. 18-20). Our author seems to imply that the royal descendants of David are no more, and that till the Messiah comes the Maccabees would hold the offices of high-priest and king. In later days when the Maccabees became a name of reproach, they were charged with usurping the throne of David (Pss. of Solomon xvii. 5, 6, 8) and the high-priesthood (Assumpt. Mos. vi. 1).

(c) The legend of the conquests of Esau's sons by the sons of Jacob in xxxvii.-xxxviii., points very clearly to the complete conquest of Edom by Judah in the Maccabean wars. In these wars the Edomites had sided with the Syrians till they were made tributary by John Hyrcanus. This subjection of Edom is referred to in xxxviii. 14, "The sons of Edom have not got quit of the yoke of servitude . . . until this day" (i.e. the author's time). See notes on xxxvii. 9-10, xxxviii. 4-9, where the fuller account in the Jalkut refers to 'Aqrabbim (1 Macc. v. 3), which as well as Adora were memorable as scenes connected with the Maccabean struggle.

This period also best explains the hatred which transformed Isaac's blessing of Esau into a curse (xxvi. 34).

(d) Again the Maccabean wars are adumbrated in the struggle of Jacob's sons with the Amorite kings in xxxiv. 1-9. This is clearer in the completer narrative in Test. Judah 3-7. The cities, Tappuah, Hazor, and Bethoron, which are mentioned here, are associated with notable victories and incidents in the Maccabean war. See notes on xxxiv. 4. So also Bousset, Zeitschrift f. NTliche Wissensch. 1900, pp. 202-205. But the reference to the Amorites is much more obvious in xxix. 10-11, where our author enumerates their chief cities and then grimly adds: "They have no longer length of life on the earth" (xxix. 10-11). Their practical annihilation, which is here referred to, was effected by Judas (see notes on xxix. 10).

(e) Our text reflects accurately the intense hatred of Judah towards the Philistines in the second cent. B.C. It declares that they will be put to the sword by the Kittim, i.e. the Macedonians under Alexander the Great, and subsequently fall into the hands of "the righteous nation" (xxiv. 28-29), and be exterminated, as they practically were by the Maccabees (see xxiv. 28-32, notes).

iii. Our author gives in an apocalypse a history of the Maccabean times (xxiii. 12-31), from the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes to the Messianic kingdom, the advent of which is just at hand. In this section we have the rise of the Chasids, who rebuke their elders for forsaking the law and the covenant (xxiii. 16), the general corruption which entails judgment on man and beast and leads to civil strife (xxiii. 17-20), the warlike efforts of the Maccabeans to reclaim the Hellenisers to Judaism (xxiii. 20-22), the sufferings of the nation through the repeated attacks of Syria (xxiii. 23-25), Israel's return to the law, and its gradual ethical and physical transformation in the Messianic kingdom and its triumph over its national foes (xxiii. 26-30). Our author stands already on the threshold of this happy time. It is, therefore, in the most prosperous days of the Maccabean dynasty, i.e., in the days of Simon or John Hyrcanus.

iv. Our book was used by the author of Eth. Enoch xci.-civ., and must, therefore, have been written at latest at the beginning of the first cent. B.C. (see § 19).

v. The textual affinities of our text connect it more closely with the form of Hebrew text, which is presupposed by the LXX (250 B.C.) and found in the Samaritan Pentateuch, than with that which lay behind the Syriac and later versions or Targums. From this evidence we may conclude at all events to a pre-Christian date (see § 10).

vi. Our text preserves older forms of the Haggada and Halacha than are found in the Talmud and later Jewish literature. The details will be found on referring to the notes on the various passages.

Haggada.—In i. 27 (see note) an angel reveals the law to Moses: according to later Judaism Moses receives it from God Himself. In ii. 2-3 angels are said to have been created on the first day: in later Judaism on the second or fifth. According to ii. 7 the Garden of Eden was created on the third day: according to later Judaism before the world. In xi. 2-6 the corruption of mankind is ascribed to the time of Serug: in later Judaism to that of Enos. In xii. 1-14 we have the primitive form of the saga so much developed in later Judaism about Ur of the Chaldees. In xix. 11 Abraham's marriage to Keturah is justified on the ground that Hagar was already dead, whereas later Judaism identifies Hagar and Keturah. In xxx. 2-6 the praise given to Levi and Simeon accords with Jewish views of the first and second cent. B.C. Later Judaism on the whole accepts the judgment pronounced on them in Genesis. Again our author records honestly the marriages of Simeon, Judah, and Joseph, to Gentile women, though such marriages must have in his eyes been full of offence. But later Judaism felt the offence to be too grave for toleration, and sought to establish the Hebrew descent of the women in question (see xxxiv. 20, xl. 10 notes). In xxxvii.-xxxviii. we have the oldest form of the legend of the war between Jacob's sons and the sons of Esau, and similarly in the case of the war between Egypt and Canaan in xlvi. 6-11. Later developments of these legends are found in rabbinic literature. Again, our text retains the original form of the traditions in Genesis, where later Judaism explained them away as offensive. Thus in iv. 15 the sons of God are rightly taken to be angels: in xxxiii. 2 the story of Reuben and Bilhah is accepted, but later Judaism manages to remove all that is objectionable in it. See also notes on iv. 12, xl. 10.

Halacha.—The severe halacha regarding the sabbath in l. 8, 12, were indubitably in force in the second cent. B.C., if not earlier, but were afterwards mitigated by the Mishna and later Judaism. Again the strict halacha in xv. 14 regarding circumcision on the eighth day was a current, probably the current, view in the second cent. B.C. and earlier, since it has the support of the Samaritan text and the LXX. This strict law was subsequently relaxed in the Mishna. In xxxii. 15 the severe law of tithing found in Lev. xxvii. 15 is enforced, but rabbinic tradition sought to weaken the statement. As regards the halacha laid down in iii. 31 regarding the duty of covering one's shame, it is highly probable that such a halacha did exist in the second cent. B.C., when Judaism was protesting against the exposure of the person in the Greek games. See also iii. 8-14 notes, and xx. 4 note.

Finally, we might draw attention to the fact that the Pharisaic regulation about pouring water on the altar (Jer. Sukk. iv. 6; Sukk. 44a) at the feast of tabernacles appears to have been unknown to him. We know that the attempt of the Pharisees to enforce its adoption on Alexander Jannaeus resulted in a massacre of the former.

vii. The following facts postulate a pre-Christian date for the composition of our book :—

(a) The calendar was in an unsettled state when our author wrote. No strict Pharisee, such as our author, could have advanced such a system as is laid down in vi. 28-33, unless at a period when no uniform calendar system was established. With it we may compare an allied system in Eth. Enoch lxxii.-lxxxii. There are good grounds for believing that our author grounded his system on the chronological statements regarding the flood in Genesis (see notes on p. 56).

(b) The divine title "Most High God." The use of this title is frequent in our author. This frequency, as appears in the note on xxxvi. 16, is characteristic of writings before the Maccabean era in the second cent. B.C. When once, however, the Maccabeans had assumed the title "priests of the Most High God," the divine title would naturally remain popular amongst those who, like our author, recognised the validity of the Maccabean pontificate. On the other hand, we should expect a decline in its use to set in with the rising unpopularity of the Maccabean dynasty. This disuse, indeed, is not apparent in the oldest anti-Maccabean work, Eth. Enoch xci.-civ., where the hostility to the Maccabeans is in an incipient stage. There the title "Most High" occurs nine times. But in the Pss. of Solomon and Eth. Enoch xxxvii.-lxx., where the hatred is open and unconcealed, this title is not found in the former and only twice in the latter. In the latter half of the first cent. A.D. there was a revival in its use as its Maccabean associations were forgotten.

(c) The phrase "feast of Pentecost," as a description of the feast of weeks, seems to have been unknown to our author (see note on vi. 17), though it was in use in the first cent. B.C.

§ 18. THE JUBILEES AND YEARS USED BY OUR AUTHOR

Our author claims that his chronological system is derived from the heavenly tables. From these tables it was made known to Moses directly by the angel of the presence, who assured Moses with regard to his disclosures on the solar year of 364 days: "It is not of my own devising, for the book (lies) written before me, and on the heavenly tables the division of days is ordained" (vi. 35). For the convenience of the reader I have reduced the jubilee reckonings to years and placed them in the margin.

The Jubilees.—The chronology is essentially heptadic. Each jubilee consists of seven year-weeks, and each year-week of seven years. It is probably on the ground of the sacred character of the number seven, and possibly also for the sake of symmetry, that our author makes his jubilee consist of forty-nine years instead of fifty, which was the usual reckoning among the Jews. R. Jehuda (Nedarim 61a—quoted by Beer), however, set down the jubilee at forty-nine years; and in the Samaritan Chronicle (Journal Asiatique, 1869, tom. xiv. No. 55, pp. 421-467) a system closely analogous to that of our author is found. Here the jubilee is reckoned at forty-nine and a fraction, which varies unintelligibly in extent, if the text is correct. Thus five jubilees = 246 years, forty jubilees = 1968 years, but sixty jubilees = 2951 years.

It is noteworthy also that, whereas our author applies the jubilee reckoning from the creation to the date of Israel's entering into Palestine, the Talmudic treatise Erachin 12-13a and the Samaritan Chronicle make the jubilee to begin with the settlement of Israel in Palestine, and while the former carries it down to the destruction of the first temple, the latter carries it down to many centuries after the Christian era.

In the Assumption of Moses the jubilee is also used in the chronological system of its author. Thus (i. 2) he reckons 2500 years to have elapsed from the creation of the world to the death of Moses, that is, fifty jubilees of fifty years each. Again, in x. 12 it is stated that from the death of Moses to the Messianic kingdom there will be 250 times (i.e. year-weeks) that is thirty-five jubilees of fifty years each. Thus from the creation to the Messianic kingdom there would be eighty-five jubilees. Cf. Sanh. 97b.

In one other work, the Seder Olam 23, 25, the jubilee period is occasionally used in the history of Israel and Judah contemporary with the reigns of Sennacherib and Nebuchadnezzar.

The Years.—Our author seems to have used a civil year and an ecclesiastical year, both of 364 days. The civil year consisted of twelve months (iv. 17, v. 27, vi. 29-30 note) of thirty days each and four intercalary days (vi. 23 note), one at the beginning of each quarter. The ecclesiastical year consisted of thirteen months of twenty-eight days each, and in accordance with it were regulated the great festivals, the Sabbaths, Passover, and Feast of Weeks (see notes on vi. 29-30, 32). Furthermore, this impossible solar year of 364 days was undoubtedly put forward in Pharisaic circles in the second cent. B.C., and its currency may date from a much earlier period. See note on vi. 32.

In my edition of the Ethiopic Enoch in 1893 I was the first to point out (pp. 25-29, 221-222, 263-264) that chaps. i.-xxxvi., lxxxiii.-xc., and xci.-civ. were from different authors. To the two former sections I assigned a date anterior to 161 B.C., and to the third a date subsequent to 95 B.C. We shall now find that the above critical results are confirmed in the main by the evidence of our text. Thus in my note on iv. 17-23 I have shown that our author had Eth. Enoch vi.-xvi., xxiii.-xxxvi., lxxii.-xc. before him. In confirmation of the conclusions in that note we should observe also that v. 1, 2, vii. 21, 22, 23, 24 of our text (see notes) presuppose vii. 1, 2, 5, ix. 1, 9 of the Eth. Enoch (see also Index I.).

Eth. Enoch xci.-civ. later than Jubilees.—Next as regards xci.-civ. we shall prove that it was subsequent to Jubilees and made use of that work. To begin with, these two writings exhibit certain resemblances. In both there is a temporary Messianic kingdom and an immortality of the soul implied or taught. On the other hand, the tone of Jubilees is optimistic and was written before the breach between the Pharisees and the Maccabean rulers, whereas Eth. Enoch xci.-civ. is pessimistic in tone and was written after the breach had led to the persecution of the Pharisees. We shall now adduce a variety of passages from both books which will establish the dependent relation of this section of the Eth. Enoch on Jubilees.

(a) From a comparison of vii. 29 (see note) and xxii. 22 of our text with Eth. Enoch ciii. 7, 8 it follows that the latter is based on the former. In our text Sheol is not yet associated with fire and burning; but this stage, which combines the characteristics of Sheol and Gehenna, is already attained in the latter work.

(b) In Jub. i. 16 it is promised to Israel that "they will be the head and not the tail." In Eth. Enoch ciii. 11 we have: "they hoped to be the head and have become the tail."

(c) In Jub. i. 29 a new heavens and a new earth were promised. In the despondent Eth. Enoch xci. 16 only a new heaven.

(d) According to Jub. xxxii. 18 Israel is to "judge all the nations according to their desires."¹ In Eth. Enoch xciv. 3 righteous Israel is to "execute judgment on them (the sinners) according to their desires," and in xcvi. 1 is to "have lordship over them according to their desires."

(e) With Jub. xxiii. 31, "their spirits will have much joy," compare Eth. Enoch civ. 4, "ye will have great joy as the angels," where both expressions are applied to the spirits of the blessed after death. Also ciii. 4, "And your spirits—the spirits of you who have died in righteousness—will live and rejoice."

(f) In Jub. xxii. 16 it is said with regard to the wicked "become not their associate," and in Eth. Enoch civ. 6, "have no companionship with them," and in xci. 4, "associate not with those of a double heart." In xcvi. 4, the wicked are said to be the "companions of sinners."

(g) With Jub. xii. 2, "What help and profit have we from those idols," cf. Eth. Enoch xcix. 7, "No help will be found in them" (i.e. idols).

(h) Eating blood is condemned in Jub. vii. 28, 29, etc. cf. Eth. Enoch xcvi. 11.

(i) The law is spoken of as "the eternal law" Eth. Enoch xcix. 2, "the law for all future generations" xciii. 6, (cf. xcix. 14), as we might expect in a writer influenced by Jubilees. Throughout all the older sections of Enoch the law is not mentioned.

(k) The references to "the plant of righteousness" (Eth. Enoch xciii. 10), or "of righteous judgment" (xciii. 5), or "of uprightness" (xciii. 2), may be due in part to Jub. i. 16 "plant of uprightness," or "a plant of righteousness" (xvi.

¹ In xxxii. 18 for "judge everywhere wherever the foot of the sons of men have trodden," read with Latin "judge the sons of men wherever their foot has trodden." Based partly on Deut. xi. 24.

26, xxi. 24). The phrase, however, occurs already in Eth. Enoch x. 16.

(b) Eth. Enoch ci. 2: "when he . . . withholds the rain and the dew from descending on the earth" (cf. c. 12), is found almost verbally in Jub. xii. 4, "who causes the rain and the dew to descend on the earth" (cf. xii. 18, xx. 9).

Eth. Enoch, i.-v. later than Jubilees.—The evidence in respect to the relative dates of this section and Jubilees is not conclusive, but so far as it exists it implies the priority of the latter.

Thus, in Eth. Enoch iii. the words "all the trees . . . shed all their leaves except fourteen trees," most probably go back to Jub. xxi. 12-13 where fourteen evergreen trees are enumerated which were to be used on the altar, cp. Test. Levi 9.

Again, Eth. Enoch v. 9, "They will complete the number of the days of their life, and their lives will grow old in peace and the years of their joy will be many," seems to be an expansion of Jub. xxiii. 29, "All their days they will complete and live in peace and in joy."

Finally, Eth. Enoch i.-v. appears to be later than the Test. XII. Patriarchs, a sister work of Jubilees, but this subject cannot be pursued further here.

The Book of Noah.—This book is referred to twice in our text, i.e. in x. 13, xxi. 10. Our author, moreover, has taken over bodily two considerable sections from it and incorporated them in vii. 20-39, x. 1-15. Thus the Book of Noah was written before 135-105 B.C. But its composition goes back to a much earlier date. Chapters vi.-xi. of the Ethiopic Enoch are clearly from the same source; for they make no reference to Enoch but bring forward Noah (x. 1), and treat of the sin of the angels that led to the flood, and of their temporal and eternal punishment. This section is compounded of the Semjaza and Azazel myths, and in its present composite form is already presupposed by Eth. Enoch lxxxviii.-lxxxix. 1. Hence in its present form it is earlier than 166 B.C. Chapters lx., lxv.-lxix. 25, cvi.-cvii. of the same work are also derived from the Book of Noah and probably xxxix. 1, 2^a, xli. 3-8, xliii.-xliv., liv. 7-lv. 2, lix., but not in their present form. There appears to be no adequate ground for assigning these sections of that ancient work to a later date than those above discussed.

The above facts throw some light on the strange vicissitudes to which even the traditional legends were subject. Thus it would appear that the Noah saga is older than the Enoch, and that the latter was built up in part on the debris of the former. And just as the Noah saga made way for the Enoch, so the Enoch saga in turn made way for the Seth, as I have shown at some length in the notes on pp. 33-36.

§ 20. THE RELATION OF JUBILEES TO THE TESTAMENTS OF THE XII. PATRIARCHS

From a comparison of the passages in our author and the Testaments which treat of the same subjects, it is clear that neither of the two works is dependent on the other, but that both draw independently from the same sources. See notes on xxviii. 9, xxx. 2-6, 18, 25, xxxi. 3-4, 13, 15, 16, xxxii. 1, 8, xxxiii. 1, 2, 4, xxxiv. 1-9, xxxvii.-xxxviii., xli. 8-14, 24-25, xlv. 6-9.

I hope to treat this question exhaustively in my edition of the Testaments.

From §§ 15, 17 it follows without further need of proof that our author was a pharisee of the strictest sect. He was an upholder of the everlasting validity of the law, he held the strictest views on circumcision, the sabbath and on the duty of shunning all intercourse with the Gentiles: he believed in angels and demons § 16, and in a blessed immortality. In § 14 we have shown that he was an extreme representative of the midrashic tendency which had been already at work for centuries.

In the next place our author was a supporter of the Maccabean pontificate. He glorifies Levi's successors as high-priests and civil rulers (xxx. 13-17), and applies to them the title assumed by the Maccabean princes (xxxii. 1). He was not, however, so thorough-going an admirer as the authors of the Test. Levi 18, or Psalm cx. who expected the Messiah to come forth from the Maccabean family (see notes on xxx. 18-19, xxxii. 1).

That our author was a priest might be reasonably inferred from the exaltation of Levi over Judah (xxx.-xxxii.) and from the statement in xlv. 16, that the secret traditions, which our author claims to publish, were kept in the hands of Levi's descendants.

§ 22. JUBILEES IN JEWISH, SAMARITAN, AND CHRISTIAN NON-CANONICAL LITERATURE

In Jewish Literature.

In Jewish and Samaritan Literature.—Eth. Enoch i.-v. (?), xci.-civ.; Wisdom (?), 4 Ezra, Chronicles of Jerahmeel, Midrash Tadshe, Book of Jashar, Samaritan Chronicle.

On Eth. Enoch i.-v., xci.-civ. see pp. lxix-lxxi above.

Wisdom.—It is not possible to establish conclusively that our book was used by the author of Wisdom. There are, however, amid great differences, strong affinities between them. Thus both teach a temporary Messianic kingdom and a blessed immortality of the soul. In Jubilees apparently for the first time God is called the Father of the righteous individual Israelite (i. 24 note): in Wisdom this view is frequently and emphatically taught (ii. 13, 18, v. 5, xii. 7, 21). Again in Jubilees the law of retaliation is enunciated in its most literal form (iv. 31, xlviii. 14, notes), and the same phenomenon meets us in Wisdom, xi. 16: δι' ὧν τις ἀμαρτάνει, διὰ τούτων κολλάζεται. Cf. also xi. 7, xii. 23, xvi. 1, xviii. 4, 5. Finally either xlviii. 14 of our text or some authority of a like nature seems to have been before the writer of Wisdom xviii. 5:

βουλευσαμένους αὐτοὺς τὰ τῶν ὁσίων ἀποκτείνειν νήπια καὶ ἐνὸς ἐκτεθέντος τέκνου [καὶ σωθέντος]
εἰς ἔλεγχον τὸ αὐτῶν ἀφείλω πλῆθος [τέκνων],
καὶ ὁμοθυμαδὸν ἀπώλεσας ἐν ὕδατι σφοδρῶ.

In both passages the destruction of the Egyptians in retaliation for the casting of the Hebrew children into the river is dealt with, though this is obscured by the glosses καὶ σωθέντος and τέκνων,¹ which I have bracketed as additions of an early scribe who misinterpreted the passage of Moses. In Jub. xlviii. 14 it is said that 1000 Egyptians were destroyed on account of every Hebrew child that was cast into the river. This sense we recover from the Greek on omitting the gloss: "In retribution for even a single child that was exposed Thou didst take away the multitude of them." But the passage is still unsatisfactory, for πλῆθος in the text which = רוב was corrupt in the original source (? Jubilees) as in Hosea viii. 12 for רוב = 10,000. Thus we have: "In retribution for even a single child that was exposed Thou didst take away 10,000 of them," i.e. of those who had taken counsel to destroy the Hebrew children. 10,000 may be more accurate than the 1000 which stands in Jub. xlviii. 14. I have found the same corruption in Ethiopic MSS.

4 Ezra.—There can be little doubt that our book is referred to in 4 Ezra xiv. 4-6, where it is said of Moses: Et misi eum et eduxit populum meum de Aegypto, et adduxi eum super montem Sina et detinui eum apud me diebus multis, Et enarravi ei mirabilia multa, et ostendi ei temporum secreta et temporum finem, et praecepi ei dicens: Haec in palam facies verba et haec abscondes. The haec here refers to Jubilees (see i. 26 notes), which was handed down in the tribe of Levi (xlv. 16) till its publication by our author.

In 4 Ezra vi. 20 the words, libri aperientur ante faciem firmamenti et omnes videbunt simul, refer to the books in which the deeds of men are recorded. These books were kept by Enoch according to our text iv. 23, x. 17.

In x. 46, the date in the words: factum est post annorum tria millia (Syr., Eth., Arab., but Lat. = annos tres) aedificavit Salomon civitatem et obtulit oblationes, appears to be based on that given in Jubilees. If with Joseph. (Ant. viii. 3. 1.) we reckon 592 years from the Exodus to the building of Solomon's temple or 588 years with Sulpicius Severus (Chron. i. 40, 4 sq.) and take, as our author, 2410 to be the year of the Exodus, then we arrive at 3002 or 2998 (see for these and other reckonings Hilgenfeld, Messias Judeorum, p. 83). Again on p. 109 of the work just mentioned Hilgenfeld gives good grounds for assuming that in 4 Ezra xiv. 48 (Syr. Eth.,) the text originally contained a computation in jubilees. See also Rösensch, Das Buch der Jubiläen, pp. 412-414.

Chronicles of Jerahmeel.—This Hebrew work, which has been translated by Gaster, contains a great deal of subject-matter in common with our book. At times it reproduces the actual words of our text. I have no doubt that our text was used by some of the authors of this compilation. See Index II. for references to the parallel passages.

Midrash Tadshe.—This Midrash was written about the beginning of the eleventh cent. A.D. by Moses ha-Darshan, but was based on an early work by Rabbi Pinchas ben Jair who in turn drew his materials from our text (see Eppstein, Revue des Étude juives, 1890, xxi. 80-97; 1891, xxii. 1-25; Bacher, Die Agada der Tannaiten, ii. 499). By consulting Index II. the reader will find the passages which are common to this Midrash and our text.

The Book of Jashar.—This late Hebrew work contains much matter in common with our text, and there is every probability that some of it is derived from it ultimately as its source. See Index II. for a list of parallels. The Hebrew text of this book which I have quoted occasionally, is that which was published at Venice in 1629. Generally, however, I have referred to the French translation of it in Migne's series.

The Samaritan Chronicle.—This book, to which we have already drawn attention (see p. lxvii), belongs for the most part to the twelfth cent. A.D. It appears to contain a deliberate polemic (see vi. 36 note) against the view of our author that calculations should be made according to the sun only. In keeping with the fact that our author gives his calendar in connection with the flood (vi. 29-38), this Chronicle says that the Samaritan system was known to Noah in the Ark. For a remarkable point of agreement between this Chronicle and our text see note v. 22. Also it cannot be an accident that in the case of the antediluvian patriarchs, their respective ages on the birth of their eldest sons agree in both books in every instance except in that of

Seth. Rönsch (p. 362) has tabulated the numbers as follows :

	Jub.	Sam. Chron.
Adam on the birth of his eldest son was aged	130	130
Seth " " "	130	60-66
Enoch " " "	90	90
Kenan " " "	70	70
Mahalalel " " "	65	66
Jared " " "	62	61
Henoch " " "	65	65
Methuselah " " "	67	67
Lamech " " "	53	53

Hence it is not strange that in some cases we are able to determine missing dates in our text from this Chronicle (see iv. 28 note). On the other hand these two works hardly ever harmonise on the ages of the post-diluvian patriarchs till Terah's time, and the Chronicle, as we should expect, omits Kainam which our text (viii. 1) along with the LXX puts forward as the son of Arpachshad.

In Christian literature.—The Christian literature in which Jubilees is reproduced either by name or anonymously will be treated under the following heads :

- i. Authors who cite Jubilees or the Little Genesis by name.
- ii. *Patristic and other writings which reproduce its text or matter anonymously.*¹

i. Authors who cite Jubilees or the Little Genesis by name :

DIDYMUS OF ALEXANDRIA (309 or 314 to 394 or 399 A.D.) in epist. canonicas enarrationes, ad I. Joan. iii. 12 (Gallandi, Biblioth. patr. vi. 300): Nam et in libro qui leptogenesis (MS leprogenesis) appellatur, ita legitur, quia Cain lapide aut ligno percusserit Abel. See Jub. iv. 31.

JEROME (ob. 420).—See quotations in notes on x. 21, xi. 11-13. For other quotations see Index II.

Decretum Gelasii.—In this decree (de libris recipiendis et non recipiendis), the date of which is doubtful (see Zahn, Gesch. des Kanons, II. i. 259-267), our book is included among the writings to be rejected: Liber de filiabus Adae, hoc est Leptogenesis, apocryphus.

SEVERUS OF ANTIOCH (ob. 542).—In an exposition of Deut. xxxiv. 6 this author has (see Nicephorus, Catena, i. 1672-1673) described the destinies that await the good and the evil souls on their separation from the body, and various incidents relating to the contest between Michael and Satan for the soul of Moses. He adds that his statements are drawn from our author: ταῦτα δὲ ἐν ἀποκρύφῳ βιβλίῳ λέγεται κεῖσθαι λεπτοτέραν ἔχοντι τῆς Γενέσεως ἥτοι τῆς κτίσεως τὴν ἀφήγησιν. On this question see above, p. xv note.

NICEPHORUS, Catena, i. 175.—(This catena, published over 120 years ago, contains extracts from writers from the beginning of the Christian era to the seventh cent.) Before the words quoted from this work in the note on x. 21 we find the title of the source given as ἡ διαθήκη. It is most probable that we should add here τοῦ Μωϋσέως (see p. xvii).

SYNCELLUS (flor. 800 A.D.), Chronographia (ed. Dindorf), i. 5: ὡς ἐν λεπτῇ φέρεται Γενέσει, ἣν καὶ Μωϋσέως εἶναι φασί τινες ἀποκάλυψιν. i. 7: ἐκ τῆς λεπτῆς Γενέσεως καὶ τοῦ λεγομένου βίου Ἀδάμ. i. 13: ἐκ τῶν λεπτῶν Γενέσεως. i. 14: (see quotation in note on p. 28). i. 49 (see quotation in note on x. 1). i. 183: τὸν κατὰ μητέρα πάππον τοῦ Ἀβραὰμ ἡ λεπτὴ Γένεσις φησιν ὅτι Ἀβραὰμ ἐκαλεῖτο, ἡ δὲ Σάρρα ἀδελφὴ ὁμοπατρία τοῦ Ἀβραὰμ ὑπῆρχε. i. 185 (see quotation in note on xii. 26). i. 192: Μαστιφὰμ ὁ ἄρχων τῶν δαιμονίων, ὡς φησιν ἡ λεπτὴ Γένεσις, προσελθὼν τῷ θεῷ εἶπεν, εἰ ἀγαπᾷ σε Ἀβραάμ, θυσάτω σοι τὸν υἱὸν αὐτοῦ (see our text, xvii. 16). i. 203: βιασθεὶς Ἰακώβ ὑπὸ Ἰούδα ἐνέτεινε τόξον καὶ πλήξας κατὰ τοῦ δεξιοῦ μαζοῦ τὸν Ἡσαὺ κατέβαλε. τοῦ δὲ θανόντος ἀνοίξαντες τὰς πύλας οἱ υἱοὶ Ἰακώβ ἀνείλυν τοὺς πλείστους. ταῦτα ἐν λεπτῇ Γενέσει φέρεται (see our text, xxxviii. 1 sqq.). For passages where Syncellus has used our text without acknowledgment see Index II.

CEDRENUS (ed. Bekker), i. 6: ἀπὸ τῆς λεπτῆς Γενέσεως. i. 9: ὡς ἐν λεπτῇ φέρεται Γενέσει, ἣν καὶ Μωσέως εἶναι φασί τινες ἀποκάλυψιν. i. 16 (see quotation in note on iv. 31-32). i. 48: ἄγγελος δὲ κυρίου ἐδίδαξεν αὐτὸν τὴν Ἑβραϊδα γλῶσσαν, καθὼς αὐτὸς ὁ ἄγγελος τῷ Μωϋσῇ εἶπεν, ὡς ἐπὶ τῇ λεπτῇ Γενέσει. i. 53: ἐν τῇ λεπτῇ Γενέσει κεῖται, ὅτι Μαστιφὰτ ὁ ἄρχων τῶν δαιμονίων (and so on as in Syncellus, i. 192, above). i. 85 (see quotation in note on xlvii. 3). i. 87: νόμους δὲ πρῶτον Μωϋσῆς γράφει τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις . . . διδασκόμενος παρὰ τοῦ ἀρχαγγέλου Γαβριὴλ τὰ περὶ τῆς γενέσεως τοῦ κόσμου . . . καὶ τὰς τῶν ἄστρων θέσεις καὶ τὰ στοιχεῖα . . . ὡς ἐν τῇ λεπτῇ Γενέσει κεῖται. For some of the passages where Cedrenus has used our text without acknowledgment see Index II.

ZONARAS (1081-1118, ed. Pinder), i. 18: οἶδα μὲν οὖν ἐν τῇ λεπτῇ Γενέσει γεγραμμένον ὡς ἐν τῇ πρώτῃ ἡμέρᾳ καὶ αἱ οὐρανίαι δυνάμεις πρὸ τῶν ἄλλων ὑπέστησαν παρὰ τοῦ τῶν ὅλων δημιουργοῦ. Cf. our text, ii. 2.

GLYCAS (circa 1150, ed. Bekker), p. 198: οὐδὲ γὰρ ὡς πόδας κεκτημένου τὸ πρότερον καθὰ Ἰωσηππὸς τέ φησι καὶ ἡ λεγομένη λεπτή Γένεσις νῦν ἀποφαίνεται τὸν ἐπὶ τῇ κοιλίᾳ περίπατον. See also p. 206. P. 392 (see quotation in note on iii. 8-14). On p. 206 Glycas wrongly attributes to Josephus what is found in Jub. xxxii. 2-3. For some of the passages where Glycas has used our text without acknowledgment see Index II.

ii. Patristic and other writings which reproduce the text or matter of Jubilees anonymously:

HIPPOLYTUS.—The Διαμερισμὸς τῆς γῆς which is assigned to this writer is based on Jub. viii.-ix. See Gutschmidt, Kleine Schriften, v. 239, 587-597, 613 sqq. (quoted by Schürer).

PS.-CLEMENS ROMANUS, Recognitiones (circa 200 A.D.).—This work contains many echoes of Jubilees, see Rönsch, op. cit. 322-325.

ORIGEN (185-254) in Genesin in Eusebius' Praep. Evang. vi. 292 (Migne, xxi. 500). The passage which is quoted from Origen in the note on xxxii. 21 seems to refer to that passage. Another quotation will be found in the note on xlv. 14. The Προσευχὴ Ἰωσήφ, from which this quotation is taken, is cited in the third place in the Synopsis of the Ps.-Athanasius and the Stichometry of Nicephorus, and in the fifth place of the catalogue in the Cod. Coislinianus used by Montfaucon, and in each catalogue immediately after the Πατριάρχαι (cf. Rönsch, p. 332). According to Nicephorus it consisted of 1100 stichoi—the same number as the Testament of Moses, which was identified by some writers with Jubilees. Both Origen (tom. v. in Johannen, p. 77) and Glycas (see Fabric. Cod. Pseud. V.T. i. 765, 768) state that it was current among the Hebrews.

Another fragment of Origen preserved in the Catena of Nicephorus, i. 463, is quoted in the note on xl. 10.

DIODORUS OF ANTIOCH (ob. 392 ?).—See quotation in note on x. 35.

ISIDORE PELUSIOTA of Alexandria, who lived in the fifth cent., gives the following exposition on Deut. xxxiii. 9 (Nicephorus, Cat. i. 1660): ἐπειδὴ ἐπελύτησε τῇ πατρίᾳ εὐνῇ ὁ Ῥουβείμ, διὰ τοῦτο οὔτε βασιλείας οὔτε ἱερωσύνης ἤξιώθη, καίτοι πρωτότοκος ὢν. ἀλλ' ὁ μὲν Λευὶ τρίτος ὢν οὐ μόνον διὰ τὸ ἐπαγγεῖλασθαι τὸν πατέρα δεκάτην ἀφιερῶσειν· κάτωθεν γὰρ ἀριθμούμενος δέκατος ἦν, ἄνωθεν δὲ εἰ ἡριθμήθη, εἰς τῶν παιδισκῶν ἠύρισκετο· ἀλλὰ καὶ δι' ὁσιότητα, καὶ τὸ συγγενικῶν αἱμάτων διὰ τὴν εἰς τὸ θεῖον τιμὴν τὰς χεῖρας ἐμπλῆσαι, ἱερωσύνης ἤξιώθη. . . . ὁ δὲ Ἰούδας τέταρτος ὢν, διὰ τὴν ἀδέκαστον κρίσιν, καὶ τὴν ὀρθὴν ψῆφον, βασιλείας ἤξιώθη. ἐπειδὴ γὰρ πολλοὶ τὰ οἰκεῖα κρύπτοντες πλημμελήματα ἐτέρους καταδικάζουσιν, οὗτος δὲ ἑαυτοῦ μὲν κατεψηφίσατο, . . . διὰ τοῦτο εἰκότως τῆς βασιλείας ἤξιοῦτο. ἱερῶντο γὰρ οἱ ἐκ Λευῖ, ἐβασίλευον δὲ οἱ ἐξ Ἰούδα, οὐ κατὰ κατακλήρωσιν, ἀλλ' ἀρετῆς γέρας εἰληφότες. This exposition regarding Levi is based on Jub. xxxii. 2-3, and regarding Judah on xxxi. 18-20, xli. 23-28.

ISIDORE OF SEVILLE (ob. 636), Origines, xvi. 26. 10: In principio Deus xxii opera fecit. Nam prima die vii opera fecit, id est: materiam informem, angelos, lucem, coelos superiores, terram, aquam atque aërem. Secunda die firmitamentum solum. Tertia die quattuor: maria, semina, sationes atque plantaria. Quarta die tria: solem et lunam et stellas. Quinta die tria: pisces et reptilia aquarum et volatilia. Sexta die quattuor: bestias, pecudes, reptilia terrae et hominem. Et facta sunt omnia xxii genera in diebus sex. Et xxii generationes sunt ab Adam usque ad Jacob, . . . et xxii libri Veteris Testamenti usque ad Hester, et xxii literarum sunt elementa.

enumeration of the works of the first day it deviates considerably (see Jub. ii. 2 sqq.). Observe that it confirms our view of a lacuna after ii. 22.

SUIDAS, a Greek grammarian of the tenth or eleventh cent. (Fabricius, i. 336). καὶ τὴν τῶν ἀστέρων κίνησιν, ἐκ τοῦ πατρὸς γὰρ ἐπαιδεύετο τὴν ἀστρονομίαν κ.τ.λ. Cf. Jub. xii. 16. See also note on xii. 2.

JOEL, Chronographia (ed. Bekker, 1836), extending to the year 1206 A.D. This writer, whom I have referred to occasionally in my notes, is generally dependent on Syncellus, Cedrenus or Glycas for any matter which he has in common with our text. It is possible, as Rösensch (p. 367) urges, that the phrase καὶ ἐξολοθρεύειν αὐτὸν ἀπειλοῦντος (Joel, p. 10 (cf. Jub. xxxvii. 23)) testifies to an independent knowledge of Jubilees, as it is not found in those earlier chronographers.

LXX MS (thirteenth cent.), cited as no. 135 in Holmes

and Parsons' edition, and as r in Lagarde's Genesis Graece, 1868. The scholia in this MS attest many of the personal names which are found in Jubilees. I have cited all of these in their appropriate places in my Ethiopic Text of Jubilees, and many of them in the notes to my translation. See Index II.

LXX MS z in Lagarde's edition contains two readings which come from our text. See notes on v. 31 and vi. 1.

GREGORIUS BARHEBRAEUS (1226-1286).—See note on xi. 11-13.

§ 23. INFLUENCE OF JUBILEES ON THE NEW TESTAMENT

The points of connection between the gospels and our author are very slight, except in the beliefs respecting angels and demons—a subject to which we shall return later. We shall now place the passages side by side where the New Testament is dependent on our text, or presupposes it, or presents a close parallel.

Mark iii. 22 (Matt. xii. 24).—ὁ ἀρχὼν τῶν δαιμονίων.

Luke xi. 49.—“Therefore also said the wisdom of God: I will send unto them prophets and apostles, and some of them they will kill and persecute.

John xiv. 26.—“The Holy Spirit . . . will bring to your remembrance all things, etc.”

Acts vii. 15-16.—“And he (Jacob) died, himself and our fathers, and they were carried over unto Shechem, and laid in the tomb that Abraham bought, etc.”

Jub. x. 8.—“Chief of the spirits”; xlviii. 9, 12, “Prince of the Mastêmâ.”

i. 12.—“And I shall send witnesses unto them, that I may witness against them, but they will . . . slay the witnesses also and persecute those who seek the law.”

xxxii. 25.—“I will bring all things to thy remembrance.” Here God is to cause Jacob to remember all that he had seen in a vision.

xlvi. 9.—“And the children of Israel brought forth all the bones of the children of Jacob save the bones of Joseph, and they buried them in the field in the double cave” (i.e. Machpelah). This is the oldest source of the tradition in Acts.

Acts vii. 23.—Moses when “well nigh forty years old” smote the Egyptian.

Acts vii. 30.—Moses spent forty years in Midian.

Acts vii. 53.—“Who received the law as it was ordained by angels and kept it not.” Cf. Gal. iii. 19.

Acts ix. 2.—“If he found any that were of the way.”

Rom. iv. 15.—“Where there is no law, neither is there transgression.”

2 Cor. v. 17.—“A new creation” (Gal. vi. 15).

2 Cor. vi. 18.—“I will be to you a Father and ye shall be to me sons and daughters.”

Gal. ii. 15.—“Sinners of the Gentiles.”

Gal. iii. 17.—“A covenant confirmed beforehand by God, the law which came 430 years later, etc.” Does the confirmation here spoken of mean the birth of Isaac? In that case 430 years exactly elapse between this confirmation of the covenant and the law according to Jubilees.

Gal. v. 12.—“I would that they which unsettle you (i.e. Judaisers) would cut off the member” (ἀποκόψονταί).

xlvi. 10-12.—Moses forty-two years old.¹

xlvi. 1.—Moses spent thirty-eight years.¹

i. 27.—“And He said to the angel of the presence: Write for Moses, etc.” i. 14: “They will forget . . . thy law.” Our text is the earliest authority for the statement that the law was given through angels.

xxiii. 20.—“Turn them back into the way.”

xxxiii. 15-16.—Anticipates this Pauline doctrine.

v. 12.—“A new and righteous nature.”

i. 24.—“I shall be their Father and they will be My children.”²

xxiii. 23.—“Sinners of the Gentiles” (cf. xxiii. 24).

xv. 4 sqq. contains the covenant made in 1979 A.M. with Abraham on his circumcision. The law was given in 2410. Hence 2410 - 1979 = 431. Isaac was born in 1980, or exactly 430 years before the legislation on Sinai according to Jubilees.

Contrast xv. 27, according to which the angels were created circumcised.

2 Thess. ii. 3.—“Son of perdition.”

1 Tim. i. 4.—“Fables and endless genealogies.” iv. 7: “old wives’ fables.” Titus iii. 9: “Genealogies and strifes and fightings about the law.”

James i. 13.—“Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God, for God tempteth no man.”

James ii. 23.—“Abraham believed God and it was counted to him for righteousness and he was called the friend of God.”

2 Peter ii. 5.—“Noah, a preacher of righteousness.”

2 Peter iii. 13.—“New heavens and a new earth.”

2 Peter iii. 8.—“One day is with the Lord as a thousand years.”

Rev. i. 6.—“A kingdom, priests.” v. 10: “A kingdom and priests.”

Rev. iv. 5 (xi. 19, xvi. 18; cf. viii. 5).—“Lightnings and voices and thunderings.”

x. 3.—“Sons of perdition.”

The Pauline phrases form a just description of a large portion of Jubilees. The “old wives’ fables” may be an allusion to the large rôle played by women in it.

The author of Jubilees enforces the same view by representing Mastêmâ as suggesting the temptation of Abraham to sacrifice Isaac (xvii. 16), as hardening the hearts of the Egyptians (xlviii. 12, 17), etc.

xiv. 6.—“And he believed on the Lord and it was counted to him for righteousness” (Gen. xv. 6). xix. 9: “He was found faithful and was recorded on the heavenly tables as the friend of God.”

vii. 20-39 contains Noah’s sermon.

i. 29.—“The heavens and the earth shall be renewed, etc.”

iv. 30 contains the oldest dogmatic statement of this fact.

xvi. 18.—“A kingdom and priests.” Our text alone gives this form of Exod. xix. 6 antecedently to Revelation.

ii. 2.—“Angels of the voices and of the thunder and of the lightnings.”

Angelology.—We shall confine our attention here to notable parallels between our author and the New Testament. Besides the angels of the presence and the angels of sanctification there are the angels who are set over natural phenomena (ii. 2). These angels are inferior to the former. They do not observe the Sabbath as the higher orders; for they are necessarily always engaged in their duties (ii. 18). It is the higher orders that are generally referred to in the New Testament; but the angels over natural phenomena are referred to in Revelation: angels of the winds in vii. 1, 2, the angel of fire in xiv. 18, the angel of the waters in xvi. 5 (cf. Jub. ii. 2). Again, the guardian angels of individuals, which the New Testament refers to in Matt. xviii. 10 (Acts xii. 15), are mentioned, for the first time, in Jubilees xxxv. 17. On the angelology of our author see § 16.

Demonology.—The demonology of our author reappears for the most part in the New Testament:

(a) The angels which kept not their first estate Jude 6; 2 Peter ii. 4, are the angelic watchers who, though sent down to instruct mankind (Jub. iv. 15), fell from lusting after the daughters of men. Their fall and punishment are recorded in Jub. iv. 22, v. 1-9.

(b) The demons are the spirits which went forth from the souls of the giants who were the children of the fallen angels, Jub. v. 7, 9. These demons attacked men and ruled over them (x. 3, 6). Their purpose is to corrupt and lead astray and destroy the wicked (x. 8). They are subject to the prince of the Mastêmâ¹ (x. 9), or Satan. Men sacrifice to them as gods (xxii. 17). They are to pursue their work of moral ruin till the judgment of Mastêmâ (x. 8) or the setting up of the Messianic kingdom, when Satan will be no longer able to injure mankind (xxiii. 29).

So in the New Testament, the demons are disembodied spirits (Matt. xii. 43-45; Luke xi. 24-26). Their chief is Satan (Mark iii. 22). They are treated as divinities of the heathen (1 Cor. x. 20). They are not to be punished till the final judgment (Matt. viii. 29). On the advent of the Millennium Satan will be bound (Rev. xx. 2-3).

§ 24. VIEWS OF THE AUTHOR ON THE MESSIAH, THE MESSIANIC KINGDOM, THE PRIESTHOOD OF MELCHIZEDEK, THE LAW, CIRCUMCISION AND THE SABBATH, THE FUTURE LIFE, THE JEWISH CALENDAR

The Messiah.—Although our author is an upholder of the Maccabean dynasty he still clings like the writer of Eth. Enoch lxxxiii.-xc. to the hope of a Messiah sprung from Judah. He makes, however, only one reference to this Messiah, and no rôle of any importance is assigned to him (see xxxi. 18 note). The Messianic expectation showed no vigorous life throughout this century till it was identified with the Maccabean family. If we are right in regarding the Messianic kingdom as of temporary duration, this is the first instance in which the Messiah is associated with a temporary Messianic kingdom.

The Messianic Kingdom.—In the notes on i. 29, xxiii. 30 I have dealt at some length with the character of this kingdom. We have there seen that it was to be brought about gradually by the progressive spiritual development of man and a corresponding transformation of nature. Its members were to attain to the full limit of 1000 years in happiness and peace. During its continuance the powers of evil were to be restrained (xxiii. 29). The last judgment was apparently to take place at its close (see note on xxiii. 30). On the probable derivation of this view from Mazdeism see note on i. 29.

The writer of Jubilees, we can hardly doubt, thought that the era of the Messianic kingdom had already set in. Such an expectation was often cherished in the prosperous days of the Maccabees. Thus it was entertained by the writer of Eth. Enoch lxxxiii.-xc. in the days of Judas before 161 B.C. Whether Jonathan was looked upon as the divine agent for introducing the kingdom we cannot say, but as to Simon being regarded in this light there is no doubt. Indeed his contemporaries came to regard him as the Messiah himself, as we see from Psalm cx., or the noble Messianic hymn in Test. Levi 18. The tame effusion in 1 Macc. xiv. 8-15 is a relic of such literature, which was emasculated by its Sadducean editor. Simon was succeeded by John Hyrcanus in 135 B.C., and this great prince seemed to his countrymen to realise the expectations of the past; for according to a contemporary writer (Test. Levi 8) he embraced in his own person the triple office of prophet, priest, and civil ruler (see note on xxxi. 15), while, according to the Test. Reuben 6, he was to "die on behalf of Israel in wars seen and unseen." In both these passages he seems to be accorded the Messianic office, but not so in our author as we have seen above. Hyrcanus is only to introduce the Messianic kingdom, over which the Messiah sprung from Judah is to rule.¹

Priesthood of Melchizedek.—That there was originally an account of Melchizedek in our text we have shown in the note xiii. 25, and that the Maccabean high-priests deliberately adopted the title applied to him in Gen. xiv., we have pointed out in the note on xxxii. 1. It would be interesting to inquire how far the writer of Hebrews was indebted to the history of the great Maccabean king-priests for the idea of the Melchizedekian priesthood, of which he has made so fruitful a use in chap. vii. as applied to our Lord.

The Law.—On our author's conception of the law as the ideal and eternal realised under time relations see pp. li sqq.

Circumcision and the Sabbath.—On our author's exalted conceptions of these two bulwarks of Judaism, see p. 1.

The Future Life.—In our text all hope of a resurrection of the body is abandoned. The souls of the righteous will enjoy a blessed immortality after death (xxiii. 31). This is the earliest attested instance of this expectation in the last two centuries B.C. It is next found in Eth. Enoch xci.-civ.

The Jewish Calendar.—For our author's peculiar views see § 18 and the notes on vi. 29-30, 32, xv. 1.

THE BOOK OF JUBILEES

Moses receives the tables of the law and instruction on past and future history which he is to inscribe in a book, 1-4. Apostasy of Israel, 5-9. Captivity of Israel and Judah, 10-13. Return of Judah and rebuilding of temple, 15-18. Moses' prayer for Israel, 19-21. God's promise to redeem and dwell with them, 22-25, 28. Moses bidden to write down the future history of the world (the Book of Jubilees?), 26. And an angel to write down the law, 27. This angel takes the heavenly chronological tables to dictate therefrom to Moses, 29.

THIS is the history of the division of the days of the law and of the testimony, of the events of the years, of their (year) weeks, of their jubilees throughout all the years of the world, as the Lord spake to Moses on Mount Sinai

PROLOGUE. This short introduction gives an admirable account of the contents of this book. It is at once a history and a chronological system dominated by the sacred number seven. The history extends from the Creation to the legislation on Sinai, and thus embraces Genesis and part of Exodus. But the writer does not merely reproduce the portions of these books which serve his purpose; he rewrites from the standpoint of the strictest Judaism. See Introduction, §§ 15, 21.

According to their sevenfold division (a c) or "according to their year-weeks" (b d).

Throughout all the years of the world. These words are difficult; for they imply that it was the author's intention to write a history from the Creation till the establishment of the Messianic Kingdom or Theocracy. See i. 26 note.

The Lord 𐤊𐤍𐤏𐤋𐤁𐤏: (a). d reads 𐤀𐤍𐤏𐤋: "God." b c omit. 𐤊𐤍𐤏𐤋𐤁𐤏 (which generally = κύριος, but often θεός) is generally rendered "Lord" in my translation, but occasionally as "God" when external evidence so requires.

when he went up to receive the tables of the law and of the commandment, according to the voice of GOD as he said unto him, "Go up to the top of the Mount."

MUNDI.

I. And it came to pass in the first year of the exodus of the children of Israel out of Egypt, in the third month, on the sixteenth day of the month, that GOD spake to Moses, saying: "Come up to Me on the Mount, and I will give thee two tables of stone of the law and of the commandment, which I have written, that thou mayst teach them." 2. And Moses went up into the mount of GOD, and the glory of the Lord abode on Mount Sinai, and a cloud overshadowed it six days. 3. And He called to Moses on the seventh day out of the midst of the cloud, and the appearance of the glory of the Lord was like a flaming fire on the top of the mount. 4. And Moses was on the Mount forty days and forty nights, and GOD taught him the earlier and the later history of the division of all the days of the

Of the law, etc. See note on i. 1.

Go up, etc. Exod. xxiv. 12.

I. 1. In the third month, on the sixteenth day of the month. It will be observed that our author supplies a date to the defective text of Exod. xix. 1 "In the third month after the children of Israel were gone forth . . . the same day came they." Ps.-Jon. inserts "on the first day of the month" (בְּחֵד יוֹם). It will be observed that on the same date on which Moses went up to receive the Law, the sixteenth of the third month, GOD appears to Jacob on his way down into Egypt (xliv. 5).

On the other hand, we must carefully distinguish this date and the events connected with it from the fifteenth of the third month and the events connected with it. On the fifteenth Abraham celebrated the feast of the first-fruits of the harvest (xv. 1, xliv. 4); Isaac was born (xvi. 13) (so also in Seder Olam); Abraham died (xxii. 1); Judah was born (xxviii. 15); and Jacob and

Laban bound themselves by mutual vows (xxix. 7).

We shall see later (vi. 17-18 notes) that the feast of weeks was first observed on earth in connection with the covenant of Noah, and was according to our author designed to celebrate the institution of that covenant. It is important to recognise this fact, since later Judaism held that the feast of weeks celebrated the legislation on Sinai (see notes on vi. 17).

Come up to Me, etc. Exod. xxiv. 12.

And thus it will come to pass when all these things come upon them, that they will recognise that I am more righteous than they in all their judgments and in all their actions, and they will recognise that I have been truly with them. 7. And do thou write for thyself all these words which I declare unto thee this day, for I know their rebellion and their stiff neck, before I bring them into the land of which I sware to their fathers, to Abraham and to Isaac and to Jacob, saying: "Unto your seed will I give a land flowing with milk and honey. 8. And they will eat and be satisfied, and they will turn to strange gods, to (gods) which cannot deliver them from aught of their tribulation: and this witness shall be heard for a witness against them. 9. 16. And I shall disclose (b d). a c read "I will disclose."

†Remove them the plant of uprightness.† I have obelized these words as corrupt. Littmann's rendering, "sie umändern zu einer Pflanze der Gerechtigkeit," is hardly possible linguistically. Moreover, it is against the use of this phrase. Cf. Eth. Enoch x. 16, xciii. 2, 5, 10. Israel was "the plant of uprightness" from the outset. The original of the words and of those that follow appears to be Jer. xxxii. 41 "I will plant them in this land assuredly with all my heart and with all my soul." These words are used in the very same connection as those in the text. It is not improbable, therefore, that the words "in this land" have been lost after the verb. Next "And I will remove them"=καὶ μεταθήσω αὐτοὺς=והסיעתיים. This last may be corrupt for ונתתיים. Thus we should have "And I will plant them the plant of uprightness in the land." This reverses the judgment in verse 13 "I will remove them from the midst of the land."

And Moses fell on his face and prayed and said, "O Lord my God, do not forsake Thy people and Thy inheritance, so that they should wander in the error of their hearts, and do not deliver them into the hands of their enemies, the Gentiles, lest they should rule over them and cause them to sin against Thee. 20. Let Thy mercy, O Lord, be lifted up upon Thy people, and create in them an upright spirit, and let not the spirit of Beliar rule over them to accuse them before Thee, and to ensnare them from all the paths of righteousness, so that they may perish from before Thy face. 21. But they are Thy people and Thy inheritance, which Thou hast delivered with Thy great power from the hands of the Egyptians: create in them a clean heart and a holy spirit, and let them not be ensnared in their sins from henceforth until eternity." 22. And the Lord said unto Moses: "I know their contrariness and their thoughts and their stiffneckedness, and they will not be obedient till they confess their own sin and the sin of their fathers. 23. And after this they will turn to Me in all uprightness and with all (their) heart and with all (their) soul, and I shall circumcise the foreskin of their heart and the foreskin of the heart of their seed, and I shall create in them a holy spirit, and I shall cleanse them so that they

And they will all be called children of the living God, and every angel and every spirit will know, yea, they will know that these are My children, and that I am their Father in uprightness and righteousness, and that I love them. 26. Israel shall never again be driven from their own land.

24. I shall be their Father and they will be My children (or "sons"). These words are used in 2 Sam. vii. 14 in reference to Solomon; elsewhere in the OT only in reference to the nation or sections of it. God is the Father of Israel, Deut. xxxii. 6; Is. lxiii. 16; Jer. xxxi. 9; or of the righteous in Israel, even of the righteous individual, Wisdom ii. 16. See also i. 25, 28, xix. 29 of our text. Israel is God's son: Exod. iv. 22, 23; Deut. xiv. 1; Is. xliii. 6; Wisdom xviii. 13; Jud. ix. 4; or the righteous in Israel are God's children, even the individuals, Wisdom ii. 13, 18, v. 5, xii. 7, 21. For Talmudic references see Sayings of the Fathers (ed. Taylor) iii. 22; B. Bathra 10 a, Kiddushin 36 a, Berachoth 3 a. In 2 Cor. vi. 18 St. Paul takes directly these words of 2 Sam. vii. 14 and applies them to all the Christians. In the text they embrace all Israelites. Israelites are God's children according to our author by virtue of their physical descent from Jacob. Cf. i. 28.

25. Children (or "sons") of the living God. Hos. i. 10.

26. And do thou write down for thyself (b c). a d read "And I will write down for thee." These words appear to refer to the present work (as Singer p. 15 has recognised), i.e., Jubilees (cf. i. 7). Moses is to write it down at the dictation of the angel (vi. 1). It constitutes, so to say, the book of the second law. The Pentateuch, on the other hand, is "the book of the first law" (vi. 22), which was written by the angel himself (i. 27). The latter is referred to again in xxx. 12, 21, l. 6. In 4 Ezra xiv. 6 Moses is bidden to reveal the one, i.e., the Pentateuch, and conceal the other, the apocalyptic tradition. Haec in palam facies verba et haec abscondes. In Exod. xxxiv. 27 Moses is bidden to write down certain commands, but the decalogue is engraved on the tables of stone by God Himself: Exod. xxxiv. 1, 28; Deut. x. 2, 4.

All these words, the first and the last, which shall come to pass . . . until eternity. Cf. 4 Ezra xiv. 4, 5: Et adduxi eum super montem Sina et detinui eum apud Me diebus multis, Et enarravi ei mirabilia multa, et ostendi ei temporum secreta et temporum finem.

Until I descend and dwell . . . throughout eternity. Here as in the Prologue the implication is that the author intended to write a history of the world from the Creation to the setting up of the Theocracy. (Cf. Prologue; also i. 27, 29.) In a certain sense he has done so; for references occur to events as late as the early Maccabean times when the author lived. He was of opinion that the Messianic Kingdom would be introduced through the labours of the Maccabees. For God's dwelling throughout eternity." 27. And He said to the angel of the presence: "Write for Moses from the beginning of creation till My sanctuary has been built among them for all eternity. 28. And the Lord will appear to the eyes of all, and all will know that I am the God of Israel and the Father of all with man see Eth. Enoch xxv. 3, lxxvii. 1. This was the perfected theocracy which was looked for by those who did not expect a personal Messiah, such as the authors of Eth. Enoch i.-xxxvi., xci.-civ.; Ass. Moses x. Our author, however, looked for a Messiah sprung from Judah. See note on xxxi. 18.

27. And He said to the angel of the presence. See note on i. 29. Our text forms apparently the earliest testimony to the idea that the law was given through the ministry of angels. In Deut. xxxiii. 2 we have the first mention of angels in connection with the giving of the law, but according to that passage they merely accompany Yahwe. But the way was prepared for the conception in Jubilees by the development which angelology underwent in exilic and post-exilic times. Thus from the exile onwards God communicated no longer directly with His servants. In the case of Ezekiel, who was in the period of transition, the revelation is sometimes made directly to him (xliv. 2), sometimes indirectly through an angel (xl. 3). By the time of Zechariah the development is complete. This prophet receives all his communications through angels. Naturally when we come down to the century in which our book was written, this usage is universal. Daniel receives even the interpretation of his visions through angels (vii. 16 sqq.; viii. 15 sqq. etc.), and in a later work of the same century, Test. XII. Patriarch., Dan. 6, the angel that intercedes for Israel is called "the mediator between God and man" (μεσότης Θεοῦ καὶ ἀνθρώπων). See also Levi 5. I am not aware of any other references to this conception till the beginning of the Christian era. Thus Philo, De Somnis, i. 22 (p. 642 M.), commenting on Exod. xix. 19, writes that we cannot receive God's benefits save through the agency of His ministers. (οὐδ' ὑπερβαλλούσας . . .

εὐεργεσίας χωρῆσαι δυνάμεθα, ὥς ἂν αὐτὸς προτείνῃ δι' ἑαυτοῦ μὴ χρώμενος ὑπερέταις ἄλλοις.) In the first cent. A.D. we have frequent references to this view. Thus in Jos. Ant. xv. 5. 3: ἡμῶν δὲ τὰ κάλλιστα τῶν δογμάτων καὶ τὰ ὁσιώτατα τῶν ἐν τοῖς νόμοις δι' ἀγγέλων παρὰ τοῦ θεοῦ μαθόντων. From Judaism this verse passed over into the NT. Cf. Gal. iii. 19 νόμος . . . διαταγείς δι' ἀγγέλων. See also Acts vii. 53; Heb. ii. 2. The Samaritans also believed in the ministry of angels in connection with the law. Cf. Gesenius, Carm. Sam. p. 15 and de Sacy, Not. et extraits de la Bibl. xii. 16. Later Judaism rejected this view probably on polemical grounds, and always represented Moses as receiving the law directly from God. In Sabbath 88 b and Shem. rabba 28 Moses is represented as ascending into heaven to receive the law.

Write for Moses, etc. If the interpretation of this verse adopted on i. 26 (note) is right, the angel is to write out the Pentateuch for Moses. There is, however, this difficulty attaching to this interpretation, that the history embraced in the Pentateuch is to extend from the Creation to the time when God's "sanctuary has been built among them for all eternity." It is possible that this means nothing more than such broad and apparently prophetic descriptions of the apostasies of Israel and Judah under their kings, of the Exile and the Return from captivity, and of the restored theocracy as are found in Deut. xxviii.-xxx. It must be confessed that this explanation does not appear adequate.

28. This verse spoils the sequence of thought. We should probably read it after ver. 25.

And the angel of the presence who went before the camp of Israel took the tables of the divisions of the years—from the time of the creation—of the law and of the testimony of the weeks, of the jubilees, according to the individual years, according to all the number of the jubilees [according to the individual years], from the day of the [new] creation †when† the heavens and the earth shall be renewed and

29. Angel of the presence. The phrase is derived from Is. lxiii. 9 and found also in Test. XII. Patriarch., Jud. 25. This angel is probably Michael who was the guardian angel of Israel: cf. Dan. x. 13, 21, xii. 1; Eth. Enoch xx. 5; Slav. Enoch xxii. 6; Weber, Jüd. Theologie,² 168. Four of these angels are mentioned in Eth. Enoch xl. (where see note on ver. 2 in my edition).

Took the tables of the divisions of the years. From these the angel dictates to Moses.

Divisions of the years—from the time of the creation (c)—of the law (a), etc. This seems to be the best way of taking the text. My text which follows b = "divisions of the years from the creation of the law."

According to the individual years. Bracketed as an interpolation. b omits.

From the day of the [new] creation †when† the heavens and the earth shall be renewed. The text is clearly corrupt. It should furnish us with the terminus a quo and the terminus ad quem. The history of the "tables of the divisions" obviously embraces everything from the creation to the Messianic Kingdom. Hence "new" (haddas) is to be regarded as an Ethiopic interpolation. In a b it follows the word "creation" but in the inferior MSS (c d) it precedes them. Next in place of "†when†" (ama) we should expect "till." We can recover "till" by taking ws (= "when") in the Greek to be a corruption of ews

The heavens and the earth shall be renewed. We should observe carefully the nature of the "renewal" as it appears in Jubilees. This renewal of the creation is not to be instantaneous and catastrophic, but gradual, and its progress to be conditioned ethically by the conduct of Israel. This will be seen most clearly in iv. 26 and xxiii. 26-28 (see notes in loc.). Similar expressions are found in Is. lxxv. 17, lxxvi. 22. In my Eschatology (pp. 122-123) I took these passages in Isaiah to denote a sudden and actual re-creation of the world, and as I conceived they were at variance with their contexts, I marked them as later interpolations. I now see that they should be taken to express a gradual transformation of the world, moral and physical, and, that thus the argument against their originality falls to the ground. This view was probably adopted from Mazdeism, which according to Söderblom (La Vie Future d'après le Mazdéisme, p. 254, Paris, 1901) teaches that le monde deviendra peu à peu meilleur et se spiritualisera pendant les derniers temps. This fifth-century view of the writer in Isaiah lxxv-lxxvi. is reproduced by our author. Heaven and earth and the physical nature of man will be transformed pari passu with man's spiritual transformation (xxiii. 26-28, l. 5). According to Jubilees xxiii. 27 the righteous should attain to a thousand years, and according to Is. lxxv. 20 the sinner should be prematurely cut off when a hundred years old. So far as I am aware, Is.

all their creation according to the powers of the heaven, and according to all the creation of the earth, until the sanctuary of the Lord shall be made in Jerusalem on Mount Zion, and all the luminaries be renewed for healing and for peace and for blessing for all the elect of Israel, and that thus it may be from that day and unto all the days of the earth.

II. And the angel of the presence spake to Moses according to the word of the Lord, saying: Write the com-

lxv.-lxvi., Jubilees and Test. Levi 18 are the only Jewish writings which attest this view. But from 100 B.C. Jewish, and subsequently Christian, writers took these expressions in a literal and catastrophic sense. Thus it is an actual re-creation of heaven and earth that is foretold in Eth. Enoch xci. 16, lxxii. 1, xlv. 4; Apoc. Bar. xxxii. 6, lvii. 2; 4 Ezra vii. 75; 2 Peter iii. 13; Rev. xxi. 1.

But again to return to our author we find the following novelty. He teaches that God is to renew His creation at three distinct periods. The first was on the occasion of the Deluge, when He destroyed all that was corrupt (v. 11) and "made for all His works a new and righteous nature" (v. 12). The next renewal was to synchronise with the foundation of the Jewish community in Jacob, which should "serve to lay the foundations of the heaven and to strengthen the earth and to renew all the luminaries which are in the firmament" (xix. 25). The idea that a renewal of the world began with Jacob follows also from ii. 22 sqq. According to this passage the twenty-two generations that precede Jacob correspond to the twenty-two works of God at the Creation. A new era of renewal begins with Jacob. Finally when God's sanctuary and the Messianic Kingdom are established amongst men, the final renewal will set in, "when the heavens and the earth shall be renewed" and "all the luminaries shall be renewed" i. 29, iv. 26, v. 12. According to the present text of v. 11, 12, the renewal of creation after the Deluge is taught; but the text is corrupt. In its original form it could only refer to the renewal of the world on the setting up of the Messianic Kingdom. There are thus three great eras in this book: the creation of the world, its renewal on the creation of the true man, Jacob, and its final renewal on the establishment of the sanctuary. On the symbolic values of man and the temple see Eppstein, "Le Livre des Jubilés," Revue des Études juives, 1890, xxi. 92-97.

Philo (de Mundi opificio, i.7) mentions seven objects of creation: οὐρανός, γῆ, σκότος, τὸ ἄβυσσον, ὕδωρ, πνεῦμα, φῶς. Here the πνεῦμα retains for the most part its original force; for in the next chapter Philo says with regard to it: τὸ μὲν γὰρ ὠνόμασε θεοῦ, διότι ζωτικώτατον τὸ πνεῦμα. On the other hand he idealises all seven objects of creation

the first day He created the heavens which are above and the earth and the waters and all the spirits which serve before Him—the angels of the presence, and the angels of

of the first day. It is not the actual but the ideal world that is created on the first day. Thus he speaks of the heaven as ἀσώματος, the earth as ἀδόρατος, the darkness and the abyss as the ἀέρος ἰδέα καὶ κενοῦ, wind and water as having an ἀσώματος οὐσία, and the light as being νοητός. Notwithstanding, it is obvious that Philo was acquainted with a cosmology such as is given in our text. The Chronicles of Jerahmeel, i. 3, enumerate eight works. It duplicates "the spirit" by taking it first as "the spirit of God" and next as "air." Its dependence on the Jubilee tradition is possible.

According to later Judaism, Ber. rabba 3 sqq. four things were created on the first day, mountains (here הרים is corrupt for הוהם, "abyss"), heaven, earth, light. On the second—the firmament, hell and the angels. On the third—trees, green things, and Paradise. On the fourth—sun, moon and stars. On the fifth—birds, fishes and the Leviathan. On the sixth—Adam, Eve and worms. In all nineteen works. But according to R. Pinchas, six things were created on the sixth: Adam, Eve, worms, tame beasts, wild beasts, demons.

2. On the first day he created . . . the angels. In addition to the remarks made under this head on ii. 2-3 above we should further observe that grounds are furnished for such a conception by Job xxxviii. 7 (cf. i. 6) "When the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy." Here the sons of God are regarded as admiring spectators of the creation. It is probable that earlier Judaism so understood this verse. At all events, this interpretation appears in patristic literature; cf. Epiphanius, Hæc. lxxv. chap. 4: Εἰ μὴ γὰρ ἅμα οὐρανῷ καὶ γῇ καὶ ἄγγελοι ἐκτίσθησαν, οὐκ ἂν ἔλεγε τῷ Ἰῶβ ὅτι, "Ὅτε ἐγενήθησαν ἄστρα, ἤνεσαν με πάντες ἄγγελοι μου φωνῇ. See also the quotation from Rufinus in the next note. Nearly two centuries earlier this idea is attested in Hermas, Vis. iii. 4: Ὅδοι εἰσιν οἱ ἅγιοι ἄγγελοι τοῦ Θεοῦ οἱ πρῶτοι κτισθέντες, οἷς παρέδωκεν ὁ κύριος πᾶσαν τὴν κτίσιν αὐτοῦ, αὔξειν καὶ οἰκοδομεῖν καὶ δεσπόζειν τῆς κτίσεως πάσης.

All the spirits which serve before him. This phrase is found in the Jerusalem Targum I. on Gen. i. 26, but there the creation of the angels is assigned to the second day. See further details in preceding note. With our text compare Rufinus, Expositio in Symbol. p. 21 (Fabricius, Cod. Pseud. V.T. ii. 57), Ut brevier aliqua etiam de secretionibus perstringamus, ab initio Deus cum fecisset mundum, praecepit ei et praeposuit quasdam virtutum caelestium potestates, quibus regeretur et dispenseretur mortalium genus . . . Sed et horum nonnulli, sicut et ipse qui princeps appellatus est mundi, datam sibi a Deo potestatem non his quibus acceperant legibus temperarunt nec humanum genus divinis obedire praeceptis, sed suis parere praevaricationibus docuerunt.

The angels of the presence, and the angels of sanctification. Cf. ii. 18, xv. 27, xxxi. 14. These are the two chief orders of angels. On the former see i. 29 note. Both classes are mentioned in ii. 18: these observe the Sabbath together with God and Israel (ii. 18 sqq.), and like them Levi and his seed are to serve in the sanctuary, xxxi. 14. The lower orders who are set over the works of nature do not keep the Sabbath. These angels are, according to the Talmud and no doubt to our author, inferior to righteous Israelites: Sanh. 93a, צדיקים יותר כמלאכי השרה. See also Ber. rabba 8; Tanchuma 14, ישראל לפני הקדש, חביבין יותר כמלאכי השרה (Singer, p. 98). "The angels of sanctification" are those who sing praises to God (possibly the trisagion as in Eth. En. lxi. 12). As Epiphanius has ἄγγελοι τῆς δόξης (= ἄγγελοι δοξάζοντες), Praetorius proposes that we should read weddāsē instead of qeddāsē. But the text can be defended; for in xv. 27 where the phrase recurs, the Latin has sanctificationis.

And thereupon we saw His works, and praised Him, and lauded before Him on account of all His works; for seven great works did He create on the first day. 4. And on the second

Angels of the voices and of the thunder and of the lightning. This is an obscure phrase. It would be easy if we could omit the first "and." Then we should have the familiar expression "voices of the thunder." Cf. Ps. lxxvii. 18, civ. 7; Rev. vi. 1, x. 4, xix. 6. On the other hand we have in Rev. iv. 5, xi. 19, xvi. 18, ἀστραπαὶ καὶ φωναὶ καὶ βρονταί, and in viii. 5, βρονταὶ καὶ φωναὶ καὶ ἀστραπαὶ. The phrase in Rev. may be derived from our text. The "voices" may mean the mutterings of the thunder. "Voice" (ῥή) in itself means thunder in Job xxxvii. 4.

Thunder and lightning. Cf. Eth. Enoch lx. 13-15.

Of winter . . . and summer. Cf. Eth. Enoch lxxiii. 13-20.

(He created) the abysses. a b c d read "in all the abysses," connecting the phrase wrongly with the preceding words. "The abysses" are one of the seven things created on the first day and must be in the accusative as in G of Epiphanius. The Kuellû = "all" may be a corruption of 'ellû = "these" (a frequent corruption), and the latter a translation of the Greek article in τὰς ἀβύσσους. G reads τὰς ἀβύσσους τὴν τε ὑποκάτω τῆς γῆς καὶ τοῦ χάρους. In my Ethiopic text, omit the three words after qalâyât, which are an attempt partly to restore and partly to emend a into confirmity with the G.

Eventide (and night) and the light, dawn and day. "And night" is supplied from G. a wrongly transposes "eventide" after "day." b c d omit "and day" and transpose "eventide" after "light."

day He created the firmament in the midst of the waters, and the waters were divided on that day—half of them went up above and half of them went down below the firmament (that was) in the midst over the face of the whole earth. And this was the only work (God) created on the second day. 5. And on the third day He commanded the waters to pass from off the face of the whole earth into one place, and the dry land to appear. 6. And the waters did so as He commanded them, and they retired from off the face of the earth into one place outside of this firmament, and the dry land appeared. 7. And on that day He created for them all the seas according to their separate gathering-places, and all the rivers, and the gatherings of the waters in the mountains and on all the earth, and all the lakes, and all the dew of the earth, and the seed which is sown, and all sprouting things, and fruit-bearing trees, and trees of the wood, and the garden of Eden, in Eden, and all

Waters were divided on that day. According to this view as also of Gen. i. 6 there was a sea in heaven resting on the firmament, which through seven flood-gates (v. 24) let down its waters on the earth. See the curious speculation on these waters in Eth. Enoch liv. 7-8.

5-7. Works of the third day. Cf. Gen. i. 9-13; Slav. Enoch xxx. 1. G in Epiphanius is defective: τρίτη δὲ ἡμέρα . . . τὰς θαλάσσας . . . τοὺς ποταμούς, τὰς πηγὰς . . . καὶ λίμνας, τὰ σπέρματα τοῦ σπέρου, καὶ τὰ βλαστήματα, τὰ ξύλα τὰ κάρπιμά τε καὶ ἄκαρπα καὶ τοὺς δρυμούς . . . καὶ πάντα τὰ φυτὰ κατὰ γένος. ταῦτα τὰ τέσσαρα ἔργα τὰ μέγιστα ἐποίησεν ὁ Θεὸς ἐν τῇ τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ. It is better in Syncellus i. 4: φανέρωσις γῆς καὶ ἀναξήρανσις, παράδεισος, δένδρα παντοῖα, βοτάναι καὶ σπέρματα.

7. Cf. Slav. Enoch xxx. 1.

Sprouting things = zajebaquel emend-

ed from zajetbalā'ē according to G βλαστήματα.

Garden of Eden, in Eden. MSS add "for pleasure." This phrase is due either to a corrupt ditto-graphy: i.e.—latadlā is corrupt for batadlā=ἐν τρυφῇ, a duplicate rendering of יְרֵבָה: or else tadlā is corrupt for taclāt=φντά and should be transposed after kuellā. The "in Eden" is also superfluous. c omits it.

Garden of Eden. Eden is likewise a creation of the third day in Ber. rabba 15; Slav. Enoch xxx. 1; Book of Adam and Eve i. 1. This is the earliest view so far as our evidence goes. As early, however, as the latter half of the first century A.D., the garden of Eden was said to have been created before the world. Thus 4 Ezra iii. 6 In paradisum, quem plantavit dextera tua antequam terra adventaret. This view arose from taking עַרְבָּא in Gen. ii. 8 to mean "from the beginning" instead of "on the east." This new interpretation was adopted by the Targums and the Syriac and Latin Versions, as well as by Aquila, Sym-

And on the fourth day He created the sun and the moon and the stars, and set them in the firmament of the heaven, to give light upon all the earth, and to rule over the day and the night, and divide the light from the darkness. 9. And God appointed the sun to be a great sign on the earth for days and for sabbaths and for months and for feasts and for years and for sabbaths of years and for jubilees and for all seasons of the years. 10. And it divideth the light from the darkness [and] for prosperity, that all things may prosper which shoot and grow on the earth. These three kinds He made on the fourth day. 11. 17-21. The two chief orders of angels observe the Sabbath together with God. Israel alone will be chosen to join in this observance. Like the third order of angels (see note on ii. 2), i.e. those that preside over natural phenomena, the Gentiles do not share in this privilege (ii. 31).

17. He gave us a great sign, the Sabbath day. Cf. Exod. xxxi. 13. This sign, first appointed between God and the two chief orders of angels, was to be established subsequently between God and Israel, ii. 21. See ii. 31 note.

cation, these two great classes—He hath bidden us to keep the Sabbath with Him in heaven and on earth. 19. And He said unto us: “Behold, I will separate unto Myself a people from among all the peoples, and these will keep the Sabbath day, and I will sanctify them unto Myself as My people, and will bless them; as I have sanctified the Sabbath day and do sanctify (it) unto Myself, even so shall I bless them, and they will be My people and I shall be their God. 20. And I have chosen the seed of Jacob from amongst all that I have seen, and have written him down as My first-born son, and have sanctified him unto Myself for ever and ever; and I will teach them the Sabbath day, that they may keep Sabbath thereon from all work.” 21. And thus He created therein a sign in accordance with which they should keep Sabbath with us on the seventh day, to eat and to drink, and to bless Him who has created all things as He has blessed and sanctified unto Himself a peculiar people above all peoples, and that they should keep Sabbath together with us. 22. 21. A sign. According to Exod. xxxi. 13, 17; Ezek. xx. 12, the Sabbath was to be a sign between God and Israel. See ii. 17 note, 31 note.

Keep Sabbath with us. Israel is to unite with the angels (cf. verses 17, 18) in observing the Sabbath.

To eat and to drink, etc. This joyful aspect of the Sabbath is enforced again in ii. 31, 1. 9, 10. In 1. 12 fasting on the Sabbath is forbidden. See 1. 6 sqq. (notes) for a discussion of the entire question.

A peculiar people above all peoples. Deut. vii. 6; cf. Exod. xix. 5; Amos iii. 2. The Sabbaths are signs that God has given to His people to distinguish them from other peoples. Cf. verse 31; Ezek. xx. 12, 20. “Peculiar” here = zajâtari emended from zajâstarē'i.

And that they . . . with us. This seems a dittography of the second clause of this verse.

22. His commands, etc. Corrupt.

A sweet savour. Gen. viii. 21; Exod. xxix. 18; Ezek. xx. 41; 2 Cor. ii. 15; Eph. v. 2.

Acceptable before Him. Ezek. xx. 41; Rom. xii. 1; 1 Tim. ii. 3.

23. It is clear from Epiphanius, Syncellus and Cedrenus that there is a

to Jacob, and two and twenty kinds of work were made until the seventh day; this is blessed and holy; and the former also is blessed and holy; and this one serves with that one for sanctification and blessing. 24. And to this (Jacob and his seed) it was granted that they should always lacuna in the text after ver. 22. Thus in Epiphanius, De Mensuris et Ponderibus, ch. xxii. (ed. Dind. vol. iv. 28) after an account of the six days' creation, drawn word for word from Jubilees, he continues καὶ ἐδήλωσε δι' ἀγγέλου τῷ Μωϋσέϊ ὅτι (Jub. ii. 23) καὶ εἴκοσι δύο κεφάλαια ἀπὸ Ἀδὰμ ἄχρι τοῦ Ἰακώβ. . . . καὶ (Jub. ii. 21) ἐκλέξομαι ἐμὰντῶ ἐκ τοῦ σπέρματος αὐτοῦ . . . λαὸν περιούσιον ἀπὸ πάντων τῶν ἔθνῶν . . . διὸ καὶ εἴκοσι δύο εἰσὶ τὰ παρὰ τοῖς Ἑβραίοις γράμματα, καὶ πρὸς αὐτὰ καὶ τὰς βιβλους αὐτῶν κβ' ἡριθμησαν εἴκοσι ἐπτά οὐσας· ἀλλ' ἐπειδὴ διπλαῖνται πέντε παρ' αὐτοῖς στοιχεῖα, εἴκοσι ἐπτά καὶ αὐτὰ ὄντα καὶ εἰς κβ' ἀποτελοῦνται, τούτου χάριν καὶ τὰς βιβλους κς' οὐσας κβ' πεποιήκασιν. Also in i. 1 p. 59 ('Ἐπικουρ.) we find αὐτὰ εἰσιν αἱ εἴκοσι-ἐπτά βιβλοὶ αἱ ἐκ Θεοῦ δοθεῖσαι τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις, εἰκοσιδύο δὲ ὡς τὰ παρ' αὐτοῖς στοιχεῖα τῶν Ἑβραϊκῶν γραμμάτων ἀριθμοῦμεναι, διὰ τὸ διπλαῖσθαι δέκα βιβλους εἰς πέντε λεγομένας. Again Anastasius, who elsewhere quotes Jubilees (see iii. 9 note), seems to refer to our text here in his work on the Hexaemeron (Migne's Biblioth. Patr. Graec. tom. 89, col. 940): Viginti enim duo opera fecisse Deum dicunt, et Judaeorum et Christianorum interpretes . . . propterea viginti quoque duobus libris enumerat omne Vetus suum Testamentum. In Isidore of Seville (ob. 636), Etymolog. xvi. 26. 10 (Migne Bibl. Patr. Lat. tom. 82, col. 595), we have an account of the creation agreeing with Jubilees save in one small particular. It is there shown that there were twenty-two kinds of work just as there were twenty-two generations from Adam to Jacob, twenty-two books in the OT and twenty-two letters. This account is dependent on Epiphanius. Thus it is most probable that originally mention was made in the text of the twenty-two Hebrew letters and the twenty-two books of the Bible, and so we find it actually stated by Syncellus

Chronogr. i. 5 (ed. Dind.) ὁμοῦ τὰ πάντα ἔργα εἴκοσι δύο ἰσάριθμα τοῖς εἴκοσι δύο Ἑβραϊκοῖς γράμμασι καὶ ταῖς εἴκοσι δύο Ἑβραϊκαῖς βιβλοῖς καὶ τοῖς ἀπὸ Ἀδὰμ ἕως Ἰακώβ εἴκοσι δύο γενεαρχαῖς, ὡς ἐν λεπτῇ φέρεται Γενέσει, ἣν καὶ Μωϋσέως εἶναι φασὶ τινες ἀποκάλυψιν. This statement is reproduced verbally by Cedrenus, Compendium Histor. vol. i. 9 (ed. Bekker). Next we have the evidence of the Hebrew tradition preserved in the Midrash Tadshe vi. (quoted above, p. 11): "Twenty-two kinds of creatures were created in the universe. . . This corresponds to the twenty-two letters of the alphabet and to the twenty-two generations from Adam to Jacob." Thus we should probably restore the lacuna as follows:—As there were two and twenty letters and two and twenty (sacred) books and two and twenty heads of mankind from Adam to Jacob, so there were made two and twenty kinds of work, etc. The thirty-nine books of the Old Testament are equalised to the number of letters by the following device. The twelve minor prophets count as one book, similarly Judges and Ruth, Ezra and Nehemiah, Jeremiah and Lamentations are taken together, and the two books of Samuel, Kings and Chronicles are reckoned respectively as one each. Thus the thirty-nine are reduced to twenty-two. See Introd. § 11.

This is blessed and holy, i.e., the Sabbath.

The former also is blessed and holy, i.e., Jacob. These two, the Sabbath and Jacob, are intimately related. As the Sabbath comes at the close of the twenty-two works, so Jacob comes at the close of the twenty-second generation. Not till Jacob's time, therefore, could the Sabbath be rightly observed on earth. Moreover, the Sabbath was given to Israel alone (ii. 31).

24. They should always, etc. So bcd. a reads "he should always," etc.

be the blessed and holy ones of the first testimony and law, even as He had sanctified and blessed the Sabbath day on the seventh day. 25. He created heaven and earth and everything that He created in six days, and God made the seventh day holy, for all His works; therefore He commanded on its behalf that, whoever does any work thereon shall die, and that he who defiles it shall surely die. 26. Wherefore do thou command the children of Israel to observe this day that they may keep it holy and not do thereon any work, and not to defile it, as it is holier than all other days. 27. And whoever profanes it shall surely die, and whoever does thereon any work shall surely die eternally, that the children of Israel may observe this day throughout their generations, and not be rooted out of the land; for it is a holy day and a blessed day. 28. And every one who observes it and keeps Sabbath thereon from all his work, will be holy and blessed throughout all days like unto us. 29. Declare and say to the children of Israel the law of this day both that they should keep Sabbath thereon, and that they should not forsake it in the error of their hearts; (and) that it is not lawful to do any work thereon which is unseemly, to do thereon their own pleasure, and that they should not prepare thereon anything

He had sanctified. So c d. a b read "it had been sanctified."

And blessed. So a c d. b "and had been blessed."

The Sabbath day. c d. a b omit.

25. Whoever does any work thereon shall die, and that he who defiles, etc. Exod. xxxi. 14, 15. Cf. Exod. xxxv. 2; Num. xv. 32-36. See also verses 26, 27.

26. Command the children of Israel to observe this day that they may keep it holy. Exod. xx. 8, xxxi. 1.

Holier than all other days. Cf. ii. 30 where it is said to be holier than the jubilee of the jubilees; also ii. 33.

27. Whoever profanes it . . . whoever does thereon any work. See two preceding verses.

Rooted out of the land. Deut. xxix. 28.

29. It is not lawful to do any work thereon which is unseemly, to do thereon their own pleasure. In the rendering "which is unseemly" I have followed Barth and Littmann in taking za'ijekawen za'ijāstar'i as representing זָאִי־זָאִי־זָאִי. See also on iii. 15. It might be better to connect the following infinitive with "unseemly" and translate "which is unseemly to do thereon, (even) their own pleasure." It is usual for זָאִי to be followed by an infinitive in this sense. Cf. Esther ii. 9; Chull. 83b; Nid. vi. 4.

To do thereon their own pleasure. Cf. Is. lviii. 13.

Not prepare thereon anything to be to be eaten or drunk, †and (that it is not lawful) to draw water, or bring in or take out thereon through their gates any burden,† which they had not prepared for themselves on the sixth day in their dwellings. 30. And they shall not bring in nor take out from house to house on that day; for that day is more holy and blessed than any jubilee day of the jubilees: on this we kept Sabbath in the heavens before it was made known to any flesh to keep Sabbath thereon on the earth. 31. And the Creator of all things blessed it, but He did not sanctify all peoples and

And that they should not prepare thereon anything to be eaten or drunk . . . which they had not prepared for themselves on the sixth day. Cf. i. 9. It will be observed that by omitting "and (that it is not lawful) to draw water, or bring in or take out thereon through their gates any burden" an excellent sense is restored to the text. Besides, the words in question constitute a break in the grammatical construction. The words "or bring in or take out thereon through their gates any burden" look like a dittography of the first clause in ver. 30. They may, however, be genuine, and we can restore at once the sense and grammar by reading these clauses immediately after the words "their own pleasure." Thus we have: "That it is not lawful to do any work thereon which is unseemly, to do thereon their own pleasure or to draw water or bring in or take out thereon through their gates any burden. And that they should not prepare thereon anything to be eaten or drunk, which they had not prepared for themselves on the sixth day in their dwellings."

Or bring in or take out . . . any burden. The law is found in ii. 30, i. 8; Jer. xvii. 21, 22, 24, 27. Cf. Neh. xiii. 19; John v. 10; Shabb. vii. 2.

Which they had not prepared for themselves on the sixth day. This should follow immediately on the clause "anything to be eaten or drunk." Thus we have the provision enforced in Bez. 2b, that on the Sabbath day nothing should be eaten which had not been expressly prepared on a week day with a view to the Sabbath.

On the sixth day. Cf. i. 9. This phrase can equally well be rendered in both passages "on the six days."

30. Bring in nor take out from house to house. Cf. ii. 29, i. 8; Jer. xvii. 22. Also Shabb. vii. 2, המצוי מרשות לרשות. See note on ver. 29.

On this we kept Sabbath in the heavens. Similarly it is said in vi. 18 that the feast of weeks was celebrated by the angels in heaven till the days of Noah. The writer most probably held that the other feasts were likewise observed in heaven. The sabbath and the feast of weeks, however, are the two chief feasts in the eyes of the writer. According to Ber. rabba 11 even the godless in Gehenna had rest on the Sabbath.

31. Blessed it, i.e., Israel. MSS omit "it" but we have only (with Barth and Littmann) to emend bāraka into bārakā to restore it.

He did not sanctify all . . . nations to keep Sabbath thereon, but Israel alone. Cf. ii. 19. The Sabbath was the special privilege and distinction of Israel. Hence it could not be rightly observed on earth till Jacob's time (see ii. 23 note). It was to be a special sign between God and Israel (ii. 21), as it was already a sign in heaven between nations to keep Sabbath thereon, but Israel alone: them alone He permitted to eat and drink and to keep Sabbath thereon on the earth. 32. And the Creator of all things blessed this day which He had created for a blessing and a sanctification and a glory above all days. 33. This law and testimony was given to the children of Israel as a law for ever unto their generations.

Adam names all creatures, 1-3. Creation of Eve and enactment of Levitical laws of purification, 4-14. Adam and Eve in Paradise: their sin and expulsion, 15-29. Law of covering one's shame enacted, 30, 31. Adam and Eve live in Êlâdâ, 32-35. (Cf. Gen. ii. 18-25, iii.).

III. And on the six days of the second week we brought, according to the word of God, unto Adam all the beasts, and all the cattle, and all the birds, and everything that moves on the earth, and everything that moves in the water, according to their kinds, and according to their types: the beasts on the first day; the cattle on the second day; the birds on the third day; and all that which moves on the earth on the fourth day; and that which moves in the water on the fifth day. 2. And Adam named them all by their respective names, and as he called them, so was their name. 3. And on these five days Adam saw all these, male and female, according to every kind that was on the earth, but he was alone and found no helpmeet for him. 4. And the Lord said unto us: "It is not good that the

God and the two chief orders of angels (ii. 17). As no such sign existed between God and the inferior angels (who are inferior to Israel, see ii. 2 note), so none existed between God and the Gen-tilis.

33. A law for ever unto their generations = חקת עולם לדורותם, Exod. xxvii. 21; Lev. vii. 36, xxiii. 14, etc.

man should be alone: let us make a helpmeet for him." 5. And the Lord our God caused a deep sleep to fall upon him, and he slept, and He took for the woman one rib from amongst his ribs, and this rib was the origin of the woman from amongst his ribs, and He built up the flesh in its stead, and built the woman. 6. And He awaked Adam out of his sleep and on awaking he rose on the sixth day, and He brought her to him, and he knew her, and said unto her: "This is now bone of my bones and flesh of my flesh; she will be called [my] wife; because she was taken from her husband." 7. Therefore shall man and wife be one, and therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and cleave unto his wife, and they shall be one flesh. 8. In the first week was Adam created, and the rib—his wife: in the second week He showed her unto him: and for this reason the commandment was given to keep in their

5-6. Creation of woman on the 13th day of the creation. Cf. Gen. ii. 21-23. In the Targ. Jon. on Gen. ii. 21 the rib is said to have been the 13th on the right side. On the Talmudic theories as to the hermaphroditic character of Adam before the creation of Eve see Weber, Jüd. Theologie,² p. 211.

5. One rib from amongst his ribs, and this rib . . . from amongst his ribs. Text literally = "one bone from amongst his bones and this rib (or side) . . . from amongst his bones."

6. [My] wife. The "my" I have bracketed as an interpolation. It is found also in the Eth. vers. of Gen. ii. 23, but in no other important version.

Her husband (= חַוְּיָאָה). So also Sam., LXX, and Onkelos against Mass., Syr., and Vulg. which omit the pronoun.

7. Cf. Gen. ii. 24.

They shall be one flesh. So also Mass. and Onkelos, but Sam. (והיו כשנים); LXX, Syr., Vulg., Ps.-Jon. = "they twain shall be one flesh." This latter is followed in Matt. xix. 5; Mark x. 7; Eph. v. 31, and seems to have the older attestation.

8. First week . . . second week. MSS read "seventh" instead of "week" in both cases. We obtain the right sense by simply emending sab'et into sab'at.

8-14. Commandment was given to keep in their defilement, etc. In this passage our author either invents historical grounds or else adopts an already existing legend to account for the commands given in Lev. xii. 2-5. According to Lev. xii. 2, 5 a mother was to be unclean seven days if she bore a man child, and was not to enter the sanctuary till thirty-three days later, in all forty days; and she was to be unclean fourteen days if she bore a maid child, and was not to enter the sanctuary for sixty-six days later, in all eighty days. This law, our author says, was based on the fact that Adam was created at the close of the first week and did not enter the Garden till forty days after his creation, and Eve was created at the close of the second week and did not enter the Garden till eighty days after her creation. This peculiar idea reappears defilement, for a male seven days, and for a female twice seven days. 9. And after Adam had completed forty days in the land where he had been created, we brought him into the garden of Eden to till and keep it, but his wife they brought in on the eightieth day, and after this she entered in various works. Thus in Philo Quaest. in Gen. ii. 21 (translated by Aucher from the Armenian), where Philo is dealing with the creation of woman from the rib of the man, the text appears to recall the views of our author: Siquidem ut perfectior et (si liceat dici) duplicior est viri formatio formatione mulieris: sic etiam dimidio tempore opus habuit, diebus videlicet xl, ubi imperfectae atque, ut ita dicam, dimidia viri sectioni, scilicet mulieri, (opus esset) duplici mensura, nempe diebus lxxx. Our text was certainly before Syncellus, i. 8-9, εἰσήγαγεν ὁ Θεὸς τὸν Ἀδὰμ ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ κατὰ τὴν τεσσαρακοστὴν ἡμέραν τῆς πλάσεως αὐτοῦ. τῇ ἐνενηκοστῇ τρίτῃ ἡμέρᾳ τῆς κτίσεως . . . εἰσήχθη ὑπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ ἡ τοῦ Ἀδὰμ βοηθὸς Εὐὰ, ἐν τῇ ὀγδοηκοστῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῆς πλάσεως αὐτῆς . . . διὰ τοῦτο προσέταξεν ὁ θεὸς διὰ Μωϋσέως ἐν τῷ Λευιτικῷ, ἥτοι διὰ τὰς μετὰ τὴν πλάσιν τοῦ χωρισμοῦ αὐτῶν ἡμέρας ἐκ τοῦ παραδείσου, ἐπὶ μὲν ἀρρενογονίας ἀκάθαρτον αὐτὴν εἶναι ἐπὶ τεσσαράκοντα ἡμέρας, ἐπὶ δὲ θηλυτοκίας ἕως ἡμέρῶν π'. ἐπεὶ δὲ καὶ Ἀδὰμ τῇ μ' ἡμέρᾳ τῆς πλάσεως αὐτοῦ εἰσήχθη ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ, οὐ χάριν καὶ τὰ γεννώμενα τῇ τεσσαρακοστῇ ἡμέρᾳ εἰσφέρουσιν ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ κατὰ τὸν νόμον. ἐπὶ δὲ θήλεος ἀκάθαρτον εἶναι αὐτὴν ἐπὶ ἡμέρας ὀγδοήκοντα, διὰ τε τὴν ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ αὐτῆς εἰσοδὸν τῇ ὀγδοηκοστῇ ἡμέρᾳ καὶ διὰ τὸ ἀκάθαρτον τοῦ θήλεος πρὸς τὸ ἄρσεν. ἀφεδρος γὰρ πάλιν οὕσα οὐκ εἰσέρχεται ἕως ἑπτὰ ἡμέρας ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ κατὰ τὸν θεῖον νόμον. ταῦτα ἐκ τοῦ βίου λεγομένου Ἀδὰμ φιλομαθίας χάριν ἐν συντόμῳ ἐστοιχείωσα, ἐν τῷ πρώτῳ ἔτει τῆς πλάσεως τοῦ Ἀδὰμ, ἐπ' αὐτῷ τὰ πραχθέντα.

In the Book of Adam and Eve translated by Malan in 1882 from the Ethiopic we find an undoubted reminiscence of our text. Thus in i. 74 and 75 it is recounted that Adam made an offering for Cain when he was forty days old and an offering for Cain's twin sister Luluwa when she was eighty days old, when Eve and her daughter approached the altar. Anastasius Sinaita (flor. 7th cent.) in his Anagogic. contemplat. in Hexaem. (Fabricius, Cod. Pseud. V.T. ii. 83; Migne's Bibliotheca Patr. Graec. tom. 89, col. 967) is the first to refer directly to our text: Unde Hebraei ex libro qui non est redactus in canonem qui quidem dicitur Testamentum Protoplastorum, dicunt quadragesima die ingressum esse Adam in Paradisum; sicut etiam videtur cuidam historico chronographo Pyrrhoni, et quibusdam expositoribus. The Pyrrho here mentioned by Anastasius is likewise referred to by Glycas as the source of this statement. Syncellus (p. 8) is the next to use our text: εἰσήγαγεν ὁ Θεὸς τὸν Ἀδὰμ ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ κατὰ τὴν τεσσαρακοστὴν ἡμέραν τῆς πλάσεως αὐτοῦ. Subsequently Glycas (circ. 1150), in his Bιβλος Χρονική (pp. 392-393, ed. Bekker), quotes our text with disapproval: ἡ δὲ λεγομένη λεπτή Γένεσις, οὐκ οἶδ', ὅθεν συγγραφείσα καὶ ὅπως, φησὶν ὅτι μεθ' ἡμέρας μ' εἰσήλθεν ὁ Ἀδὰμ εἰς τὸν παράδεισον, ἡ δὲ Εὐὰ μεθ' ἡμέρας π', καὶ τούτου χάριν ἐν ἡμέραις τοσαύταις προσάγονται τῷ νάφ τό τε ἄρρεν καὶ τὸ θῆλυ, ἀνάλογως τάχα τῷ Ἀδὰμ καὶ τῇ Εὐᾷ. On p. 156 Glycas tells us that Pyrrho in his history writes that Adam did not enter the Garden of Eden till the 40th day after his creation, and then adds ἄλλ' οὐκ οἶδα ποῦ διέτριβε πρότερον ὁ Ἀδὰμ, ἕξω τοῦ παραδείσου τεσσαράκοντα διὰ τὴν ἡμέρας.

On the other hand Beer (Das Buch des Jubiläen, p. 40) points out that there is not a trace of such a legend in Rabbinic literature, and that on the contrary it is declared in Shabbath 135a (דורות הראשונים יוכיחו שאין אדם נשמה לרעה (נימול) לשמה) that the regulations in Lev. xii. 2-5 had no currency before

into the garden of Eden. 10. And for this reason the commandment is written on the heavenly tables in regard to her that gives birth: "if she bears a male, she shall remain in her uncleanness seven days according to the first week of days, and thirty and three days shall she remain in the blood of her purifying, and she shall not touch any hallowed thing, nor enter into the sanctuary, until she accomplishes these days which (are enjoined) in the case of a male child. 11. But in the case of a female child she shall remain in her uncleanness two weeks of days, according to the first two weeks, and sixty-six days in the blood of her purification, and they will be in all eighty days." 12. And when she had completed these eighty days we brought her into the garden of Eden, for it is holier than all the earth besides, and every tree that is planted in it is holy. 13. Therefore, there was ordained regarding her who bears a male or a female child the statute

the legislation of Moses. Yet, notwithstanding Beer's statement, the tradition in our text is not without attestation in Judaism. Thus in the Midrash Tadshe xv. (see Jellinek's edition in his Bet ha-Midrash, iii. 164-193 or Eppstein in Beiträge zur jüd. Alterthumskunde, 1887), "Why did the Holy One, blessed be He, ordain seven days of purification for a woman who had borne a male child and fourteen days for her who had borne a female? This is to recall the creation of the first Adam who was created in seven days [in the first] of the first week, (and) the creation of Eve, who was taken from one of his ribs in the second week. So Pinchas ben Jair (פנחס בן יאיר). The sages however say that both were created on the eve of the Sabbath, the sixth day. Wherefore did the Holy One, blessed be He, ordain that she who had borne a male should enter the temple after forty days, and that she who had borne a female after eighty days? To recall that which God did regarding the first Adam who was created outside the Garden of Eden and did not enter till later."

We observe here that the above statements are attributed to Pinchas. They go back ultimately to our text. As references to Pinchas, Eppstein (Revue des Études juives, xxi. 92, 1890) mentions Chullin 7 b, Kethuboth 46 a, Sota 49 a, Ber. rabba 60.

10. The heavenly tables. In my note on xlvii. 3 of the Eth. Enoch I have touched on the origin and development of the idea underlying this expression, and to this I must refer the reader. The phrase is found in the Eth. Enoch xlvii. 3, lxxx. 1, 2, xciii. 2, ciii. 2, Test. XII. Patriarch. Levi v.; Asher. ii., vii. The conception is not a hard and fixed one: in Enoch and Test. XII. Patriarch. it wavers between an absolute determinism and prediction pure and simple: whereas in our text, in addition to these significations, it implies at times little more than a contemporary heavenly record of events. In fact, in our author, the heavenly tables are the divine statute book of the Theocracy of which the Mosaic law is the reproduction on earth, or a mere contemporary record of events, or finally they recount the

of those days that she should touch no hallowed thing, nor enter into the sanctuary until these days for the male or female child are accomplished. 14. This is the law and testimony which was written down for Israel, in order that they should observe (it) all the days. 15. And in the first week of the first jubilee, Adam and his wife were in the ^{1-7 A.M.} garden of Eden for seven years tilling and keeping it, and we gave him work and we instructed him to do everything that is suitable for tillage. 16. And he tilled (the garden), and was naked and knew it not, and was not ashamed, and he protected the garden from the birds and beasts and cattle, and gathered its fruit, and eat, and put aside the residue for himself and for his wife [and put aside that which was being future history of the world either predictively or else determinatively. One meaning, moreover, passes imperceptibly into another. Thus those tables record: (1) Laws levitical, criminal, and chronological, in some instances predetermined and previously observed in heaven, in others established for the first time on earth: purification after childbirth, iii. 8-14; law as to covering one's nakedness, iii. 31; as to murder and those who witness it, iv. 5; as to retribution, iv. 32; as to the judgment of sinners, v. 13; as to the feast of weeks, vi. 17 and the divisions and length of the year, vi. 29-35; as to circumcision, xv. 25-26; as to the seed of Lot, xvi. 9 and the feast of tabernacles, xvi. 29; as to the feast of the lord, xviii. 19; as to the Philistines, xxiv. 33; as to the marriage of the elder daughter, xxviii. 6; as to the man who gives his daughter to a Gentile, xxx. 9; as to tithes, xxxii. 15; as to the incestuous person, xxxiii. 10; as to the Sabbath, l. 13. (2) Merely a contemporary event: the naming of Abraham as a friend of God, xiv. 9, and of Levi, xxx. 20; Isaac's blessing of Levi and Judah, xxi. 32. (3) Predictions and predeterminations: as to the judgment, v. 13; as to the Messianic kingdom, xxiii. 32.

15. Seven years. According to Ber. rabba 18, Sanh. 38b, and Die Schatzhöhle, p. 7 (translated by Bezold),

Adam was only six hours in the Garden. MS a of the Slavonic Enoch xxxii. 2 states that Adam was only five and a half hours in Paradise. This last clause looks like a Christian interpolation, and may point to the 5500 years which were to elapse before the coming of Christ according to the early Fathers.

Instructed him . . . for tillage. In Is. xxviii. 26-29 this instruction is attributed to God; but in Ber. rabba 24 it is assigned, as in our text, to the angels: also in the Life of Adam and Eve, 22 (Kautzsch, Apoc. und Pseud. ii. 515) it is stated that God sent Michael with certain seeds to Adam, and with orders to instruct him in husbandry.

Is suitable. So Barth and Littmann take zajăstar'i as representing אָרַךְ in the Hebrew. See on ii. 29. But the ordinary sense of the word, "is revealed," may be right here. See preceding note.

16. Naked . . . and was not ashamed. Gen. ii. 25.

Protected the garden from the birds, etc. The Greek is found in Glycas (p. 206, ed. Bekker): ὁ Ἀδὰμ ἀπεσώβει τὰ πετεινὰ καὶ ἐρπετὰ, συνήγε τὸν καρπὸν ἐν παραδείσῳ καὶ σὺν τῇ γυναικὶ αὐτοῦ ἤσθιον αὐτόν.

[And put aside . . . kept]. Bracketed as a dittography. Here "which was being kept" = τὸ φυλασσόμενον = תְּשׁוּבָה, a corrupt dittography of תְּשׁוּבָה = τὸ καταλειφθέν, "the residue" (or תְּשׁוּבָה of תְּשׁוּבָה).

kept]. 17. And after the completion of the seven years, which he had completed there, seven years exactly, and in 8 A.M. the second month, on the seventeenth day (of the month), the serpent came and approached the woman, and the serpent said to the woman, "Hath God commanded you, saying, Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden?" 18. And she said to it, "Of all the fruit of the trees of the garden God hath said unto us, Eat; but of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden God hath said unto us, Ye shall not eat thereof, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die." 19. And the serpent said unto the woman, "Ye shall not surely die: for God doth know that on the day ye shall eat thereof, your eyes will be opened, and ye will be as gods, and ye will know good and evil." 20. And the woman saw the tree that it was agreeable and pleasant to the eye, and that its fruit was good for food, and she took thereof and eat. 21. And when she had first covered her shame with fig-leaves, she gave thereof to Adam and he eat, and his eyes were opened, and he saw that he was naked. 22. And he took fig-leaves and sewed (them) together, and made an apron for himself, and covered his shame. 23. And God cursed the serpent, and was wroth with it for ever. . . . 24. And He was wroth with the woman, because she hearkened to the

17-22. Gen. iii. 1-7.

19. See on ver. 32. Cf. Syncellus i. 13: 'Εκ τῶν λεπτῶν Γενέσεως: τῷ ἐβδόμῳ ἔτει παρέβη καὶ τῷ ὀγδόῳ ἐξερρίψαν τοῦ παραδείσου, ὡς φησι, μετὰ τεσσαράκοντα πέντε ἡμέρας τῆς παραβάσεως, . . .

23. Cf. Gen. iii. 14. At the close of this verse I have marked a lacuna in the text; for Glycas (p. 206) affirms that according to Jubilees the serpent had originally four feet: ὁ ὄφης ἀπὸ κτήνους ἐρπετὸν ἐγένετο, χεῖράς τε καὶ πόδας ἐέκτητο. ἀφῆρέθη δὲ ταῦτα διὰ τὸ τολμηρῶς εἰς τὸν παράδεισον εἰσελθεῖν. Syncellus (i. 14) states that the serpent had originally four feet. The text, therefore, most probably contained some statement relative to the cutting off of the serpent's feet. Such a statement would follow naturally on Gen. iii. 14 "upon thy belly thou shalt go." Indeed in the Targ., Ps.-Jon., Gen. iii. 14 we find this very statement גְּלִי יִרְיָן, "and thy feet will be cut off." According to the Midrash Koheleth "the ministering angels came down and and cut off its hands and feet." Finally Josephus (Ant. i. 1. 4.) writes that the serpent was deprived both of language and feet, ἀφείλετο δὲ καὶ τὸν ὄφιν τὴν φωνὴν . . . ποδῶν τε αὐτὸν ἀποστερήσας σύρεσθαι κατὰ τῆς γῆς ἰλυσπώμενον ἐποίησε.

voice of the serpent, and did eat; and He said unto her: "I shall greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy pains: in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children, and thy return shall be unto thy husband, and he will rule over thee." 25. And to Adam also He said, "Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee that thou shouldst not eat thereof, cursed be the ground for thy sake: thorns and thistles shall it bring forth to thee, and thou shalt eat thy bread in the sweat of thy face, till thou returnest to the earth from whence thou wast taken; for earth thou art, and unto earth shalt thou return." 26. And He made for them coats of skin, and clothed them, and sent them forth from the Garden of Eden. 27. And on that day on which Adam went forth from the Garden, he offered as a sweet savour an offering, frankincense, galbanum, and stacte, and spices in the morning with the rising of the sun from the day when he covered his shame. 28. And on that day was closed the mouth of all beasts, and of cattle, and of birds, and of whatever walks, and of whatever moves, so that they could no longer speak: for they had all spoken one with another with one lip and with one tongue. 29. And He

Thy pains. So also LXX, but Mass., Sam., Syr., and Vulg. = "thy conception" (הריון).

Thy return = ἡ ἀποστροφή σου. So also LXX and Syr. = חשבת instead of Mass. and Sam. חשוקת = "they desire."

25-26. Gen. iii. 17-19, 21, 24.

25. Of the tree = ἀπὸ τοῦ ξύλου. The text is "of that tree," but the demonstrative is a rendering of the Greek art. as frequently.

Thy bread. So LXX, but Mass., Sam., Syr., Vulg. omit "thy."

To the earth . . . for earth . . . unto earth. As LXX uses γῆ to render the two Hebrew words ארמה and עפר, so did the Greek version of Jubilees.

27. Here the writer antedates the incense-offering mentioned in Exod. xxx. 34. According to Aboda zara 8 a Adam offered an ox whose horns were of earlier growth than its hoof (Beer, Buch der Jub. p. 40).

From the day when he covered his shame. Exod. xx. 26, xxviii. 42, where the priests are bidden to cover their nakedness with breeches when at the altar, may have been in the mind of the writer, as Beer (op. cit. p. 41) suggests.

28. This was undoubtedly a current belief among certain sections of the Jews. Thus it is stated without question in Joseph. Ant. i. 1. 4 ἀποφωνούτων δὲ κατ' ἐκείνου καιροῦ τῶν ζώων πάντων. It appears also in the Book of Adam and Eve i. 18 and in

sent out of the Garden of Eden all flesh that was in the Garden of Eden, and all flesh was scattered according to its kinds, and according to its types unto the places which had been created for them. 30. And to Adam alone did some form is implied in Philo, Quaest. in Gen. i. 32 (Armen.). Both our text and Josephus are quoted as teaching this view in Syncellus, i. 14, τὰ θηρία καὶ τὰ τετράποδα καὶ τὰ ἔρπετα φησὶν ὁ Ἰώσηπος καὶ ἡ Λεπτή Γένεσις μόφωνα εἶναι πρὸ τῆς παραβάσεως τοῖς πρωτοπλάστοις. This statement is repeated in Cedrenus, i. pp. 9-10; Zonaras, i. p. 23. It seems implied in the text that the common original language of men and animals was Hebrew. That Hebrew was the primitive language of man, at any rate, was universally believed among the Jews. Thus according to the Jerusalem Targum on Gen. xi. 1 all men originally spoke Hebrew, which was the language by means of which the world was created: הָיָה אִשְׁתִּיךָ שְׁלֹשָׁה אֲמָלָה בְּהָמָה בְּרֵאשִׁית הָאָדָמָה. (Cf. also Ber. rabba 18, 31.) In xii. 25, 26 of our text it is called "the tongue of the creation," which "had ceased from the mouths of all the children of men from the day of the overthrow (of Babel)" till the days of Abraham. In Cedrenus, i. 22, however, the legend is differently preserved. Because Eber refused to join in building Babel he did not lose his original language—the language that Adam spoke—like the rest of his contemporaries—τῆς τῶν ἄλλων φωνῆς συγγεθελεῖς ἡ τοῦ "Ἐβερ οὐκ ἀπώλετο. αὕτη δὲ ἐστὶν ἥ καὶ Ἀδὰμ ἐλάλει. Hence his descendants called themselves Hebrews and their language Hebrew, and the names of the patriarchs are a proof that Hebrew was the pre-Babel language—καὶ ταύτην οἱ τοῦτον διαδεξάμενοι ἀπόγονοι πατρωνυμικῶς ἑαυτοὺς Ἑβραίους προσηγόρευσαν καὶ Ἑβραῖδα τὴν φωνὴν ἐκάλεσαν. τεκμήριον δὲ ταύτην εἶναι τὴν πρὸ τῆς συγχύσεως φωνὴν τὰ τῶν παλαιῶν ὀνόματα. This view is likewise Jewish: it is found in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel, xxxviii. 11. But while some Syriac writers such as John bar Madani and Jacob of Serugh admitted this claim, others like Theodoret, Quaest. in

Gen. lx-lxi., St. Ephraem, and Barhebraeus (see Assemani, Bibl. Or. iii. 313, 314) were just as confident of the absolute priority of their own language, while Solomon Baisorensis reconciled both views by declaring that originally Syriac and Hebrew were one and the same.

In Die Schatzhöhle (transl. by Bezold), p. 29, the priority of Syriac is polemically maintained: "Von Adam bis damals redeten sie alle in dieser Sprache, nämlich in der syrischen Sprache . . . denn diese Sprache ist die Königin aller Sprachen. Die früheren Schriftsteller aber irren, indem sie sagen, das Hebräische sei die erste gewesen."

Other writers again asserted that Greek was the primitive speech of mankind. To this last view Eutychius (Nazam, al-j. pp. 53, 54, quoted by Malan, Book of Adam and Eve, pp. 245, 6) assents in these words. "This approves itself to me. For the Greek language is wiser, clearer and broader than either the Hebrew or the Syriac." The same view must have been held by the writer who first derived the name Adam from the initial letters of the Greek names of the four quarters of the world—ἀνατολή, δύσις, ἀρκτος, μεσημβρία. See Slav. En. xxx. 13 (note); Or. Sibyll. iii. 24-26. As for later Jewish ideas on this subject we find, Sanh. 38b, that Adam spoke Aramaic, אַרַמִּי, because Ps. cxxxix., which was supposed to be written by him, contained an Aramaic (?) word. In Shabb. 12b on the other hand one is bidden not to pray in Aramaic, שְׂמַי אַרְבִּי, because the angels of Service do not understand Aramaic (quoted in Levi's Neuhebr. u. chald. Wörterbuch, i. 168). According to Abarbanel, in his exposition of Zephaniah, fol. 276, col. 1 (see Eisenmenger, ii. 778), Hebrew was the language spoken before the building of Babel and should ultimately be that of all Israelites.

He give (the wherewithal) to cover his shame, of all the beasts and cattle. 31. On this account, it is prescribed on the heavenly tables as touching all those who know the judgment of the law, that they should cover their shame, and should not uncover themselves as the Gentiles uncover themselves. 32. And on the new moon of the fourth ^{8 A.M.} month, Adam and his wife went forth from the Garden of Eden, and they dwelt in the land of 'Êldâ, in the land of their creation. 33. And Adam called the name of his wife Eve. 34. And they had no son till the first jubilee, and after this he knew her. 35. Now he tilled the land as he had been instructed in the Garden of Eden.

31. This verse is of great importance from the historical standpoint. It constitutes an emphatic protest on the part of the writer against the adoption by his countrymen ("those who know the judgment of the law") of the customs of the Greeks. The custom, which he here protests against, is the exposure of the person in the Greek palaestra, which was established under the very citadel of David (2 Macc. iv. 12). Here many of the Jewish youths completely stripped themselves and joined in the public sports as Greek athletes. Even the priests of the Temple forsook their duties to join in these heathen games. On the institution of these and other Greek customs see 1 Macc. i. 13, 14; 2 Macc. iv. 9-14; Jos. Ant. xii. 5. 1. It is hardly possible to conceive the shock that such conduct must have given to the religiously disposed amongst the nation, and especially to such a Pharisee of the Pharisees as our author. In order to emphasise his protest against it he did not turn to the laws in Exod. xx. 26, xxx. 34, for these had only to do with the dress of the officiating priest, but to Gen. iii. 21 where he found ample justification for extending the law of covering one's shame to all men. This law, he asserts, was enacted immediately after the expulsion of Adam from Eden, i.e., immediately after the discovery of his nakedness. Subsequently (vii. 20) he represents Noah as enjoining the observance of this ordinance on his children.

32. On the new moon of the fourth month (see note on vi. 23). Syncellus (i. p. 13) says that Adam spent forty-five days in the garden after his transgression. This agrees with our text; for, according to iii. 17, Adam sinned on the 17th of the 2nd month and the expulsion followed on the 1st of the 4th.

In the land of 'Êldâ, in the land of their creation. Can 'Êldâ be a corruption of מולרָה? In that case "land of 'Êldâ" would mean "land of nativity." The phrase "land of their creation" is an interpretation of the words in Gen. iii. 23 "whence he was taken," which are reproduced in Onkelos and Ps.-Jon. as "whence he was created" (אֲתֵרִי), as in our text.

34. Thus Eve was a virgin till after the expulsion from Eden. Cf. Die Schatzhöhle (ed. Bezold, 1883), p. 7: Als Adam und Heva aus dem Paradies herausgegangen . . . sie waren jungfräulich.

35. Cf. iii. 15.

 78-84 A.M. Abel, and in the fifth she gave birth to her daughter 'Âwân.
 99-105 A.M. 2. And in the first (year) of the third jubilee, Cain slew Abel because (God) accepted the sacrifice of Abel, and did not accept the offering of Cain. 3. And he slew him in the field: and his blood cried from the ground to heaven, complaining because he had slain him. 4. And the Lord reproved Cain because of Abel, because he had slain him,

IV. 1. 'Âwân. A second daughter named 'Azûrâ (iv. 8) was born later. Cain married the elder 'Âwân, i.e. אָוָן, "wickedness," and Seth the younger, 'Azûrâ. The derivation of the latter is doubtful. Frankel (Monatsschrift f. Gesch. des Judenthums, 1856, 311-316) thinks that it is from עֲזוּרָה = "chaste" (?). Probably it is from אֲזוּרָה, "well guarded" (cf. Syriac Fragment 130f).

No two of later writers agree as to the forms of these names. According to the Syriac Fragment they were Aswa and Azura: in Epiphanius, Σαυή and 'Αζουρά: in Syncellus, 'Ασαννάν ('Ασαννά, 'Ασαννάν, 'Ασανρά, 'Ασουάμ) and 'Αζουρά. In Glycas and Joel 'Αζουρά ('Αζουρân) is made the elder and 'Ασουάμ the younger. Quite different names are given in the Pseudo-Methodius, i.e., Καλημέρα and Λεβόρα. Again the elder appears as Qalmana in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel and Pseudo-Methodius (Lat. vers.), as Luva in the Book of Adam and Eve, as Azrun in Eutychius, while the younger is Lebuda in Barhebraeus, Aklejâm in the Book of Adam and Eve, and Owain or Laphura in Eutychius. (See Rönsch,

pp. 373-374, Fabricius, Cod. Pseud. V.T. i. 109 sqq.)

According to Syncellus (i. 14) Cain was born in the year 70 A.M., Abel in 77, and Asouam (i.e. 'Âwân) in 85. Though the dates are left indefinite in our text they are no doubt derived from it. Thus Cain married Âwân in the year 135 according to Syncellus, between 134-140 according to our text. 'Âwân was then fifty years old (Syncellus).

2-3. Cf. Gen. iv. 4, 5, 8, 10.

2. The sacrifice of Abel. So a. bcd read "the sacrifice at his hand."

Offering. a c, but bd omit.

Of Cain. So a. bcd "at the hand of Cain."

3. Complaining or "making suit." Cf. Gen. iv. 10; Eth. Enoch xxii. 5, 6. According to Syncellus (i. 14) Abel was twenty-two years old when he offered his sacrifice on the new moon of the seventh month. Thus the words "in the first of the third jubilee" are to be taken as the first year of the jubilee = 99 A.M. For the later traditions as to the instrument with which Cain slew Abel, see Fabricius, Cod. Pseud. V.T. i. 113.

and he made him a fugitive on the earth because of the blood of his brother, and he cursed him upon the earth.

5. And on this account it is written on the heavenly tables, "Cursed is he who smites his neighbour treacherously, and let all who have seen and heard say, So be it; and the man who has seen and not declared (it), let him be accursed as the other."

6. And for this reason we announce when we come before the Lord our God all the sin which is committed in heaven and on earth, and in light and in darkness, and everywhere.

7. And Adam and his wife mourned for Abel four weeks of years, and in the fourth year of the fifth week (99-127) they became joyful, and Adam knew his wife again, and she bare him a son, and he called his name Seth; for he said "GOD has raised up a second seed unto us on the earth instead of Abel; for Cain slew him."

8. And in the sixth week he begat his daughter 'Azûrâ. 9. And Cain took 134-140 A.M.

Treacherously = δόλῳ, the LXX rendering of בסתר in Deut. xxvii. 24. The phrase ba'ekûj bears the same meaning in xxix. 7, xxx. 3. In viii. 9 it = "secretly."

6. Sin . . . committed in heaven. On this old Semitic idea of the possibility of sin in heaven, see my Slavonic Enoch pp. xxxiv. sqq.

7. Mourned for Abel four weeks of years. As Abel was born in 77, and was twenty-two years old according to Syncellus and our text (see verse 3, note) when killed by Cain, the twenty-eight years of mourning extend from 99 to 127. The Greek is found in Syncellus (i. 15): ἐπένθησαν αὐτὸν οἱ πρωτόπλαστοι ἐβδομαδικούς τέσσαρας, ἡγουν ἔτη εἰκοσι ὀκτώ.

Became joyful. The sense may be the same as in Gen. xviii. 12, "After I am waxed old, shall I have pleasure?"

He called. So Sam. וקרא, but Mass., LXX, Syr., Onk., of Gen. iv. 25 read "she called." In Jubilees it is generally the father that names the child; whereas in J of Genesis it is the mother, except in iv. 26, v. 29, xxv. 25, 26; Exod. ii. 22.

For he said. So LXX and Vulg. but wanting in Mass. and Sam.

8. 'Azûrâ. See note on iv. 1. 'Azûrâ was born in the sixth week of the third jubilee (134-140) or of the fourth (183-189).

9. Bare him Enoch, etc. Cf. Gen. iv. 17. Syncellus (i. 16) ascribes to this Enoch the invention of the plough.

Cain built a city, and called its name . . . Enoch. Cain therefore ceased to be a wanderer. The Book of Jashar, 96, plays on the name Enoch and gives his son Enoch. 10. And Adam knew Eve his wife and she bare yet nine sons. 11. And in the fifth week of the 231 A.M. fifth jubilee Seth took 'Azûrâ his sister to be his wife, and in 235 A.M. the fourth (year of the sixth week) she bare him Enos.

12. He began to call on the namē of the Lord on the earth.

it the sense of rest in this connection.
יִקְרָא אֶת שֵׁם הָעֵר חֲנֹךְ בְּשֵׁם בְּנוֹ כִּי הָנָה לוֹ
בְּאַרְצָא בְּיָמֵם הָהֵם.

10. Yet nine sons. Reproduced in Epiphanius, Haer. xxxix. 6 (vol. I. i. 528: ed. Oehler): Γεγόνασι δὲ τῷ Ἀδὰμ καὶ ἄλλοι υἱοί, ὡς ἡ λεπτή Γένεσις περιέχει, ἐννέα μετὰ τοὺς τρεῖς τοῦτους· ὡς εἶναι αὐτῷ δύο μὲν θυγατέρας, ἄρρενας δὲ δεκαδύο. The Book of Jashar speaks of three sons and three daughters of Adam. Syncellus (i. 18) assigns to him thirty-three sons and twenty-seven daughters. Ps.-Philo, Ant. bibl. Lib. p. 41, gives the names of these sons: Acliseel, Suris, Aelamiel, Brabal, Naalt, Harama, Hasam, Maathal, Anath.

11. Cf. Gen. iv. 26. Fourth (year of the sixth week). The lacuna here is supplied from Syncellus. According to Syncellus (i. 17) Seth marries in the year υλέ (= 425), and Enos was born in the year υλέ (= 435). Thus there was an interval of ten years between the marriage of Seth and the birth of Enos. It will be observed that there is a difference of 200 years between the dates assigned by Jubilees and those by Syncellus, and that in the following ten dates relating to the same events respectively both books agree in the tens and units but differ in the hundreds.

	According to Jubilees.	According to Syncellus.
Seth born .	130	230
Azûrâ born .	134	234
Seth marries
Azûrâ .	225	425
Enos born .	235	435
Cainan born .	325	625
Cain marries
Mûalêlêt .	390	790
Mahalalel born	395	795
Jared born .	461	960
Enoch born .	522	1122

This addition of centuries to the dates in Jubilees rising progressively from one to six Syncellus carried out in the service of his chronological system (see Rönisch, 285 sq.).

12. He began. So LXX and Vulg. implying הָחֵל.

Began to call, etc. The two great versions, the LXX and Syr., agree rightly with Jubilees in giving this sense to Gen. iv. 26. It was also so understood by Josephus, Ant. i. 3. 1, but when we come down to Jerome's time, most Jewish scholars held that the verse recounted the rise of idolatry (Quaest. in Gen. iv. 26: Tunc initium fuit invocandi nomen Domini, licet plerique Hebraeorum aliud arbitrentur, quod tunc primum in nomine Domini et in similitudine ejus fabricata sint idola). This latter interpretation may have arisen as early as the first cent. A.D.; for it is found in Onkelos ("the children of men ceased praying"—הָחֵל . . . לְפָנָיו). By Ps.-Jon. the commencement of idolatry is derived from Gen. iv. 26 by taking הָחֵל as = profanari. Ber. rabba 23 recounts that men were exposed to demons in the days of Enos, and that then for the first time they made for themselves idols. Shabbath 118b speaks of man committing idolatry like Enos. The same idea recurs in the Book of Jashar and a closely related one in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel, xxiv. 9, xxvi. 20. Yet even in this book traces of the older view survive; for astrology, divination and idolatry are assigned to Serug's days, though Serug and his sons are said to have had no part in these things (xxvii. 9). Indeed, in the Book of Jashar (Migne, Dict. des Apocr. ii. 1090), it is said that Seth called his son Enos because "men began to corrupt themselves and forsake God for idols."

13-15. Enos, Kenan, Mahalalel, Jared.

And 449-455 A.M. in the second week of the tenth jubilee Mahalalel took unto him to wife Dînâh, the daughter of Barâkî'êl the daughter of his father's brother, and she bare him a son in the third week in the sixth year, and he called his name Jared; for 461 A.M. in his days the angels of the Lord descended on the earth,

Took unto him to wife . . . the daughter of his father's brother. It will be observed that from the descent of the angels onwards men cease to marry their sisters. Epiphanius (Haer. xxxix. 7) remarks: πλατυνθέντων δὲ τῶν ἀνθρώπων . . . λοιπὸν οὐκέτι τὰς αὐτῶν ἀδελφὰς πρὸς γάμον ἤγοντο, ἀλλὰ εἰς εὐνομίαν κατέστη καὶ πρὸ τοῦ διὰ Μωϋσέως ἐγγράφου νόμου ὁ κατὰ τὸν σεμνὸν γάμον θεσμός, καὶ ἐκ τῶν πατραδέλφων αὐτῶν τὰς γαμετὰς ἑαυτῶν ἤγοντο. The last clause appears, as Rönisch (p. 254) has already remarked, to be taken from Jubilees. This book is cited by Epiphanius in the preceding chapter under its twofold name of Ἰωβηλαῖα and Λεπτογένεσις.

Father's brother. MSS read ἑβτα ἄβὺή = "father's sister"; but I have emended this into ἑβwa ἄβὺή, since we find the latter in the Syriac Fragment and in the Greek MS r on Gen. v. 15 (πατραδέλφου αὐτοῦ) and Epiphanius, Haer. xxxix. 7: εἰς εὐνομίαν κατέστη καὶ πρὸ τοῦ διὰ Μωϋσέως ἐγγράφου νόμου ὁ κατὰ τὸν σεμνὸν γάμον θεσμός, καὶ ἐκ τῶν πατραδέλφων αὐτῶν τὰς γαμετὰς ἑαυτῶν ἤγοντο. In similar cases in the sequel the same emenda-

tion is made on the authority of the Syriac and Greek, save in viii. 6 and xi. 7 where the Ethiopic preserves the true text.

Jared; for in his days the angels of the Lord descended. We have here a play on Jared's name in the original, ירר . . . כי במי מלאכי אלהים ירר.

The angels of the Lord descended on the earth. The later Jewish form of the myth relating to the fall of the angels and their intercourse with the daughters of men is constructed on Gen. vi. 1-4 and Is. xxiv. 21. The true interpretation of Gen. vi. 1-4 is undoubtedly that given in our text, the Enoch literature, Testaments of the XII. Patriarchs, Philo, Jude, Peter, Josephus, Justin Martyr, and most of the early Christian writers (see my Eth. Enoch vi. 2, note). But probably at the close of the first cent. A.D., or earlier, Jewish scholars protested against this interpretation. Thus (Ber. rabba 26) R. ben Jochai (early in second cent.) cursed any one who translated Gen. vi. 2 by the phrase "sons of God," and not "sons of the judges." Similarly, the Jew Trypho condemns this interpretation, Justin, Dial. c. Tryph. 79. In the Samaritan Version (בני שלמניה), and the Targum of Onkelos (בני רכריא), and Symmachus (υἱοὶ τῶν δυναστεύοντων) we have it rendered as = "sons of the mighty." In the Book of Jashar (Dict. des Apocr. ii. 1097) the sons of God were "judges and magistrates." In the Ps.-Jon. on Gen. vi. 2 we have both interpretations side by side, and also in the

those who are named the Watchers, that they should instruct the children of men, and that they should do

Chronicles of Jerahmeel, xxiv. 11-xxv. 8. Ps.-Philo, Ant. bibl. Lib. p. 42, gives simply the biblical words. Similarly, on the Christian side the traditional interpretation came in due time to be denounced, and "the sons of God" were taken to be the good amongst mankind, the descendants of Seth, and the daughters of men to be the descendants of Cain. So Julius Africanus: οι από του Σήθ δίκαιοι (see below). Next, while Hilary (ob. 368), Comment. in Ps. cxxxii., contents himself with discrediting the old myth, Chrysostom, Homil. in Gen. vi. 1, says that it is necessary to examine this passage carefully in order to subvert the fables of thoughtless praters—ἀναγκαῖον τούτου τοῦ χωρίου πολλήν τὴν ἔρευναν ποιήσασθαι καὶ ἀναστρέψαι τὰς μυθολογίας τῶν ἀπερισκέπτως πάντα φθεγγομένων. These fables rest on a false exegesis; for, as he proceeds to show, the sons of God were the posterity of Seth and Enos—οι από του Σήθ καὶ του Ἐνὼς. Jerome, Comment. in Ps. cxxxii., and Augustine, De Civ. Dei, xv. 23. 4, pour discredit and contempt on the old myth. Now concurrently with the increasing acceptance of the new interpretation, there necessarily set in the growing importance of Seth, the ancestor of the righteous generations described in Gen. vi. 1-4 as "the sons of God." In this process of glorification the superhuman achievements and characteristics originally connected with other names were gradually transferred to Seth, and this notably in the case of Enoch. Thus in consequence of this new exegesis the star of Enoch paled before that of Seth. In dealing with such literature this is an important fact, since we are thus frequently justified in applying to Enoch the statements of later Christian writers regarding Seth. We shall now show how subordinate the figure of Enoch becomes in later writers, while the glorification of Seth proceeds apace. First of all in Africanus, who lived about the beginning of the third cent., we have, so far as I am aware, the first occurrence amongst Christians of the new exegesis of Gen. vi. 1-4. He adds, it is true, the old view, but he does not approve of it.

His exposition is given in Syncellus (i. 34 sq.): πλήθους ἀνθρώπων γενομένου ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς ἄγγελοι τοῦ οὐρανοῦ θυγατράσιν ἀνθρώπων συνήλθον. ἐν ἐνόις ἀντιγράφοις εὗρον, οἱ υἱοὶ τοῦ θεοῦ. μυθεύεται δέ, ὡς οἶμαι, ἀπὸ τοῦ Σήθ, ὑπὸ τοῦ πνεύματος οἱ υἱοὶ θεοῦ προσ-αγορεύονται, διὰ τοὺς ἀπ' αὐτοῦ γενεα-λογουμένους δικαίους τε καὶ πατριάρχας ἀχρὶ τοῦ Σωτήρος. τοὺς δ' ἀπὸ Κάιν ἀνθρώπων ἀποκαλεῖ σποράν, ὡς οὐδὲ τι θεῖον ἐσχγκότας διὰ πονηρίαν γένους . . . εἰ δὲ ἐπ' ἀγγέλων νοοῖτο ἔχειν τούτους, τῶν περὶ μαγείας καὶ γοητείας . . . ταῖς γυναῖξι τὴν γνῶσιν παραδ-ωκέναι, ἀφ' ὧν ἐποιήσαντο παῖδας τοὺς γίγαντας. (Cf. also i. 16 sq.) When we pass from this writer to the sixth cent. Book of Adam and Eve, we find that the new interpretation has ousted the old from the field. Thus the Watchers are throughout described as the sons of Seth, and in Book III. chap. iv. the question is discussed at length: the wise men who said that angels had come down from heaven and mingled with the daughters of men had erred: such actions, moreover, were impossible for spiritual beings. These "angels of God" were the children of Seth who were thus designated so long as they preserved their virginity, their innocence and their glory. But they transgressed and mingled with the daughters of Cain. It is observable that whereas Seth is an extraordinary and superhuman personage in this work, there is nothing notable said of Enoch save that "he wrote a celebrated book" and that "many wonders happened to him . . . but those wonders may not be told in this place." For the same view as to the Watchers, see Die Schatzhöhle, pp. 8-10. Our next illustration consists of an anonymous extract prefixed to the works of Malala (circa 600), quoted by Fabricius, i. 151: ὁ δὲ Ἀδάμ σλ' ἐτῶν ἦν ὅτε ἐγέννησε τὸν Σήθ· οὗτος ὁ Σήθ πρῶτος ἐξεύρησε γράμματα Ἑβραϊκὰ καὶ σοφίαν καὶ τὰ σημεῖα τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καὶ τὰς τροπὰς τῶν ἐνιαυτῶν καὶ τοὺς μῆνας καὶ τὰς ἐβδομάδας καὶ τοῖς ἄστροις ἐπέ-θηκεν ὀνόματα καὶ τοῖς πέντε πλανήταις εἰς τὸ γνωρίζεσθαι ὑπὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων judgment and uprightness on the earth. 16. And in the eleventh jubilee Jared took to himself a wife, and her name 512-518 A.M.

καὶ μόνον, καὶ τὸν μὲν α' πλανήτην ἀστέρα ἐκάλεσε Κρόνον, τὸν δὲ β' Δία, τὸν δὲ γ' Ἄρεα, τὸν δὲ δ' Ἀφροδίτην, τὸν δὲ ε' Ἑρμῆν. τοὺς γὰρ δύο φωστῆρας ἦλιον καὶ σελήνην ὁ θεὸς ἐκάλεσε. These words form on the whole a reasonable description of the achievements assigned to Enoch in the two books of Enoch, in Jubilees, and the early Christian writers. They are found verbatim in the Chronography of Joel, p. 3 (ed. Bekker, 1836). Next, in the Annals of Eutychius, Patriarch of Alexandria (933-939 A.D.), written in Arabic and translated by Pococke (Migne, tom. 111 col. 913), a vigorous protest is made against the old myth: qui autem errant neque sciunt quid dicant aiunt angelos descendisse ad filias hominum, cum intelligendi sint filii Sethi qui a monte sancto ad filias Caini maledicti descenderunt: Sethiadae enim ob sanctitatem suam et quod montem sanctum incolerent, appellati sunt Bani Elohim, i.e., filii Dei. Similar statements are made in the Chronikon Paschale, i. pp. 38, 39 (ed. Dindorf, 1832). In Syncellus (circa 800 A.D.), i. 17, 19 the now prevailing interpretation of Gen. vi. 1-4 is repeated. The descendants of Seth were pious and beautiful, and they lived in the heights over against Paradise according to the command of Adam, but were later seduced through love of the daughters of men (p. 17). Thereupon Syncellus cites Gen. vi. 1. Again, on p. 19 he writes that two hundred Watchers of the posterity of Seth were seduced and descended and took them wives, etc.—οἱ δὲ ἐκ γένους αὐτοῦ (Σήθ) διακόσιοι ἐγγήγοροι . . . πλανηθέντες κατέβησαν, καὶ ἔλαβον ἑαυτοῖς γυναῖκας, κ.τ.λ. These statements, first made in Eth. En. vi. 4-6, regarding the two hundred angels are here transferred to Seth, though Syncellus was perfectly aware of their original bearing; for in the next paragraph he actually cites this chapter of the Eth. En. Again, on pp. 16-17 Seth, just as formerly Enoch, is said to have been carried off by the angels and to have received a revelation regarding the future fall of the Watchers and the Deluge—ὁ Σήθ ἀρπαγείς ὑπὸ ἀγγέλων ἐμνήθη τὰ περὶ τῆς παραβάσεως μέλλοντα ἔσεσθαι τῶν ἐγγηγόρων καὶ τὰ περὶ κατακλυσμοῦ τοῦ ὕδατος ἐσομένου . . . καὶ γενόμενος ἀφαντος ἡμέρας μ' ἐλθὼν ἐξηγήσατο τοῖς πρωτοπλάστοις ὅσα ἐμνήθη δι' ἀγγέλων. This is an exact account of what was originally attributed to Enoch. In the Synopsis of Cedrenus (eleventh cent.) we meet with the same phenomena, but carried one stage further; for, whereas Syncellus first gave his own version of the intercourse of the sons of God and the daughters of men, and then with remarkable candour the original account from the Book of Enoch, in Cedrenus, on the other hand, the two accounts given by Syncellus are worked up into one, and every incident told of the fallen angels is circumstantially recounted of the posterity of Seth (i. 16-20). In Zonaras (twelfth cent.), i. 26 (ed. Pinder 1841), the current view is given and the older mentioned only to be rejected. When we pass from this author we come to the semi-apotheosis of Seth in the writings of Glycas who lived some thirty or forty years later. Thus in the Annals of Glycas (ed. Bekker, 1836), p. 233, Seth is almost regarded as a divine being:—οἱ υἱοὶ τοῦ θεοῦ, τούτέστιν οἱ ἀπὸ τοῦ Σήθ καταγόμενοι—ἐκεῖνον γὰρ διὰ τὴν ἀρετὴν αὐτοῦ θεὸν ἔλεγον: and likewise on p. 228, Σήθ . . . θεὸς εἶναι διὰ τὴν ἀρετὴν αὐτοῦ νομιζόμενος. This idea, indeed, had already appeared in Cedrenus, i. 16, ὡνομάσθη δὲ θεὸς διὰ τὴν λάμψιν τοῦ προσώπου αὐτοῦ, ἣν ἔσχεν ἐν ὅλῃ αὐτοῦ τῇ ζωῇ. Thus Seth has at last become incomparably the chief personage among the early Patriarchs. In Glycas, p. 228, however, the persistency of the original Enoch myth is shown in the words: λέγεται δὲ ὅτι ὁ ἐν τοῖς ἀστράσι τεταγμένος ἀγγελος, ὁ θεότατος δηλαδὴ Οὐριήλ, πρὸς γε τὸν Σήθ καὶ τὸν Ἑνῶχ κατῶν ἐδίδαξεν αὐτοὺς ὥρων μηνῶν τροπῶν καὶ ἐνιαυτῶν διαφορὰς. Just as these Christian writers transferred Enoch's functions to Seth, so Jewish writers after the Christian era, though on different grounds, transferred them variously to Moses, Ezra, Elijah, etc. See my Watchers. The מְרַקְּעִים of Dan. iv. 13, 17, 23, in Greek ἐγρηγόροι. See Eth. En. i. 5 (note), xx. 1, etc.; Slav. En. vii. (notes), xviii. (notes); Test. Reub. v. Thus anciently the watchers were always regarded as an angelic class, but later, owing to a new interpretation of Gen. vi. 1-4, they were said to be the descendants of Seth. We have seen in the immediately preceding note how this came about.

Watchers instruct the children of men. In v. 6 it is said that God sent the angels to the earth. The object with which the angels here descended to the earth (see v. 6, viii. 10 note) seems at first sight to clash with that which is seemingly implied in the Eth. Enoch and the Slavonic Enoch (see Eth. Enoch vi. notes). But it is quite possible that our text provides us with the object originally assigned in the myth. In the Chronicles of Jerahmeel xxv. 2-3 this view is preserved where Shemchazai and 'Azael are represented as receiving permission from God to descend on earth in order to sanctify the divine name among men. When these angels descended they could not resist the attractions of the daughters of men (xxv. 4). Such a view most probably underlies Eth. Enoch vi., lxxxvi. 1. At all events the idea was a familiar one in the Judaism of the second cent. B.C. According to Ethiopic Enoch vi.-xxxvi. and lxxii.-lxxxii. Enoch owed all his supernatural knowledge to the instruction of angels, and according to x. 9-10 of our text Raphael taught Noah the secrets of medicinal herbs, and an angel of the presence instructs Moses throughout our book. The way for such beliefs was prepared by the statements in Ezekiel, Zechariah and Daniel, bearing on such offices of the angels. For Talmudic ideas on this subject see Jewish Encyclopaedia, i. 592-593.

Father's brother. Emended from "father's sister," as in ver. 15.

17-23. These verses relating to Enoch are of great importance as they help to determine the sections of the Ethiopic Enoch which were known to the author of our text. The words "the first . . . who learnt writing" may point to the phrase in Eth. Enoch xii. 3, "Enoch the scribe"; xii. 4, xv. 1, "Scribe of righteousness," but there is no certainty. On the other hand the clause "who wrote down the signs of heaven according to the order of their months in a book that men might know the seasons of the years, etc." may be accepted as a partial description of Eth. Enoch lxxii.-lxxxii. To ver. 18 we shall return presently. As regards ver. 19 we can attain to practical certainty. The words "what was and what will be, he saw in a vision of his sleep as it will happen to the children of men . . . until the day of judgment," form an exact description of the Dream-Visions in Eth. Enoch lxxxiii.-xc., which give a history of the world from the creation till the final judgment. Moreover, the next verse is no doubt indebted to Eth. Enoch lxxxv. 3 for the name of Enoch's wife. It will be observed also that the Dream-Visions referred to in ver. 19 are rightly placed before Enoch's marriage recounted in ver. 20. It is twice emphatically stated in Eth. Enoch lxxxiii. 2 and lxxxv. 3 that Enoch had these Visions before his marriage. We need, therefore, entertain no doubt as to our author having been acquainted with Eth. Enoch lxxxiii.-xc. Now on other critical grounds we know that Eth. Enoch vi.-xi. are earlier than lxxxiii.-xc. Next, the first clause in ver. 21, "he was moreover with the angels of God these six jubilees of years," offers an explanation of Eth. Enoch xii. 1-2, "Before all these events Enoch was translated and no one of the children of men knew whither he was translated, and where he abode, and what had become of him. 2. And his activities had to do with the

the first among men that are born on earth who learnt writing and knowledge and wisdom and who wrote down the signs of heaven according to the order of their months in a book, that men might know the seasons of the years according to the order of their separate months. 18. And he was the first to write a testimony, and he testified to the sons of men among the generations of the earth, and

Watchers and his days were with the holy ones." Since in ver. 22 the clause "testified to the watchers" presupposes such statements as are in Eth. En. xii. 3-6, xiii. 1-2, xiv. 4-7, xv. 2 sqq., we may conclude, therefore, that our author had also chapters xii.-xvi. of Eth. Enoch before him. To return to ver. 21 the clause "they showed him everything which is on earth" appears to refer to Enoch's journeys to the four quarters of the earth as well as to its centre under the guidance of various angels in Eth. Enoch xxiii.-xxxvi. The next words "(everything which is) . . . in the heavens" are less clear. They may point to Enoch's translation to heaven in Eth. Enoch xiv. or possibly to the celestial phenomena described in lxxii.-lxxxii. Moreover, the next words, "and the rule of the sun," seem clearly to indicate such a passage as lxxxii. 13-20. We have already seen that the first clause of ver. 22 manifestly implies such a background as Eth. Enoch xii.-xvi. Its second clause, "who had transgressed with the daughters of men," expresses the thought that recurs frequently in these chapters. As regards its third, "unite themselves, so as to be defiled with the daughters of men," the matter of it is found in xv. 3, 4, but the actual clause word for word is taken from Eth. En. x. 11. Finally ver. 23 points to some tradition like that at the base of Eth. En. lxx., which in its present form is late. From the above, therefore, we conclude that our author refers only to chapters vi.-xvi., xxiii.-xxxvi., lxxii.-xc. of the Eth. Enoch.

17. First . . . who learnt writing . . . and . . . wrote down the signs of heaven, etc. Quoted in the Σειρά of Nicephorus, i. 123, on Gen. v. 21: 'Ἐνὼχ πρῶτος ἔμαθε γράμματα καὶ

ἔγραψε τὰ σημεῖα τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καὶ τὰς τροπὰς καὶ τοὺς μῆνας and in Cedrenus (i. 17) οὗτος πρῶτος γράμματα μαθήσκει. In Eth. Enoch lxix. 8, however, the first instruction of mankind in writing is ascribed to a Satan. On the other hand, just as we should expect (see note on p. 34), John Malala, p. 5 (ed. Dindorf), attributes Enoch's achievements to Seth: οὗτος ὁ Σῆθ πρῶτος ἐξεύρε γράμματα Ἑβραϊκὰ . . . καὶ τὰ σημεῖα τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καὶ τὰς τροπὰς τῶν ἐνιαυτῶν καὶ τοὺς μῆνας. Similarly Cedrenus (i. 16): ὁ Σῆθ . . . τὴν τῶν οὐρανίων κινήσεων σοφίαν ἐπενόησε . . . καὶ τὰ Ἑβραϊκὰ γράμματα συνεγάρφατο, and Glycas (p. 228) transfers to the latter the achievements assigned in the Σειρά above to Enoch: πρῶτος ἐξεύρεν ὁ Σῆθ . . . τὰ σημεῖα τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καὶ τὰς τροπὰς τῶν ἐνιαυτῶν καὶ τοὺς μῆνας. Cf. Joel, Chron. p. 3.

Signs of heaven according to the order of their months. The twelve solar months correspond to the twelve signs of the Zodiac.

18. There is nothing in the Eth. or Slav. Enoch about the "weeks of the jubilees" or "the sabbaths of the years." Our author is here at his beloved practice of antedating an event or usage he wishes to commend to his countrymen. We shall find (vii. 37, 38, xxi. 10 note) that he similarly ascribes legalistic elements to Enoch, though there is no ground for regarding the books of Enoch as having ever contained such matter.

25. Incense of the sanctuary, or "incense in the sanctuary."

Sweet spices acceptable before the Lord on the Mount. bcd = "acceptable before the Lord on the mountains of the South" (qatr). But this use of the word qatr is unexampled elsewhere. a omits it and writes the preceding word badabr. I have taken it as a corruption of qâtârê = "sweet spices." The words would point back to Exod. xxx. 7, קִטְרֵת סַמִּים.

On the Mount. So a. bcd read "on the mount of the mid-day (or South)." This mountain may be the mountain of the East. See next note.

26. Three of these places are connected with three decisive turning-points or periods in the history of mankind: the Garden of Eden as the first abode of man; Mount Sinai as the place whence the Law was promulgated, and Zion as the centre of the Theocracy. These three are again mentioned in viii. 19. What the Mount of the East is, I cannot determine. In the ZDMG, xi. pp. 730-733 Rapoport is of opinion that the mountain in question is Mount Ephraim (Josh. xvii. 15 sqq.). He argues that this is the most easterly of the mountains of Palestine; that it contains all the localities of special sanctity among the Samaritans, Gerizim, Sichem, Samaria; that Abraham and Jacob had sacrificed thereon (Gen. xii. 7, xxxiii. 20) just as sacrifices had been offered by Adam in Eden, according to iii. 27 of our text and the Talmud, on Sinai by Moses and on Zion by Israel. But as such an interpretation would imply a Samaritan authorship it is thereby made impossible; for the textual evidence is itself decisive against such authorship. The mention, moreover, of Zion tells in the same direction. There is some probability in the suggestion of Rönisch, pp. 505-6, that by the Mount of the East we are to understand Lubar, one of the summits of Ararat, on which the Ark rested and Noah sacrificed, as this lay to the NE. of Palestine and as there would thus be connected with these four places the notable names of Adam, Noah, Moses, David. See viii. 19 (note). On the other hand it is possible that we have here the Mount mentioned in the preceding verse as that on which Enoch offered incense. Now if we may cite the evidence of Die Schatzhöhle and the Book of Adam and Eve, Seth and his posterity were commanded by Adam to live on the Mount close to Eden and not to descend to the plain and mingle with the descendants of Cain. Adam's command was observed till the days of Jared. This Mount could rightly be described as the Mount of the East. Or again the Mount of the East may be the mountain which is described as the Lord has four places on the earth, the Garden of Eden, and the Mount of the East, and this mountain on which thou art this day, Mount Sinai, and Mount Zion (which) will be sanctified in the new creation for a sanctification of the earth; through it will the earth be sanctified from all (its) guilt and its uncleanness throughout the generations of the world. 27. And in the fourteenth jubilee Methuselah took unto himself a wife, Ednâ the daughter of 'Âzriâl, the daughter of his father's brother, in the third week, in the first year of this week, and he begat a son and called his name Lamech. 28. And in the fifteenth jubilee in the third week Lamech took to himself a wife, and her name was Bêtênôs the daughter of Bârâk'îl, the daughter of his father's brother, and in this week she bare him a son and he called his name Noah, saying, "This one will comfort me

Father's brother. Emended as in 15.

Lamech. The year of Lamech's birth is not mentioned, but it can be determined from the date of Methuselah's marriage furnished by the Samaritan Chronicle. According to it Methuselah was sixty-seven when he married, and as he was born according to our text (iv. 20) in the year 587, Lamech was probably born in the year 654.

28. Cf. Gen. v. 29. In the fifteenth jubilee in the third week . . . she bare him a son . . . Noah. This assigns some year in the period 701-707 as the birthday of Noah, and 707 is no doubt the year intended. For in the Samaritan Chronicle (see preceding note) it is distinctly stated that 707 years elapsed from Adam to the birth of Noah. We can arrive at this date independently also. With the help of the Samaritan Chronicle we saw in the notes on iv. 27 that Lamech was born in 654. Now according to the same Chronicle Lamech was fifty-three when Noah was born: hence Noah was born in the year 707. On the other hand there is a discrepancy between this date of Noah's birth and that which follows from vi. 18 and x. 16. In the former it is said that the Feast of Weeks was celebrated 1309 years, from the day of creation till the days of Noah, and that Noah observed it 350 years. Hence Noah died in 1659. But since in x. 16 Noah is said to have lived 950 years, this would fix 709 as the year of his birth.

Bêtênôs = בֶּתְנֹשׁ. Lagarde's MS r on Gen. v. 29 gives βεθενως: the Syriac = Enoshi.

This one will comfort me. "This one" (ze emended from za=which). Our text follows Gen. v. 29 in attributing to the name Noah (נֹחַ) the meaning belonging to Menachem (מְנַחֵם). The Book of Jashar 13*b* says that Methuselah for my trouble and all my work, and for the ground which the Lord hath cursed." 29. And at the close of the nineteenth jubilee, in the seventh week in the sixth year 930 A.M. thereof, Adam died, and all his sons buried him in the land of his creation, and he was the first to be buried in the earth. 30. And he lacked seventy years of one thousand years; for one thousand years are as one day in the testimony of the heavens and therefore was it written concerning the tree of knowledge: "On the day that ye eat thereof ye will die." For this reason he did not complete the years of this day; for he died during it. 31. At the close of this jubilee Cain was killed after him in the same year; for his house fell upon him and he died in the midst called the child Noah because the earth would have rest (נח) in his days, but Lamech called him Menachem because "he would comfort us" (נחמוני). The same ideas are found in Ber. rabba 25. These results of learned reflection on Gen. v. 29 appear to be later than Jubilees.

And for the ground. All authorities save the LXX and our text omit "and."

First to be buried in the earth. This shows that the legend, which is attested in the later Life of Adam and Eve (Tischendorf's Apocalypses Apocryphae, p. 21), that the body of Abel was not buried till that of Adam was, already existed.

30. Cf. Gen. ii. 17. This interpretation of a day as a thousand years was current among the Jews. Cf. Ber. rabba 19, 22. 2 Pet. iii. 8 μία ημέρα παρὰ Κυρίῳ ὡς χίλια ἔτη. Barnab. Ep. xv. ἡ γὰρ ἡμέρα παρ' αὐτῷ χίλια ἔτη. See also Slav. En. xxxiii. 1, 2 (note) where the application of this principle of interpretation to the six days creation and the seventh of rest issues in the doctrine of the Millenium. Justin Martyr (Dial. cum Tryph. lxxxix.) apparently quotes from the text: ὡς γὰρ τῷ Ἀδὰμ εἶρητο, ὅτι ἡ δ' ἂν ἡμέρα φάγη ἀπὸ τοῦ ξύλου, ἐν ἐκείνῃ ἀποθάνεται, ἐγνωμεν αὐτὸν μὴ ἀναπληρώσαντα χίλια ἔτη. Συνήκαμεν καὶ τὸ εἰρημένον, ὅτι ἡμέρα Κυρίου ὡς χίλια ἔτη, εἰς τοῦτο συνάγειν. See also Lactantius, Institution. vii. 14.

31-32. Cain was killed . . . in the same year, etc. In Syncellus, i. 19, the text is partly reproduced: τῷ αὐτῷ ΤΑΧ' ἔτει καὶ Κάιν ἀπέθανεν, ἐμπροσθέντος ἐπ' αὐτὸν τοῦ οἴκου· λίθοις γὰρ καὶ αὐτὸς τὸν Ἀβελ ἀνείλε. In Cedrenus, i. 16, more fully: οὗτος ὁ Κάιν, ὡς ἡ Λεπτὴ Μωσέως Γένεσις φησὶν, τῆς οἰκίας πεσοῦσης ἐπ' αὐτὸν τελευτᾷ· λίθοις γὰρ τὸν ἀδελφὸν Ἀβελ ἀπέκτεινε, καὶ λίθοις ὁμοίως καὶ αὐτὸς ἀπεκτάνθη. In the Excerpta Chronologica prefixed to the works of John Malala we have this and the later legend given: κατὰ (? μετὰ) δὲ ταῦτα τῆς οἰκίας ἐπ' αὐτὸν πεσοῦσης ἀπέθανεν, ὡς ἐνίοι φασιν· ἕτεροι δὲ ὅτι Λαμὲχ αὐτὸν ἀπέκτεινεν. This latter account is found also in Glycas 223, in the Book of Adam and Eve, ii. 13, in Jarchi's Comm. on Gen. iv. 23, Tanchuma 6, the Book of Jashar (section Beresheth). For other authorities where the later legend is given see Eisenmenger, i. 470-471. On the other hand, according to Ber. rabba 22, the Rabbis said that he was killed by a stone, but Simeon the son of Gamaliel stated that he was killed by a reed. The latter idea seems to have been suggested by the likeness between יר and נר.

of his house, and he was killed by its stones; for with a stone he had killed Abel, and by a stone was he killed in righteous judgment. 32. For this reason it was ordained on the heavenly tables: "With the instrument with which a man kills his neighbour with the same shall he be killed; after the manner that he wounded him, in like manner shall 1205 A.M. they deal with him." 33. And in the twenty-fifth jubilee Noah took to himself a wife, and her name was 'Ēmzârâ, the daughter of Râkê'êl, the daughter of his father's brother, in 1207 A.M. the first year in the fifth week: and in the third year 1209 A.M. thereof she bare him Shem, in the fifth year thereof she 1212 A.M. bare him Ham, and in the first year in the sixth week she bare him Japheth.

31. With a stone he had killed Abel, and by a stone was he killed in righteous judgment, etc. We have here the primitive human law of retaliation (eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, etc., Exod. xxi. 24; Lev. xxiv. 19) described as a law of the divine procedure. This law of exact retribution is not merely an enactment of human justice, our author declares; it is observed by God in his government of the world.

It is noteworthy that the same principle of retribution is enforced by historical examples in 2 Macc. v. 10, where speaking of Jason the author writes: ὁ πλῆθος ἀτάφρων ἐκρίψας ἀπένθητος ἐγενήθη, καὶ κηδίας οὐδ' ἥστυνος . . . μετέσχευ. Similarly, it is recounted of Nicanor (xv. 32, 33) that he was punished in those members with which he had sinned. Cf. also xiii. 8. In this respect 2 Macc. therefore represents truly this second-cent. B.C. doctrine of retribution. Taken crassly and mechanically the above law is without foundation; but spiritually conceived it represents the profound truth enunciated repeatedly in the N.T. Thus in Gal. vi. 7 "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap"; Col. iii. 25 "he that doeth wrong shall receive again the wrong that he hath done"; 2 Cor. v. 10 in the judgment men shall "receive the things done in the body." In the Parables this kinship of the penalty to the sin is repeatedly dwelt on: the unforgiving debtor is refused forgiveness, the slothful servant loses what he had, he who will not use his affluence to succour a brother's need will lose it for himself, and the man who refuses to part with an offending eye or hand will finally lose his whole body in Gehenna. See note on xlviii. 14.

According to Beer this halachic interpretation of Exod. xxi. 24 is unknown to traditional Judaism, which enacts that the murderer is to be slain with the sword.

33. 'Ēmzârâ. This name is found in the Syriac Fragment and Lagarde's LXX MS r. Frankel derives it from אִם צָרָה or צָרָה אִם because she lived in the days of the Flood.

Brother. Emended as in ver. 15.

Shem . . . Ham . . . Japhet. Cf. x. 14, where again Shem is represented as the eldest. We should observe here that our author thus understood aright אָחִי יִתְּ הַגִּדּוּל in Gen. x. 21 as "(Shem) . . . the elder brother of Japhet" (so also Vulg.) over against the Massoretes, Symmachus, and Rashi who wrongly understood it as "brother of Japheth the elder." The LXX is similarly wrong: ἀδελφῶν Ἰάφεθ τοῦ μελίσσος, Ber. rabba 26, 37, and the Book of Jashar (in loc.). On the other hand in Sanhedrin 69*b* Shem is said to be two years older than Japhet.

And lawlessness increased on the earth and all flesh corrupted its way, alike men and cattle and beasts and birds and everything that walks on the earth—all of them corrupted their ways and their orders, and they began to devour each other, and lawlessness increased on the earth and every imagination of the thoughts of all men (was) thus evil continually. 3. And God looked upon the earth, and behold it was corrupt, and all flesh had corrupted its orders, and all that were upon the earth had wrought all manner of evil before His eyes. 4. And against their sons went forth a command from before His face that they should be smitten with the sword, and be removed from under heaven. 8. And He said "My spirit will not always abide on man; for they also are flesh and their days shall be one hundred and twenty years." 9. And He sent His sword into their midst that each should slay his neighbour, and they began to slay each other till they all fell by the sword and were destroyed from the earth. 10. And their fathers were witnesses (of their destruction), and after this they were bound in the depths of the earth for ever, until the day of the great condemnation, when judgment is executed

4. Which I have created. Emended from ab which="He had created." Corruption could have arisen from confusion of ἐκτίσα and ἐκτίσε, as Littmann has pointed out. cd = "was created." Possibly we should keep to b throughout, and translate "He would destroy . . . which He had created." Cf. vi. 20.

10. Until the day of the great condemnation, i.e., the day of the final judgment. See iv. 19, 24. Cf. Eth. Enoch x. 13. The intervening period, according to Eth. Enoch x. 12, is seventy generations.

10^b-12. Verses 11-12 if the text is correct teach that God recreated the human race and all His other works at the time of the Flood "so that they should not sin in their whole nature forever, but should be all righteous . . . alway." In Josephus, Ant. i. 3. 2 there is a slight approximation to this idea: ὁ δὲ Θεὸς τοῦτον μὲν τῆς δικαιοσύνης ἡγάπησε, κατεδίκαζε δ' οὐκ ἐκείνων μόνων τῆς κακίας, ἀλλὰ καὶ πάντων ἂν ἀνθρώπων τότε δόξαν αὐτῷ διαφθεῖραι καὶ ποιῆσαι γένος ἕτερον πονηρίας καθαρὸν. See also Philo, De Vita Moses, ii. 12. But with the subsequent corruption of all the descendants of Noah till the time of Abraham and the universal apostasy of the Gentiles according to our author, such a statement is practically inconceivable. Moreover, it is not difficult to discover the origin of the error in our text. Verses 10^b-16 are descriptive of the final judgment, and simply amplify the last clause of ver. 10. Thus the time of the verbs "destroyed," "was," "made" in 11-12 is wrong and we should have "shall destroy," "shall be" and "shall make." "Judged" must also be rendered "shall have judged," but this last does not necessitate a change in the text of either the Ethiopic or Hebrew. The text therefore should be translated: "Until the day of the great condemnation, when judgment shall be executed on all who have corrupted their ways and their works before the Lord, 11. And He shall destroy (them) all from their places, and there shall not be left one of them on all those who have corrupted their ways and their works before the Lord. 11. And He †destroyed† all from their places, and there †was† not left one of them whom He judged not according to all their wickedness. 12. And He †made† for all His works a new and righteous nature, so that they should not sin in their whole nature for ever, but should be all righteous each in his kind alway. 13. And the judgment of all is ordained and written on the heavenly tables in righteousness—even (the judgment of) all who depart from the path which is ordained for them to walk in; and if they walk not therein, judgment is written down for every creature and for every kind. 14. And there is nothing in heaven or on earth, or in light or in darkness, or in Sheol or in the depth, or in the place of darkness (which is not judged); and all their judgments are ordained and written and engraved. 15. In regard to all He will judge, the great according to his greatness, and the small according to his smallness, and each according to his way. 16. And He is not one who will regard the person (of any), nor is He one who will receive gifts, if He says that He will execute judgment on each: if one gave everything that is on the earth, He will not regard the gifts or the person (of any), nor accept anything at his hands, for He is a righteous judge. [17. And of the children of Israel it has

whom He shall not have judged according to all their wickedness, 12. And He shall make for all His works, etc." This corruption of the tenses may possibly have arisen in the Ethiopic, or in the Greek, but this is very improbable, as it involves so many changes. On the other hand it is easy to explain the false text as having originated in a mistranslation of the Hebrew. The above passage = ער יום הדין הנורא בהעשות דרכו ומעשהו לפני יי משפט בכול אשר השחית . . . ולא יוחר מהם אחר אשר לא והאביר כלם . . . שפט . . . תעשה. Here we have to suppose that the Greek translator failed to grasp the sense of the passage and see that האביר and the other verbs followed closely on בְּהֵעָשָׂה, and accordingly rendered them merely as ordinary perfects. See Driver, Hebrew Tenses,² p. 165.

And as for all those who corrupted their ways and their thoughts before the flood, no man's person was accepted save that of Noah alone ; for his person was accepted in behalf of his sons, whom (God) saved from the waters of the flood on his account ; for his heart was righteous in all his ways, according as it was commanded regarding him, and he had not departed from aught that was ordained for him. 20. And the Lord said that He would destroy everything which was upon the earth, both men and cattle, and beasts, and fowls of the air, and that which moveth on the earth. 21. 18. The time referred to here is obviously the tenth day of the seventh month, i.e., the Day of Atonement. In Lev. xvi. in spite of the terms in verses 16, 21, the sin-offering atoned only for sins committed in error (בשגגה, akousiōs), i.e. accidentally or involuntarily (Lev. iv. 2, 13, 22, etc.—these are the ἀγνοήματα in Heb. ix. 7), not for those committed deliberately and defiantly (ביר רכה, Num. xv. 30). This is the view enforced in the Mishnic treatise Yoma viii. 9: "If a man says I will sin, and then repent . . . Heaven does not give him the means of practising repentance ; and if he says, 'I will sin and the Day of Atonement will bring atonement,' the Day of Atonement will bring no atonement." On the other hand both in our text and in the treatise Shebu'oth i. 6 it is taught that on the Day of Atonement sins of every description are forgiven "both the light and the grave, the intentional and the unintentional, the conscious and the unconscious, those relating to the positive and the negative commands, and even those that were to be visited with the death penalty by God or human judgment." And yet we must discriminate between the teaching of our text and of the treatise Shebu'oth in favour of the former. In the latter the ceremonial was of the nature of an opus operatum. In our text, on the other hand, repentance is insisted on : God's mercy is not to be won on the Day of Atonement save by those who turn (ישבו) from their sins. Thus though our text stands midway between the doctrine prescribed in Lev. xvi. (also in the treatise Yoma) and the treatise Shebu'oth, with the former it prescribes as necessary to atonement the temper of true repentance : with the latter it maintains the efficacy of the atonement for sins of every description.

22. Twenty-seventh jubilee. So we should emend the reading of all the MSS "twenty-second jubilee." In my text I have by a slip emended the reading into "twenty-sixth jubilee." The fifth year of the fifth week of the twenty-seventh jubilee = 1307 A.M. This agrees exactly with the chronology in the Samaritan Chronicle: "From Adam to the birth of Noah was a period of 707 years, and from Adam to the Flood 1307 years" (Samaritan Chronicle translated by Neubauer in the Journal Asiatique, 1869, pp. 421-469).

6) that according to local tradition the Ark rested on a great mountain in Armenia called Baris above Minyas, Professor Sayce (Journal of Royal Asiatic Soc. xiv. p. 389 note) conjectures that this is the mountain named Lubar in our text, seeing that both are said by Epiphanius and Syncellus (see note on vii. 1) to be on the borders of Armenia. I am indebted to him also for the following note in which he seeks to account for the syllable Lu in Lubar. "In the Vannic cuneiform inscriptions Lulu is the country which is called Urartu (Ararat) in Assyria, on the borders of Armenia and Kurdistan, and is almost certainly the Lulubi or Luluwi of the Assyrian inscriptions in which was Mount Nizir

Built an altar on that mountain. Cf. Gen. viii. 20. The mountain is Lubar. According to Ber. rabba 34 Noah offered this sacrifice in Jerusalem. In the Targ. Jon. on Gen. viii. 20 the place is not mentioned, but the altar is identified with that which Adam built.

2. Made atonement for the earth. Though Jewish Haggada knows nothing of this particular act of atonement, it is easy to justify such a conception from Lev. xviii. 26-28; Num. xxxv. 33, 34. The earth itself as being defiled needed expiation. Unnatural vices and murder pollute it.

5. Gen. ix. 7. It is noteworthy that the clause be a blessing (וּבֵרַכְו) corresponds to "multiply" (וַיִּרְבּוּ) in the parallel in Gen. The latter appears to be corrupt for לִרְבּוּ = LXX καὶ κατακυριεύσατε.

The fear of you, etc. Cf. Gen. ix. 2.

6. Gen. ix. 2, 3.

As the green herbs, I have given you all things to eat. From Gen. ix. 3 save the verb "to eat" which, however, is only a repetition of the phrase "for food" in the preceding clause. Of the argument that concluded from those words that only certain herbs were allowed for food, our text knows nothing. This view appears in Justin, Dial. c. Tryph. 20 βουλομένων αὐτοῦ εἰπεῖν ὡς λάχανα χόρτον . . . ἐπεὶ τινα τῶν χόρτων οὐκ ἐσθλομεν οὕτω καὶ διασολῆν ἔκτοτε τῷ Νῶε διεσάλλθαι πατέ. According to Goldfahn (*Monatschrift für Gesch. d. 8. Gen. ix. 6.

10-14. Noah and his sons swear to the covenant as of perpetual obligation as regards the non-eating of blood (ver. 10). Because this ordinance was of perpetual obligation, it was re-enacted on Mount Sinai; but, whereas in Noah's covenant it had been brought forward only on its negative side, in the Mosaic legislation it was enforced in its positive side, that is, according to the former, blood was not to be eaten, whereas according to the latter its true use was to sprinkle the worshipper (ver. 11) and to make atonement before God (ver. 14). Moreover, as Noah's covenant was instituted in the third

all the generations of the earth in this month. 11. On this account He spake to thee that thou shouldst make a covenant with the children of Israel in this month upon the mountain with an oath, and that thou shouldst sprinkle blood upon them because of all the words of the covenant, which the Lord made with them for ever. 12. And this testimony is written concerning you that you should observe it continually, so that you should not eat on any day any blood of beasts or birds or cattle during all the days of the earth, and the man who eats the blood of beast or of cattle or of birds during all the days of the earth, he and his seed shall be rooted out of the land. 13. And do thou command the children of Israel to eat no blood, so that their names and their seed may be before the Lord our God continually. 14. And for this law there is no limit of days, for it is for ever. They shall observe it throughout their generations, so that they may continue supplicating on your behalf with blood before the altar; every day and at the time of morning and evening they shall seek forgiveness on your behalf perpetually before the Lord that they may keep it and not be rooted out. 15. And He gave to Noah and his sons a sign that there should not again be a flood on the earth. 16. month, so also the Law was given on Sinai in the same month (ver. 11). [In no passage is it said that the covenants of Noah and of Moses were established on the same day in the third month. Such a connection appears to exist between the date of the covenant of Noah and that of the first celebration on earth of the feast of weeks (see notes on verses 17-18).]

to destroy it all the days of the earth. 17. For this reason it is ordained and written on the heavenly tables, that they should celebrate the feast of weeks in this month once a year, to renew the covenant every year. 18. And this whole festival was celebrated in heaven from the day of creation till the days of Noah—twenty-six jubilees and five weeks of years: and Noah and his sons observed it for seven jubilees and one week of years, till the day of Noah's death, and from the day of Noah's death his sons did away with (it) until the days of Abraham, and they eat blood. 19. But Abraham observed it, and Isaac and Jacob and his children observed it up to thy days, and in thy days the children of Israel forgot it until ye celebrated it anew on this mountain. 20. And do thou command the children of Israel to observe this festival in all their generations for a commandment unto them: one day in the year in this month they shall celebrate the festival. 21. For it is the feast of weeks and the feast

17-18. In connection with the covenant Noah is bidden to observe the feast of weeks. Since it follows from xv. 1 (see note) and xliv. 4, 5 that this feast was celebrated on the 15th of the third month (see note on i. 1) we may reasonably assign the promulgation of the Noachic covenant to the same date. Later Judaism (Maimonides, More Neb. 41) held Pentecost to celebrate the giving of the Law on Sinai, and designated this day as "the day of the giving of the Law" (יום מתן תורה). So our author (cf. i. 1). This idea is not found in Philo and Josephus; but it appears in Jerome, Ep. ad Fab. mansio 12; August. Contra Faust. xxxii. 12. Observe that our author ascribes the covenant with Abram to the same date (see note on xiv. 20).

17. Feast of weeks. This title is found in Exod. xxxiv. 22 (תֵּן שָׁבִיעָה, éporḡ ēbdomádw). Our text is not acquainted with the more familiar designation of this feast, i.e. Pentecost. This designation, which is a Greek rendering, ἡ πεντηκοστή (ἡμέρα), of the rabbinic תֵּן חֲמִשִּׁים יום, is found in 2 Macc. xii. 32 μετὰ τῇν λεγομένην πεντηκοστήν. Tob. ii. 1 contains another early instance of its use, and Philo, De Septenar. 21, a near approach to it. For later instances see 1 Cor. xvi. 8; Jos. Ant. iii. 10. 6.

18. Twenty-six jubilees and five weeks=1309 years. On the slight discrepancy in our author's dates see notes on iv. 28 and v. 22.

Seven jubilees and one week=350 years.

Did away with (it) . . . and they eat blood. Here again the close connection of the feast of weeks and of the covenant with Noah is emphasised.

of first-fruits: this feast is twofold and of a double nature: according to what is written and engraven concerning it celebrate it. 22. For I have written in the book of the first law, in that which I have written for thee, that thou shouldst celebrate it in its season, one day in the year, and I explained to thee its sacrifices that the children of Israel should remember and should celebrate it throughout their generations in this month, one day in every year. 23. And on the Exod. xxiii. 16, חַג הַקָּצִיר. In the latter respect it was a feast of first-fruits as in the text, or the day of first-fruits, Num. xxviii. 26, יוֹם הַבְּכּוּרִים, ἡ ἡμέρα τῶν νέων. Why this festival should be said to be "of a double nature" I do not see.

One day in the year. Eppstein (Revue des Études juives, xxii. 7-8) suggests that "one day" here=ἡμέρα μία=יוֹם אֶחָד, which in its original context meant "the first day," i.e. of the week, Sunday. Thus Pentecost was to fall on the same day every year, a Sunday, the first of the week. If this is right it follows that if we count back seven weeks we arrive at Nisan 22, "the morrow after the Sabbath," which is also the first day of the week, and that the author of our book interpreted the term Sabbath in its strict sense as the weekly Sabbath (see note on xv. 1). For somewhat similar directions regarding the Passover see xlix. 7, 8.

Its sacrifices, or "the sacrifices."

One day in every year. This should perhaps be "the first day (of the week) in every year" as Eppstein suggests (see note above).

23. According to Lev. xxiii. 24 only the 1st day of the 7th month was a day of remembrance. Nevertheless the special significance assigned to these four days was a not unfamiliar idea in the second cent. as appears from the Eth. Enoch and our text, both of which we shall discuss presently in this relation. Even the Mishna appears to preserve some echoes of the early controversies that circled round them; for we can hardly interpret otherwise the passage in the Rosh ha-Shanah i. 1: "On 1st Nisan—beginning of year, of government and of festivals. On 1st Ellul, the year of tithing of beasts according to R. Eliezer and R. Simeon. On 1st Tisri, the calendar year, the Sabbatical year and jubilee year, and (year) of plants and vegetables. On 1st Sebat, year of blooming of trees according to school of Shammai but on 15th according to school of Hillel." That different usages prevailed at different times follows clearly from the sacrifices enjoined on the new moons in Ezekiel xlvi. 6 and Num. xxviii. 11-15. The Rabbis could give no satisfactory explanation of these differences: some indeed were for removing Ezekiel from the Canon, and others denied its authenticity on account of them. Returning now to our text and the parallel passages in the Eth. Enoch, we observe that these four days have a religious significance in the former, but an astronomical in the latter. In Eth. En. lxxv. 1, 2, lxxxii. 11 they are called "leaders," because they lead in the four quarters of the year. They are also called "intercalary days" (Eth. Enoch lxxv. 2) ἡμέραι ἐπαγόμεναι, and correspond respectively to the vernal equinox (1st of 1st month), the summer solstice (1st of 4th month), the autumn equinox (1st of 7th month), and the winter solstice (1st of 10th month). These four days, when added to 360 (i.e., 12 months of 30 days each, Eth. Enoch lxxxii. 11), constitute an invariable year of 364 days (cf. our text v. 32, 38; Eth. Enoch lxxv. 2, lxxxii. 11). On the meaning of this year of 364 days see notes on verses 29-30, 32.

new moon of the first month, and on the new moon of the fourth month, and on the new moon of the seventh month, and on the new moon of the tenth month are the days of remembrance, and the days of the seasons in the four divisions of the year. These are written and ordained as a testimony for ever. 24. And Noah ordained them for himself as feasts for the generations for ever, so that they have become thereby a memorial unto him. 25. And on the new moon of the first month he was bidden to make for himself an ark, and on that (day) the earth became dry and he opened (the ark) and saw the earth. 26. And on the new moon of the fourth month the mouths of the depths of the abysses beneath were closed. And on the new moon of the seventh month all the mouths of the abysses of the earth were opened, and the waters began to descend into them. 27. And on the new moon of the tenth month the tops of the mountains were seen, and Noah was glad. 28. And on this account he ordained them for himself as feasts for a memorial for ever, and thus are they ordained. 29. And they placed them on the heavenly tables, each had thirteen weeks; from one to another

On the new moon of the first month. On this date Noah was bidden to make an ark, v. 21, vi. 25; the earth first became visible after the flood, v. 30, vi. 25; Noah offered a sacrifice, vii. 2, 3; Abraham erected an altar and sacrificed thereon, xiii. 8; God appeared to Isaac, xxiv., who forthwith offered sacrifice, 22, 23; Jacob went to Bethel, xxvii. 19; Levi was born, xxviii. 14.

29-30. Each had thirteen weeks, etc. According to verses 23-30 the year consists of four seasons and each season of three months or thirteen weeks. The year has, therefore, on this computation 12 months of 30 days each

(passed) their memorial, from the first to the second, and from the second to the third, and from the third to the fourth. 30. And all the days of the commandment will be two and fifty weeks of days, and (these will make) the entire year complete. 31. Thus it is engraven and ordained on the heavenly tables. And there is no neglecting (this com-

(see below) and 4 intercalary days, 52 weeks, or 364 days. This our author takes to be the duration of a solar year. A solar year of 12 months is likewise presupposed in iv. 17 where the months are said to be of the same number as the signs of the zodiac; in v. 27 where five months are described as amounting to 150 days, hence each month consists of 30 days; in xii. 16 Abram makes observations on the 1st of the 7th month to learn the character of the ensuing six months (autumn and winter). They are solar months; for they are six in number, xii. 27; in xvi. 12-13 a year of twelve months is implied; and in xxv. 16 the tribes who are to spring from Jacob are to be of the same number as the months of the year. In the face of these facts Frankel was quite wrong, as Beer has shown, to assert that Jubilees reckoned each month at 28 days and added a thirteenth month of 28 days. On the other hand Eppstein (Revue des Études juives, xxii. 10-13) offers the attractive suggestion that in Jubilees two kinds of years are used: a civil year of 12 months with eight of 30 days each and four of 31 days each; and an ecclesiastical year of 13 months of 28 days each. Our author, writes Eppstein, fixed the dates of the festivals according to the ecclesiastical year, and by such a year managed to make each week, each month and each year to begin on Sunday and terminate on the Sabbath. By such an arrangement also all the festivals fell on Sunday save that of the Day of Atonement, and all the chronology took a regular and uniform character from the fact that everything had 7 for its point of departure. Thus the week had 7 days; the month $4 \times 7 = 28$: the year $52 \times 7 = 364$: the year-week 7 years and the jubilee 7×7 years. Further, the date assigned by our author to the feast of weeks, i.e. Sivan 15, certainly supports Eppstein's view. This date can only be arrived at by reckoning the 7 weeks from Nisan 22. Thus the paschal lamb was offered on Nisan 14: the feast of unleavened bread began on the 15th and ended on the 21st. On the 22nd the wave-sheaf was offered. Now if we count 7 weeks onward from this day, that is 1 week in the 1st month, 4 weeks in the 2nd and 2 in the 3rd (Sivan), the feast of weeks falls on the 15th of Sivan as in our author. Thus the date presupposes months of 28 days. And since the months consisted of 28 days each, there must have been 13 in this ecclesiastical year, as it consisted of 364 days. Finally, if Eppstein's view on the interpretation of vi. 22 is correct, it serves to confirm the above view; for if the year begins on Sunday, the passover on Nisan falls on the Sabbath: the offering of the wave-sheaf on Sunday the 22nd and the feast of weeks on Sunday, Sivan 15.

But on the other hand there is this objection to this theory: it is not true that all the festivals in Jubilees are fixed according to this so-called ecclesiastical year; for the four ordained by Noah in vi. 23-29 are determined according to the 12 solar months of the year. Apart from this objection this theory is the best solution of the problem yet offered. Elsewhere, where two years were in use, as amongst the Egyptians and later amongst the Abyssinian Jews, the civil year was a solar one and the ecclesiastical a lunar.

30. The entire year complete. So b, which alone gives an intelligible sense.

31. Neglecting, or "transgressing." Beer has suggested that ta'adwô here points back to תאדו = "intercalation." Linguistically, this is possible. If so, our author would be here protesting against such systems of intercalating days in the lunar year to make it synchronise with the solar, as we find in Eth. Enoch lxxiv.-lxxv., and the later systems of the Pharisees. But seeing that the same word which I render "neglecting" is found twice in ver. 33 and in xv. 25, and that it cannot in two of these instances bear the meaning Beer proposes, I have retained the ordinary meaning of the word. See also on xlix. 14.

32. Three hundred and sixty-four days. A solar year of the same length is also taught in Eth. Enoch lxxiv. 10, 12, lxxv. 2; Slav. Enoch xlvi. 1. In Slav. Enoch xiv. 1 the ordinary reckoning of 365½ days is found. It is obvious that we have here to do with an old Jewish reckoning. I have shown in my edition of the Eth. Enoch pp. 189-191 that the advocates of this system were acquainted with the Greek octaeteris and the cycle of Calippus, and in my edition of the Slav. Enoch, that its author in xvi. 8 was familiar with the Metonic cycle. Why then did these writers, notwithstanding their knowledge of the Greek systems, advocate an impossible solar year of 364 days? I think their action in this matter must be attributed to dogmatic prejudice. If they regarded it as vital to the validity of their festivals that they should be celebrated not only on the same day of the month but also on the same day of the week from year to year, it seemed possible to attain this end by enforcing the acceptance of a year of 364 days. If the solar year were of this duration, it would always begin on the same day of the week; for it would consist of 52 weeks exactly. Furthermore if it began on Sunday, the first day of the week, the Sabbath would always constitute the 7th day of each of the 52 weeks, and the great festivals would always fall on the same day of the week and on the same day of the month from year to year. Thus the Passover would take place on Nisan 14, a Sabbath day, the wave-sheaf would be offered on Nisan

22, a Sunday (the morrow after the Sabbath), and the feast of weeks on Sivan 15, a Sunday—that is in case we reckon 13 months of 28 days each, the ecclesiastical year (see note on vi. 29-30). By the assumption, therefore, of an impossible solar year of 12 months of 364 days in all and of an ecclesiastical year of 13 months of the same number of days consisting of an arbitrary succession of hebdomads independent of the phases of the moon, they seemed to have succeeded in synchronising the civil and ecclesiastical years without resorting to intercalary days. But this year of 364 days goes back in all probability to the Exile. It will be observed that our text brings forward this disquisition on the true length of the year in connection with the account of the flood. Now it is just in the same connection in the narrative of P in Genesis that a year of 364 days is presupposed as Bacon (Hebraica, viii. 79-88, 124-139 [1891-1892]) points out. Thus, the epochs of the flood are:—

Beginning	.	2nd month	17th day
Climax	.	7th "	17th "
Mountain tops
appear	.	10th "	1st "
Waters dried up	1st	"	1st "
Earth dry	.	2nd "	27th "

He points out that the flood, which in the Babylonian account lasted one year, lasts here from the 17th of the 2nd month of one year to the 27th of the 2nd of the next. Now he argues that, if one reckoned according to Hebrew lunar months, ten days (cf. Jubilees vi. 36) had to be added at the close of the 12th month in order to reach the equivalent date in solar time; for the lunar year was 354 days ($=12 \times 29\frac{1}{2}$; cf. Eth. Enoch lxxviii. 15). Now if the solar year was reckoned at 364 days, we can understand why Noah's exit is assigned to the 27th and not to the 17th of the 2nd month; for ten days represent according to Jubilees (vi. 36) and the Eth. Enoch (lxxiv. 10, sixty-four days, and (these) will constitute a complete year, and they will not disturb its time from its days and from its feasts; for everything will fall out in them according to their testimony, and they will not leave out any day nor disturb any feasts. 33. But if they do neglect and do not observe them according to His commandment, then they will disturb all their seasons, and the years will be dislodged from this (order), [and they will disturb the seasons and the years will be dislodged] and they will neglect their ordinances. 34. And all the children of Israel will forget, and will not find the path of the years, and will forget the new moons, and seasons, and sabbaths, and they will go wrong as to all the order of the years. 35. For I know and from henceforth shall I declare it unto thee, and it is not of my own devising; for the book (lies) written before me, and on the heavenly tables the division of days is ordained, lest they forget the feasts of the covenant and walk according to the feasts of the Gentiles after their error and after their ignorance. 36. For

We presume, therefore, writes Bacon, that the authors of Enoch or Jubilees found their peculiar year of 364 days (=12 sidereal months of 30 days each +4 intercalary days) in the Genesis account of the flood. Considering the advanced stage of astronomical science in the second cent. B.C. among the nations in touch with Judaism, it is not possible to explain their adoption of such a solar year unless it appealed to them on dogmatic grounds and had at its back an inspired authority. Genesis formed the inspired authority, and the dogmatic grounds are obvious (see above). That such a scheme is impracticable is really no objection, if we consider that the author of Jubilees is as thorough-going an idealist as the author of the priestly legislation, and is still more sublimely defiant of that which is merely practicable. On the other hand, the authors in question, though acquainted with the systems current in Greece, were most probably ignorant of the astronomical data which necessarily determined them; and, as a civil year of 360 days was current both in Babylon and Egypt (in the former country corrected by intercalation), they may not have known any irrefutable grounds against the adoption of the solar year of 364 days, authenticated as it was by the priestly compilation of the Exile.

there will be those who will assuredly make observations of the moon—now (it) disturbs the seasons and comes in from year to year ten days too soon. 37. For this reason the years will come upon them when they will disturb (the order), and make an abominable (day) the day of testimony, and an unclean day a feast day, and they will confound all the days, the holy with the unclean, and the unclean day with the holy; for they will go wrong as to the months and sabbaths and feasts and jubilees. 38. For this reason I command and testify to thee that thou mayst testify to them; for after thy death thy children will disturb (them), so that they will not make the year three hundred and sixty-four days only, and for this reason they will go wrong as to the new moons and seasons and sabbaths and festivals, and they will eat all kinds of blood with all kinds of flesh.

36. Our author is decidedly opposed to the use of the moon in determining the seasons and feasts. Thus in ii. 9 it is the sun that is to be man's guide as to days and sabbaths, and feasts, and months and years. Again in iv. 21 the angels instruct Enoch as to the lordship of the sun in such matters. Thus our book seems to be a polemic against the teaching of Eth. Enoch lxxiii.-lxxiv. if we accept the text in lxxiv. 12 where we have a statement in irreconcilable conflict with our text: "And the moon brings in all the years exactly so that their position is not prematurely advanced or delayed by a single day unto eternity; but they complete the changing year with perfect justice in 364 days." But this divergence arises only from a corruption of the text. For "And the moon brings in . . . unto eternity; but the moons" read "And they (the sun and stars) bring in all the years so exactly that their position is not prematurely advanced or delayed by a single day unto eternity, and they." It is true, however, that the Samaritan Chronicle (translated by Neubauer in the Journal Asiatique, xiv. no. 55, 1869, pp. 421 sqq.), which was acquainted with our text, adopts a hostile attitude to it on this question. Thus it declares that we should reckon according to the course of the sun and of the moon, and quotes Gen. i. 14: "Le calcul avec l'un d'eux seulement (c'est-à-dire avec le soleil ou avec la lune) ne suffit pas."

11, 12. Gen. ix. 26, 27.

12. God shall dwell. It will be observed that the text supplies a subject to the verb "shall dwell." This sense is attached to the ambiguous words of Gen. ix. 27 by Onk. also: שְׁכֵנִיָּה: רַבְּמִשְׁכְּנֵיהּ, "and may He cause His Shekinah to rest in the dwellings of Shem." The Targ.-Jon. on Gen. ix. 27, on the other hand, and Justin, Dial. c. Tryph. 139, refer the words to Japheth.

13. Cf. Gen. x. 6. In the text these names are Ques, Mastarêm, Phûd and Canaan.

14. Nê'êlâtamâ'ûk. This name is found in the Syriac fragment as , and in Eutychius of Alex. Annales, p. 35, as Nahlat. The first part of the compound may be from נחלה, construct case of נחלה, and the second from נחיק.

name of his wife 'Adâtanêsês. 16. And Shem dwelt with his father Noah, and he built a city close to his father on the mountain, and he too called its name after the name of his wife Sêdêqêtêlêbâb. 17. And behold these three cities are near Mount Lûbâr; Sêdêqêtêlêbâb fronting the mountain on its east; and Na'êltamâ'ûk on the south; 'Adatan'êsês towards the west. 18. And these are the sons of Shem: Elam, and Asshur, and Arpachshad—this (son) was born two years after the flood—and Lud, and Aram. 19. The sons of Japheth: Gomer and Magog and Madai and Javan, Tubal and Meshech and Tiras: these are the sons of Noah. 20. And in the twenty-eighth jubilee Noah began to enjoin upon his sons' sons the ordinances and commandments, and all the judgments that he knew, and he exhorted his sons to observe righteousness, and to cover the shame of their flesh, and to bless their Creator, and honour father and mother, and love their neighbour, and guard their souls from fornication and uncleanness and all iniquity. 21. For owing to these three things came the flood upon the earth, namely,

20. From this verse to the close of the chapter we have a fragment of the lost book of Noah. From ver. 26 to the end Noah speaks in the first person. Its legalistic character favours the view that its present setting and colouring are due to the author of the book, who was so careless however as to leave the persons unchanged in verses (26-39).

The substance of this section is referred to in Epiphanius (Ancorat. cxii., Dindorf's ed., i. 215), where it is said that Noah, οἷα δίκαιος ὢν καὶ τοὺς ἑαυτοῦ παῖδας εὐλαβεῖς καθιστᾶν πειρώμενος, ἵνα μὴ τοῖς αὐτοῖς ὑποπέσωσι κακοῖς, ὡς καὶ οἱ ἐν τῷ κατακλυσμῷ, οὐ μόνον διὰ λόγων τοῦτοις τὴν εὐλάβειαν παρετίθει, ἀλλὰ καὶ δι' ὄρκου ἀφ' ἐνὸς ἐκάστου αὐτῶν τὴν πρὸς τὸν ἀδελφὸν εὐνοίαν ἀπήτησε.

Cover the shame, etc. Cf. iii. 31.

21. These three things, that is "fornication, uncleanness and all iniquity" which are mentioned in the preceding verse (see xx. 5, xxiii. 14). Ber. rabba 31 assigns idolatry, impurity and bloodshed as the three causes of the Flood (חמס זה ענין חמס זה גילוי עריות, חמס זה שפיכות דמים). Cf. Sanh. 74a: "R. Johanan says in the name of R. Simeon b. Jehozadak . . . If one says owing to the fornication wherein the Watchers against the law of their ordinances went a whoring after the daughters of men, and took themselves wives of all which they chose: and they made the beginning of uncleanness. 22. And they begat sons the Nâphîdîm, and †they were all unlike†, and they devoured one another: and the Giants slew the Nâphîl, and the Nâphîl slew the Eljô, and the Eljô mankind, and one man another. 23. And every one sold himself to work iniquity and to shed much blood, and the earth was filled with iniquity. 24. And after this they sinned against the beasts and birds, and all that moves and walks on the earth: and much blood was shed on the earth, and every imagination and desire of men imagined vanity and evil continually. 25. And the Lord destroyed everything from off the face of the earth; because of the wickedness of their deeds, and because of the blood which they had shed in the midst of the earth He destroyed everything. 26. "And we were left, I and you, my sons, and everything that entered with us into the ark, and behold I see your works before me that ye do not walk in righteousness; for to a man, Commit a transgression else thou wilt be slain, he may transgress the commandment in order to escape death save in the case of idolatry, incest and murder."

Went a whoring after. For phrase see Lev. xvii. 7; Ezek. xvi. 34.

Took themselves wives. Gen. vi. 2; Eth. Enoch vii. 1.

22. Cf. v. 9. Nâphîdîm, i.e. the Nephilim (נפילי). From Eth. Enoch lxxxvi. 4 and lxxxviii. 2 and the Syncellus Greek version of Enoch vii. 1 we learn that there were three classes of giants: καὶ ἔτεκον αὐτοῖς γένη τρία· πρῶτον γίγαντας μεγάλους (i.e., the גבורים in Gen. vi. 4). οἱ δὲ γίγαντες ἐτέκνωσαν Ναφηλείμ (נפילי in Gen. vi. 4), καὶ τοῖς Ναφηλείμ ἐγεννήθησαν Ἐλιούδ.

†They were . . . unlike.† This seems corrupt. We might emend ἵjetmâsalû into jetmâshatû="they plundered one another," or into jetbâ'satû (Eth. Enoch xv. 11)="they strove together": cf. xxiii. 19.

26. Observe how the author of the book forgets to adapt this fragment of the Book of Noah to its new context. From this verse to the end of the chapter Noah speaks in the first person. See ver. 20 (note). In x. 1-15 we have another excerpt from this Apocalypse.

in the path of destruction ye have begun to walk, and ye are parting one from another, and are envious one of another, and (so it comes) that ye are not in harmony, my sons, each with his brother. 27. For I see, and behold the demons have begun (their) seductions against you and against your children, and now I fear on your behalf, that after my death ye will shed the blood of men upon the earth, and that ye, too, will be destroyed from the face of the earth. 28. For whoso sheddeth man's blood, and whoso eateth the blood of any flesh, will all be destroyed from the earth.

29. And there will not be left any man that eateth blood,
Or that sheddeth the blood of man on the earth,
Nor will there be left to him any seed or descendants
living under heaven ;

For into Sheol will they go,
And into the place of condemnation will they descend,
And into the darkness of the deep will they all be removed by a violent death.

30. There shall be no blood seen upon you of all the blood there shall be all the days in which ye have killed any beasts or cattle or whatever flies upon the earth, and work ye a good work to your souls by covering that which has been shed on the face of the earth. 31. And ye shall not be like him who eats with blood, but guard yourselves that none may

30. Upon you. By an easy emendation we could read among you.

Covering that which has been shed.

This prescript of later legislation is here carried back to Noah : cf. Lev. xvii. 13 ; Ezek. xxiv. 7. We must be careful to render "covering" and not "burying." The Ethiopic word is dafana = καλύπτειν = כָּפַף and not qabara = θάπτειν = קָבַר. Singer (p. 200) bases one of his arguments for the Jewish Christian authorship of the book on the wrong rendering "burying." Chullin ii. 9 censures the latter as Jewish Christian.

31. Eats with blood. Lev. xix. 26.

eat blood before you: cover the blood, for thus have I been commanded to testify to you and your children, together with all flesh. 32. And suffer not the soul to be eaten with the flesh, that your blood, which is your life, may not be required at the hand of any flesh that sheds (it) on the earth. 33. For the earth will not be clean from the blood which has been shed upon it; for (only) through the blood of him that shed it will the earth be purified throughout all its generations. 34. And now, my children, hearken: work judgment and righteousness that ye may be planted in righteousness over the face of the whole earth, and your glory lifted up before my God, who saved me from the waters of the flood. 35. And behold, ye will go and build for yourselves cities, and plant in them all the plants that are upon the earth, and moreover all fruit-bearing trees. 36. For three years the fruit of everything that is eaten will not be gathered: and in the fourth year its fruit will be accounted holy [and they will offer the first-fruits], acceptable before the Most High God, who created heaven

32. Cf. Gen. ix. 4; Lev. xvii. 10, 11, 14.

33. The earth will not be clean, etc. See vi. 2 (note).

(Only) through the blood, etc. Num. xxxv. 33.

Saved me from . . . the flood. If we observe that in ver. 39 Enoch is called "the seventh in his generation" and that verses 20-39 are Noah's words, as "a preacher" of righteousness"; if we note further the words saved me from . . . the flood, we shall not unreasonably conclude that this book was known to the writer of 2 Peter ii. 5 "saved Noah the eighth person, a preacher of righteousness, bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly."

36. In this verse we ought, if the text were authentic, to have an interpretation of the law enunciated in Lev. xix. 23-24. According to this law of the Priests' Code the fruit of a tree was not to be used for the first three years after it was planted. "In the fourth year all the fruit thereof shall be holy, for giving praise unto the Lord" (פריו קדש הלוים ליהוה). It will be observed that our text follows Lev. xix. 24 very closely: "in the fourth year its fruit will be accounted holy" (b.c. ad "will be gathered"). The question now arises, what was to be done with the fruit of the fourth year? (a) If we omit the words in brackets, our text directs that all the fruit of the fourth year is to be accounted holy and offered to God. (b) If the bracketed words are genuine, the text directs that, while all the fruit is to be accounted holy, only the first-fruits are to be offered to God. In either case the words that follow elucidate and earth and all things. Let them offer in abundance the first of the wine and oil (as) first-fruits on the altar of the Lord, who receives it, and what is left let the servants of the house of the Lord eat before the altar which receives (it). 37. And in the fifth year

make ye the release so that ye release it in righteousness and uprightness, and ye shall be righteous, and all that you plant will prosper. 38. For thus did Enoch, the father of your father command Methuselah, his son, and Methuselah his son Lamech, and Lamech commanded me all the things which his fathers commanded him. 39. And I also will give you commandment, my sons, as Enoch commanded his son in the first further the same subject, and ordain that of the fruit of the fourth year the first-fruits are to be offered on the altar and the rest of it to be given to the priests. Next the words "offer . . . on the altar" seem to mean "offer as a burnt-offering" as in Lev. ii. 14-16, where the Israelite is bidden to burn the first-fruits of corn and oil on the altar.

But if the above interpretation is right, it does not agree with that of later Judaism. According to the latter it belonged to its owners and was to be consumed within the walls of Jerusalem. See Josephus, Ant. iv. 8. 19. In Sifre on Num. v. 10 it is decided that the priests had no share in the fruits of the fourth year. Something of the same nature may be implied in Ps.-Jon. on Lev. xix. 24, where the fruit of the fourth year is said to be קורשי חשבון כהנה. Beer (Das Buch der Jubiläen, p. 52) writes that the Samaritans, the Caraites and Ibn Ezra held the view set forth in the text. In any case, the teaching of our text does not diverge from that of later Judaism as much as the various regulations on this subject in the different codes of the Pentateuch (see Hastings, Bible Dict. ii. 10-11).

be rendered "so that they offer," but the context is against this.

37. And in the fifth year. At the close of these words I have marked a lacuna. The text should have proceeded to enunciate the right of eating the fruit of this year as in Lev. xix. 25, whereas it proceeds to speak of the year of release described in Deut. xv. 1, 9, that is, the seventh year; or else of the command in Exod. xxiii. 11; Lev. xxv. 2-7, to let the land lie fallow every seventh year. The verb ḥadaga is used in the translation of סָוַי in the above two senses of letting a field lie fallow (Exod. xxiii. 11) and of remitting a debt (Deut. xv. 2). But the context is concerned with the land. Hence we may render "let it (the land) rest so that ye let it rest." But as this is tautologous we may conclude that there is some corruption. Our text = ἀφήσεται αὐτὴν ἵνα ἀφήτε αὐτήν. Here I take ἀφήτε to be a corruption of ἀνήτε. We should then have ἀφήσεται αὐτὴν ἵνα ἀνήτε αὐτήν. This is a rendering though not an accurate one of אָנִיחָהּ in Exod. xxiii. 11. Hence, instead of "make ye the release . . . release it," we should probably read: "(In the seventh year) ye will let it rest and lie fallow."

38. Thus did Enoch . . . command. The author attributes halachoth to Enoch. See note on xxi. 10.

Kâinâm. This name, which is not found in the Mass., Sam., Syr., Vulg. of Gen. xi. 13 nor yet in the Targums, appears in the LXX version of this verse and also in Luke iii. 36. In the Mass., Sam., etc. Salah is the son of Arphaxad. The same facts are stated in Gen. x. 24 and 1 Chron. i. 24. At the best, therefore, the tradition attested by our text, the LXX and Luke is not an ancient one. The motive for its insertion in the text is obvious from ii. 23 above. Without this name there would only have been twenty-one heads from Adam to Jacob. The same motive may have led to its insertion in the LXX.

3. He found a writing, etc. The wisdom

attributed by our author to the Watchers, is in Josephus (Ant. i. 2. 3) assigned to the children of Seth : Σοφίαν τε τὴν περὶ τὰ οὐράνια καὶ τὴν τούτων διακόσμησιν ἐπενόησαν. ὑπὲρ δὲ τοῦ μὴ διαφυγεῖν τοὺς ἀνθρώπους τὰ ἡρρημένα μηδὲ πρὶν εἰς γυνῶσιν ἐλθεῖν φθαρῆναι . . . στήλας δύο ποιησάμενοι τὴν μὲν ἐκ πλίνθου τὴν ἐτέραν δὲ ἐκ λίθων ἀμφοτέροις ἐνέγραψαν τὰ εὐρημένα. J. Malala, Anon. Chron. p. 6, reproduces the matter contained in the above statement and adds : μετὰ δὲ τὸν κατακλυσμὸν Καῖνάν, ὁ υἱὸς Ἀρφαξάδ, συνεγράφατο τὴν ἀστρονομίαν, εὐρηκῶς τὴν τοῦ Σὴθ καὶ τῶν αὐτοῦ τέκνων ὀνομασίαν, ὥς εἴρηται, τῶν ἀστέρων ἐν πλακί λιθίνῃ γεγραμμένην. In Syncellus, i. 150, this event is recounted as follows : τῷ β' φ' π' ἔτει Καῖνάν διδοεύων ἐν τῷ πεδίῳ εὗρε τὴν γραφὴν τῶν γιγάντων καὶ ἔκρυσσε παρ' ἑαυτῷ. The words of Syncellus are reproduced in Cedrenus, i. 27, but with the following important addition which further illustrates our

And he wrote it down and said nothing regarding it; for he was afraid to speak to Noah about it lest he should be angry with him on account of it. 5. And in the thirtieth jubilee, in the second week, in the first year 1429 A.M. thereof, he took to himself a wife, and her name was Mēlkâ, the daughter of Madai, the son of Japheth, and in the fourth year he begat a son, and called his name Shelah; for 1432 A.M. he said: "Truly I have been sent." 6. [And in the fourth year he was born], and Shelah grew up and took to himself a wife, and her name was Mû'ak, the daughter of Kêsêd, his father's brother, in the one and thirtieth jubilee, in the fifth 1499 A.M. week, in the first year thereof. 7. And she bare him a son in the fifth year thereof, and he called his name Eber: and he took unto himself a wife, and her name was 'Azûrâd, the 1503 A.M.

9, 10. This secret and unauthorized division of the earth is followed by a formal and authoritative one made by Noah in the presence of an angel, and subscribed to by his sons with an oath binding on their descendants. On this subject Beer (Buch der Jubiläen, p. 33) quotes Pirke R. Eliezer, ch. 24. This device of the author in some respects anticipates the Social Contract of Rousseau, but the objects are different. The theory in our text makes it clear that there must have been current in the second cent. B.C. religious and moral objections to the Hebrew invasion of Palestine and the slaughter of the Canaanites which accompanied it. This scheme of an ancestral compact approved by God and accepted as obligatory for succeeding generations is an attempt to obviate such objections, and to show that in reality the true transgressors were not Israel but the Canaanites, and that Israel in seizing Palestine were but resuming possession of what was their own; for the Canaanites had settled in Palestine, although this country had fallen by lot to Shem and his descendants (see ix. 14, 15, x. 29-34 and notes in loc.). By mutual consent, moreover, a curse had been invoked on any one who should break this covenant as well as destruction on him and on his seed. Cf. Epiphanius. Haer. lxvi. 84 (II. ii. p. 542, Oehler): οὐκ οἶδεν ὁ ἰδιώτης ὅτι τὴν ἰδίαν γῆν ἀπελθῶσαν διηρασμένην ἀπ' αὐτῶν καὶ ἐξεδικήθη τὰ μεταξὺ ἀλλήλων γινόμενα ἐν ὄρφῃ ἀληθείας καὶ ὀρκῷ. Hence when Israel invaded Palestine and drove out the Canaanites they were simply recovering their own possessions. Cf. Syncellus, i. 83-84: νεωτερίσας ὁ τοῦ Χάμ υἱὸς Χαναὰν ἐπέβη τοῖς ὀρίοις τοῦ Σὴμ καὶ κατέκρησεν ἐκεῖ παραβὰς τὴν ἐντολὴν Νῶε σὺν τοῖς ἐξ αὐτοῦ γενομένοις ἔθνεσιν ἑπτὰ, Ἀμορραῖοις, Χετταῖοις, Φερεζαῖοις, Εὐδαῖοις, Γεργεσαῖοις, Ἰεβουσαῖοις καὶ Χαναταῖοις, οὓς διὰ Μωϋσέως καὶ Ἰησοῦ ἐξωλόθρευσεν ὁ θεὸς καὶ κατὰ τινας καιροὺς διὰ τῶν κριτῶν ἀπέδωκε τοῖς υἱοῖς Ἰσραὴλ τὴν πατρίαν γῆν . . .

12-21. Shem's lot. It is impossible to define exactly the limits of Shem's portion. The text is at times indefinite and no doubt corrupt; but even if we had the original before us many obscurities would still remain, owing to the vague and inaccurate geographical ideas of the time. The boundaries of Shem's portion are defined in verses 12-16 and the countries embraced within them in ver. 21, and ix. 2-6, 13^b. Since there is some hope of understanding our author's ideas as to the countries allotted to Shem, we shall confine our attention in the main to this question, and supplement the evidence of the text by citations from Epiphanius and Syncellus which are based upon it. We shall also make occasional use of the statements of Josephus on this head as well as of the Chronicles of Jerahmeel.

First of all Shem's portion is said to include (ver. 21) the countries of Eden, and of the Red Sea, of Bashan, Lebanon, Elam, Asshur, Babel, Susa, Media, India, the mountains of Sanir and Amana, and the islands of Kaptur. To this list ix. 2-6 adds the waters of Dedan, the mountains of Mebrî and Elâ and the land of Arârâ (? Ararat). Finally in ix. 13^b there are the islands of Kamâturi. Now, if we turn to Epiphanius, Ancorat. cxii. (Dindorf's ed. i. 215), we find that he defines Shem's portion as extending from Persia and Bactria to India, to Rhinocurura which is between Egypt and Palestine (τῷ μὲν Σῆμ . . . ὑπέπεσεν ὁ κλῆρος ἀπὸ Περσίδος καὶ Βάκτρων ἕως Ἰνδικῆς ἕως τῆς χώρας Ῥινोकουρούρων). The same statement is made in the Chronicon Paschale (i. 53) and in Syncellus (i. 82), though in fuller form in the latter (Σῆμ . . . ἔδωκεν ἀπὸ Περσίδος καὶ Βάκτρων ἕως Ἰνδικῆς μήκος, πλάτος δὲ ἀπὸ Ἰνδικῆς ἕως Ῥινोकουρούρων τῆς Αἰγύπτου, ἥτοι τὰ ἀπὸ ἀνατολῆς ἕως μέρους τῆς μεσημβρίας, τὴν τε Συρίαν καὶ Μῆδειαν καὶ ποταμὸν διορίζοντα αὐτοῦ τὰ ὄρια τὸν Εὐφράτην). Cedrenus (i. 23) reproduces this passage. The Chronicles of Jerahmeel xxxi. 2 give practically the same delimitations: "Shem, the eldest, chose his portion in the land of 'Asya, that is, the land of Persia from Bactris to Endiana, from the Persian river to the Ocean in the west and the whole Rînôs." These definitions include for the most part the countries enumerated in our text above as well as in Josephus, Ant. i. 6. 4, but they hardly explain the statement in viii. 12 that Shem's portion extended to the river Don and the Rhipaeen mountains. Now a list of countries filling up this larger area is given in Epiphanius (Adn. Haer. II. ii. p. 544 [Haer. lxxv. 83], ed. Oehler): τῷ δὲ Σῆμ ὑπέπεσεν ὁ κλῆρος πρὸς πλάτος, ἡ Παλαιστίνη καὶ Φοινίκη καὶ Κολήν, Κομμαγήνη, Κιλικία, Καπαδοκία, Γαλατία, Παφλαγονία, Θράκη, Εὐρώπη, Ῥοδόπη, Λαζία, Ἰβηρία, Κασπία, Καρδυνέα, ἄχρι τῆς Μηδίας πρὸς βορρᾶν. ἐντεῦθεν οὗτος ὁ κλῆρος διορίζει τὸν Ἰάφεθ τὰ πρὸς βορρᾶν. But Thrace, Rhodope and probably Europa are here wrongly assigned to Shem.

12. The middle of the earth. Palestine according to Ezek. xxxviii. 12 (cf. also v. 5; Eth. Enoch xxvi. 1) was the navel (נוֹרֵם, ὀμφαλός) of the earth. Cf. viii. 19 of our text. The idea reappears in Rabbinic Hebrew. Singer (p. 68) quotes Joma 54 b; Sanhedrin 37 a; Pesikta Rabb. x. in Tanch. on Lev. xix. 23, כֵּן אֶרֶץ יִשְׂרָאֵל טֶבֶר שֶׁל עוֹלָם וְיִירוּשָׁלַם בְּמִצְחָהּ "א."

Râfâ. This range is no doubt the Rhipaeen mountains which ancient geographers placed in the northern parts of Europe and Asia or in other

Tinâ, and his portion goes towards the west through the midst of this river, and it extends till it reaches the water of the abysses, out of which this river goes forth and pours its waters into the sea Mê'at, and this river flows into the great sea. And all that is towards the north is Japheth's, and all that is towards the south belongs to Shem. 13. And it extends till it reaches Kârâsô: this is in the bosom of the tongue which looks towards the south. 14. And his portion extends along the great sea, and it extends in a straight line till it reaches the west of the tongue which looks towards the south; for this sea is named the tongue of the Egyptian Sea. 15. And it turns from here towards the south towards the mouth of the great sea on the shore of cases appear to have identified with the Ural mountains. The Tanais or Don is placed by our author in their neighbourhood. A son of Peleg is so named in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel xxvii. 5.

Tinâ. The Tanais or Don. This river is said to spring from "the waters of the abysses."

Mê'at. The Maeotis or Sea of Azov.

13-14. These two verses should describe the western boundary.

13. Kârâsô. Dillmann identifies this place with the Chersonese. But if it is connected, as it seems to be, with "the tongue (i.e. gulf) which looks towards the south," which in ver. 14 is defined as "the tongue of the Egyptian Sea," this identification cannot be right. I am inclined to believe that in Kârâsô we have the latter part of the word Ῥινωκοροῦρα, which lies on the western boundary of Shem. For if we turn to the quotations from Epiphanius and Syncellus in the note on 12-21 we find that the portion of Shem is said to extend "from India to Rhinocurura in Egypt." This place furthermore is situated on the frontier of Ham's portion according to Epiphanius and the Chronicles of Jerahmeel. Thus in Adv. Haer. II. ii. 84 of the former, Ham's African dominions extend ἀπὸ Ῥινωκοροῦρων ἄχρι Γαδελῶν: and in xxxi. 2 of the latter, "from Rînôs as far as Gadaira." In this last quotation

we have another abbreviation of the long name Rhinocurura. It will be observed, indeed, that our text makes Shem's portion extend westward as far as the mouths of the Gihon (Nile), so that later writers have diverged somewhat from their primal authority. Ῥινωκοροῦρα is used by the LXX in translating נַחַל כַּזְרַיִם, i.e., "the torrent of Egypt," a town on the confines of Egypt and Palestine, in Is. xxvii. 12.

This is in the bosom of. These words cannot be right if either of the above interpretations of Kârâsô is sound.

Tongue. The word lesân may be rendered indifferently "promontory" (of the land) or "bay" or "gulf" (of the sea).

Tongue which looks towards the south. This phrase is repeated and defined in the next verse.

14. Tongue which looks towards the south. This may mean the promontory which runs out into the Red Sea on which Mt. Sinai is situated.

The tongue of the Egyptian Sea. This is the Gulf of Aqaba at the north of the Red Sea. Our text is the literal equivalent of Is. xi. 15, לַשּׁוֹן יָם כַּזְרַיִם, as Littmann has observed.

15-16. These two verses should describe mainly the southern, eastern, and northern-eastern boundaries.

15. The word Samên which is rendered "south" can also be rendered "north"—a later meaning of the word.

(its) waters, and it extends to the west to 'Afrâ, and it extends till it reaches the waters of the river Gihon, and to the south of the waters of Gihon, to the banks of this river. 16. And it extends towards the east, till it reaches the Garden of Eden, to the south thereof, [to the south] and from the east of the whole land of Eden and of the whole east, it turns to the †east,† and proceeds till it reaches the east of the mountain named Râfâ, and it descends to the bank of the mouth of the river Tînâ. 17. This portion came forth by lot for Shem and his sons, that they should possess it for ever unto his generations for evermore. 18. And Noah rejoiced that this portion came forth for Shem and for his sons, and he remembered all that he had spoken with his mouth in prophecy; for he had said:

"Blessed be the Lord God of Shem,

And may the Lord dwell in the dwelling of Shem."

19. And he knew that the Garden of Eden is the holy of holies, and the dwelling of the Lord, and Mount

West to 'Afrâ (c d). b reads "to the west of 'Afrâ." 'Afrâ seems to be Africa in its early limited sense.

Gihon. Eth. has Gijôn, i.e., the Gihon, one of the four rivers of Paradise (Gen. ii. 13). According to our text (viii. 23) it flows to the south of the Garden of Eden. This river compassed "the whole land of Cush." Whether the Cushites are the Kassî of the cuneiform inscriptions or the Ethiopians does not concern us here, though the identification of the Gihon and Nile may have arisen from a confusion of the two countries. Syncellus, i. 89, speaks of two distinct countries named Ethiopia: Αἰθιοπία ἡ βλέπουσα κατὰ Ἰνδοῦς πρὸς εὐρόπoτον, ἄλλη Αἰθιοπία πρὸς νότον, ὅθεν ἐκπορεύεται ὁ Νεῖλος ποταμός. Our author undoubtedly identifies the Nile with the Gihon. So Syncellus (p. 82) interprets this passage, τὸν Νεῖλον, ὃς καὶ Γειῶν . . . λέγεται. Γηῶν is used as a rendering of נָחַל, i.e., the Nile in Sirach xxiv. 27: see also Jer. ii. 18.

16. South. Better translate "north." See note on ver. 15.

[To the south]. Bracketed as ditto-graphy.

It turns to the †east†. We should expect "to the west." I have omitted "and" before "it turns." The boundary line now returns to the river Don whence it started in ver. 12.

18. See vii. 11. God dwells in the dwellings of Shem: the three most holy places belong to Shem.

19. In iv. 26 above we have seen that there are four holy places in the earth: from the present verses we learn that three of these are in Shem's portion. The fourth place, therefore, must either have been in Japheth's or Ham's portion. Either therefore the Mount of the East may be regarded as Ararat in Japheth's portion, or as the great mountain in the south-east (cf. Eth. En. xxiv. 3, xxv. 3), which would probably belong to Ham's portion. See also iv. 26 note. The latter mountain is the chief in a range of mountains of fire (Eth. En. xviii. 9, xxiv. 1), and such a range belongs to Ham's portion: see ver. 22.

Sinai the centre of the desert, and Mount Zion—the centre of the navel of the earth: these three were created as holy places facing each other. 20. And he blessed the God of gods, who had put the word of the Lord into his mouth, and the Lord for evermore. 21. And he knew that a blessed portion and a blessing had come to Shem and his sons unto the generations for ever—the whole land of Eden and the whole land of the Red Sea, and the whole land of the east, and India, and on the Red Sea and the mountains thereof, and all the land of Bashan, and all the land of Lebanon and the islands of Kaftûr, and all the mountains of Sanîr and 'Amânâ, and the mountains of Asshur in the north, and all the land of Elam, Asshur, and Bâbêl, and Sûsân and Mâ'êdâi, and all the mountains of Ararat, and all the region beyond the sea, which is beyond the mountains of Asshur towards the north, a blessed and spacious land, and all that Navel of the earth. See note on ver. 12.

21. A blessed portion. Cf. Syncellus, p. 83, (Σημ) τὰς ἐξαιρέτους τῶν παρ' αὐτοῦ εὐλογιῶν ἐκληρώσατο ὡς καὶ ἐν τῇ Γενέσει φέρεται. On the countries mentioned in this ver. see note on 12-21.

Bashan. In Eth. Bâsâ.

Islands of Kaftûr. This is Caphtor the proper name of a country in Jer. xlvii. 4; Amos ix. 7. The plural is used of its inhabitants in Gen. x. 14; Deut. ii. 23. In Gen. x. 14 these are taken to be the Cappadocians in the Syr., Onk., and the Jon. and Jer. Targums; also in Amos ix. 7 in the LXX, Syr., Vulg., Targ.-Jon.; also in Jer. xlvii. 4 in the Syr., Jon. Targ., Vulg.; also in Deut. ii. 23 in the LXX, Syr., Onk., Vulg., Jon.-Targ. There are thus some grounds for regarding Kaftûr as equivalent to Cappadocia in this text, and this view may be confirmed by the passage in Epiphanius which includes Cappadocia in the portion of Shem; see quotation in note on viii. 12-21. On the other hand if we take the words "islands of Kaftûr" as a correct translation of the original (probably אֶרֶץ כַּפְתֹּר), the phrase may denote the island of Crete. Kamâtûrî in ix. 13 may be a corruption of Kaftûr. Modern exegesis has taken the scriptural Caphtor to be Cilicia, Cyprus, Crete, or Coptos, a city in the upper Thebaid (see Encyc. Bib. on "Caphtor").

Sanîr and 'Amânâ. Cf. ix. 4. These names may be derived from Cant. iv. 8. Sanir is the Biblical Senir in Deut. iii. 9; Ezek. xxvii. 5. In Deut. iii. 9 it is said to be the Amoritish name for Hermon. Sanîru occurs in the cuneiform inscriptions (see Bertholet on Ezekiel xxvii. 5). 'Amânâ may belong to the range of the Antilibanus or be Mt. Amanus in northern Syria. Josephus (Ant. i. 6. 1) and the Chronicles of Jerahmeel (xxxi. 3. 5) favour the latter view.

Elam. The name of Shem's eldest son. The country is the Assyrian Elamtu, and is "nearly equivalent to the Susiana and Elymais of the Greeks" (Encyc. Bib. ii. 1253). Sûsân, which is mentioned presently, was its capital, or it may stand for Susiana.

Mâ'êdâi, i.e. Media. See x. 35.

is in it is very good. 22. And for Ham came forth the second portion, beyond the Gihon towards the south to the right of the Garden, and it extends towards the south and it extends to all the mountains of fire, and it extends towards the west to the sea of 'Atêl and it extends towards the west till it reaches the sea of Mâ'ûk—that (sea) into which †everything which is not destroyed descends†. 23. And it goes forth towards the north to the limits of Gâdir, and it goes forth to the coast of the waters of the sea to the waters of the great sea till it draws near to the river Gihon, and goes along the river Gihon till it reaches the right of the Garden of Eden. 24. And this is the land which came forth for Ham as the portion which he was to occupy for ever for himself and his sons unto their generations for ever. 25. And for Japheth

22-24. Ham's portion. This portion embraces all Africa from the mouths of the Nile westward and southward and certain parts of Asia, which are vaguely defined in viii. 23, ix. 1, imperfectly in Epiphanius. Anchorat. cxii.: Χάμ δὲ τῷ δευτέρῳ ἀπὸ τῆς αὐτῆς Ῥινκοκουρούρων ἕως Γαδεύρων τὰ πρὸς νότον: and in Syncellus, 82: Χάμ δὲ τῷ δευτέρῳ . . . ἔδωκε τὰ πρὸς νότον καὶ Λίβαν καὶ μέρος τῆς δύσεως ἀπὸ Ῥινκοκουρούρων τῆς Αἰγύπτου, Αἰθιοπίας, καὶ Αἰγυπτῶν καὶ Λιβύης, Ἀφρικῆν καὶ Μαυριτανίαν ἕως Ἡρακλείων στηλῶν ἕτοι ἕως τοῦ δυτικοῦ καὶ Λιβυκοῦ Ὠκεανοῦ, ποταμὸν διορίζοντα τὸν Νεῖλον, ὃς καὶ Γεῶν . . . λέγεται, for both these passages omit the countries belonging to Ham in Asia. In Epiphanius. Adv. Haer. II. ii. 544 (Haer. lxi. 84), however, these are given very fully: ὑπέπεσεν ὁ κλῆρος ἀπὸ Ῥινκοκουρούρων ἄχρι Γαδεύρων, Αἰγυπτῶν ἔχων καὶ Μαυριτανίαν καὶ Ἀμμῶνα, Λιβύην τε καὶ Μαρμαρίδα, Πεντάπολιν, Μακάτην, Μακρόνην τε καὶ Λεπτιμιάγνην, Σύρτιν, Μαυριτανίαν, ἄχρι τῶν Ἡρακλεωτικῶν στηλῶν λεγομένων καὶ τῆς ἔσω Γαδεύρης· ταῦτα τὰ πρὸς νότον· ἀπὸ δὲ Ῥινκοκουρούρων τὰ πρὸς ἀνατολήν, τὴν τε Ἰδοιμαλίαν καὶ Μαδιαντίν, τὴν τε Ἀλαβαστρίτιν, καὶ Ὀμηρίτιν, καὶ Ἀξωμίτιν, καὶ Βούγειαν, καὶ Λίβαν, ἄχρι τῆς τῶν Βάκτρων χώρας. ὁ δὲ αὐτὸς

κλῆρος διορίζει ἀνὰ μέσον τοῦ Σήμ τὰ πρὸς ἀνατολήν. According to the Chronicles of Jerahmeel xxxi. 2 "Ham took his portion in the land of Afriquia which comprises Aram, Hamath, and the mountain of Lebanon . . . until the Red Sea and the Sea of Philistia, from Rînôs as far as Gadaira." See also for Josephus' views, Ant. i. 6. 2.

22. Gihon. Eth. has Gijôn. See note on viii. 15.

To the right, i.e. to the south.

Mountains of fire. On certain fiery mountains see Eth. Enoch xviii. 6-9, xxiv. 1-3.

'Atêl. The Atlantic.

Mâ'ûk. This sea or ocean lies in the extreme west: cf. ver. 26. Is the word a distortion of Ὠκεανός, the Great Ocean Stream?

Everything which is not destroyed descends (a b). cd = "everything perishable descends." What is required probably is: "if anything descends into it, it perishes."

23. Gâdir, i.e. Gades, Cadiz.

Goes along the river Gihon. I have added 'ba' before Gihon; for the writer could not say that the Nile flowed towards the Garden of Eden.

25-29a. Japheth's portion—Northern Asia, Europe, and five great islands. This portion, which is further described in ix. 7-13, embraces the countries north came forth the third portion beyond the river Tînâ to the north of the outflow of its waters, and it extends north-easterly to the whole region of Gog and to all the country east thereof. 26. And it extends northerly to the north, and it extends to the mountains of Qêlt towards the north, and towards the sea of Mâ'ûk, and it goes forth to the east of Gâdir as far as the region of the waters of the sea. 27. And it extends until it approaches the west of Fârâ and it returns towards 'Afêrâg, and it extends easterly to the waters of the sea of Mê'at. 28. And it extends to the region of the river Tînâ in a north-easterly direction until it approaches the boundary of its waters towards the mountain Râfâ, and it turns round towards the north. 29. This is the land which came forth for Japheth and his sons as the portion of his inheritance which he should possess for himself and his sons, for their generations for ever; five great islands, and a great land in the north. 30. But it is cold, of Shem and Ham's portions from Media to Rhinocurura in Asia and to Gades in Europe. Epiphanius (Anchorat. cxii.) describes it briefly: 'Ιάφεθ τῷ τρίτῳ ἀπὸ Μηδίας ἕως Γαδείρων καὶ Ρινκοκουρούρων τὰ πρὸς Βορρᾶν. Cf. Chronicon Pasch. i. 46. A fuller account from a later standpoint is given by Syncellus (p. 83): 'Ιάφεθ . . . (ἔδωκεν) ἀπὸ Μηδείας τὰ πρὸς ἄρκτον καὶ δυσμὰς ἕως Γαδείρων καὶ Βρεττανικῶν νήσων, Ἀρμενίαν καὶ Ἰβηρίαν, Πόντον, Κόλχους καὶ τὰς κατόπιον χώρας καὶ νήσους ἕως Ἰταλίας καὶ Γαλλικῆς, Σπανικῆς, τε καὶ Κελτικῆς καὶ Λυσιτανῶν. Practically the same description of Japheth's province is given by Epiphanius (Adv. Haer. II. ii. 544 [Haer. lxvi. 84]): οὗτος ὁ κλῆρος (τοῦ Σῆμ) διορίζει τὸν 'Ιάφεθ τὰ πρὸς Βορρᾶν (i.e., Japheth's province in Asia is bounded by Shem's on the south): πρὸς δὲ τὴν δύσιν ἀπὸ τῆς Εὐρώπης ἄχρι τῆς Ἰσπανίας καὶ Βριττανίας, ἐκεῖθεν τε τὰ παρακείμενα ἔθνη, Ἐπτες καὶ Δαῦνεις, Ἰάπυγες, Κάλαβροι, Λατῖνοι, Ὀπικοί, Μάγαρδες, ἕως διακατοχῆς τῆς Σπανίας, καὶ τῆς Γαλλίας, τῆς τε τῶν Σκόττων καὶ Φράγγων ἀνω χώρας. An elaborate account of Japheth's province appears in Josephus, Ant. i. 6. 1, and in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel xxxi. 4-5. The latter is dependent in some respects on the former.

25. The boundaries of Japheth's portion in Asia.

Gog. The country of Gog is in northern Asia. Gog is identified with the Scythians by Josephus (Ant. i. 6. 1) and the Chronicles of Jerahmeel (xxx. 4).

26-28. The boundaries of Japheth's portion in Europe.

26. Qêlt. These are probably the Celts.

Mâ'ûk. See on ver. 22.

27. Fârâ (cd), b Ferâ, a Ferêg. Fârâ may be Africa. See ver. 15.

Afêrâg. This may be Phrygia. This country according to Josephus (Ant. i. 6. 1) and the Chronicles of Jerahmeel xxxi. 5 belonged to Japheth.

29. Five great islands. See note on ix. 13. To these five may belong Cyprus, Sicily, Sardinia, Corsica. Five islands in the Great Sea are mentioned in Eth. Enoch lxxvii. 8.

and the land of Ham is hot, and the land of Shem is neither hot nor cold, but it is of blended cold and heat.

Subdivision of the three portions amongst the grandchildren of Noah. Amongst Ham's children, 1: Shem's 2-6: Japheth's, 7-13. Oath taken by Noah's sons, 14-15.

IX. And Ham divided amongst his sons, and the first portion came forth for Cush towards the east, and to the west of him for Mizraim, and to the west of him for Put, and to the west of him [and to the west thereof] on the sea for Canaan. 2. And Shem also divided amongst his sons, and the first portion came forth for Elam and his sons, to the east of the river Tigris till it approaches the east, the whole land of India, and on the Red Sea on its coast, and the waters of Dêdân, and all the mountains of Mebrî and 'Êlâ, and all the land of Sûsân and all that is on the side of Pharnâk to the Red Sea and the river Tînâ. 3. And for Asshur came forth the second portion, all the land of Asshur and Nineveh

30. Land of Ham is hot. Cf. Epiphanius, Haer. lxvi. 85: Χαναάν δὲ πλεονέκτης ὢν ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ Χάμ ἐπῆλθε τῇ Παλαιστίνῃ γῇ . . . καταλείψας τὸν ἴδιον κλῆρον διὰ τὸ δοκεῖν εἶναι καυματινόν.

Cush. Eth. has Ques. The country is no doubt Ethiopia. See also Josephus and the Chronicles of Jerahmeel, in loc.

Mizraim. Eth. has Mêsîrêm. He receives מִצְרַיִם or Egypt.

Put. Eth. has Phûd. So also in LXX Φούδ, i.e. מִצְרַיִם. The country of Phûd is Libya, lying west of Egypt. See Josephus and Jerahmeel.

To the west of him . . . on the sea for Canaan. Thus Canaan's portion extended from Libya to the Atlantic on the west. See x. 28-29. The bracketed words are a dittography.

2. Elam's portion—from the Tigris to the utmost confines of India, the countries bordering on the Red Sea and running northward to Pontus and the Don.

The east, the whole land of India (câ). a b read "to the east of the whole land of India." But India was in Shem's portion. See viii. 21.

Waters of Dêdân. Dedan is a son of Raamah, one of the sons of Cush (Gen. x. 7) or of Jokshan, son of Keturah (Gen. xxv. 3). The Dedanites are generally taken to be a commercial people dwelling in Arabia, possibly on the north-west. See Encyc. Bibl. i. 1053.

and Shinar and to the border of India, and it ascends and skirts the river. 4. And for Arpachshad came forth the third portion, all the land of the region of the Chaldees to the east of the Euphrates, bordering on the Red Sea, and all the waters of the desert close to the tongue of the sea which looks towards Egypt, all the land of Lebanon and Sanîr and 'Amânâ to the border of the Euphrates. 5. And for Aram there came forth the fourth portion, all the land of Mesopotamia between the Tigris and the Euphrates to the north of the Chaldees to the border of the mountains of Asshur and the land of 'Arârâ. 6. And there came forth for Lud the fifth portion, the mountains of Asshur and all appertaining to them till it reaches the Great Sea, and till it reaches the east of Asshur his brother. 7. And Japheth also divided the land of his inheritance amongst his sons. 8. And the first portion came forth for Gomer to the east from the north side to the river Tînâ; and in the north there came forth for Magog all the inner portions of the north until it reaches to the sea of M'eat. 9. And for Madai came forth as his portion that he should possess from the west of his two brothers to the islands, and to the coasts of the islands. 10. And for Javan came forth the fourth

4. Arpachshad's portion. See further ix. 13 for the islands allotted to him. In Josephus, Ant. i. 6. 4, the descendants of Arpachshad are identified with the Chaldees. Eth. has 'Arphâxed.

Tongue of the sea, etc. I don't know what is meant here.

Sanîr and 'Amânâ. See note on viii. 21.

5. The Syrians.

'Arârâ, i.e. Ararat. See viii. 21.

6. Lud's portion extends from the west coast of Asia Minor to the east of Asshur. Josephus, Ant. i. 6. 4, says the descendants of Lud were the Lydians.

8. Magog. Only Gog is spoken of in viii. 25.

9. The north-western portions of Europe fell to Madai's lot, but he was dissatisfied with it (see x. 35) and begged a portion of Shem's lot. Madai's lot would seem to embrace Britain and Ireland. The former is mentioned in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel (xxi. 5), Epiphanius and Syncellus; see notes on viii. 25-29^a.

10. Javan. Eth. has 'Îjô'evân. Javan denotes properly Ionia, the Greek colony in Asia Minor, and is used in this limited sense in Is. lxvi. 19; Ezek. xxvii. 13. This name also de portion every island and the islands which are towards the border of Lud. 11. And for Tubal there came forth the fifth portion in the midst of the tongue which approaches towards the border of the portion of Lud to the second tongue, to the region beyond the second tongue unto the third tongue. 12. And for Meshech came forth the sixth portion, all the region beyond the third tongue till it approaches the east of Gâdîr. 13. And for Tiras there came forth the seventh portion, four great islands in the midst of the sea, which reach to the portion of Ham [and the islands of Kamâtûrî came out by lot for the sons of Arpachshad as his inheritance]. 14. And thus the sons of Noah divided notes the Graeco-Macedonian empire: Dan. viii. 21, x. 20, xi. 2. In our text it seems to embrace all the islands of the coast of Asia Minor, while in Josephus, Ant. i. 6. 1, it includes Ionia and all the Greeks.

Every island and the islands. We should expect rather "all the coastlands and the island."

11. Tubal's (Eth. Tôbêl) portion seems to extend from Thrace to Italy. Josephus, Ant. i. 6. 1, identifies Tubal's descendants with the Iberes who lived in the Caucasus, and the Chronicles of Jerahmeel, xxxi. 5, identify them with the Iberi and Ispamia (?). It is not clear what the three tongues of land are. Italy seems to be the third, Greece the second and possibly Thrace the first. The descendants of Tubal in Gen. x. 2 are identified with Tibareni in Pontus.

12. As Italy seems to be the third tongue, Meshech's portion extends from the north of Italy to Cadiz. Josephus, Ant. i. 6. 1, and the Chronicles of Jerahmeel, xxxi. 4, take the descendants of Meshech to be identified with the Cappadocians, but modern scholars with the Moschi who lived between the sources of the Phasis and Cyrus.

13. The descendants of Tiras (Eth. Tîrás) seem to be the Tyrseni, a branch of the Pelasgians who lived by piracy on the coasts and islands of the Aegean Sea. Josephus, Ant. i. 6. 1, identifies them with the Thracians.

Four great islands. See on viii. 29.

[The islands of Kamâtûrî . . . as his inheritance]. I have bracketed these words as an interpolation. They are foreign to their present context, for it is dealing with the possessions of the sons of Japheth, and Arpachshad is a son of Shem. Furthermore, the phraseology "came out . . . for the sons of Arpachshad" is unusual. This phrase "the sons of" is used only in the case of Noah's three sons: viii. 17 "for Shem and his sons"; viii. 24 "for Ham . . . and his sons"; viii. 29 "for Japheth and his sons." But in connection with Noah's sixteen grandsons in chap. ix. it is not used. The grandson is mentioned in each case as the person to whom a certain province is allotted. On the other hand, the words may in some form have followed after ix. 4, which defines the possessions of Arpachshad. From viii. 21 we know that "the islands of Kaftûr" were in Shem's portion. Now these "islands of Kamâtûrî" may be the "islands of Kaftûr"; for Kamâtûrî could easily originate from Kaftûr.

14. Following our text Epiphanius, Ancorat. cxiv. (Dind. ed., vol. i. 217), writes τούτων τοίνυν τῶν ἐθνῶν οὕτως ἐκ τῶν τριῶν υἱῶν τοῦ Νῶε γεγονότων καὶ τριχῇ τοῦ κόσμου τοῖς τρισὶν υἱοῖς διαμερισθέντος, ὥς προείπον, ὅρκος ἀπητήθη παρ' αὐτῶν ὑπὸ τοῦ πατρὸς μηδένα ἐπεμβαίνειν τῷ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ κλήρῳ, τὸν δὲ ὑπερβαίνοντα τὴν τοῦ ὅρκου διαταγὴν ἐξολοθρεύεσθαι ἐν τῷ ὅρκῳ καὶ πάντῃ τὸ σπέρμα αὐτοῦ. X. 1. We have here another fragment of the lost Apocalypse of Noah. The former fragment we found in vii. 20-39. Of the present fragment a summary is preserved in Syncellus, i. 49, though, of course, as forming a genuine section of Jubilees. This summary gives the contents of verses 1-9. Καὶ γὰρ ἐν τῇ Μωϋσείως λεγομένη ἀποκαλύψει φέρεται περὶ αὐτῶν, ὅτι μετὰ τὸν κατακλυσμὸν τῷ β' φ' β' ἔτει τοῦ κόσμου φθόνῳ κινούμενοι μετὰ θάνατον ἐπλάνησαν τοὺς υἱοὺς Νῶε. καὶ εὐξαμένον τοῦ Νῶε ἵνα ἀποστῶσιν ἀπ' αὐτῶν, ὁ κύριος ἐκέλευσε τῷ ἀρχαγγέλῳ Μιχαὴλ βαλεῖν αὐτοὺς εἰς τὴν ἄβυσσον ἄχρι ἡμέρας τῆς κρίσεως· ὁ δὲ διάβολος ἠτήσατο λαβεῖν μοῖραν ἀπ' αὐτῶν πρὸς πειρασμὸν τῶν ἀνθρώπων καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ τὸ δέκατον αὐτῶν κατὰ πρόσταξιν θεῖαν, ὥστε πειράζειν τοὺς ἀνθρώπους πρὸς δοκιμὴν τῆς ἐκάστου πρὸς θεὸν προαιρέσεως, τὰ δὲ λοιπὰ ἐννέα μέρη ἐβλήθη εἰς τὴν ἄβυσσον. But what is of still greater interest is the fact that in the Hebrew Book of Noah fragments of verses 1-2, 9-14 have been preserved from the Hebrew original. For this work the reader can consult Jellinek's Bet ha-Midrash, iv. 155-156, or my text of Jubilees, p. 179.

And hast saved me and my sons from the waters of the flood,

And hast not caused me to perish as Thou didst the sons of perdition ;

For Thy grace has been great towards me,

And great has been Thy mercy to my soul ;

Let Thy grace be lift up upon my sons,

And let not wicked spirits rule over them

Lest they should destroy them from the earth.

The unclean demons. These are the spirits which went forth from the Mamzerim or children of the angels and the daughters of men. See vii. 22 ; Eth. Enoch xiv.-xvi.

The unclean demons began . . . destroy them (so a b). cd omit "the children of." But Syncellus, i. 49, and the passage from the Hebrew Book of Noah (see my Eth. Text, p. 35, notes 17-19) show that instead of "the children of the sons" we should simply have "the sons." Under the word daqîqa (= "the children of") there may lie some corruption of the verb 'adqaga, "to beat small" = לרכות, a corruption for להכות, "to slay." Now this verb is the last infinitive in the passage of the Hebrew Book of Noah (see below), and as the other three verbs in the Ethiopic text are literal equivalents of the preceding three infinitives in the same passage we may conclude that we have thus recovered the true text. The passage in question is : החלו רוחות הממזרים להתגרות ובהניח להשטות ולטעות ולהכל ולהכות "And the spirits of the Mamzerim began to stir themselves against the sons of Noah, to lead astray and cause to err and to destroy and to slay." "Unclean demons" in our text is a good equivalent for "the spirits of the Mamzerim," though it is not a literal rendering. The Hebrew original of our text therefore = "The unclean demons began to lead astray and to make to err and to slay and to destroy the sons of Noah" (= החלו להשטות ולטעות ולהכות ולהכל). On the other hand the expression "sons' sons" recurs in verses 2, 3^b, and 5^b, so that the text of a b may be right.

acted in my day: and as for these spirits which are living, imprison them and hold them fast in the place of condemnation, and let them not bring destruction on the sons of thy servant, my God; for these are malignant, and created in order to destroy. 6. And let them not rule over the spirits of the living; for Thou alone canst exercise dominion over them. And let them not have power over the sons of the righteous from henceforth and for evermore." 7. And the Lord our God bade us to bind all. 8. And the chief of the spirits, Mastêmâ, came and said: "Lord, Creator, let some of them remain before me, and let them hearken to my voice, and do all that I shall say unto them; for if some of them are not left to me, I shall not be able to capacity they are designated as "angels of punishment," liii. 3, lvi. 1, lxiii. 11, lxiii. 1, so also in our author. Thus the evil spirits under Mastêmâ (1) tempt men, lead them astray and blind them x. 2, 8, xlviii. 12, 16, and harden their hearts xlviii. 17. In xv. 31 it is actually stated that God put spirits in authority over men to lead them astray; see notes on xv. 31-32. Again (2) they accuse men of actual or alleged sins, xvii. 16, xlviii. 15, 18. Finally (3) they destroy those who have sinned, being created for this purpose, x. 2, 5. As angels of destruction they appear, xlviii. 2, in slaying the first-born in Egypt. In xlviii. 2 Mastêmâ seeks to slay Moses for failing to circumcise his son. These spirits seek to rule a man in order to destroy him, x. 3. But they cannot touch the righteous, x. 6; every breach of the law, however, exposes men to their malignant influence, xlviii. 2. Israel as such is God's own portion and is not subject to spirits of any kind, xv. 32, xvi. 18, xix. 28. From this high ethical conception our author falls away, no doubt under the influence of his authorities, in x. 12, 13, where, as in Tobit, magical methods are said to be effective against evil spirits. See further note on xlviii. 2.

Let some of them remain before me. See quotation from Syncellus in note on x. 1.

execute the power of my will on the sons of men; for these are for corruption and leading astray before my judgment, for great is the wickedness of the sons of men.” 9. And He said: “Let the tenth part of them remain before him, and let nine parts descend into the place of condemnation.” 10. And one of us He commanded that we should teach Noah all their medicines; for He knew that they would not walk in uprightness, nor strive in righteousness. 11. And we did according to all His words: all the malignant evil ones we bound in the place of condemnation, and a tenth part of them we left that they might be subject before Satan on the earth. 12. And we explained to Noah all the medicines of their diseases, together with their seductions, how he might heal them with herbs of the earth. 13. And Noah wrote down all things in a book as we instructed him concerning every kind of medicine. Thus the evil spirits were precluded from (hurting) the sons of Noah. 14. And he gave all that he had written to Shem, his eldest son; for he loved him exceedingly above all his sons. 15. And Noah slept with his fathers, and was buried on Mount Lûbâr in the land of Ararat. 16. Nine hundred and fifty years he completed in his life, nineteen jubilees and 1659 A.M. two weeks and five years. 17. Only one-tenth did he permit to go to and fro on the earth before the prince of the Mastema to rule over the godless to smite them and to plague them with all manner of diseases.” The angel according to this Hebrew book is Raphael, but according to Eth. Enoch x. 11-13 is Michael. Again, though according to our text only one-tenth of the demons are allowed to act with impunity to the day of judgment, in Eth. Enoch xv.-xvi., all the demons have this privilege.

So it is stated in the Hebrew Book of Noah, where there is a manifest paronomasia between רפאל and רפואה. Cf. Eth. Enoch x. 7; Tob. iii. 17, xii. 14, 15.

For they departed from the land of Ararat eastward to Shinar; for in his days they built the city and the tower, saying, "Go to, let us ascend thereby into heaven." 20. And they began to build, and in the fourth week they made brick with fire, and the bricks served them for stone, and the clay with which they cemented them together was asphalt which comes out of the sea, and out of the fountains of water in the land of Shinar. 21. Reu. Eth. has Râgaw = 'Ραγαύ = ʾר (Gen. xi. 18). It is obvious that our author thus derived Reu from ʾר, "to be evil." There was a paronomasia in the original. "He called his name Râgau (ʾר); for . . . the children of men had become evil," ʾר. This derivation appears in the Onomasticon, p. 197, 27: 'Ράαν (i.e. 'Ρααύ) κακούμενος.

21. For the three slight emendations of the text in this verse see my text, pp. 36-37. The passage is found in Greek in the Catena of Nicephorus, i. 175: ἐπὶ μὲν ἔτη ἔμειναν οἰκοδομοῦντες. τὸ ὕψος, εὐλογῶντες, καὶ οὕτως παλεστοῦν (sic), τὸ πλάτος ἐπὶ σὺν πλινθούς. τῆς πλινθού τοῦ ὕψους, τρίτον μῆκος πλινθού. τὸ ἑκταμα τοῦ ἐνὸς τοίχου στάδιοι γὰρ καὶ τοῦ ἄλλου

And the Lord descended, and we descended with Him to see the city and the tower which the children of men had built. 24. And He confounded their language, and they no longer understood one another's speech, and they ceased then to build the city and the tower. 25. For this reason the whole land of Shinar is called Babel, because the Lord did there confound all the language of the children of men, and from thence they were dispersed into their cities, each according to his language

λ'. Eutychiuss (translated by Pococke, 1658, pp. 51, 52) has drawn upon our text in the following passage: Tres ergo annos lateribus conficiendis et coquendis insumpserunt: quorum singuli tredecim cubitos longi, decem lati, ac quinque alti essent; urbemque inter Tyrum et Babelam exstruxerunt orgyas longam tercentum et tredecim, latam centum quinquaginta unam: cujus muri alti orgyas quinquies mille quingentas triginta tres; lati triginta tres; turris autem orgyas decies mille alta; quibus exstruendis quadraginta annos insumpserunt. Cf. J. Malalas, p. 12; Glycas, p. 240. The clauses in brackets in the translation are derived from the Greek. Rönsch (p. 401) quotes the following passage respecting this tower from Weil's Biblische Legenden der Muselmänner, pp. 77-78: Der Thurm (Nimrod's) ward bis zu einer Höhe von 5000 Ellen gebaut . . . "Overthrow" = dēqat = καταστροφή = הפכה. Observe the play of words not preserved in Eth.): "Overthrew it . . . and they called its name 'Overthrow'" = שמו את ארץ' . . . הפכו הבה. This disagrees with its name "Babel" in Gen. xi. 9. According to Sanh. 109a one-third of the tower of Babel was burnt, one-third swallowed up in the earth, and one-third standing.

28. Ham's portion lay in the north of Africa. It is described in the next verse as lying in the west towards the sea, cf. ix. 1. The designation "land of the south" is a loose one. The word rendered "south" rightly means "north," but it is used occasionally in this wrong sense by Ethiopic scribes. See note on viii. 15.

29. This view is, I think, found only in Jubilees and the books dependent upon it. Palestine fell by lot to Arpachshad and north-west Africa (see ix. 1) to Canaan; but Canaan wrongfully seized Palestine: see Epiphanius, Anchorat. cxiv. p. 217 (ed. Dindorf): ἐπεὶ οὖν ἐν τῷ κλήρῳ Σὴμ ἡ Παλαιστίνη ὑπέπεσε καὶ πάντα τὰ πλησίον αὐτῆς, πλεονέκτης δὲ ὢν ὁ Χαναάν υἱὸς Χάμ ἐπῆλθε τῇ Παλαιστινίων ὕστερον γῇ, τουτέστι τῇ Ἰουδαίᾳ, καὶ ἀφαρπαῖζει αὐτήν, ἐμακροθύμει δὲ ὁ θεός, διδοὺς χρόνους μετανοίας, ἵνα μετανοήσῃαν οἱ ἐκ τοῦ Χάμ καὶ ἀποδώσι τοῖς τοῦ Σὴμ τὴν ἰδίαν κληρονομίαν, ἐκεῖνοι δὲ οὐ μετενοοῦν, ἀλλ' ἤθελον τὸ μέτρον αὐτῶν πληρῶσαι. τότε ὁ θεὸς μετὰ πολλὰς ὕστερον γενεὰς δίκαιος ὢν ἐκδικεῖ τὴν παράβασιν τοῦ ὅρκου. οὕτω γὰρ ἔδει πληρωθῆναι τὸ Ἀμορραίων μέτρον. Cf. also Haer. lxvi. 85 (II. ii. 544); Syncellus, i. 83; Glycas, 242. 'Ôrâ. Lagarde's MS r wpa: Syr. Frag. ⲓⲟⲗ. Ps.-Philo, Ant. bibl. Lib. p. 45 gives Melcha.

Sêrôh. See ver. 6. Beer suggests that this is from כרה, "to sin," in Talmudic Hebrew. This would suit ver. 2, but ver. 6 implies that our author derived it from כור, "to turn aside." Epiphanius, Adv. Haer. i. 1. 6, writes: τὸν Σερούχ τὸν ἐρμηνεύμενον Ἐρεθισμὸν.

2-6. The corruption of mankind which our author ascribes to the period of Serug is by later writers assigned to the age of Enos, the son of Seth: see iv. 12 note. Some reflection of our text appears in Epiphanius, Adv. Haer. i. 1. 6: Φαλὲκ δὲ γεννᾷ τὸν Παγού . . . καὶ ἤρξατο εἰς ἀνθρώπους ἡ εἰδωλολατρία τε καὶ ὁ Ἑλληνισμός . . . οὕτω δὲ ἐν ξοάνους καὶ ἐν τορELAIS λίθων ἢ ξύλων ἢ ἀργυροτεύκτων . . . μόνον δὲ διὰ χρωμάτων καὶ εἰκόνων ἢ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου διάνοια ἐναντὶ ἐφύρατο τὴν κακίαν: also in Cedrenus, i. 47: ἐπὶ τούτου (Σηρούχ) οἱ ἀνθρώποι τὸν κατ' ἀλλήλων αὐξήσαντες τύφον στρατηγούς τε ἐαυτοῖς κατεστήσαντο καὶ βασιλεῖς. καὶ τότε πρῶτως πολεμικὰ κατασκευάσαντες ὄργανα πολεμεῖν ἀλλήλους ἐνῆρξαντο. See also Book of Adam and Eve (Malan), iii. 24: Ps.-Philo, Ant. bibl. Lib. p. 45.

2. Individuals began to exalt themselves, etc. So MSS. The emendation in my text is not necessary.

3. 'Ûr, the son of Kêsêd. We have here an attempt to explain the phrase Ur of the Chaldees (אור כשדים) through reference to Ur and his father Kêsêd.

'Arâ. Corrupt for Ura or Ur.

4. And they made for themselves molten images, and they worshipped each the idol, the molten image which they had made for themselves, and they began to make graven images and unclean simulacra, and malignant spirits assisted and seduced (them) into committing transgression and uncleanness. 5. And the prince Mastêmâ exerted himself to do all this, and he sent forth other spirits, those which were put under his hand, to do all manner of wrong and sin, and all manner of transgression, to corrupt and destroy, and to shed blood upon the earth. 6. For this reason he called the name of Sêrôh, Serug, for every one turned to do all manner of sin and transgression. 7. And he grew up, and dwelt in Ur of the Chaldees, near to the father of his wife's mother, and he worshipped idols, and he took to himself a wife in the thirty-^{1744 A.M.}sixth jubilee, in the fifth week, in the first year thereof, and her name was Mêlkâ, the daughter of Kâbêr, the daughter of his father's brother. 8. And she bare him Nahor, in the first year of this week, and he grew and dwelt in Ur of the Chaldees, and his father taught him the researches of the Chaldees to divine and augur, according to the signs of heaven. 9. And in the thirty-seventh jubilee, in the sixth^{1800 A.M.} week, in the first year thereof, he took to himself a wife, and her name was 'Îjâskâ, the daughter of Nêstâg of the Chaldees. 10. And she bare him Terah in the seventh

Our text was known directly or indirectly by Cedrenus, i. 47 : αὐτὴν θέντα δὲ τὸν Ναχώρ ἐδίδαξεν ὁ πατήρ πάντων ἐπίλυσιν ὁλωνῶν, τῶν τε ἐν οὐρανῷ σημείων διακρίσεις καὶ τῶν ἐπὶ γῆς ἀπάντων καὶ πᾶσαν Χαλδαϊκὴν μαντείαν. On an earlier reference to this art in our text see viii. 3.

1806 A.M. year of this week. 11. And the prince Mastêmâ sent ravens and birds to devour the seed which was sown in the land, in order to destroy the land, and rob the children of men of their labours. Before they could plough in the seed, the ravens picked (it) from the surface of the ground. 12. And for this reason he called his name Terah, because the ravens and the birds reduced them to destitution and devoured their seed. 13. And the years began to be barren, owing to the birds, and they devoured all the fruit of the trees from the trees: it was only with great effort that they could save a little of all the fruit of the earth in their days. 14. And in this 1870 A.M. thirty-ninth jubilee, in the second week in the first year, Terah took to himself a wife, and her name was 'Êdnâ, the

11-13. This legend is traced to our text by Jerome. Two other writers reproduce it, but do not mention the source. Jerome, in commenting on Num. xxxiii. 27 (Epist. lxxviii. ad Fabiolam, mansione 24), writes as follows: *Castra metati sunt in Thare (Num. xxxiii. 27): Hoc eodem vocabulo (תר) et iisdem litteris scriptum invenio patrem Abraham, qui in supradicto apocrypho Geneseos volumine, abactis corvis, qui hominum frumenta vastabant, abactoris vel depulsoris sortitus est nomen. I know of only two other references to the incident in our text. The first is in S. Ephraem i. 156 and is quoted by Malan, Book of Adam and Eve, p. 248: "Abram when a child, having been sent by Terah to drive away ravens sent to destroy the crops, as a punishment for the idolatry of the land, Abram—unable to drive them away—by a sudden impulse, called upon God to order them off, who answered: 'Here am I,' and ordered the ravens away from Terah's field." The second is found in Bar-hebraeus, Historia Dynastiarum, p. 13 (Fabric. Cod. Pseud. V.T. i. 422 sq.): *Cum Abraam annorum esset quindecim, annuit Deus precibus ejus contra pिकास quae terram Chaldaeorum vastabant semina terrae ab iis mandata perdetes. These last two passages are in the main derived from our text.

11. Sent. This can be rendered also "had sent."

12. Reduced them to destitution. The Ethiopic here = ἐπτώχισαν αὐτούς, but it could also be a rendering of ἐθλίψαν or ἐκάκωσαν. Hence this verb may go back to the Chaldee verb חרע = to ravage, devastate. This verb would constitute a play on the name Terah (תר) and the verse would run: יבואת קרא את שמו חרע יבואת קרא את שמו חרע. כי העורבים חרעו בם. For attempts to explain the derivation of Terah from the meaning assigned by Jerome see Rönsch, Das Buch der Jubiläen, 266-267; Beer, Leben Abraham's, pp. 95-96.

14. 'Êdnâ, the daughter of Abram. So Syriac Fragment (see my text, p. 40). Cf. Cedrenus, i. 47: Θάρρα δὲ . . . ἐγέννησεν ἐκ γυναικὸς Ἐδνας, θυγατρὸς Ἀβραάμ πατράδελφου αὐτοῦ, τὸν Ἀβραάμ, οὗτινα ἡ μήτηρ ἐκάλεσεν ἐπ' ὀνόματι τοῦ ἑαυτῆς πατρός. In the later Jewish books the wife of Terah is called Amthelai, the daughter of Karnebo, Baba Bathra 91a; Book of Jashar (Migne, Dict. des Apocr. ii. 1103). In the Chronicles of Jerahmeel (Eng. transl.) xxvii. 7, Amtalai, daughter of 'Abrâm, the daughter of his father's sister. 15. And in the seventh year of this week she bare him a son, 1876 A.M. and he called his name Abram, by the name of the father of his mother; for he had died before his daughter had conceived a son. 16. And the child began to understand the errors of the earth that all went astray after graven images and after uncleanness, and his father taught him writing, and he was two weeks of years old, and he separated 1890 A.M. himself from his father, that he might not worship idols with him. 17. And he began to pray to the Creator of all things that He might save him from the errors of the children of men, and that his portion should not fall into error after uncleanness and vileness. 18. And the seed time came for the sowing of seed upon the land, and they all went forth together to protect their seed against the ravens, and Abram went forth with those that went, and the child was a lad of fourteen years. 19. And a cloud of ravens came to devour the seed, and Abram ran to meet them before they settled on the ground, and cried to them before they settled on the ground to devour the seed, and said, "Descend not: return to the place whence ye came," and they proceeded to turn back. 20. And he caused the

the daughter of Karnabo, is said to be the wife of Nahor, but by taking the context rightly we get Amtalai as wife of Terah. Book of Jashar (Migne, Dict. des Apocr. ii. 1103) gives Amtela as Terah's wife, but there is no mention of her father's name. According to Eutychius (translated by Pococke, 1658) Terah had two wives, Yuna and Tohwait. See note on xii. 9.

15. Abram, by the name, etc. This statement is referred to by Syncellus, i. 183: Τὸν κατὰ μητέρα πάππον τοῦ 'Αβραάμ ἡ Λεπτὴ Γένεσις φησιν ὅτι 'Αβραάμ ἐκαλεῖτο, ἡ δὲ Σάρρα ἀδελφὴ ὁμοπατρὶα τοῦ 'Αβραάμ ὑπῆρχε.

16-17. Syncellus writes (i. 184) on the authority of our text: τῷ ἰδ' ἔτει αὐτοῦ ὁ 'Αβραάμ ἐπιγνούς τὸν τῶν ὄλων θεὸν προσεκύνει. Cf. Cedrenus, i. 47:

οὗτος ('Αβραάμ) μόνος, τῶν ἀπανταχοῦ τὴν ἐπὶ τὰ εἰδῶλα πλάνην νοσούντων, τὸν ἀληθῆ θεὸν ἐπέγνω καὶ δημιουργὸν τῶν ὄλων ἀνεκήρυξε. According to Simon ben Lakish in Ber. rabba 30, 64, 95, Midr. on Shir ha-Shirim v. 16 (cf. Midr. on Esther ii. 5), Book of Jashar (op. cit. ii. 1106), Abraham knew God when only three years old, according to R. Chanina in his forty-eighth year. See Beer, Leben Abr. 103-104 for other references.

clouds of ravens to turn back that day seventy times, and of all the ravens throughout all the land where Abram was there settled there not so much as one. 21. And all who were with him throughout all the land saw him cry out, and all the ravens turn back, and his name became great in all the land of the Chaldees. 22. And there came to him this year all those that wished to sow, and he went with them until the time of sowing ceased: and they sowed their land, and that year they brought enough grain home and eat and were satisfied. 23. And in the first year of the fifth week

1891 A.M. Abram taught those who made implements for oxen, the artificers in wood, and they made a vessel above the ground, facing the frame of the plough, in order to put the seed thereon, and the seed fell down therefrom upon the share of the plough, and was hidden in the earth, and they no longer feared the ravens. 24. And after this manner they made (vessels) above the ground on all the frames of the ploughs, and they sowed and tilled all the land, according as Abram commanded them, and they no longer feared the birds.

Abram seeks to turn Terah from idolatry, 1-8. Marries Sarai, 9. Haran and Nachor, 9-11. Abram burns the idols: death of Haran, 12-14 (cf. Gen. xi. 28). Terah and his family go to Haran, 15. Abram observes the stars and prays, 16-21. Is bidden to go to Canaan and blessed, 22-24. Power of speaking Hebrew given to him, 25-27. Leaves Haran for Canaan, 28-31. (Cf. Gen. xi. 31-xii. 3.)

XII. 1-14. Instead of the simple

narrative in these verses we have in later Jewish writings elaborate accounts of the fear inspired in Nimrod by Abram's birth, and the attempts of the former to destroy Abram in a furnace of fire when he refused to commit

idolatry. The idea that Abram was cast into a fiery furnace arose from a literal interpretation of Gen. xv. 7, "I am the Lord that brought thee out of Ur (בִּבְלָא) of the Chaldees" where אִשׁ was taken to mean "fire." Probably a comparison of Exod. xx. 2 and Is. xxix. 22 may have contributed to this interpretation. The casting of Abram into the furnace of fire is recorded in Targ.-Jon. on Is. x. 32, in the Ps.-Jon. on Gen. xi. 28, xv. 7, and the Jerus. Targ. on Gen. xv. 7; also in Ber. Rabba 38, 39, 42, 43, 44, 63; Shem. rabba 18, 23, 44; Wajikra rabba 36; Debarim rabba 9. As to whether it was God Himself or an angel who delivered Abram out of the fire was a question of debate among the Rabbis in the first and second cent. (Ber. rabba 48, Midr. on Shir ha-Shirim i. 12). Exaggerated and grotesque forms of the legend will be found in the Book of Jashar (Dict. des Apocr. ii. 1111 sqq.) and the Chronicles of Jerahmeel xxxiii.-xxxiv. On the other hand no trace of the legend occurs in Josephus (Ant. i. 7) or in the Palestinian Midrashim (the Mechilta, Sifra and Sifre), nor in our text save in xii. 14, where we have perhaps the source of a kindred legend—the death of Haran by fire (see note in loc.). Jerome mentions this last legend (see note on xii. 14) and likewise the former about the casting of Abram into the fiery furnace (Quaest. Hebr. on Gen. xii. 4): Erant autem Abram septuaginta quinque annorum, quando egressus est ex Charra. Indissolubilis nascitur quaestio: si enim Thara pater Abrahæ, cum adhuc esset in regione Chaldaea, septuaginta annorum, genuit Abram, et postea in Charra ducentesimo quinto aetatis suae anno mortuus est: quomodo nunc post mortem Thare, Abram exiens de Charra, septuaginta quinque annorum fuisse memoratur: cum a nativitate Abrae usque ad mortem patris ejus, centum triginta quinque fuisse anni doceantur. *Vera est igitur illa Hebraeorum traditio, quam supra diximus, quod egressus sit Thara cum filiis suis de igne Chaldaeorum: et quod Abram Babylonio vallatus incendio, quia illud adorare nolebat, Dei sit auxilio liberatus: et ex illo tempore ei dies vitae, et tempus reputetur aetatis, ex quo confessus est Dominum, spernens idola Chaldaeorum. Potest autem fieri ut, quia scriptura reliquit incertum, ante paucos annos Thara de Chaldaea profectus venerit in Charra quam mortem obieret, vel certe statim post persecutionem in Charra venerit et ibi diutius sit moratus. For a full discussion of the subject and references to later Jewish literature see Beer's monograph in the Monatsschrift für Gesch. Judenthums, 1855, pp. 59-65. Beer is of opinion that Persia was the home of the legend and that it did not make its way into Palestine till the third cent. of the Christian era. This is much too late. A late form of the tradition is found in Ps.-Philo, Ant. bibl. Lib. pp. 48 sqq.*

2. This tradition of Abram admonishing Terah was known to Suidas (Fabric. Cod. Pseud. V. T. i. 336-338): Ἀβραὰμ ὑπάρχων ἐτῶν ἰδ' καὶ θεογνωσίας ἀξιώθεις ἐνουθέτει τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῦ λέγων· τί πλατῆς τοὺς ἀνθρώπους διὰ κέρδος ἐπιζητήσας, τοῦτέστι, τὰ εἰδωλὰ; οὐκ ἔστιν ἄλλος θεός, εἰ μὴ ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, ὁ καὶ πάντα τὸν κόσμον δημιουργήσας. Epiphanius (Adv. Haer. i. 1, p. 38, Oehler) attributes the invention of image-worship to Terah: Ναχώρ δὲ γεννᾷ τὸν Θάρρα· ἐντεῦθεν γέγονεν ἀνδριαντοπλασία ἀπὸ πηλοῦργίας καὶ κεραμικῆς ἐπιστήμης διὰ τῆς τοῦ Θάρρα τούτου τέχνης.

And has created everything by His word,
And all life is from before His face.
5. Why do ye worship things that have no spirit in them ?
For they are the work of (men's) hands,
And on your shoulders do ye bear them,
And ye have no help from them,
But they are a great cause of shame to those who

And a misleading of the heart to those who worship worship them and honour them. Keep silent, my son, lest they slay thee." 8. And these words he spake to his two brothers, and they were angry with him and he kept silent.

And in the sixtieth year of the life of Abram, that is, 1936 A.M. in the fourth week, in the fourth year thereof, Abram arose by night, and burned the house of the idols, and he burned all that was in the house, and no man knew it. 13. And they arose in the night and sought to save their gods from the midst of the fire. 14. And Haran hastened to save them, but the fire flamed over him, and he was burnt in the fire, and he died in Ur of the Chaldees before Terah his father,

The same form of the words is found in the Ethiopic version of Gen. xvii. 15 and may go back to the Greek version. In the LXX the words, however, are given as Σάρα and Σάρρα.

The daughter of his father. Our author here follows Gen. xx. 12, where Abraham says that Sarah is the daughter of his father but not of his mother. Syncellus probably follows our text in saying (i. 183): ἡ δὲ Σάρρα ὁμοπατέρα τοῦ Ἀβραάμ ὑπῆρχε. In the Book of Adam and Eve (translated by Malan), iv. 2, the two wives of Terah are mentioned, Tona, the mother of Abraham, and Tahdif, the mother of Sarah (see note on xi. 14). On the other hand Josephus (Ant. i. 6. 5; 7 1) describes Sarai as a niece of Abraham and a daughter of Haran—an evasion probably unknown to our author. According to the rabbinic tradition (Jebam. 98 a, Sanh. 58 b, Ber. rabba 18, etc.) marriage with half-sisters on the father's side was permitted to the descendants of Noah (see Singer, Das Buch der Jubiläen, p. 167 note). Marriage with a sister or half-sister is strictly forbidden in Lev. xviii. 9, 11, xx. 17. See note on iv. 15.

10. Haran. Eth. has 'Arân.

11. According to Gen. xi. 29 Nahor married Milcah, the daughter of Haran.

12-14. In the note on xii. 1-14 (p. 90 sq.) I have drawn attention to the fact that our book knows nothing of the later legend of the casting of Abram into the furnace. In verses 12-14, however,

we have an old legend—possibly devised by our author, being suggested by the twofold meaning of the Ur (אור), i.e. the name of a country and a fire. Our author is fond of explaining events from the meanings of words. A different form of the legend appears in Jerome, who rejects the legend of Abram's being cast into the fire (Quaest. Hebr. on Gen. xi. 28): Pro eo, quod legimus, in regione Chaldaeorum, in Hebraeo habetur, in Ur Chesdim, id est in igne Chaldaeorum. Tradunt autem Hebraei ex hac occasione istius modi fabulam: quod Abraham in ignem missus sit, quia ignem adorare noluerit, quem Chaldaei colunt, et Dei auxilio liberatus de idolatriae igne profugerit . . . Mortuus est Aran ante conspectum Thare . . . in igne Chaldaeorum: quod videlicet ignem nolens adorare igne consumptus sit. Syncellus (i. 185) follows our author: ἐνεπύρισε Ἀβραάμ τὰ εἰδῶλα τοῦ πατρὸς αὐτοῦ καὶ συγκατεκαύθη αὐτοῖς Ἀρρὰν θέλων σβέσαι τὸ πῦρ ἐν νυκτί. Cedrenus (i. 48) seems to have had our text before him: ἤδη δὲ ἐξηκοστὸν ἔτος ἄγων ὁ Ἀβραάμ, ὡς οὐκ ἔδῳκε τὸν πατέρα πείθειν καὶ τοὺς ἄλλους οἰκείους τῆς περὶ τὰ εἰδῶλα ἀποσχέσθαι δεισιδαιμονίας, λανθάνει νυκτὸς τῶν εἰδώλων ἐμπρήσας τὸν οἶκον. αὐτῶν δὲ ἐξαναλουμένων οἱ ἀδελφοὶ νοήσαντες ἀναπηδῶσι, βουλόμενοι ἐκ μέσου τοῦ πυρὸς ἐξελεῖσθαι τὰ εἰδῶλα. φιλοτιμώτερον δὲ ὁ Ἀρὰμ τῷ πράγματι προσφερόμενος ἐν μέσῳ διαφθείρεται τοῦ πυρὸς. 1951 A.M. the sixth week, in the fifth year thereof, Abram sat up throughout the night on the new moon of the seventh month to observe the stars from the evening to the morning, in order to see what would be the character of the year with regard to the rains, and he was alone as he sat and observed. 17. And a word came into his heart and he said: "All the signs of the stars, and the signs of the moon and of the sun are all in the hand of the Lord. Why do I search (them) out?"

Dynastiarum, p. 13 (quoted by Fabricius, i. 422): Incenditque ille templum idolorum in urbe Chaldaeorum, at Haran frater ipsius ad extinguendum ignem ingressus combustus est. According to Beer (Leben Abr. 110) the same legend is found in Midr. b. Bechaii.

15. Haran. Eth. has Kârân, i.e. ܡܚܪܢ, Haran, a city in the N.W. of Mesopotamia. Cf. Gen. xi. 31.

16-18. Abram on the first of the seventh month seeks to determine the nature of the weather during the ensuing six rainy months (see note on xii. 27). In Ber. rabba 44, according to the Rabbis, God told Abram that he was a prophet and not a star-gazer. Cedrenus (i. 48-49) reproduces the substance of our text: ἐνθα ὁ Ἀβραὰμ δεκαπέντε ἔτη τῷ πατρὶ συνοικήσας ἐννοεῖ ποτὲ νυκτὸς ἐκ τῆς τῶν ἀστρῶν κινήσεως τοῦ ἐπίοντος καιροῦ κατασκέψασθαι τὴν ποιότητα· ἦν γὰρ οὐ μετρίως ὑπὸ τοῦ πατρὸς ἅπασαν τὴν τοιαύτην ἐξασκηθεὶς ἐπιστήμην. καὶ δὴ μετὰ τὴν ἐκάστου τῶν ζητουμένων διάγνωσιν, συνήησι περιττὴν ἅπασαν εἶναι τὴν τοιαύτην περιεργίαν· δύνασθαι γὰρ αὐτοῖς τὸν θεόν, εἰ βούλοιτο, μετασκευάσαι πρὸς τὸ οἰκεῖον βούλημα τὰ προεγνωσμένα. Cf. Book of Jashar (op. cit. ii. 1106). Some such idea seems to have been present to Philo, De Migr. Abr. xxxii.-xxxiii.

19. And Thee and Thy Dominion, etc. The MSS put this line at the end of ver. 19.

20. Deliver me from the hands of evil spirits who have sway over the thoughts of men's hearts,
 And let them not lead me astray from Thee, my God.
 And stablish Thou me and my seed for ever
 That we go not astray from henceforth and for evermore."

21. And he said, "Shall I return unto Ur of the Chaldees who seek my face that I may return to them, or am I to remain here in this place? The right path before Thee prosper it in the hands of Thy servant that he may fulfil (it) and that I may not walk in the deceitfulness of my heart, O my God." 22. And he made an end of speaking and praying, and behold the word of the Lord was sent to him through me, saying: "Get thee up from thy country, and from thy kindred and from the house of thy father unto a land which I shall show thee, and I shall make thee a great and numerous nation.

23. And I shall bless thee
 And I shall make thy name great,
 And thou wilt be blessed in the earth,
 And in Thee will all families of the earth be blessed,
 And I shall bless them that bless thee,
 And curse them that curse thee.

24. And I shall be a God to thee and thy son, and to thy son's son, and to all thy seed: fear not, from henceforth and unto all generations of the earth I am thy God." 25. And the Lord God said: "Open his

22. From the house of thy father.
 This implies separation from Terah (see

 vii. 3, where the quotation is given a different context.

25-26. From the overthrow of Babel
 (x. 26) the knowledge of the Hebrew language was lost till the 75th year of Abram's life. Our text was before Syncellus, i. 185. Thus, contrary to his own system of chronology, he assigns the date in this connection as the beginning of the 41st jubilee.

'Αρχὴ τοῦ μά 'Ιωβηλαίου παρ' 'Εβραίοις.
'Ιωβήλ δὲ παρ' αὐτοῖς ἡ πεντηκοντα-ετηρίς, ὡς εἶναι ἀπὸ 'Αδάμ κατ' αὐτοῦς ἐπὶ πέντε' (so Röscher: MSS μέ) ἔτος

his mouth, with the language which has been revealed"; for it had ceased from the mouths of all the children of men from the day of the overthrow (of Babel). 26. And I opened his mouth, and his ears and his lips, and I began to speak with him in Hebrew in the tongue of the creation. 27. And he took the books of his fathers, and these were written in Hebrew, and he transcribed them, and he began from henceforth to study them, and I made known to him that which he could not (understand), and he studied them during the six rainy months. 28. And it came to pass in the seventh year of the sixth week that he spoke to his father, and informed him that he would leave Haran to go into the land of Canaan to see it and return to him. 29. And Terah his father said unto him; "Go in peace:

'Αβραάμ ἔτη ,βα' (=2001: so Rönisch: MSS βν'). ὁ ἀγγελος ὁ λαλῶν τῷ Μωϋσῇ εἶπεν αὐτῷ, ὅτι τὸν 'Αβραάμ ἐγὼ ἐδίδαξα τὴν Ἑβραϊδα γλῶσσαν κατὰ τὴν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς κτίσεως, λαλεῖν τὰ πάτρια πάντα, ὡς ἐν Λεπτῇ κέεται Γενέσει. The above reckoning agrees exactly with our text if we take into account the fact that Syncellus wrongly takes a jubilee as 50 years instead of 49 years. Syncellus thus finds that on the 1st year of the 41st jubilee, 2001 years have elapsed from Adam till the 85th year of Abram. According to our text Abram was 75 years old in 1951 and therefore 85 in 1961. Now 40 jubilees + 1 = 1961, but Syncellus, reckoning the jubilee at 50 years, wrongly made the total 2001. A curtailed form of the above statement is reproduced by Cedrenus, i. 48. Again the writer of the Clementine Recognitions, i. 30, knew the substance of our text: Quinta decima generatione primo omnium homines idolum statuente adoraverunt, et usque ad illud tempus divinitus humano generi data Hebraeorum lingua tenuit monarchiam.

A different tradition from that in our text appears in the Catena Nicephori, i. col. 177, on Gen. xi. 8, where Heber is said to have alone retained the Hebrew language, because he took no part in the building of Babel. In the next colophon of the same work the same statement is attributed to Diodorus of Antioch (378-394 A.D.). A similar view is set forth in Augustine, De Civ. Dei, xvi. 11, and in Cedrenus, i. 22: φασὶ δὲ ὅτι μόνος ὁ Ἑβερ ὁ τοῦ Φάλεκ πατρὸς οὐ συνέθετο τῇ πράξει τῆς πυργοποιίας διὸ καὶ τῆς τῶν ἄλλων φωνῆς συγχεθείσης ἢ τοῦ Ἑβερ οὐκ ἀπώλετο. According to Malan, Book of Adam and Eve, p. 245, this view was propounded by Bar-hebraeus (Syr. p. 9).

29-31. Singer (Das Buch der Jubiläen, p. 170) is no doubt right in saying that this passage owes its existence to the author's wish to protect Abram against the reproach of leaving his aged father (see Ber. rabba 39).

May the eternal God make thy path straight,
 And the Lord [(be) with thee, and] protect thee from
 all evil,
 And grant unto thee grace, mercy and favour before
 those who see thee,
 And may none of the children of men have power over thee to harm thee ;
 Go in peace.

30. And if thou seest a land pleasant to thy eyes to dwell in, then arise and take me to thee and take Lot with thee, the son of Haran thy brother, as thine own son : the Lord be with thee. 31. And Nahor thy brother leave with me till thou returnest in peace, and we go with thee all together."

Abram journeys from Haran to Shechem in Canaan, thence to Hebron and thence to Egypt, 1-14a. Returns to Canaan where Lot separates from him, and receives the promise of Canaan and journeys to Hebron, 14b-21. Chedor-laomer's attack on Sodom and Gomorrah : Lot taken captive, 22-24. And Abram journeyed from Haran, and he took Sarai, his wife, and Lot, his brother Haran's son, to the land of Canaan, and he came into †Asshur†, and proceeded to Shechem, and dwelt near a lofty oak. 2. And he saw, and, behold, the land was very pleasant from the entering of Hamath to the lofty oak. 3. And the Lord said to him :

Accordingly, Abram is to return and fetch his father. As Terah is still alive at the age of 147 (see xi. 10, 15) it follows that our author accepts 205 years in Gen. xi. 32 (Mass., LXX) as the age of Terah when he died. The Samaritan here has 145, and this is the text presupposed by Acts vii. 4. It is accepted by Budde and Dillmann.

And he blessed the Lord who had led him out of Ur of the Chaldees, and had brought him to this land. 8. 21. I have added "through the land" from Gen. xiii. 17, since the expression "length of it" presupposes its presence in the text, otherwise we have to go back twenty-three words in the Ethiopic for the antecedent of "it." The Latin is here defective, omitting "through the land in its length and."

And (Abram) armed his household servants. Gen. xiv. 14. For "armed" (a b d), c corruptly reads "made atonement for." Onkelos (וי) supports the rendering which our text gives of קי in Gen. xiv. 14. The LXX ἠπλομήσε and Vulg. numeravit which presuppose קי the text of the Samaritan.

first-fruits to the Lord, and the Lord ordained it as an ordinance for ever that they should give it to the priests who served before Him, that they should possess it for ever. 26. And to this law there is no limit of days; for He hath ordained it for the generations for ever that they should give to the Lord the tenth of everything, of the seed and of the wine and of the oil and of the cattle and of the sheep. 27. And He gave (it) unto His priests to eat and to drink with joy before Him. 28. is anacolouthic. c removes the anacolouthon by changing 'astarasaja = "armed" of αδδ into 'astaseraja = "made atonement for." Thus instead of "(Abram) armed his household servants . . . for Abram" we have "his household servant made atonement for Abram." But this change is against the best MSS, which are likewise supported by Gen. xiv. 14 (see note on ver. 24), and it does not dispense with the necessity of assuming a lacuna at the close of ver. 24. The lacuna, drawn attention to in our text, would naturally contain an account of Abram's pursuit of the kings and recovery of the captives and spoil. It no doubt told also of Melchizedek; for ver. 25 presupposes Gen. xiv. 18^b. 20^c by declaring that the tithes belong to the priests. In Nedar 32^b it is said that the priestly office passed from Melchizedek's successors to those of Abraham because Melchizedek sinned in blessing Abraham before he blessed God (Beer, Buch der Jubiläen, p. 74). Since Beer had before him the corrupt reading of c, which tries to obviate the anacolouthic nature of the text, he assumed that the text contained no reference to Melchizedek. It is true that this passage has always been a stumbling-block to strict Jews. Thus it was urged against them by Justin (Dial. c. Tryph. 19: ἀπερίμνητος ἦν ὁ ἱερεὺς τοῦ ὑψίστου Μελχισεδέκ, ᾧ καὶ δεκάτας προσφοράς ἔδωκεν Ἀβραάμ) that Melchizedek was uncircumcised to whom Abram gave tithes, and also by Tertullian, Adv. Jud. iii.: Patriarchae incircumcisi fuerunt, ut Melchisedech qui ipsi Abrahæ jam circumciso . . . panem et vinum obtulit incircumcisos. To evade such attacks some Jewish writers declared that Melchizedek was born circumcised (Ber. rabba 43; for other references see Singer, p. 122 note); also that Melchizedek was identical with Shem (Targum Jon. and Jerus. on Gen. xiv. 18; Nedar 32^b; Ber. rabba 44: Book of Jashar (Dict. des Apoc. ii. 1125); see Beer, Leben Abrahams, 142; Singer, Das Buch der Jubiläen, 122 note for further references). These evasions were apparently unknown to Philo and Josephus. In connection with the fact that Melchizedek was called "a priest of the most high God" (Gen. xiv. 18) we should remember that the Maccabeans called themselves by this title (see note on xxxii. 1). Now since our author (see Introd. § 21) is an apologist of the Maccabean dynasty, it is not probable that he would omit all reference to Melchizedek who first bore the title they afterwards assumed.

26. From the enigmatical words of Gen. xiv. 20 "he gave him a tenth of all" our author derives the law of universal tithing. See xxxii. 15.

Instead of "the son of Mâsêq" we should have "the possessor." Next, "the son of my handmaid" = ὁ οἰκογενῆς μου. Hence our text = בן־מֶשֶׁק בְּרַבִּית. Subsequent tradition made much of Eliezer. He was said to be one of the seven righteous men who had not tasted of death (Baba bathra 58 a).

12. The pieces. The MSS have here "that which was spread out" = ταθέντα, which I have taken to be a corruption of τμηθέντα: cf. LXX τὰ διχοτομήματα. This would imply the reading גזרים. But ταθέντα might possibly be a corruption of καταθέντα = פנירים as in Mass. text. In that case we should render "carcasses." Observe that LXX (= ἐπὶ τὰ σώματα ἐπὶ τὰ διχοτομήματα) had clearly על-הפגרים על-גזרים before it.

Abram drove them away = καὶ ἀπεσβήσεν (= Mass. ויגב) αὐτὰ Ἀβράμ (Aquila). LXX = καὶ συνεκάθισεν αὐτοῖς Ἀβράμ.

Four hundred years. In Gen. xv. 13 the length of the sojourn in Egypt is given as 400 years, but in Exod. xii. 40 as 430. But since neither number agrees with the period calculated from the ages of Kohath, Amram be in bondage shall I judge, and after that they will come forth thence with much substance. 15. And thou wilt go to thy fathers in peace, and be buried in a good old age. 16. But in the fourth generation they will return hither; for the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full." 17. And he awoke from his sleep, and he arose, and the sun had set; and there was a flame, and behold! a furnace was smoking, and a flame of fire passed between the pieces. 18. And on that day the Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying: "To thy seed will I give this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates, the Kenites, the Kenizzites, the Kadmonites, the Perizzites, and the Rephaim, the Phakorites, and the Hivites, and the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Girgashites, and the Jebusites." 19.

in Exod. vi. 18, 20, and Moses at the time of the Exodus, vii. 7, tradition early assumed that the above periods include the sojourn of the patriarchs in Canaan before the migration. Thus the LXX in Exod. xii. 40 insert the words καὶ ἐν γῇ Χανάαν after ἐν γῇ Αἰγύπτῳ, and the same addition is found in the Samaritan Pentateuch. The period of 400 or 430 years was reckoned from the date of its announcement in Gen. xv. 13, according to St. Paul, Gal. iii. 16, 17; Joseph. Ant. ii. 15. 2; Ps.-Jon. in Exod. xii. 40, but our text reckons the 430 years from Isaac's birth. On the other hand, Philo (Quis rer. div. her. 54) sets down the actual sojourn of Israel in Egypt at 400 years, and likewise Josephus (Ant. ii. 9. 1; Bell. Jud. v. 9. 4). According to Ps.-Jon. on Exod. xii. 40, 41 the 430 years are explained as follows: 400 years elapsed between Isaac's birth, which took place when Abraham was 100 years old (Gen. xxi. 5), and the Exodus; and 430 between the date of God's promise to Abraham (Gen. xv. 13) and the Exodus; for this promise was given 30 years before Isaac's birth. Thus 430 years = 30 (years between promise in Gen. xv. 13 and birth of Isaac) + 60 (years from birth of Isaac to birth of Jacob) + 130 (being age of Jacob on his arrival in Egypt, Gen. xlvii. 9) +

210 (years of sojourn in Egypt). According to this chronology it follows that Abram was 70 years old when he witnessed the vision in Gen. xv. 7-21. But according to Gen. xii. 4 Abram was already 75 when he left Haran. This difficulty obliged later Jewish exponents to assume that Abram had paid an earlier visit in his 70th year to Canaan, and that Gen. xv. 7-21 belongs to that earlier visit and that its present context is accordingly wrong. This method of exposition is followed in the Book of Jashar where Gen. xv. 7-21 is first recounted (Dict. des Apocr. ii. 1119) and subsequently Gen. xv. 1-6 (ii. 1125-1126). The double journey to Canaan is referred to by R. Nehemiah in Ber. rabba 39. For other references to later Jewish literature on this question see Beer, Leb. Abr. 118-120.

Of this later form of exposition our book knows nothing.

And the day passed, and Abram offered the pieces, and the birds, and their fruit-offerings, and their drink-offerings, and the fire devoured them. 20. And on that day we made a covenant with Abram, according as we had covenanted with Noah in this month; and Abram renewed the festival and ordinance for himself for ever. 21. And Abram rejoiced, and made all these things known to Sarai his wife; and he believed that he would have seed, but she did not bear. 22. And Sarai advised her husband Abram, and said unto him; "Go in unto Hagar, my Egyptian maid: it may be that I shall build up seed unto thee by her." 23. And Abram hearkened unto the voice of Sarai his wife, and said unto her, "Do (so)." And Sarai took Hagar, her maid, the Egyptian, and gave her to Abram, her husband, to be his wife. 24. And he went in unto her, and she conceived and bare him a son, and he called his name Ishmael, in the fifth year of this week; and this was the eighty-sixth 1965 A.M. year in the life of Abram.

Abram celebrates the feast of first-fruits, 1, 2: his name changed and circumcision instituted, 3-14. Sarai's name changed and Isaac promised, 15-21. Abraham, Ishmael, and all his household circumcised, 22-24. Circumcision an eternal ordination, 25, 26. Israel shares this honour with the highest angels who were created circumcised, 27-29. and in xvi. 15, as Dillmann recognised. Cf. xvii. 1.

In the third month, in the middle of the month. From a comparison of xv. 1 and xlv. 4, 5 (see notes also on i. 1, vi. 17-18, xiv. 20) it follows that the feast of weeks was celebrated on the fifteenth of the third month (Sivan). Since this reckoning deviates from that of the Pharisees about the beginning of the Christian era, and as there were many divergent views in Judaism about, before, and after that period, we must here inquire briefly into the origin and nature of these views.

To begin with, it is clear that they all arose from the various meanings attached to the word "Sabbath" in Lev. xxiii. 15, 16. In these verses it is ordained that the feast of weeks should fall on the fiftieth day after the offering of the Paschal wave-sheaf. Now this sheaf was waved "on the morrow after the Sabbath" (Lev. xxiii. 11, 15, מחרת השבת). In what sense, then, are we to take the word "Sabbath"? Two ways are possible:—(1) It may be taken to mean merely a feast day. (2) It may be taken in its strict sense as the weekly Sabbath.

(1) First the word "Sabbath" is taken in the general sense of a feast-day. Now the first day of unleavened bread (Lev. xxiii. 7) was such a day; but the seventh (Lev. xxiii. 8) was no less so. Hence two different computations arise from this interpretation of the word, (i) the first of which interprets the first day of unleavened bread as the Sabbath, and (ii) the second which interprets it of the seventh day.

(i) The first interpretation, which took the Sabbath to be the first day of unleavened bread (Nisan 15), naturally understood the phrase "the morrow after the Sabbath" to designate Nisan 16, without regard to the day of the week. This was the interpretation of the Pharisees in our Lord's time. This view is first attested in the LXX, where the phrase in question is rendered by τη ἐπαύριον τῆς πρώτης (here ἡ πρώτη = חשבת), exactly as in Ps.-Jon. on Lev. xxiii. 15, מחרת קמח; in the Targum of Onkelos (מבחר יומא טבא) where "the Sabbath"

is simply rendered "the feast day"; in Josephus, Ant. iii. 10. 5, τῇ δὲ δευτέρᾳ τῶν ἀζύμων ἡμέρᾳ; in Philo, De Septenar. 20, where the day for waving the sheaf is said to be the second day of unleavened bread: Ἐορτὴ δὲ ἔστιν ἡ μετὰ τὴν πρώτην εὐθὺς ἡμέρα. The Mishna, also (Chag. ii. 4; Menach. x. 1-3), maintains this interpretation against conflicting expositions.

Since on this view the sheaf-waving took place on Nisan 16, the feast of weeks, fifty days later, was usually celebrated on Sivan 6, without regard in either case to the day of the week.

(ii) But others took the Sabbath to mean the seventh day of unleavened bread, which was also a day of rest. As the Sabbath in this case was Nisan 21, the morrow after the Sabbath was Nisan 22. This is actually the course pursued by the (a) Falashas or Abyssinian Jews. They reckon the fifty days from Nisan 22 and thus the feast of weeks falls on Sivan 12 as they use alternate months of thirty and twenty-nine days (see d'Abbadie in Univ. Isr. Juillet 1851, p. 482). (b) Again this view is attested by the Syriac version of Lev. xxiii. 11, 15, as existing before 100 A.D. Thus it renders the Hebrew phrase מחרת השבת = "after the second (feast) day," that is Nisan 21. (c) But the usage is as early as the second cent. B.C.; for it appears in our text. At the beginning of this note we found that the feast of weeks took place on the Sivan 15. If we count back fifty days (reckoning the second month at twenty-eight days), we arrive at Nisan 22 when the wave-sheaf was offered. Thus Jubilees also interpreted the phrase "the morrow after the Sabbath" as meaning the day after the seventh day of unleavened bread, which was a special day of rest.

(2) But on the fact that the simple term "Sabbath" stands elsewhere only as the weekly Sabbath, are based other early uses among the Jews as well as certain modern speculations. Thus the Baithusians (Menachoth 65 a) took "the morrow after the Sabbath" to be the day after the weekly Sabbath which occurred during the feast of unleavened harvest. 2. And he offered new offerings on the altar, the first-fruits of the produce, unto the Lord, an heifer and a goat and a sheep on the altar as a burnt sacrifice unto the Lord; their fruit-offerings and their drink-offerings he offered upon the altar with frankincense. 3. And the Lord appeared to Abram, and said unto him: "I am God Almighty; approve thyself before Me and be thou perfect. 4. And I will make My covenant between Me and thee, and I will multiply thee exceedingly." 5. And Abram fell on his face, and God talked with him, and said:

6. "Behold My ordinance is with thee,

And thou wilt be the father of many nations.

7. Neither will thy name any more be called Abram,

But thy name from henceforth, even for ever, shall be Abraham.

For the father of many nations have I made thee.

8. And I shall make thee very great,

And I shall make thee into nations,

And kings will come forth from thee.

9. And I shall establish My covenant between Me and thee, and thy seed after thee, throughout their generations, for an bread. Frankel (Einfluss d. pol. Exeg., 1851, pp. 136-137) holds that the ἡ ἐπαύριον τῆς πρώτης of the LXX is directed against this view. The Karaite Jews (Trigland, Diatribē de Secta Karæorum, 1703; Fürst, Geschichte des Karäerthums, 1865) and likewise the Samaritans follow the strict interpretation of the term Sabbath in this connection. Very many modern scholars hold strongly to some form of this theory, as Hitzig (Ostern u. Pfingsten, 1837 and Ostern u. Pfingsten im zweiten Dekalog, 1838), who maintained that in the Hebrew calendar Nisan 14 and 21 were always Sabbaths and that "the morrow after the Sabbath" was Nisan 22. Knobel (on Lev. xxiii. 11) agreed with Hitzig, save that he identified the day of the sheaf-waving with Nisan 15. Saalschütz (Das Mos.

Recht,² 1853, p. 420), Fürst (Heb. u. chald. Wörterbuch, 1863, under word שבת), Wellhausen (Jahr. f. deutsch. Theol. xxii.), Dillmann (on Lev. xxiii. 11), von Orelli (*Herzog's Real Encyc.*² xi. 264) accept in one form or another the Sadducean interpretation. In addition to the above literature, see the Articles on Pentecost (Pfingstfest) in Hasting's Bible Dictionary; *Herzog's Real Encyc.*² and Schenkel's Bibel-Lexicon.

10. (And I shall give to thee and to thy seed after thee). These words, lost through homoioteleuton, I have restored from Gen. xvii. 8.

11-13. Cf. Gen. xvii. 9-13.

12. The child (or "children") on the eighth day ye will circumcise. This form of Gen. xvii. 12 is found only in the Eth. vers. of that passage and in our text. It seems to be a deliberate change of "the child of eight days ye shall circumcise," as in Gen. xvii. 12. See on ver. 14.

14. Cf. Gen. xvii. 14.

On the eighth day. These words, which are not found in the Mass., Syr., and Vulg., are, however, attested by the Sam. and LXX. Also in Origen's Commentary in Ep. ad Rom. ii. 13 (Lommatzsch, vi. 123-124): Incircumciscus masculus, qui non fuerit circumciscus in carne praeputii sui die octavo, exterminabitur anima illa; and in Ambrose, Epist. 72, who remarks on Aquila's statement that this clause is wanting in the Hebrew. See on ver. 26.

As the Sabbath is the first, so circumcision is the second cardinal command of Judaism. In opposition to the laxity introduced by Greek culture the command in Gen. xv. 14 is enunciated afresh and the requirement added that it should be performed on the eighth day of the child's life. Owing to Greek influences, even before the reign of Antiochus IV., many Jews of noble birth had undergone surgical operations in order to appear like Greeks when undressed (1 Macc. i. 15; Assumpt. Mos. viii. 3; Joseph. Ant. xii. 5. 1). Subsequently Antiochus had taken the severest measures to prohibit circumcision (1 Macc. i. 48, 60, ii. 46). To withstand the Hellenising attitude towards circumcision our author emphasises what was apparently the current view of his time, i.e., that circumcision should be performed on the eighth day—the current view; for

he has broken My covenant." 15. And God said unto Abraham: "As for Sarai thy wife, her name will no more be called Sarai, but Sarah will be her name. 16. And I shall bless her, and give thee a son by her, and I shall bless him, and he will become a nation, and kings of nations will proceed from him." 17. And Abraham fell on his face, and rejoiced, and said in his heart: "Shall a son be born to him that is a hundred years old, and shall Sarah, who is ninety years old, bring forth?" 18. And Abraham said unto God: "O that Ishmael might live before thee!" 19. And God said: "Yea, and Sarah also will bear thee a son, and thou wilt call his name Isaac, and I shall establish My covenant with him, an everlasting covenant, and for his seed after the words enjoining it were in both Jewish and Samaritan copies of the Hebrew text of Gen. xvii. 14 (see above). This strict view was subsequently relaxed. Thus, according to Shabb. xix. 5: "A child could be circumcised on the 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, or 12th day, neither earlier nor later. How so? Usually it is circumcised on the 8th day. Should it be born on the evening, it is circumcised on the 9th: should it be born on Friday evening it is circumcised on the 10th: should the Sunday be a festival, on the 11th: should the Sunday and Monday be New Year's days, on the 12th. If the child is ill, it is not circumcised till well." But the Samaritans have held fast to the severer regulation to the present day. In letters of the Samaritans communicated by de Sacy to T. Scaliger (Eichhorn's Repertor, xiii. 261) it is said: "We circumcise the male on the eighth day and do not defer circumcision a single day (לֹא נֶאֱחָזֵר יוֹם אֶחָד) . . . but the Jews defer it one day or more." That the severer form of the halacha prevailed among the Jews themselves as late as the second cent. A.D. might be inferred from Justin Martyr (Dial. c. Tryph. 27): "Did God wish those to sin who are circumcised or do circumcise on the Sabbaths? for He commands that on the eighth day—even though it happen to be a Sabbath—those who are born should always be circumcised (τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ ὁγδόῃ ἐκ παντὸς περιτέμνεσθαι τοὺς γεννηθέντας ὁμολῶς κἀν ᾗ ἡμέρᾳ τῶν σαββάτων;). Could not He have the infants circumcised one day before or one day after the Sabbath, if He knew that it was a sinful act on the Sabbath?" This custom is also regarded as obligatory by the Falashas or Abyssinian Jews. Cf. Abbadie, Univ. Isr. Avr. p. 481, 1851 (quoted by Singer, p. 289 note). We might observe here that our book knows nothing of the later traditions that the patriarchs such as Adam, Seth, Enoch, Noah, Shem, Terah, Jacob and six others were born circumcised (Midrash Tillin 10b, Sotah 10b, quoted by Hershon, Treasures of Talmud, 238, 240, 241). Ber. rabba 43 affirms this of Melchizedek. For other references see Singer, p. 301 note.

We might observe here that our book knows nothing of the barbarous mode of circumcision ordered by the Talmudists and Bar Cochba, in order to make it impossible to obliterate the signs of it by any such surgical operation as is referred to above. This mode was known as the פריעה, or "the laying bare." This mutilation after the removal of the foreskin is still practised. See Hershon, Genesis, p. 304.

15-22. Cf. Gen. xvii. 15-22.

16. I shall bless him. So also the Sam., LXX, Syr. and Vulg. of Gen. xvii. 16, whereas the Sam. makes the rest of

him. 20. And as for Ishmael also have I heard thee, and behold I shall bless him, and make him great, and multiply him exceedingly, and he will beget twelve princes, and I shall make him a great nation. 21. But My covenant shall I establish with Isaac, whom Sarah will bear to thee, in these days, in the next year." 22. And He left off speaking with him, and God went up from Abraham. 23. And Abraham did according as God had said unto him, and he took Ishmael his son, and all that were born in his house, and whom he had bought with his money, every male in his house, and circumcised the flesh of their foreskin. 24. And on the selfsame day was Abraham circumcised, and all the men of his house, (and those born in the house), and all those, whom he had bought with money from the children of the stranger, were circumcised with him. 25. This law is for all the generations for ever, and there is no circumcision of the days, and no omission of one day out of the eight days; for it is an eternal ordinance, ordained and written on the heavenly tables. 26. And every one that is born, the flesh of whose foreskin is not circumcised on the eighth day, belongs not to the children of the covenant which the Lord made with Abraham, but to the children of destruction; nor is there, moreover, any sign on him that he is the Lord's, but (he is destined) to be destroyed and slain from the verse, and the Mass. and Onk. make the entire verse refer to Sarah.

23-24. Cf. Gen. xvii. 23-27.

24. On the selfsame day, i.e., on the 15th of Sivan; see ver. 1. According to the Yalkut Chadash 121 a Abraham was circumcised on the 13th or 15th of Nisan, or on the Day of Atonement, or on the New Moon of January (Beer, Leb. Abr. 63, 152).

(And those born in the house). Restored with Lat.

25. See note on ver. 14.

No omission of one day out of the eight days. I take this clause to be parallel in meaning to the preceding. In no case is the circumcision to be performed before the eighth day. The word translated "omission" is the same as that translated "neglecting" or "transgressing" in vi. 31.

On the eighth day. MSS and Latin have "till the eighth day." But since this verse is simply an emphatic and enlarged form of ver. 14, for "till" we should clearly have "on." Besides, "till" gives the wrong sense; for the

the earth, and to be rooted out of the earth, for he has broken the covenant of the Lord our God. 27. For all the angels of the presence and all the angels of sanctification have been so created from the day of their creation, and before the angels of the presence and the angels of sanctification He hath sanctified Israel, that they should be with Him and with His holy angels. 28. And do thou command the children of Israel and let them observe the sign of this covenant for their generations as an eternal ordinance, and they will not be rooted out of the land. 29. For the command is ordained for a covenant, that they should observe it for ever among all the children of Israel. 30. For Ishmael and his sons and his brothers and Esau, the Lord did not cause to approach Him, and he chose them not because they are the children of Abraham, because He knew them, but He chose Israel to be His people. 31. And He sanctified it, and gathered it from amongst all the children circumcision is to be performed on the eighth day. The error can be explained by the corruption of $\aleph$ into $\beth$ or $\beth$ into γ in the Hebrew.

And to be rooted out of the earth. ad and Latin omit, possibly through homoioteleuton.

27. There are two classes of angels mentioned here: the angels of the presence (see i. 29 note, ii. 2 note, 18, xxxi. 14) and the angels of sanctification (see ii. 2 note, 18 ["holy ones," "sancti," xxxi. 14]), according to the Ethiopic text; but three or four according to the Latin: angeli vultus, archangeli benedictionis, angeli sanctificationis, angeli sanctorum ipsius. But the last does not constitute a distinct order. It is simply a comprehensive term for the two (or three) highest orders, since it occurs in the following context: ut esset simul cum ipso et cum angelis sanctorum ipsius. Here ipso means "God," and the angelis sancti, ipsius sums up the orders mentioned in the earlier part of the sentence. Since in ii. 18 the Ethiopic speaks so clearly of only two classes, I am inclined to believe that "benedictionis" is simply an alternative rendering that has ousted the true reading, "sanctificationis," and that the context deals only with two orders of angels. The two orders mentioned here in the Ethiopic text are the same two who are said to unite with God and Israel in observing the Sabbath (ii. 18, 19, 21). The inferior angels of service did not enjoy this privilege. Now just as the highest angels shared with Israel in the privilege of the Sabbath, so they shared also in the privilege of circumcision. They were created circumcised, just as, according to later Judaism, many of the patriarchs of Israel were born so. (See note on ver. 14.) Such a belief was not difficult to believers in the loves of the angels for the daughters of men (v. 1 sqq.). In Debarim rabba on i. 2 it is said that the angels of service, i.e. the inferior orders, sought to know the Law, but it was hidden from them (see Weber, *Jüd. Theol.*² 25).

30. Chose them. The Ethiopic reproduces the Hebrew idiom בחר ב. The Latin gives elegit ex ipsis.

Israel. See on xvi. 17.

of men; for there are many nations and many peoples, and all are His, and over all hath He placed spirits in authority to lead them astray from Him. 32. But over Israel He did not appoint any angel or spirit, for He alone is their ruler, and He will preserve them and require them at the hand of His angels and His spirits, and at the hand of all His powers in order that He may preserve them and bless them, and that they may be His and He may be theirs from henceforth for ever. 33. And now I announce unto thee that the children of Israel will not keep true to this ordinance, and they will not circumcise their sons according to all this law; for in the flesh of their circumcision they will omit this circumcision of their sons, and all of them,

God's portion but that the Gentiles were placed under the dominion of angels, goes back to an old (possibly the oldest) form of the text of Deut. xxxii. 8-9, which, reading לֹא instead of לֹא־בְנֵי, is reproduced in the LXX:

ὅτε διεμέριζεν ὁ Ὑψίστος ἔθνη . . .
 ἔστησεν ὅρια ἔθνων
 κατὰ ἀριθμὸν ἀγγέλων θεοῦ.
 καὶ ἐγενήθη μέρος Κυρίου λαὸς αὐτοῦ
 Ἰακώβ.

This view next appears in Sir. xvii. 17:

ἐκάστῳ ἔθνει κατέστησεν ἡγούμενον,
 καὶ μέρος Κυρίου Ἰσραὴλ ἐστίν:

and in Dan. x. 13, 20, 21, xii. 1, where, however, all the nations including even Israel are understood to be under the patronage of angels, Israel being under Michael. According to Eth. Enoch lxxxix. Israel was placed for purposes of discipline for a time under the charge of seventy angels, who are no doubt the angelic patrons of the seventy nations of the world. The appointment of these seventy angels to be the heads of the nations is recorded in the Ps.-Jon. of Deut. xxxii. 8. They may be referred to as demons in 1 Cor. x. 19, or as τὰ στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου in Gal. iv. 3, 9; Col. ii. 20.

31. To lead them astray. In x. 3, 8, xix. 28, this is the function assigned to the demons, who were the spirits that went forth from the slaughtered children of the Watchers and the daughters of men (see v. 1, 7-9, x. 5, 8, 9). But in the present passage it is said that God gave the hegemony of the nations to angels for this purpose. The condemnation of the seventy angelic patrons for their evil treatment of Israel is described in Eth. Enoch xc. 22, 23, and also in Isaiah xxiv. 21, 22, though in the latter passage the cause is not assigned. I think we may assume that the statement in our text is made on the same principle as many in the Scriptures (cf. Is. vi. 9; Matt. xiii. 14; Mark iv. 12, etc.), in which the ultimate result of an action or a series of actions is declared to have been the immediate object of them.

In later Judaism at all events the seventy angels are described as the rulers of the nations. These angels share in the fortunes, whether favourable or unfavourable, of the nations over which they bear sway. They are likewise the sources of corruption to their subject peoples, introducing idolatry and impurity. See Eisenmenger, Entdecktes Judenthum, i. 805-820.

And there will be great wrath from the Lord against the children of Israel, because they have forsaken His covenant and turned aside from His word, and provoked and blasphemed, inasmuch as they do not observe the ordinance of this law; for they have treated their members like the Gentiles, so that they may be removed and rooted out of the land. And there will no more be pardon or forgiveness unto them [so that there should be forgiveness and pardon] for all the sin of this eternal error.

And she bare a son in the third month, 1980 A.M. and in the middle of the month, at the time of which the Lord had spoken to Abraham, on the festival of the first-fruits of the harvest, Isaac was born. 14. And Abraham circumcised his son on the eighth day: he was the first that was circumcised according to the covenant which is ordained for ever. 15. And in the sixth year of the †fourth† week we came to Abraham, to the Well of the Oath, and we appeared unto him [as we had told Sarah that we should return to her, and she would have conceived a son. 16. And we returned in the seventh month, and found Sarah with child before us] and we blessed him, and we announced to him all the things which had been decreed concerning him, that he should not die till he should beget six sons more, and should see (them) before he died; but (that) in Isaac should his name and seed be called: 17. And (that) all the seed of his sons should be Gentiles, and be reckoned with the Gentiles; but from the sons of Isaac one should become a holy seed, and should not be reckoned among the Gentiles. 18. For he should become the portion of the Most High, and all his seed had fallen into the possession of God, that it should be

13. Birth of Isaac on the 15th of Sivan. According to the Rosh ha-Shanah 10*b*, Isaac was born on the Passover Feast; according to the Midrash Tanchuma on Exodus (Beer, Leb. Abr. 168), on the first of Nisan.

15. †Fourth†. This should be "third" as in xv. 1. Abram was in his eighty-sixth year when Ishmael was born (xiv. 24), that is, in the fifth year of the first week of the forty-first jubilee. Fifteen years later Isaac was born in the hundredth year of Abraham.

15-16. The words bracketed in these verses contain a gloss that destroys the sense of the context. They proceed from a corrupt reading in ver. 4 and misunderstanding of text generally.

16. Blessed him. For "him" Eth.

reads "her." Similarly after "announced to." The Latin is followed here.

Six sons more. Abraham had six sons by Keturah: Gen. xxv. 2. See xx. 1 of our text.

In Isaac should his name, etc. Gen. xxi. 12. See xvii. 6 of our text.

17. All the descendants of Abraham save Jacob and his posterity belong to the Gentiles. See xv. 30. In Sanh. 59*b* there is a discussion as to whether circumcision was obligatory on Ishmael's and Keturah's sons in consequence of Gen. xvii. 9, 10. Owing to Gen. xxi. 12 it was held that the obligation did not extend to the descendants of Esau. See above xv. 30.

18. Portion of the Most High. See note on xv. 31-32.

unto the Lord a people for (His) possession above all nations and that it should become a kingdom and priests and a holy nation. 19. And we went our way, and we announced to Sarah all that we had told him, and they both rejoiced with exceeding great joy. 20. And he built there an altar to the Lord who had delivered him, and who was making him rejoice in the land of his sojourning, and he celebrated a festival of joy in this month seven days, near the altar which he had built at the Well of the Oath. 21. And he built booths for himself and for his servants on this festival, and he was the first to celebrate the feast of tabernacles on the earth. 22. And during these seven days he brought

A people for (His) possession = hezba terit (cf. xxxiii. 20), emended from hezba (a b c) tersit (b c tîrsita, a) = "people of magnificence." d reads "people of inheritance" (hezba rest), cf. Deut. iv. 20; Latin, populum sanctificatum. This last = λαδν δσιον, which may be corrupt for λαδν ούστας (or περιούσιον) = עם סגלה (Deut. vii. 6), a frequent O.T. phrase; cf. Exod. xix. 5, which was clearly before our author, as the closing clause of our verse shows. See also Deut. vii. 6, xiv. 2, xxvi. 18, where the full phrase עם סגלה is found. In xix. 18 of our text the same difficulties recur. If tersit is right, we might compare Deut. xxvi. 19.

A kingdom and priests (cf. xxxiii. 20) = βασιλεια καὶ ἱερεῖς, whereas the Latin has regnum sacerdotale = βασιλεια ἱερατικῆ = ממלכת כהנים. The phrase is from Exod. xix. 6, of which the Latin gives the correct rendering and not the Ethiopic version. Yet the latter seems to represent the Hebrew original of our text, as we shall see presently. First of all we observe that it is incorrectly translated in the LXX and it is reproduced in two forms in the N.T. closely akin to those above. The LXX translates it incorrectly by βασιλειον ἱεράτευμα (a hierarchy consisting of kings), and this rendering is adopted in 1 Pet. ii. 9. In Rev. v. 10 we have βασιλειαν καὶ ἱερεῖς exactly as in our Ethiopic text, and in i. 6 βασιλειαν ἱερεῖς. Thus our Ethiopic text and Rev. i. 6, v. 10 agree in giving practically the same rendering of ממלכת כהנים in Exod. xix. 6, and in inserting either the copula or a pause between the two Hebrew words. This is an ancient Jewish way of treating this phrase. Thus we find it given in Onkelos as מלכין כהנים (as in Rev. i. 6); in Ps.-Jon. מלכין קטירי כלילא (= kings with crowns and ministering priests); in the Jer. Targ. מלכין וכהנים; and the Syr. version ܡܠܟܐ ܡܠܝܚܐ; exactly as in our Ethiopic text and in Rev. v. 10. Thus we conclude that the Ethiopic text represents the Hebrew original and that the Latin regnum sacerdotale is borrowed by the Latin translator of Jubilees from the Vulgate.

20-31. The account of the feast of tabernacles in our text is peculiar. As regards the number of victims it presents some points of agreement and many of disagreement with the account given in Num. xxix. 12-40. I cannot offer any explanation of these phenomena. Verses 20-22 were before Cedrenus i. 50: μετὰ ταῦτα τῆς κατὰ Μαβρῆ δρυὸς ἀπαναστὰς ὁ Ἀβραάμ ἐπὶ τὸ φρέαρ κατασκευοῖ τοῦ ὄρκου. ἐαυτῷ δὲ ἰδίᾳ καὶ τοῖς οἰκέταις αὐτοῦ κατὰ συγγενείας πηξάμενος σκηνάς, τότε πρῶτον Ἀβραάμ τῆς σκηνοπηγίας ἐπὶ ἑπτὰ ἡμέρας ἐπιτελεῖ τὴν ἐορτήν.

22. Two different sacrifices are here recorded: a burnt-offering (עולה) and a sin-offering (חטאת).

each day to the altar a burnt-offering to the Lord, two oxen, two rams, seven sheep, one he-goat, for a sin-offering, that he might atone thereby for himself and for his seed. 23. And, as a thank-offering, seven rams, seven kids, seven sheep, and seven he-goats, and their fruit-offerings and their drink-offerings; and he burnt all the fat thereof on the altar, a chosen offering unto the Lord for a sweet smelling savour. 24. And morning and evening he burnt fragrant substances, frankincense and galbanum, and stackte, and nard, and myrrh, and spice, and costum; all these seven he offered, crushed, mixed together in equal parts (and) pure. 25. And he celebrated this feast during seven days, rejoicing with all his heart and with all his soul, he and all those who were in his house; and there was no stranger with him, nor any that was uncircumcised. 26. And he blessed his Creator who had created him in his generation, for He had created him according to His good pleasure; for He knew and perceived that from him would arise the plant of right-

Two oxen or "bullocks." According to Num. xxix. 13-33 thirteen bullocks were sacrificed on the first day, twelve on the second, eleven on the third, and soon, the number being diminished by one each day.

Two rams. So in Num. xxix. 13.

Seven sheep. In Num. xxix. 13 fourteen he-lambs.

One he-goat. So in Num. xxix. 16.

23. Thank-offering = θυσία σωτηρίου = זבח שלמים. The victims in this case correspond in kind and number with those offered by Hezekiah in 2 Chron.
xxix. 21, but in the latter passage they constitute a sin-offering for the kingdom.

24. Fragrant substances = ἡδύσματα = סמים. Our author is here making use of Exod. xxx. 34, and not of Num.
iv. 16; Lev. iv. 7 etc. as the Latin implies, which has incensum com-positionis = θυμίαμα τῆς συνθέσεως from Lev. iv. 7, xvi. 13; Num. iv. 16 (קטרת הסמים). The Ethiopic appears to be right.

Frankincense, galbanum, etc. The first four of these are mentioned in Exod. xxx. 34, חֲבֵל (= λίβανος = libanus, thus), חֲבֵלֶת (= χαλβάνη = galbanum), קִנְאָה (= στακτή = stacte), חֲבֵלֶת (= δυνξ = nardus). All seven are enumerated in Sir. xxiv. 15:

ὡς κιννάμωμον καὶ ἀσπάλαθος ἀρωμάτων δέδωκα ὁσμὴν, καὶ ὡς σμύρνα ἐκλεκτὴ δέδωκα εὐωδίαν,

ὡς χαλβάνη καὶ δυνξ καὶ στακτή, καὶ ὡς λίβανου ἀτμὶς ἐν σκηνῇ.

Here χαλβάνη, δυνξ, στακτή, λίβανου ἀτμὶς correspond to the first four in our text but in a different order, and κιννάμωμον, ἀσπάλαθος ἀρωμάτων, σμύρνα to the last three. These seven fragrant constituents of the incense offering are mentioned in Jer. Joma iv. 5; Keritot 6 a b (Singer, 75 note; Nowack, Hebr. Archäol. ii. 248).

26. Plant of righteousness. See
xxi. 24; Eth. Enoch x. 16; xciii. 5, 10, where the same expression is found.
Cf. also lxxxiv. 6, xciii. 2 in the same

eousness for the eternal generations, and from him a holy seed, so that it should become like Him who had made all things. 27. And he blessed and rejoiced, and he called the name of this festival the festival of the Lord, a joy acceptable to the Most High God. 28. And we blessed him for ever, and all his seed after him throughout all the generations of the earth, because he celebrated this festival in its season, according to the testimony of the heavenly tables. 29. For this reason it is ordained on the heavenly tables concerning Israel, that they shall celebrate the feast of tabernacles seven days with joy, in the seventh month, acceptable before the Lord—a statute for ever throughout their generations every year. 30. And to this there is no limit of days; for it is ordained for ever regarding Israel that they should celebrate it and dwell in booths, and set wreaths upon their heads, and take leafy boughs, and willows from the brook. 31. And Abraham took branches of palm trees, and the fruit of goodly trees, and every day going round the altar with the branches seven times [a day] in the morning, he praised and gave thanks to his God for all things in joy.

Expulsion of Hagar and Ishmael, 1-14. Mastēmā proposes that God should require Abraham to sacrifice Isaac in

28. All his seed. Latin omits "all."

29. A statute for ever, etc. Lev. xxiii. 41.

30. Cf. Lev. xxiii. 40.

Set wreaths upon their heads. This is unknown to tradition in connection with the feast. The custom of wearing chaplets at feasts is referred to in Wisdom ii. 7-8; Joseph. Ant. xix. 9. 1 (cf. 3 Macc. iv. 8), but it cannot be established as a Jewish one. Bridegrooms, however, were adorned with myrtles and roses, Gittin 7a, Sota 49b (Beer, Buch d. Jub. 47). The metaphorical use of "crown" or "wreath"

as ὁ στέφανος τῆς ζωῆς (Rev. ii. 10: cf. 2 Tim. iv. 8) is familiar also in Judaism; cf. Megilla 15b.

31. Branches of palm trees. Text lebba dabart and Latin corde palmarum go back as Dillmann recognised to לילבי החמר. לילבי was wrongly taken as לבב by the Greek translator. We might observe that the Targums on Lev. xxiii. 40 have here simply לילבין.

Every day . . . seven times. According to Sukka iv. 5 it was only on the seventh day that the worshippers went round the altar seven times (Beer, Buch der Jubiläen, 46; Singer, 75).

order to test his love and obedience: Abraham's ten trials, 15-18. (Cf. Gen. xxi. 8-21.)

XVII. And in the first year of the †fifth† week Isaac 1982 A.M. was weaned in this jubilee, and Abraham made a great banquet in the third month, on the day his son Isaac was weaned. 2. And Ishmael, the son of Hagar, the Egyptian, was before the face of Abraham, his father, in his place, and Abraham rejoiced and blessed God because he had seen his sons and had not died childless. 3. And he remembered the words which He had spoken to him on the day on which Lot had parted from him, and he rejoiced because the Lord had given him seed upon the earth to inherit the earth, and he blessed with all his mouth the Creator of all things. 4. And Sarah saw Ishmael playing and dancing, and Abraham rejoicing with great joy, and she became jealous of Ishmael and said to Abraham, "Cast out this bondwoman and her son; for the son of this bondwoman will not be heir with my son, Isaac." 5. And the thing was grievous in Abraham's sight, because of his maidservant and because of his son, that he should drive them from him. 6. And God said to Abraham "Let it not be grievous in thy sight, because of the child and because of the bondwoman; in all that Sarah hath said unto thee, hearken to her words and do (them); for in Isaac shall thy name and seed be called. 7. But as for the son of this bondwoman I will make him a great nation, because he is of thy seed." 8. And Abraham rose up early in the morning, and took bread and a bottle

XVII. 1. Cf. Gen. xxi. 8.
†Fifth†. This should be "fourth."
See a similar error in xvi. 15.

2. Because he had seen his sons, etc.
Cf. xvi. 16.

3. See xiii. 19 sqq.

4-13. Cf. Gen. xxi. 9-21.

4. And dancing. Since the Latin has cum Isac, wa-yezafen may be corrupt for ba-yeshaq = "with Isaac." These words are found in the LXX and Vulg. of Gen. xxi. 9 but not in the Mass. or Sam.

7. A great nation. The epithet "great" is supported by the Sam., LXX, Syr., and Vulg. of Gen. xxi. 13, but omitted by the Mass., Onkelos and Ps.-Jon. The last reads instead: "a nation of robbers."

of water, and placed them on the shoulders of Hagar and the child, and sent her away. 9. And she departed and wandered in the wilderness of Beersheba, and the water in the bottle was spent, and the child thirsted, and was not able to go on, and fell down. 10. And his mother took him and cast him under an olive tree, and went and sat her down over against him, at the distance of a bow-shot; for she said, "Let me not see the death of my child," and as she sat she wept. 11. And an angel of God, one of the holy ones, said unto her, "Why weepest thou, Hagar? Arise take the child, and hold him in thine hand; for God hath heard thy voice, and hath seen the child." 12. And she opened her eyes, and she saw a well of water, and she went and filled her bottle with water, and she gave her child to drink, and she arose and went towards the wilderness of Paran. 13. And the child grew and became an archer, and God was with him; and his mother took him a wife from among the daughters of Egypt. 14. And she bare him a son, and he called his name Nebaioth; for she said, "The Lord was nigh to me when I called upon him."

2003 A.M. 15. And it came to pass in the seventh week, in the first year thereof, in the first month in this jubilee, on the twelfth of this month, there were voices in heaven regarding Abraham, that he was faithful in all that He told him, and that he loved the Lord, and that in every affliction he was faithful. 16. And the prince Mastêmâ came and said

10. An olive tree. Instead of ἐλάτας LXX has ἐλάττης.

12. She opened. We should with Gen. xxi. 19 expect "he."

14. Nebaioth. Eth. = Nâbêwôt. Cf. Gen. xxv. 13.

Was nigh. We should expect the original behind "was nigh" to contain some of the consonants in "Nebaioth."

15. Isaac is thus twenty-three when he was offered up by Abraham (cf.

xvi. 12 and xvii. 15). According to the Seder Olam, Isaac was thirty-seven.

16. Here as elsewhere (cf. xlviii. 2, 17) our author attributes to Mastêmâ the conduct which he deems unworthy of God but which is ascribed to Him by Gen. xxii. 1. Cf. also James i. 13. We might compare with our text the following passage from Sanh. 89b 'Satan spake before the Holy One, blessed be He. 'Lord of the World, Thou hast given fruit of the body to before God, "Behold, Abraham loves Isaac his son, and he delights in him above all things else; bid him offer him as a burnt-offering on the altar, and Thou wilt see if he will do this command, and Thou wilt know if he is faithful in everything wherein Thou dost try him. 17. And the Lord knew that Abraham was faithful in all his afflictions; for He had tried him through his country and with famine, and had tried him with the wealth of kings, and had tried him again through his wife, when she was torn (from him), and with circumcision; and had tried him through Ishmael and Hagar, his maid-servant, when he sent them away. 18. And in everything wherein He had tried him, he was found faithful, this old man of 100 years, and yet in all the feasts celebrated by him, he has never offered in sacrifice to Thee a bullock or a young dove.' God answered him: . . . 'If I were to say to him, Sacrifice thy son, he would sacrifice him, etc.'" Cf. also Bk. of Jashar (ii. 1139).

17. According to xix. 8 Abraham was submitted to ten trials. Seven are mentioned in this verse: 1. The going forth from his country. 2. Famine. 3. The wealth of kings. 4. The seizure of his wife by the king of Egypt. 5. Circumcision. 6, 7. The dismissal of Ishmael and Hagar. In xix. 3, 8 the burial of Sarah is specially mentioned as the tenth. The eighth and ninth though not specifically reckoned as such in our text are the unfruitfulness of Sarah, xiv. 21, and the sacrifice of Isaac, xviii. This enumeration agrees closely with those of Maimonides, Jona Girondi and Simon Duran which are given below. From Beer's Leben Abr. 190-192 I draw the account in Pirke R. Eliezer, ch. 26 sq.: 1. Nimrod's attempt on his life. 2. Ten years imprisonment in Cutha and Khadr. 3. Departure from his country. 4. Famine. 5. Seizure of his wife. 6. War with the kings. 7. Covenant between the pieces. 8. Circumcision. 9. Rejection of Ishmael. 10. Offering of Isaac. The account given in Fabricius, Cod. Pseud. V.T. i. 398, differs slightly from the above. According to Pirke R. Nathan, ch. 33, two trials were sustained when he was bidden to leave his home (Gen.

xii. 1) and to go to Mt. Moriah to sacrifice Isaac (xx. 2): two in connection with his sons: two in connection with his wives: one with the kings: one between the sacrificial pieces: one in the furnace of the Chaldees: one in circumcision. According to the reckoning of Maimonides (see Fabricius (ibid. 399); Rönsch, 383) the trials were: 1. Going forth from his country. 2. Famine. 3. Seizure of his wife. 4. War with the kings. 5. Unfruitfulness of Sarah. 6. Circumcision. 7. Second seizure of his wife. 8, 9. Expulsion of Hagar and Ishmael. 10. Sacrifice of Isaac. It will be remarked that this last list corresponds best with our text; but the correspondence of the following lists is closer: Beer (Leben Abr. 191) writes: Die meisten späteren Aboth-Commentatoren schlossen sich den Pirke des R. Elieser an, blos darin variirend, dass Einige (Obadia Bertinoro und Menachem Meiri) anstatt des unterirdischen Aufenthaltes in Abraham's Kindheit den Vorfall mit Abimelech besonders zählen und Andere (R. Jona Girondi, Simon Zemach Duran) den Bund zwischen den Stücken nicht unter die Versuche aufnehmen, aber an dessen Stelle gegen alle früheren Referate, welche die Zehnzahl mit der Opferung Isaak's schliessen, die Beerdigung Sara's als zehnte Versuchung hinstellten. Thus Jona Girondi and Simon Duran agree with our text in making the burial of Sarah the tenth trial of Abraham.

Sacrifice of Isaac: Mastêmâ put to shame, 1-13. Abraham again blessed: returns to Beersheba, 14-19. (Cf. Gen. xxii. 1-19.)

XVIII. And God said to him, "Abraham, Abraham"; and he said, "Behold, (here) am I." 2. And He said, "Take thy beloved son whom thou lovest, (even) Isaac, and go unto the high country, and offer him on one of the mountains which I will point out unto thee." 3. And he rose early in the morning and saddled his ass, and took his two young men with him, and Isaac his son, and clave the wood of the burnt-offering, and he went to the place on the third day, and he saw the place afar off. 4. And he came to a well of water, and he said to his young men, "Abide ye here with the ass, and I and the lad shall go (yonder), and when we have worshipped we shall come again to you." 5. And he took the wood of the burnt-offering and laid it on Isaac his son, and he took in his hand the fire and the knife, and they went both of them together to that place. 6. And Isaac said to his father, "Father"; and he said, "Here am I, my son." And he said unto him, "Behold the fire, and the knife, and the wood; but where is the sheep for the burnt-offering, father?" 7. And he said, "God will provide for himself a sheep for a burnt-offering, my son." And he drew near to the place of the mount of God. 8. And he built an altar, and he placed the wood on the altar, and bound Isaac his son, and placed him on the wood which was upon the altar, and stretched forth his hand to take the knife to slay Isaac

XVIII. 1-17. Cf. Gen. xxii. 1-19.

2. Beloved son. So LXX τὸν ἀγαπητόν = ירִיך instead of Mass., Sam., Syr. ירִיך.

The high country (a d. b c = "mountain") = (Gen. xxii. 2) LXX τὴν γῆν τῆν ὑψηλάν. Mass. = "Land of Moriah."

7. Of the mount of God. Gen. xxii. 9 reads: "which God had told him of."

his son. 9. And I stood before him, and before the prince of the Mastêmâ, and the Lord said, "Bid him not to lay his hand on the lad, nor to do anything to him, for I have shown that he fears the Lord." 10. And I called to him from heaven, and said unto him: "Abraham, Abraham"; and he was terrified and said: "Behold, (here) am I." 11. And I said unto him: "Lay not thy hand upon the lad, neither do thou anything to him; for now I have shown that thou fearest the Lord, and hast not withheld thy son, thy first-born son, from me." 12. And the prince of the Mastêmâ was put to shame; and Abraham lifted up his eyes and looked, and, behold, a single ram caught . . . by his horns, and Abraham went and took the ram and offered it for a burnt-offering in the stead of his son. 13. And Abraham called that place "The Lord hath seen," so that it is said "(in the mount) the Lord hath seen": that is Mount Sion. 14. And the Lord called Abraham by his name a second time from heaven, as he caused us to appear to speak to him in the name of the Lord. 15. And He said: "By Myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, Because thou hast done this thing, And hast not withheld thy son, thy beloved son, from Me,

9. Prince of the Mastêmâ. So ab here and in ver. 12 and xlviii. 9, 12, 15. cd wrongly give "prince Mastêmâ" in these passages and all MSS wrongly in xvii. 6, xlviii. 2. See note on x. 8.

Shown. Or "known," but see note on 11.

11. I have shown = Latin version, manifestavi (= מַנִּיפֵּסְתִּי). The Eth. could also be rendered "I have known," as Mass. and Sam. of Gen. xxii. 12 מֵיָדְעִי, but the Latin, manifestavi, is unmistakeable and this rendering is supported by both Eth. and Latin in ver. 16. The Syr. has the very same rendering: ܡܢܝܦܝܫܬܝ = I have shown. Ps.-Jon. has מַנִּיפֵּסְתִּי = manifestatum est. "I have shown" is suitable to the context. God proves Abraham's faithfulness to Mastêmâ and to others (ver. 16).

12. Caught. All the MSS add "and he came" = wa-yēmaš'ē, (?) corrupt for ba'ēdaw = "in a thicket."

13. (In the mount). Added from Latin. It is found in Mass. and LXX of Gen. xxii. 14.

Hath seen. Syr. and Vulg. = "will see," "seeth." The verb is passive in the Mass. (יִרְאֶה) and LXX, and also in the Latin version of Jubilees—visus est.

14. He caused us to appear (b). a "he caused him (c "me") to appear"; d "we appeared." Latin = fuimus is corrupt.

15. Thy beloved son (a d) = τοῦ ἀγαπητοῦ σου = יִרְיָךְ. Lat., tuo unigenito = τοῦ μονογενοῦς σου = יְחִידְךָ. Hence Hebrew text seems to have had a dittographical text just as LXX (A) of Judges xi. 34: αὐτῇ μονογενῆς αὐτῷ ἀγαπητῇ, and LXX and Vulg. of Gen. xxii. 2, 12, 16 postulate similar dittographies of the same Hebrew word in Hebrew text. On the other hand b c under influence of ver.

 the Lord according to the seven days during which he went and returned in peace. 19. And accordingly has it been ordained and written on the heavenly tables regarding Israel and its seed that they should observe this festival seven days with the joy of festival.

in the first year of the †third† week of this jubilee the days of the life of Sarah were accomplished, and she died in Hebron. 3. And Abraham went to mourn over her and bury her, and we tried him [to see] if his spirit were patient and he were not indignant in the words of his mouth; and he was found patient in this, and was not disturbed. 4. For in patience of spirit he conversed with the children of Heth, to the intent that they should give him a place in which to bury his dead. 5. And the Lord gave him grace before all who saw him, and he besought in gentleness the sons of Heth, and they gave him the land of the double cave over against Mamre, that is Hebron, for four hundred pieces of silver. 6. And they besought him, saying, "We shall give it to thee for nothing"; but he would not take it from their hands for nothing, for he gave the price of the place, the money in full, and he bowed down before them twice; and after this he buried his dead in the double cave. 7. And all the days of the life of Sarah were one hundred and twenty-seven years, that is, two jubilees and four weeks and one year: these are the days of the years of the life of Sarah. 8. This is the tenth trial wherewith Abraham was tried, and he was found faithful, patient in spirit. 9. And he said not a single word regarding the rumour in the land how that God had said that He would give it to him and to his seed after him, and he begged a place there to bury his dead; for he was found faithful, and was recorded on the heavenly tables as the friend of God. 10. And in the fourth year 2020 A.M.

2. †Third†. Read "second." Isaac married (xix. 10) at the age of 40 (Gen. xxv. 20) after Sarah's death. Hence he married in the fourth year of the second week.

9. Friend of God. Cf. xxx. 20, 21. This expression springs from the O.T. :

thereof he took a wife for his son Isaac and her name was Rebecca [the daughter of Bethuel, the son of Nahor, the brother of Abraham] the sister of Laban and daughter of Bethuel; and Bethuel was the son of Mêlcâ, who was the wife of Nahor, the brother of Abraham. 11. And Abraham took to himself a third wife, and her name was Keturah, from among the daughters of his household servants, for Hagar had died before Sarah. 12. And she bare him six sons, Zimram, and Jokshan, and Medan, and Midian, and Ishbak, and Shuah, in the two weeks of years. 13. And in 2046 A.M. the sixth week, in the second year thereof, Rebecca bare to Isaac two sons, Jacob and Esau, and Jacob was a smooth and upright man, and Esau was fierce, a man of the field, and hairy, and Jacob dwelt in tents. 14. And the youths grew, and Jacob learned to write; but Esau did not learn, cf. Is. xli. 8 "Abraham, My friend"; 2 Chron. xx. 7; LXX of Dan. iii. 35. It is found in Philo, De Sobrietate, 11: μη επικαλύψω ἐγὼ ἀπὸ Ἀβραὰμ τοῦ φίλου μου; (Gen. xviii. 17); also in James ii. 23; Clem. Rom. x. 1, xvii. 2; Targ. Jer. on Gen. xviii. 17. In Book of Wisdom vii. 27 the designation φίλου Θεοῦ is applied to the faithful generally, and likewise in Philo, Fragment ii. p. 652: πᾶς σοφὸς θεοῦ φίλος. This application of the phrase may be due to Plato, Legg. iv. 8, where the wise man is said to be θεῷ φίλος: cf. also Max. Tyr. xx. 6. For Rabbinical references Singer, p. 151 note.

Keturah . . . for Hagar had died before Sarah. Our author here explains why Abraham did not take Hagar back. Later tradition—Gen. rabba 61, Ps.-Jon. and Targ. Jer. on Gen. xxvii.—got over the difficulty by identifying Hagar and Keturah. This view is mentioned by Jerome, Quaest. Hebr. in Gen. xxv. 1: Cetura Hebraeo sermone copulata interpretatur aut juncta (al. vincta). Quam ob causam suspicantur Hebraei mutato nomine eandem esse Agar, quae Saraa mortua de concubina transierit in uxorem. According to the Book of Jashar (Dict. des Apocr. ii. 1147) Keturah was a Canaanitish woman. Smooth and upright. So b.c. Two different renderings of איש חם (Gen. xxv. 27) seem to be conjoined here. On the other hand, since the description of Esau is borrowed from Gen. xxv. 27 and xxvii. 11, it is probable that the description of Jacob is drawn from both also, and that we should here read: "Smooth and upright."

14. Jacob learned to write. On the phrase cf. John vii. 15; Acts xxvi. 24; Plato, Apol. 26 D. According to Onkelos

for he was a man of the field and a hunter, and he learnt war, and all his deeds were fierce. 15. And Abraham loved Jacob, but Isaac loved Esau. 16. And Abraham saw the deeds of Esau, and he knew that in Jacob should his name and seed be called; and he called Rebecca and gave commandment regarding Jacob, for he knew that she (too) loved Jacob much more than Esau. 17. And he said unto her: "My daughter, watch over my son Jacob,

For he shall be in my stead on the earth,
And for a blessing in the midst of the children of men,
And for the glory of the whole seed of Shem.

18. For I know that the Lord will choose him to be a people for possession unto Himself, above all peoples that are upon the face of the earth. 19. And behold, Isaac my son loves Esau more than Jacob, but I see that thou truly lovest Jacob.

And let thine eyes be upon him in love;
For he will be a blessing unto us on the earth from before Esau took to evil ways; see also Baba bathra 16 b (Beer, Leb. Abr. 84).

To lay the foundations of the heaven,
And to strengthen the earth,
And to renew all the luminaries which are in the firmament."

26. And he called Jacob before the eyes of Rebecca his mother, and kissed him, and blessed him, and said: 27. "Jacob, my beloved son, whom my soul loveth, may God bless thee from above the firmament, and may He give thee all the blessings wherewith He blessed Adam, and Enoch, and Noah, and Shem; and all the things of which He told me, and all the things which He promised to give me, may He cause to cleave to thee and to thy seed for ever, according to the days of heaven above the earth. 28. And the spirits of Mastêmâ shall not rule over thee or over thy seed to turn thee from the Lord, who is thy God from henceforth for ever. 29. And may the Lord God be a father to thee and thou the first-born son, and to the people alway. Go in peace, my son." 30. And they both went forth together from Abraham. 31. And Rebecca loved Jacob, with all her heart and with all her soul, very much more than Esau; but Isaac loved Esau much more than Jacob.

24. This list of righteous patriarchs is peculiar for its omissions and its insertions. With regard to Mahalelel nothing special is known. On the other hand, the omission of Methuselah is strange. In later times opinions were divided as to the character of Adam. Some held him to be a saint (חסידי Erub. 18b), others an atheist

XX. 1. †Seventh†. "Seventh" seems corrupt for "sixth." The present text makes the date 2052 or the year after Abraham's death. If we read "sixth" it would give 2045. See note on xxi. 1. XXI. And in the sixth year of the †seventh† week of this jubilee Abraham called Isaac his son, and commanded him, saying: "I am become old, and know not the day of my death, and am full of my days. 2. And behold, I am one hundred and seventy-five years old, and throughout all the days of my life I have remembered the Lord, and sought with all my heart to do His will, and to walk uprightly in all His ways. 3. My soul has hated idols, (and I have despised those that served them, and I have given my heart

XXI. 1. †Seventh†. Since Abraham was born in 1876 A.M. and lived 175 years, he must have died in 2051 A.M., whereas our text makes it 2057. Hence read "sixth." We should then have 2050.

Abraham called Isaac his son, and commanded him. Cf. Test. Levi 9: 'Ισαὰκ ἐκάλει με . . . τοῦ ὑπομνήσαι με νόμον Κυρίου. The rest of this chapter according to our author deals with Abraham's directions to Isaac regarding the various kinds of sacrifices, the woods to be used on the altar, the ablutions of the priest, the duty of avoiding fornication. Now it is quite clear that the author of Test. Levi 9 had either our text before him or else a source common to both. The converse hypothesis that our author had the Test. Levi before him is not workable. In any case the text of the Test. Levi is less original than that of our author. It represents Isaac as transmitting to Levi the same ritual commands that our text describes Abraham as giving to Isaac. The only point that can be urged in favour of the originality of the Test. Levi is that the words in Jubilees xxi. 1 "I am become old and know not the day of my death" are used by Isaac in Gen. xxvii. 2 and not by Abraham. But the two views are compatible. Our text represents Abraham as giving directions as to sacrifices, etc., to Isaac; and the Test. Levi represents Isaac as handing them on to Levi. The ὡς καὶ με' Ἀβραὰμ ἐδίδαξε support the view of our author. I will now give the portions of Test. Levi 9 which deal with the same matter as our text and insert after them the references to the parallels in our text. καὶ 'Ισαὰκ ἐκάλει με συνεχῶς τοῦ ὑπομνήσαι με νόμον Κυρίου (Jub. xxi. 1) . . . καὶ ἐδίδασκέ με νόμον ἱερωσύνης, θυσιῶν, ὀλοκαυμάτων, ἀπαρχῶν, ἐκουσίων, σωτηριῶν (Jub. xxi. 7-9) . . . καὶ ἔλεγε· Μὴ πρόσεχε, τέκνον, ἀπὸ τοῦ πνεύματος τῆς πορνείας (xxi. 21-23) . . . καὶ πρὸ τοῦ εἰσελθεῖν εἰς τὰ ἅγια, λούου· καὶ ἐν τῷ θύειν, νίπτου· καὶ ἀπαρτίζων πάλιν τὴν θυσίαν, νίπτου (xxi. 16 almost word for word). Δώδεκα δένδρων δὲ ἐχόντων φύλλα ἀναγε Κυρίῳ, ὡς καὶ με' Ἀβραὰμ ἐδίδαξε (xxi. 12-13) . . . καὶ πᾶσαν θυσίαν ἀλατὶ ἀλιεῖς (xxi. 11).

I am become old, and know not the day of my death. These words are used by Isaac in Gen. xxvii. 2.

And am full. For "and" MSS read "for," but Latin rightly gives "et."

Full of my days. The pronoun is peculiar to this book and Eth. vers. and Syr. The Sam., LXX, Vulg. read "full of days" against Mass. and Onkelos of Gen. xxv. 8 which omit "of days." Cf. xxii. 7, xxiii. 8 of our text.

2. Cf. Gen. xxv. 7.

3. (And I have despised . . . and spirit). Supplied from Latin: probably lost in Ethiopic through homoioteleuton.

and spirit) that I might observe to do the will of Him who created me. 4. For He is the living God, and He is holy and faithful, and He is righteous beyond all, and there is with Him no accepting of (men's) persons and no accepting of gifts; for God is righteous, and executeth judgment on all those who transgress His commandments and despise His covenant. 5. And do thou, my son, observe His commandments and His ordinances and His judgments, and walk not after the abominations and after the graven images and after the molten images. 6. And eat no blood at all of animals or cattle, or of any bird which flies in the heaven. 7. And if thou dost slay a victim as an acceptable peace-offering, slay ye it, and pour out its blood upon the altar, and all the fat of the offering offer on the altar with fine flour (and the meat-offering) mingled with oil, with its drink-offering—offer them all together on the altar of burnt-offering; it is a sweet savour before the Lord. 8. And thou wilt offer the fat of the sacrifice of thank-offerings on the fire which is upon the altar, and the fat which is on the belly, and all the fat on the inwards and the two kidneys, and all the fat that is upon them, and upon the loins and liver thou shalt remove, together with the kidneys.

4. No accepting of (men's) persons and . . . gifts. Cf. Deut. x. 17.

6. Cf. Lev. vii. 26. See vi. 10, 12 of our text; also xxi. 17 sqq.

7. Cf. Lev. iii. 7-10.

Peace-offering = θυσία ἐρημικαί = זבח שלמים, 1 Sam. x. 8, xi. 15 etc., but the Hebrew phrase is more usually rendered (ἡ) θυσία (τοῦ) σωτηρίου, Lev. iii. 3, 6, 9, iv. 26 etc.

(And the meat-offering). Latin omits the meat-offering. The phrase is most probably genuine as Littmann urges, though I rejected it in my Ethiopic text.

Mingled with oil. Cf. Lev. ii. 4, משחים בשמן.

8. And thou wilt offer the fat of the sacrifice of thank-offerings . . . and the fat. So Latin. For "and . . . and" in the above the Ethiopic reads "as . . .

as." Lev. iii. 9-10, which our author has before him, supports the Latin: "And he shall offer of the sacrifice of peace-offerings an offering made by fire . . . and the fat which covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards and the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, which is by the loins . . . with the kidneys shall he take away." On the phrase "thank-offerings" see note on ver. 7.

On the belly, . . . on the inwards = ἐπὶ τῆς κοιλίας . . . ἐπὶ τῶν ἐντοσθίων (ἐντέρων). The Latin has super ventrum . . . super interanea. This variation is strange, since the Hebrew has קרב and the LXX κοιλία in both cases in Lev. iii. 10.

And upon the loins. Lev. iii. 10 has "which is by the loins."

9. And offer all these for a sweet savour acceptable before the Lord, with its meat-offering and with its drink-offering, for a sweet savour, the bread of the offering unto the Lord, 10. And eat its meat on that day and on the second day, and let not the sun on the second day go down upon it till it is eaten, and let nothing be left over for the third day; for it is not acceptable [for it is not approved] and let it no longer be eaten, and all who eat thereof will bring sin upon themselves; for thus I have found it written in the books of my forefathers, and in the words of Enoch, and in the words of Noah. 11. And on all thy oblations thou shalt strew salt, and let not the salt of the covenant be lacking in all thy oblations before the Lord. 12. And as regards the wood of the sacrifices, beware lest thou bring (other) wood

Thou shalt remove = tēblēl. Emended with Latin separa from tēblūl = rolled up, covered up.

9. Bread of the offering unto the Lord. From Lev. iii. 11.

10. [For it is not approved]. I have bracketed this clause as a dittography.

Let it no longer be eaten = jētbālā'ē, emended from jētbahal (a b). c d = "thou shalt not eat."

Written in the books of my forefathers. According to x. 14 Noah gave all his secret books to Shem, who may have passed them on to Abraham, as, according to rabbinic tradition, Abraham attended the school of Shem. According to xii. 27, however, Abram is said to have been a "home" student, and 'to have studied the books of his fathers. Singer (p. 126 note) states that according to Pirke R. El. viii., Jalk. Gen. § 41, Abraham received from Shem the knowledge of the calendar which was imparted to Adam from heaven, and which had come down to Shem through Enoch and Noah. The present passage in our text as well as vii. 38 and Test. XII. Patriarch. Zeb. 3 trace back certain halachoth to commands or books of Enoch and Noah. None of the ancient books preserved under these names are of an halachic character. There was probably no ground for the statement made by our author.

11. On all thy oblations thou shalt strew salt. Cf. the parallel passage in Test. Levi 9: καὶ πᾶσαν θυσίαν ἀλατὶ ἀλιεῖς.

Salt of the covenant. Cf. Lev. ii. 13. MSS read "covenant of salt."

12. Beware lest thou bring (other) wood for the altar in addition to these. By a slight change (see my text, p. 75 note 30) we might read: "Be careful to offer on the altar the following woods (only)." This passage was written possibly to determine the meaning of עֵצֵי זָבַח in Exod. xxv. 5, 10 etc. Our text or the subject of it is referred to in Test. Levi 9: δώδεκα δένδρων ἀεὶ ἐχόντων φύλλα ἀναγε Κυρίῳ, ὡς καμὲ Ἀβραὰμ ἐδίδαξε. The number here is probably corrupt. δώδεκα = 12, corrupt for 14. The Eth. Enoch iii. speaks of fourteen evergreen trees, and may be in that passage dependent on our text. With the list of fourteen trees in our text, cf. that in the Geoponica xi. 1: δένδρα ἀειθαλῆ ἐστὶ . . . ιδ' (1) φοῖνιξ, (2) κίτριον, (3) στρόβιλος, (4) δάφνη, (5) ἐλάλη, (6) κυπάρισσος, (7) κερατέα, (8) πίνυς, (9) πρίνος, (10) πύξος, (11) μυρσίνη, (12) κέδρος, (13) ἰτέα καὶ (14) ἄρκευθος. And of these kinds of wood lay upon the altar under the sacrifice, such as have been tested as to their appearance, and do not lay (thereon) any split or dark wood, (but) hard and clean, without fault, a sound and new growth; and do not lay (thereon) old wood, [for its fragrance is gone] for there is no longer fragrance in it as before. 14. Besides these kinds of wood there is none other that thou shalt place (on the altar), for the fragrance is dispersed, and the smell of its fragrance goes not up to heaven. 15. Observe this commandment and do it, my son, that thou mayst be upright in all thy deeds. 16. And at all times be clean in thy body, and wash thyself with water before thou approachest to offer on the altar, and wash thy hands and thy feet before thou drawest near to the altar; and when thou art done sacrificing, wash again thy hands and thy feet. 17. And let no blood appear upon you nor upon your clothes; be on thy guard, my son, against blood, be on thy guard exceedingly; cover it with dust. 18. And do not eat any blood, for it is the soul; eat no blood whatever. 19. And take no gifts for the blood of man, lest it be

Sagâd. This has been identified with the קש, "the almond"; but wrongly, since the trees are all ever-green.

Citron. I have taken qêdâr as corrupt for κίτριον. It may be a corruption of κεπαρέα. On wood for the sacrifices see Middoth ii. 5; Tamid 29 b; Sifra on Lev. i. 8 (Beer, Buch d. Jub. p. 35).

13. Nothing of this nature is found in the halacha. Tamid ii. 3 allows all kinds of wood but that of the olive and vine.

Clean=נֶשֶׁטֶף, emended from šênû'a (b)="firm," šên'a (c). a omits.

[For its fragrance is gone]. I have bracketed this clause as originating in a dittography, or an interpolation from the next verse.

14. Goes not up. With Littmann I have inserted the negative.

16. On the duty of washing before approaching the altar, cf. Exod. xxx. 19-21, etc.

Wash again. Text="return and wash." the familiar Hebrew idiom as Littmann has recognised.

17. Nor upon your clothes. a b omit "nor."

Be on thy guard, my son, against blood, . . . cover it with dust. Cf. Lev. xvii. 13.

18. Cf. Lev. xvii. 14; Deut. xii. 23.

shed with impunity, without judgment; for it is the blood that is shed that causes the earth to sin, and the earth cannot be cleansed from the blood of man save by the blood of him who shed it. 20. And take no present or gift for the blood of man: blood for blood, that thou mayest be accepted before the Lord, the Most High God; for He is the defence of the good: and that thou mayest be preserved from all evil, and that He may save thee from every kind of death.

21. I see, my son,

That all the works of the children of men are sin and wickedness,

And all their deeds are uncleanness and an abomination and a pollution,

And there is no righteousness with them.

22. Beware, lest thou shouldest walk in their ways

And tread in their paths,

And sin a sin unto death before the Most High God.

Else He will [hide His face from thee,

And] give thee back into the hands of thy transgression,

And root thee out of the land, and thy seed likewise from under heaven,

And thy name and thy seed will perish from the whole earth.

23. Turn away from all their deeds and all their uncleanness,

And observe the ordinance of the Most High God,

19. Causes the earth to sin. This goes back to קִטְּיָה = "pollutes."

The earth cannot be cleansed, etc. Cf. vii. 33; Num. xxxv. 33.

20. That thou mayest be accepted. Emended (see my text, p. 76, note 1). b (d) = "and it will be accepted"; a "it will not be accepted"; c "and He will accept you."

21-24. This passage was written originally in Hebrew verse and the parallelism is still well preserved.

22. Sin unto death = ἀμαρτίαν θανάτου = חַטֹּאת מוֹת, Num. xviii. 22. Cf. 1 John v. 16. See xxxiii. 18 of our text.

[Hide His face from thee, And]. I have bracketed this clause (cf. i. 13) as an interpolation, since it spoils the parallelism.

Give thee back into the hands of thy transgression. Has this vigorous expression been suggested by Gen. iv. 7 "If thou dost not well, sin is a lurker at the door"?

And do His will and be upright in all things.

24. And He will bless thee in all thy deeds,

And will raise up from thee the plant of righteousness through all the earth, throughout all generations of
the earth,

And my name and thy name will not be forgotten
under heaven for ever.

25. Go, my son, in peace.

May the Most High God, my God and thy God, strengthen
thee to do His will,

And may He bless all thy seed and the residue of thy seed for the generations for ever, with all righteous
blessings,

That thou mayest be a blessing on all the earth."

26. And he went out from him rejoicing.

25. I have with some hesitation arranged this verse as Hebrew poetry.

Mayest be a blessing. Cf. xx. 10.

XXII. 1. All the dates in this verse appear to be wrong. The total=2116.

Dillmann suggests that for "forty-fourth" we should read "forty-third." But this would make the year of Abraham's death 2060, whereas (see on xxi. 1) he died in the year 2051. Hence I propose: "in the sixth week in the forty-second jubilee, in the seventh year" = 2051.

and to return to his father. 3. And in those days Ishmael came to see his father, and they both came together, and Isaac offered a sacrifice for a burnt-offering, and presented it on the altar of his father which he had made in Hebron. 4. And he offered a thank-offering and made a feast of joy before Ishmael, his brother : and Rebecca made new cakes from the new grain, and gave them to Jacob, her son, to take them to Abraham, his father, from the first-fruits of the land, that he might eat and bless the Creator of all things before he died. 5. And Isaac, too, sent by the hand of Jacob to Abraham a best thank-offering, that he might eat and drink. 6. And he eat and drank, and blessed the Most High God,

Who hath created heaven and earth,

Who hath made all the fat things of the earth,

And given them to the children of men

That they might eat and drink and bless their Creator.

7. The sword of the adversary has not overcome me in all that Thou hast given me and my children all the days of my life until this day. 9. My God, may Thy mercy and Thy peace be upon Thy servant, and upon the seed of his sons, that they may be to Thee a chosen nation and an inheritance from amongst all the nations of the earth from henceforth unto all the days of the generations of the earth, unto all the ages." 10. And do thou, my son, Jacob, draw near and kiss me." 11. And he drew near and kissed him, and he said :

"Blessed be my son Jacob

And all the sons of God Most High, unto all the ages :

May God give unto thee a seed of righteousness ;

And some of thy sons may He sanctify in the midst of the whole earth ;

May nations serve thee,

And all the nations bow themselves before thy seed.

12. Be strong in the presence of men,

And exercise authority over all the seed of Seth.

Then thy ways and the ways of thy sons will be justified,

So that they shall become a holy nation.

13. May the Most High God give thee all the blessings

Wherewith He has blessed me

And wherewith He blessed Noah and Adam ;

May they rest on the sacred head of thy seed from generation to generation for ever.

14. And may He cleanse thee from all unrighteousness and impurity,

May nations serve Thee, And all the nations, etc. From Gen. xxvii. 29—Isaac's blessing of Jacob.

12. Exercise. Eth. has "exercising" but Latin = "exercise."

All the seed of Seth, i.e. all mankind. The phrase is found also in Num.

xxiv. 17, כל בני-שם, where, however, שם is not to be taken as the name of the patriarch but as a contraction of שמש = "confusion."

13. Blessings . . . wherewith He blessed Noah, etc. See xix. 27.

Rest on the sacred head. From Gen. xlix. 26, though with the Syr. it implies נָיַר instead of נָוִיר. Cf. Num. vi. 9.

14. Unrighteousness and impurity. Emended with Latin inquinamento et injustitia. MSS = "impure defilement."

That thou mayest be forgiven all (thy) transgressions ;
(and) thy sins of ignorance.

And may He strengthen thee,

And bless thee.

And mayest thou inherit the whole earth,

15. And may He renew His covenant with thee,

That thou mayest be to Him a nation for His inheritance
for all the ages,

And that He may be to thee and to thy seed a God in truth and righteousness throughout all the days of the earth.

16. And do thou, my son Jacob, remember my words,

And observe the commandments of Abraham, thy father :

Separate thyself from the nations,

And eat not with them :

And do not according to their works,

And become not their associate ;

For their works are unclean,

And all their ways are a pollution and an abomination
and uncleanness.

17. They offer their sacrifices to the dead

Thou mayest be forgiven. Lat. = "He may forgive." The "thy" and "and" are supplied from the Latin.

15. Renew His covenant. See ver. 30.

Nation for His inheritance. See on ver. 9.

16. The exclusiveness of Judaism is here traced to Abraham. The very existence of Judaism in 200-150 B.C. made such exclusiveness indispensable.

Separate thyself from the nations. Cf. Is. lii. 11.

Eat not with them. A Jew could not eat with a Gentile ; for the animals might not have been slaughtered according to the prescriptions of the Law (Deut. xii. 23, 24) or might have been amongst those that were forbidden to the Jew (Lev. xi. 4-7, 10-12, 13-20) or the meat and wine might have been offered to idols (cf. 1 Cor. x. 20, 27-

29). Antiochus IV. tried to force the Jews to eat of unclean food, 1 Macc. i. 47-48, 62-63 ; 2 Macc. vi. 18-21, vii. 1. See Driver's Commentary on Daniel i. 8-10 note. Cf. Matt. ix. 11 ; Mk. ii. 16 for the Pharisaic attitude.

Their ways are a pollution. Cf. ver.

19. Observe how frequently this conception returns in all accounts of the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes and his successors : μαίνειν in 1 Macc. i. 46, 63, iv. 45, vii. 34, xiv. 36 ; μασμός, 1 Macc. iv. 43 ; ἀκάθαρτος, 1 Macc. i. 48, iv. 43 ; ἀκαθαρσία, 1 Macc. xiii. 48, xiv. 7 ; μύσος, 2 Macc. vi. 19, 25 ; μολύνω, 1 Macc. i. 37 ; 2 Macc. vi. 2, xiv. 3 ; μολυσμός, 2 Macc. v. 27 ; βεβηλώω, 1 Macc. i. 43, 45, 48, 63, ii. 12, 34, iii. 51, etc. ; βεβήλωσις, 1 Macc. i. 48.

17. Offer their sacrifices to the dead. Cf. Deut. xxvi. 14 ; Ps. cvi. 28 ; Sir. vii.

And they worship evil spirits,
 And they eat over the graves,
 And all their works are vanity and nothingness.

18. They have no heart to understand
 And their eyes do not see what their works are,
 And how they err in saying to a piece of wood: 'Thou

Worship evil spirits. Some of the Jews at the bidding of Antiochus Epiphanes consented to worship idols and offer them sacrifices, 1 Macc. i. 43. For other references to such worship generally see Deut. xxxii. 17; Lev. xvii. 7; Ps. cvi. 37; Eth. Enoch xix. 1; Baruch iv. 7; 1 Cor. x. 20: ἀλλ' ὅτι ἃ θύουσιν τὰ ἔθνη, δαιμονίοις . . . θύουσιν. See note on i. 11-13 of our text.

Eat over the graves. Just as the worshipper of Yahweh partook of the sacrifices offered to Him, so those who offered sacrifices to the dead partook of such sacrifices. These sacrifices were placed over the grave: see references given under "offer sacrifices to the dead" in earlier part of the verse: also Schwall, Das Leben nach dem Tode, 21-24.

For all his seed, etc. This line recurs in ver. 21^b; for the two Ethiopic verbs are not infrequently renderings of the same word in Greek.

And none springing from him will be saved on the day of judgment.

22. And as for all the worshippers of idols and the profane
(b) There will be no hope for them in the land of the living ;

(e) And there will be no remembrance of them on the earth ;

(c) For they will descend into Sheol,

(d) And into the place of condemnation will they go,

As the children of Sodom were taken away from the earth
So will all those who worship idols be taken away.

And be not dismayed, O son of Abraham :

May the Most High God preserve thee from destruction,
And from all the paths of error may He deliver thee.

22. The profane. Se'ûlân = βεβηλωμένοι (cf. Lev. xxi. 7, 14), emended from selû'ân (a b d) = "the hated ones." c reads, "the perverse." If we emend a b d into salâ-êjân we should have "the adversaries."

(e) And there will be no remembrance, etc. It will be observed that I have heart rejoiced over him. 27. And he blessed him with all his heart and said: "The Most High God, the God of all, and Creator of all, who brought me forth from Ur of the Chaldees, that He might give me this land to inherit it for ever, and that I might establish a holy seed—blessed be the Most High for ever." 28. And he blessed Jacob and said: "My son, over whom with all my heart and my affection I rejoice, may Thy grace and Thy mercy be lift up upon him and upon his seed alway. 29. And do not forsake him, nor set him at nought from henceforth unto the days of eternity, and may Thine eyes be opened upon him and upon his seed, that Thou mayst preserve him, and bless him, and mayest sanctify him as a nation for Thine inheritance; 30. And bless him with all Thy blessings from henceforth unto all the days of eternity, and renew Thy covenant and Thy grace with him and with his seed according to all Thy good pleasure unto all the generations of the earth."

27. This verse looks like an interpolation. It professes to give Abraham's blessing of Jacob, and yet does not mention him at all. Jacob's blessing begins in ver. 28. This verse follows well upon ver. 26. On the other hand some mention of the sacred name is required in ver. 28 if 27 is omitted.

God of all. See on verses 4, 10.

Creator of all, i.e., of the universe. See on ver. 4. See Neh. ix. 6.

Brought me forth from Ur of the Chaldees. Cf. Gen. xv. 7; Neh. ix. 7. Instead of "brought" 3rd sing. of a d, b c read "brought" 2nd sing.

Blessed be the Most High for ever, or

"that the Most High may be blessed for ever." The latter is the more natural translation; but if we adopt it, there is no principal verb.

28. Over whom with all my heart . . . I rejoice (cd). But a b read "rejoice" in 3rd sing. This reading presupposes "heart and affection" as the subject of "rejoice," just as in ver. 26. In that case if instead of zaba (twice) we read baza (twice) we have as follows: "over whom all my heart and my affection rejoice." In either case we must reject ba'ella as corrupt.

Be lift up upon him. Cf. Num. vi. 26; Ps. iv. 6.

And he placed two fingers of Jacob on his eyes, and he blessed the God of gods, and he covered his face and stretched out his feet and slept the sleep of eternity, and was gathered to his fathers. 2. And notwithstanding all this Jacob was lying in his bosom, and knew not that Abraham, his father's father, was dead. 3. And Jacob awoke from his sleep, and behold Abraham was cold as ice, and he said: "Father, father"; but there was none that spake, and he knew that he was dead. 4. And he arose from his bosom and ran and told Rebecca, his mother; and Rebecca went to Isaac in the night, and told him; and they went together, and Jacob with them, and a lamp was in his hand, and when they had gone in they found Abraham lying dead. 5. And Isaac fell on the face of his father, and wept and kissed him. 6. And the voices were heard in the house of Abraham, and Ishmael his son arose, and went to Abraham his father, and wept over Abraham his father, he and all the house of Abraham, and they wept with a great weeping. 7. And his sons Isaac and Ishmael buried him in the double cave, near Sarah his wife, and they wept for him forty days, all the men of his house, and Isaac and Ishmael, and all their sons, and all the sons of Keturah in their places; and the days of weeping for Abraham were

The days of weeping = ימי בכי (cf. Deut. xxxiv. 8; Gen. i. 4). b = "the lamentation of the weeping" = נקי בכי (cf. Jer. xxxi. 15) which I take to be a corruption of ימי בכי. d reads "lamentation and weeping" and a c "weeping."

ended. 8. And he lived three jubilees and four weeks of years, one hundred and seventy-five years, and completed the days of his life, being old and full of days. 9. For the days of the forefathers, of their life, were nineteen jubilees; and after the Flood they began to grow less than nineteen jubilees, and to decrease in jubilees, and to grow old quickly, and to be full of their days by reason of manifold tribulation and the wickedness of their ways, with the exception of Abraham. 10. For Abraham was perfect in all his deeds with the Lord, and well-pleasing in righteousness all the days of his life; and behold, he did not complete four jubilees in his life, when he had grown old by reason of the wickedness, and was full of his days. 11. And all the generations which will arise from this time until the day of the great judgment will grow old quickly, before they complete two jubilees, and their knowledge will forsake them by reason of their old age [and all their knowledge will vanish away]. 12. And in those days, if a man live a jubilee and a-half of years, they will say regarding him: "He has lived long, and the greater part of his days are pain and sorrow and tribulation, and there is no peace:

9. Men's years grow less, pari passu, with the growing corruption.

Days of the forefathers, of their life. Probably we should read "days of the life of the forefathers."

To decrease in jubilees, and to grow old quickly, and to be full of their days. The Latin has senescere celerius et minui dies vite ipsorum. The Latin seems right. For a possible explanation of the corruption in the Eth. see my text, pp. 81-82.

10. When he had grown old. Both Eth. and Latin give "until" instead of "when." The error, I take it, arose from the corruption of $\omega\varsigma$ = "when" into $\epsilon\omega\varsigma$ = "until."

By reason of the wickedness. Abraham grew old early because of the wickedness of others. He was himself "perfect," according to our author.

11. Generations which will arise . . . until the day of the great judgment. Here the judgment seems to precede the Messianic kingdom; but see note on ver. 30.

Their knowledge will forsake them by reason of their old age. Lat. = erunt transeuntes ab ipsis spiritus intellectus ipsorum, where spiritus and intellectus may be duplicate renderings of the same word. Otherwise it should correspond to the phrase "by reason of their age." I here withdraw the emendation in my text.

[And all their knowledge will vanish away]. A dittography. Lat. omits.

12. The greater part of his days are pain and sorrow. Ps. xc. 10. Our text gives the same rendering of רהבם as the LXX, Syr., Chald., and Vulg.

13. For calamity follows on calamity, and wound on wound, and tribulation on tribulation, and evil tidings on evil tidings, and illness on illness, and all evil judgments such as these, one with another, illness and overthrow, and snow and frost and ice, and fever, and chills, and torpor, and famine, and death, and sword, and captivity, and all kinds of calamities and pains." 14. And all these will come on an evil generation, which transgresses on the earth: their works are uncleanness and fornication, and pollution and abominations. 15. Then they will say: "The days of the forefathers were many (even), unto a thousand years, and were good; but, behold, the days of our life, if a man has lived many, are three score years and ten, and, if he is strong, four score years, and those evil, and there is no peace in the days of this evil generation." 16. And in that generation the sons will convict their fathers and their elders of sin and unrighteousness, and of the words of their mouth and the great wickednesses which they perpetrate,

16. This verse points most probably to the rise of the Chasids. These proceed to challenge the creed and conduct of their fathers and the elders (the spiritual rulers of Judaism). From their ranks (see Eth. Enoch xc. 7) arise the Maccabees. The armed resistance of the latter to the Hellenising party is represented in ver. 20. Finally after years of strife the Messianic era begins to set in and the years of men to grow many, till at last they become a thousand.

We have herein an adumbration of the actual history and the expectations of the Chasids in the second cent. B.C. Bousset (Z.f. NTliche Wissensch. 1900, p. 199) has already recognised that this chapter deals with the Maccabean movement. The conclusiveness of this interpretation will grow stronger as we proceed. It is no little confirmation of our view that we find the same events in Judaism depicted in allegorical language in Eth. Enoch xc. 6-7: "But behold lambs were borne by those white sheep, and they began to open their eyes and to see and to cry to the sheep. But the sheep did not cry to them and did not hear what they said to them, but were exceedingly deaf, and their eyes were exceedingly and forcibly blinded." Here "the white sheep" are the faithful adherents of the theocracy; the "lambs" are the Chasids, a new and distinct party among the Jews. The Chasids appeal unavailingly to the nation at large. In the next verse (xc. 8) there is a symbolical description of Syria's attack on Judah.

and concerning their forsaking the covenant which the Lord made between them and Him, that they should observe and do all His commandments and His ordinances and all His laws, without departing either to the right hand or the left. 17. For all have done evil, and every mouth speaks iniquity and all their works are an uncleanness and an abomination, and all their ways are pollution, uncleanness and destruction. 18. Behold the earth will be destroyed on account of all their works, and there will be no seed of the vine, and no oil; for their works are altogether faithless, and they will all perish together, beasts and cattle and birds, and all the fish of the sea, on account of the children of men. 19. And they will strive one with another, the young with the old, and the old with the young, the poor with the rich, and the lowly with the great, and the beggar with the prince, on account of the law and the covenant; for they have forgotten commandment, and covenant, and feasts, and months, and Sabbaths, and jubilees, and all judgments. 20. And they will stand (with bows and) swords and war to Forsaking the covenant. Cf. Dan. xi. 30 and 1 Macc. i. 15 where the same charge is brought against the Hellenising Jews.

Observe and do . . . without . . . either to the . . . or the left. Cf. Deut. v. 31, 32, xxviii. 13, 14. A similar statement is found in 1 Macc. ii. 21-22: "Heaven forbid that we should forsake the law and the ordinances . . . to go aside from our worship to the right hand or the left" (παρελθεῖν τὴν λατρίαν ἡμῶν δεξιὰν ἢ ἀριστεράν). The phrase is most probably historical.

17. All have done evil. Cf. 1 Macc. i. 52, 53, "And from the people were gathered unto them many, every one that had forsaken the law and they did evil things in the land."

Every mouth speaks iniquity. Cf. 1 Macc. ii. 6, "And (Mattathias) saw the blasphemies . . . in Judah and in Jerusalem."

Pollution, etc. See note on xxii. 16. 18-24. The Messianic woes.

18. Will all perish together, beasts . . . and birds, and all the fish of the sea. Cf. Hos. iv. 3: also Ezek. xxxviii. 20; Zeph. i. 3; 4 Ezra v. 7.

On account of the children. Lat. = a malitia filiorum.

Judgments, i.e. determinations, decisions.

20. This verse describes the warlike

turn them back into the way; but they will not return until much blood has been shed on the earth, one by another.

21. And those who have escaped will not return from their wickedness to the way of righteousness, but they will all exalt themselves to deceit and wealth, that they may each take all that is his neighbour's, and they will name the great name, but not in truth and not in righteousness, and they will defile the holy of holies with their uncleanness and the corruption of their pollution. 22. And a great punishment will befall the deeds of this generation from the Lord, and He will give them over to the sword and to judgment and to captivity, and to be plundered and devoured. 23. And He will wake up against them the sinners of the Gentiles, who have neither mercy nor compassion, and who will respect the person of none, neither old nor young, nor efforts of Judas the Maccabee to force the apostates to return to Judaism. In the year 162, owing to internal divisions, Syria felt it advisable to make terms with the Jews and allow them "to walk after their own laws as aforetime" (1 Macc. vi. 55-62; 2 Macc. xiii. 23-26; Joseph. Ant. xii. 9. 6-7). This understanding was observed by all the subsequent kings of Syria. Hence from 162 onward the struggle was not so much to preserve Judaism against the attempts of Syria to crush it out of existence, as to determine the question whether the Hellenising faction or the national party should control the nation. Syria henceforth intervened in support now of the one now of the other of the two Jewish parties. (See Schurer, op. cit. i. 214; [Eng. transl.], i. i. 224 sq.)

(With bows and). Supplied from the Latin.

The way. Cf. Is. xxx. 21, "This is the way, walk ye in it." Cf. the use of ἡ δόξ in Acts ix. 2, xix. 9, 23, xxiv. 22.

21. Those who have escaped will not return . . . to the way of righteousness. By the treaty of 162 referred to in the preceding note, the religious liberties of Judaism were secured against Syria;

but the Hellenising party under the high priest Alkimus still pursued its own aims. This party is said in our text to "name the great name" and to "defile the holy of holies with their uncleanness." Though it embraced nearly the entire Sanhedrin, it was opposed by the Maccabees, the Chasids, and the great mass of the Jews.

Great name. Cf. Jos. vii. 9. On the phrase "name the . . . name," cf. LXX of Is. xxvi. 13; Acts xix. 13; 2 Tim. ii. 19.

22-23. These verses describe the sufferings of the nation during the civil wars and internal troubles that took place down to Simon's high priesthood (142-135 B.C.).

23. This verse refers in language borrowed from past prophecy to the frequent invasions of Palestine by the Syrians or possibly by some unknown nation from the north as in Zeph. i. 7; Jer. iii.-vi.; like Gog and Magog in Ezek. xxxviii.-xxxix.

Have neither mercy nor compassion. So Jeremiah (vi. 23) describes the nation that was to invade Judah: "they are cruel and have no mercy."

Neither old nor young. Cf. Ezek. ix. 6.

any one, for they are more wicked and strong to do evil than all the children of men.

And they will use violence against Israel and transgression against Jacob,

And much blood will be shed upon the earth,

And there will be none to gather and none to bury.

24. In those days they will cry aloud,

And call and pray that they may be saved from the hand of the sinners, the Gentiles ;

But none will be saved.

25. And the heads of the children will be white with grey hair,
And a child of three weeks will appear old like a man of one hundred years,

And their stature will be destroyed by tribulation and oppression.

26. And in those days the children will begin to study the laws,

And to seek the commandments,

And to return to the path of righteousness.

27. And the days will begin to grow many and increase amongst those children of men,

None to gather and none to bury, i.e., the fallen. The phrase is from Jer. viii. 2.

24. Of the sinners, the Gentiles = ἁμαρτωλῶν ἐθνῶν. The Ethiopic translator took these words to be in apposition. He ought rather to have taken the second as dependent on the first. Hence "sinners of the Gentiles." See verse 23 and Gal. ii. 15 where the phrase is reproduced somewhat differently: ἐξ ἐθνῶν ἁμαρτωλοί. To the writer the terms "Gentiles" and "sinners" were practically synonymous.

25. Heads of the children will be white, etc. Hesiod, Op. et Dies, 180-181, tells how in the iron age children will be born with hoary temples :

Ζεὺς δ' ὀλέσει καὶ τοῦτο γένος μερῶν
ἀνθρώπων

Ἐστ' ἂν γεινόμενοι πολιοκρόταφοι τελέθωσιν.

This was to be one of the signs (as in our text) which foreshadowed the coming of the kingdom according to Sibyll. Or. ii. 155 :

Ἐκ γενετῆς παῖδες πολιοκρόταφοι γεγαῶτες.

See also Latin apocalyptic fragment in the Cambridge Texts and Studies, ii. 3, p. 154.

26. It might seem possible that ver. 16 originally followed ver. 26.

26-30. The renewed study of the Law followed by a change for the better and the gradual approach to Messianic blessedness. With this spiritual transformation of Israel (cf. l. 5) there will take place a corresponding transforma-

Till their days draw nigh to one thousand years,
And to a greater number of years than (before) was the number of the days.

28. And there will be no old man

Nor one who is not satisfied with his days,
For all will be (as) children and youths.

29. And all their days they will complete and live in peace and in joy,

And there will be no Satan nor any evil destroyer ;
For all their days will be days of blessing and healing.

30. And at that time the Lord will heal His servants, tion of the heaven and the earth. This idea appears also in Is. lxxv. 17 sqq. (See i. 29 note ; iv. 26.) This is their final renewal.

27. Nigh to one thousand years. In the Messianic kingdom men will attain to the age originally designed for them by God. Adam did not attain to 1000 years because of his sin ; see iv. 30.

28. The writer appears to have Is. lxxv. 20 before him but avoids making any reference to the presence of the wicked in the consummated kingdom, as is done in Isaiah. Yet apparently they are presupposed in ver. 30, though according to ver. 29 there are none such. They are gradually eliminated. Cf. Test. Levi 18.

Who is not satisfied. I have added the negative from a comparison of Is. lxxv. 20.

29. In joy. Cf. Is. lxxv. 14.

No Satan. Cf. Assumpt. Mos. x. 1. This statement need not mean very much : cf. xl. 9, xlv. 2, l. 5.

Blessing and healing. Cf. i. 29.

30. If this verse refers to the resurrection, the righteous are raised to share in this (temporary?) Messianic kingdom. If ver. 11 is correctly handed down and to be taken literally, it follows that the final judgment precedes the Messianic kingdom. But the nature of this kingdom precludes such a view. It is to be introduced gradually pari passu with the spiritual transformation of man. Such a gradual and progressive transformation does not admit of the insertion of the final judgment at any single point of its evolution. Nor is there a hint of such a judgment in verses 23-27. Hence the final judgment can occur only at the close of this kingdom. The kingdom is therefore of temporary duration—a conclusion which presents some difficulty in the face of i. 17, 18, 29, but which agrees best with all other passages referring to the final judgment in this book. In that case the resurrection of the righteous and the final judgment are disjoined, if this verse asserts that the righteous rise to share in the kingdom. The eschatology of our author would thus differ alike from that of Eth. Enoch lxxxiii.-xc. (before 161 B.C.), Test. Jud. 25, Sim. 6, Zeb. 10, Benj. 10, where the final judgment precedes the kingdom and the righteous are raised to enjoy it for ever, and from that of Eth. Enoch xci.-civ. (104-95 B.C.) where the final judgment comes in at the close of the kingdom and the righteous are not raised to share in it, but in a blessed immortality.

But the teaching of our text agrees rather with that of Eth. Enoch xci.-civ. ; for the words "will rise up" have apparently no reference to the resurrection, and mean merely that when God heals His servants (cf. Rev. xxii. 2) they become strong. The clauses in ver. 29, "all their days will be days of blessing and healing" and in i. 29, "for healing . . . for all the elect of Israel" render this view the most probable. In this case there is no resurrection to this temporary Messianic kingdom, and thus the eschatology harmonises perfectly with that of Eth. Enoch xci.-civ.

And they will rise up and see great peace,
And drive out their adversaries.

And the righteous will see and be thankful,
And rejoice with joy for ever and ever,
And will see all their judgments and all their curses on their enemies.

31. And their bones will rest in the earth,
And their spirits will have much joy,
And they will know that it is the Lord who executes
judgment,
And shows mercy to hundreds and thousands and to all that love Him.

32. And do thou, Moses, write down these words; for thus are they written, and they record (them) on the heavenly tables for a testimony for the generations for ever.

Isaac at the Well of Vision, 1 (cf. Gen. xxv. 11). Esau sells his birthright, 2-7 (cf. Gen. xxv. 29-34). Isaac goes down to Gerar, 8. Dealings between Isaac and Abimelech, 9-27. Isaac curses the Philistines, 28-32. (Cf. Gen. xxvi. 1-6, 11, 13-25, 32, 33.)

2. And in the first year of the fourth week a famine began 2080 A.M.

See great peace, i.e. "enjoy great peace." The word "peace" may go back to שָׁלוֹם: in that case the sense would be "enjoy sound health."

Drive out their adversaries. Such a conception is in keeping with the gradual growth of the kingdom.

And to all (acd). b reads "of all."

in the land, besides the first famine, which had been in the days of Abraham. 3. And Jacob sod lentil pottage, and Esau came from the field hungry. And he said to Jacob his brother: "Give me of this red pottage." And Jacob said to him: "Sell to me thy [primogeniture, this] birthright and I will give thee bread, and also some of this lentil pottage." 4. And Esau said in his heart: "I shall die; of what profit to me is this birthright?" And he said to Jacob: "I give it to thee." 5. And Jacob said: "Swear to me, this day," and he swore unto him. 6. And Jacob gave his brother Esau bread and pottage, and he eat till he was satisfied, and Esau despised his birthright; for this reason was Esau's name called Edom, on account of the red pottage which Jacob gave him for his birthright. 7. And Jacob became the elder, and Esau was brought down from his dignity. 8. And the famine was over the land, and Isaac departed to go down into Egypt in the second year of this week, and went to the king of the Philistines to Gerar, unto Abimelech. 9. And the Lord appeared unto him and said unto him: "Go not down into Egypt; dwell in the land that I shall tell thee of, and sojourn in this land, and I shall be with thee and bless thee. 10. For to thee and to thy seed shall I give all this land, and I shall establish My oath which I swore unto Abraham thy father, and I shall multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven, and shall give unto thy seed all this land. 11. And in thy seed will all the nations of the earth be blessed, because thy father obeyed My voice, and kept My charge and My commandments, and My laws, and

M. him, and concerning all that was his, saying: "Any man that shall touch him or aught that is his shall surely die." 14. And Isaac waxed strong among the Philistines, and he got many possessions, oxen and sheep and camels and asses and a great household. 15. And he sowed in the land of the Philistines and brought in a hundred-fold, and Isaac became exceedingly great, and the Philistines envied him. 16. Now all the wells which the servants of Abraham had dug during the life of Abraham, the Philistines had stopped them after the death of Abraham, and filled them with earth. 17. And Abimelech said unto Isaac: "Go from us, for thou art much mightier than we"; and Isaac departed thence in the first year of the seventh week, and sojourned in the 2101 A. M. valleys of Gerar. 18. And they digged again the wells of water which the servants of Abraham, his father, had digged, and which the Philistines had closed after the death of Abraham his father, and he called their names as Abraham his father had named them. 19. And the servants of Isaac dug a well in the valley, and found living water, and the shepherds of Gerar strove with the shepherds of Isaac, saying: "The water is ours"; and Isaac called the name of the well "Perversity," because they had been perverse with us. 20. And they dug a second well, and they strove for

18-20. Cf. Gen. xxvi. 18-22.

19. The water. Here Eth. has "this water" and the Latin merely "aqua," but the ze (=this) is merely a translation of the Greek article as is frequently the case. Hence Eth. and Lat. attest the same text.

Perversity. Gen. xxvi. 20 has p̄p̄p̄, LXX, ἀδικία.

that also, and he called its name "Enmity." And he arose from thence and they digged another well, and for that they strove not, and he called the name of it "Room," and Isaac said: "Now the Lord hath made room for us, and we have increased in the land." 21. And he went up from thence

2108 A.M. to the Well of the Oath, in the first year of the first week in the forty-fourth jubilee. 22. And the Lord appeared to him that night, on the new moon of the first month, and said unto him: "I am the God of Abraham thy father; fear not, for I am with thee, and shall bless thee and shall surely multiply thy seed as the sand of the earth, for the sake of Abraham my servant." 23. And he built an altar there, which Abraham his father had first built, and he called upon the name of the Lord, and he offered sacrifice to the God of Abraham his father. 24. And they digged a well and they found living water. 25. And the servants of Isaac digged another well and did not find water, and they went and told Isaac that they had not found water, and Isaac said: "I have sworn this day to the Philistines and this thing has been announced to us." 26. And he called the name of that place the "Well of the Oath"; for there he had sworn to Abimelech and Ahuzzath his friend and Phicol the prefect of his host. 27. And Isaac knew that day that under constraint he had sworn to them to make peace with them. 28. And Isaac on that day cursed the

20. Enmity = šēl'ē emended with Latin (inimicitias) from šabāb = "narrow." The corruption is native to the text. It most probably arose from a scribe's wishing to make an antithesis between the name of this well and that of the next "Room."

21-26. Cf. Gen. xxvi. 23-25, 32-33.

24-25. There is mention of only one well in Gen. xxvi. 25.

25. The implication of our text is that owing to Isaac having made a covenant with Abimelech his servants failed to find water.

They had not found. Our text and the LXX thus imply שָׁבַב אֵל in Gen. xxvi. 32, but Mass., Sam., Syr. read אֵל instead of שָׁבַב and connect it with the preceding verb.

Ahuzzath. Eth. 'Akôzat.

28-32. The hatred expressed in these verses is hardly intelligible save in a contemporary of the wars waged by the Maccabeans against the Philistine cities. This passage is here introduced gratuitously into the narrative (so also Bousset, Z. f. NTliche Wissensch. 1890, p. 200). Of the five chief cities of the Philistines (Jos. xiii. 3) four were still in existence

Philistines and said: "Cursed be the Philistines unto the day of wrath and indignation from the midst of all nations; may God make them a derision and a curse and an object of wrath and indignation in the hands of the sinners the Gentiles and in the hands of the Kittim. 29. And whoever escapes the sword of the enemy and the Kittim, may the righteous nation root out in judgment from under heaven; for they will be the enemies and foes of my children throughout their generations upon the earth.

30. And no remnant will be left to them,

Nor one that will be saved on the day of the wrath of judgment;

For for destruction and rooting out and expulsion from the earth is the whole seed of the Philistines (reserved),

And there will no longer be left for these Caphtorim a name or a seed on the earth.

in Maccabean times, Askelon, Ashdod, Gaza and Ekron. Of these Ekron (Ἀκκαρών) was given by Alex. Balas to Jonathan for his services (1 Macc. x. 89; Joseph. Ant. xiii. 4. 4), and Askelon submitted to him (1 Macc. x. 60, xi. 60). Ashdod (Ἀζωτος) suffered severely under Judas the Maccabee (1 Macc. v. 68) and was captured, put to the sword, and burnt by Jonathan (147 B.C.); the temple of Dagon likewise and all that had taken refuge in it were burnt (1 Macc. x. 84; Joseph. Ant. xiii. 4. 4). It was again reduced to ashes by John Hyrcanus (1 Macc. xvi. 10). As regards Gaza its suburbs were burnt by Jonathan and the city forced to capitulate (1 Macc. xi. 61-62). It was afterwards destroyed by Alex. Jannaeus (Joseph. Ant. xiii. 13. 3). Our text reflects correctly the attitude of Judah towards the cities of the Philistines in the second cent. B.C.

28. Sinners, the Gentiles. The Latin has here "peccatoris populi." Cf. xxiii. 24. The Philistines suffered severely at the hands of the Assyrians and Egyptians—particularly the latter: see Kittim (כִּיִּתִּים, Kiriêis, Kiriou, Xerielu, Xerrân). These were descended from Javan according to Gen. x. 4 and, therefore, belonged to the Graeco-Latin races. Their country is usually identified with Cyprus. In Dan. xi. 30 the Kittim are undoubtedly the Romans, whereas in 1 Macc. i. 1, viii. 5 they are the Macedonians. It is to the Macedonians that our text refers. Gaza was captured by Alexander the Great (Joseph. Ant. xi. 8. 4).

29. The righteous nation. Judah under the Maccabees. See note on 28-32 above.

These Caphtorim. "These" = ἑλλὰ emend. from kuëllâ = "all" with Latin. Text="all Caphtorim." According to Amos ix. 7; Deut. ii. 23; Jer. xlvii. 4, the Philistines came originally from Caphtor. On the various views as to its locality see Encyc. Bib. i. 698-699.

31. For though he ascend unto heaven,
 Thence will he be brought down,
 And though he make himself strong on earth,
 Thence will he be dragged forth,
 And though he hide himself amongst the nations,
 Even from thence will he be rooted out;
 And though he descend into Sheol,
 There also will his condemnation be great,
 And there also he will have no peace.
32. And if he go into captivity,
 By the hands of those that seek his life will they slay
 him on the way,
 And neither name nor seed will be left to him on all
 the earth;
 For into eternal malediction will he depart."

 on the heavenly tables, to do unto him on the day of

with all their unclean deeds: for all their deeds are fornication and lust, and there is no righteousness with them, for (their deeds) are evil. 2. And I, my son, love thee exceedingly, and my heart and my affection bless thee every hour of the day and watch of the night. 3. And now, my son, hearken to my voice, and do the will of thy mother, and do not take thee a wife of the daughters of this land, but only of the house of my father, and of my father's kindred. Thou wilt take thee a wife of the house of my father, and the Most High God will bless thee, and thy children will be a righteous generation and a holy seed." 4. And then spake Jacob to Rebecca, his mother, and said unto her: "Behold, mother, I am nine weeks of years old, and I neither know nor have I touched any woman, nor have I betrothed myself to any, nor even think of taking me a wife of the daughters of Canaan. 5. For I remember, mother, the words of Abraham, our father, for he commanded me not to take a wife of the daughters of Canaan, but to take me a wife from the seed of my father's house and from my kindred. 6. I have heard before that daughters have been born to Laban, thy brother, and I have set my heart on them to take a wife from amongst them. 7. And for this reason I have guarded myself in my spirit against sinning or being corrupted in all my ways throughout all the days of my life; for with regard to lust and fornication, Abraham, my father, gave me many commands. 8. And, despite all that he has commanded me, these two and twenty years my brother has

3. Cf. Gen. xxviii. 1, 2.

4. Nine weeks. If the date in ver. 1 is right, it follows that since Jacob was then sixty-three years old, he was born in 2046. This agrees with MSS reading in xix. 13; but the estimate based on that reading is at variance with that which follows from xlv. 13, which assigns Jacob's birth to the year 2041. With the statement as to Jacob's age cf. Ber. rabba 68: "Our father Jacob was sixty-three years old when he received the blessing: fourteen years he spent hidden in the house of Eber and seven years he served for Rachael: accordingly he was eighty-four when he married, but Esau was forty." See also Seder Olam ii.

striven with me, and spoken frequently to me and said: 'My brother, take to wife a sister of my two wives'; but I refuse to do as he has done. 9. I swear before thee, mother, that all the days of my life I will not take me a wife from the daughters of the seed of Canaan, and I will not act wickedly as my brother has done. 10. Fear not mother; be assured that I shall do thy will and walk in uprightness, and not corrupt my ways for ever." 11. And thereupon she lifted up her face to heaven and extended the fingers of her hands, and opened her mouth and blessed the Most High God, who had created the heaven and the earth, and she gave Him thanks and praise. 12. And she said: "Blessed be the Lord God, and may His holy name be blessed for ever and ever, who has given me Jacob as a pure son and a holy seed; for he is Thine, and Thine shall his seed be continually and throughout all the generations for evermore. 13. Bless him, O Lord, and place in my mouth the blessing of righteousness, that I may bless him." 14. And at that hour, when the spirit of righteousness descended into her mouth, she placed both her hands on the head of Jacob, and said:

15. "Blessed art thou, Lord of righteousness and God of the ages;

And may He bless thee beyond all the generations of men.

May He give thee, my son, the path of righteousness,
And reveal righteousness to thy seed.

And may they arise according to the number of the months of the year.

Abraham . . . gave me many commands. Cf. xx. 4, xxxix. 6.

8. These two and twenty years. This agrees with the statement of Esau's age in Gen. xxvi. 34, where he is said to have been forty when he married. Esau was now sixty-three.

14. Spirit of righteousness (or "truth") = τὸ πνεῦμα τῆς ἀληθείας. Cf. John xiv. 17, xv. 26, xvi. 13. So abd. Cf. xxxi. 12. c reads "Holy Spirit." The latter is Jewish also: cf. Is. lxiii. 10, 11 "His holy Spirit" (רוח קדש). With the idea conveyed by

And may they hold it as a possession for ever.

And may the Most High God be their God,

And may the God of righteousness dwell with them,

And by them may His sanctuary be built unto all the ages.

The words in Luke recall both Mic. vii. 20 and our text. Observe that this statement in Luke is added parenthetically or explanatorily as in our text.

Possession for ever. Cf. the Thucydidean phrase κτήμα ἐς αἰεί.

†My†. Read "thy," as the sense requires it.

[My affection]. I have bracketed this phrase; for it comes in awkwardly between "womb," "breasts," "mouth," and "tongue." We should expect an "and" to precede it. It may be a dittography and have originated as a false alternative rendering of ὄμφη, "womb."

As the heart of thy mother and her affection rejoice in thee and bless thee."
And she ceased from blessing.

2114 A.M. XXVI. And in the seventh year of this week Isaac called Esau, his elder son, and said unto him : "I am old, my son, and behold my eyes are dim in seeing, and I know not the day of my death. 2. And now take thy hunting weapons thy quiver and thy bow, and go out to the field, and hunt and catch me (venison), my son, and make me savoury meat, such as my soul loveth, and bring it to me that I may eat, and that my soul may bless thee before I die." 3. But Rebecca heard Isaac speaking to Esau. 4. And Esau went forth early to the field to hunt and catch and bring home to his father. 5. And Rebecca called Jacob, her son, and said unto him : "Behold, I heard Isaac, thy father, speak unto Esau, thy brother, saying : 'Hunt for me, and make me savoury meat, and bring (it) to me that I may eat and bless thee before the Lord before I die.' 6. And now, my son, obey my voice in that which I command thee : Go to thy flock and fetch me two good kids of the goats, and I will make them savoury meat for thy father, such as he loves, and thou shalt bring (it) to thy father that he may eat and bless thee before the Lord before he die, and that thou mayst be blessed." 7. And Jacob said to Rebecca his mother: "Mother, I shall not withhold anything which my father would eat, and which would please him: only I fear, my mother, that he will recognise my voice and wish to touch me. 8. And thou knowest that I am smooth, and Esau, my brother, is hairy, and I shall appear before his eyes as an evildoer, and shall do a deed which he had not commanded me, and he will be wroth with me, and I shall bring upon myself a curse, and not a blessing." 9. And Rebecca, his mother, said unto him: "Upon me be thy curse, my son only obey my voice." 10. And Jacob obeyed the voice of Rebecca, his mother, and went and fetched two good and fat kids of the goats, and brought them to his mother, and his mother made them (savoury meat) such as he loved. 11. And Rebecca took the goodly raiment of Esau, her elder son, which was with her in the house, and she clothed Jacob, her younger son, (with them), and she put the skins of the kids upon his hands and on the exposed parts of his neck. 12. And she gave the meat and the bread which she had prepared into the hand of her son Jacob. 13. And Jacob went in to his father and said: "I am thy son: I have done according as thou badest me: arise and sit and eat of that which I have caught, father, that thy soul may bless me." 14. And Isaac said to his son: "How hast thou found so quickly, my son?" 15. And Jacob said: "Because (the Lord) thy God caused me to find." 16. And Isaac said unto him: "Come near, that I may feel thee, my son, if thou art my son Esau or not." 17. And Jacob went near to Isaac, his father, and he felt him and said: 18. "The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau," and he discerned him not, because it was a dispensation from heaven to remove his power of perception and Isaac discerned not, for his hands were hairy as (his brother) Esau's, so that he blessed him. 19. And he said: "Art thou my son Esau?" and he said: "I am thy son": and he said, "Bring near to me that I may eat of that which thou hast caught, my son, that my soul may bless thee." 20. And he brought near to him, and he did eat, and he brought him wine and he drank. 21. And Isaac, his father, said unto him: "Come near and kiss me, my son." And he came near and kissed him. 22. And he smelled the smell of his raiment, and he blessed him and said: "Behold, the smell of my son is as the smell of a (full) field which the Lord hath blessed.

And of the dew of the earth, and plenty of corn and oil:

α = "helped me"; δ = "caused me to see." Latin gives direxit. In my text I emended the phrase into 'artē'ani = direxit, comparing xxi. 2 where the Eth. has this verb as the equivalent of dirigere in the Latin. But the reading of b c may be right as Praetorius thinks.

18. Because it was a dispensation from heaven. This clause is borrowed from 1 Kings xii. 15; cf. 2 Chron. x. 15.

His power of perception, literally, "his spirit."

(His brother). Added from the Latin.

19. I am thy son. For an analogous evasion, Beer compares Ber. rabba 65: "I am Esau the first born" (Gen. xxvii. 24). R. Levi said: Jacob meant:

I am he who will receive the ten commandments (which begin with the words "I am"), but Esau is thy first born.

21. Come near. Latin adds "to me." So also LXX and Vulg. of Gen. xxvii. 26.

22. (Full). Added from the Latin. So Sam., LXX, and Vulg. of Gen. xxvii. 27. Mass. omits.

23. Give thee. b c d add "and multiply thee." α transposes it before "may the Lord give thee."

Dew of the earth. The same rendering of τῆς πύργου τῆς γῆς is found in the Eth. version of Gen. xxvii. 28.

And plenty. MSS add against parallelism and Gen. xxvii. 28 before "plenty" the clause "may He give plentifully to thee."

 And blessed be he that blesseth thee."

25. And it came to pass as soon as Isaac had made an end of blessing his son Jacob, and Jacob had gone forth from Isaac his father †he hid himself and† Esau, his brother, came in from his hunting. 26. And he also made savoury meat, and brought (it) to his father, and said unto his father: "Let my father arise, and eat of my venison that thy soul may bless me." 27. And Isaac, his father, said unto him: "Who art thou?" And he said unto him: "I am thy first born, thy son Esau: I have done as thou hast commanded me." 28. And Isaac was very greatly astonished, and said: "Who is he that hath hunted and caught and brought (it) to me, and I have eaten of all before thou camest, and have blessed him: (and) he shall be blessed, and all his seed for ever." 29. And it came to pass when Esau heard the words of his father Isaac that he cried with an exceeding great and bitter cry, and said unto his father: "Bless me, (even) me also, father." 30. And he said unto him: "Thy brother came with guile, and hath taken away thy blessing." And he said: "Now I know why his name is named Jacob: behold, he hath supplanted me these two times: he took away my birth-right, and now he hath taken away my blessing." 31. And he said: "Hast thou not

And thou wilt serve thy brother.

And it shall come to pass when thou becomest great,

Thou wilt sin a complete sin unto death,

And thy seed will be rooted out from under heaven."

33. Dew of the earth. See note on verse 23.

34. Becomest great = 'abaika (so b). a c = "refusest" ('abaika) which is (?) a corruption of the former. d is corrupt but supports b. The text here agrees with the Sam. תאריך (Gen. xxvii. 40) which is theniphal or biphil of ארר. Mass. = ריר as to the meaning of which the versions vary. LXX has καθέλγς = חוריר from רר.

34. Thou wilt sin a complete sin unto death, or "every sin unto death." This change is contrary to all tradition. In Onkelos we have: "And it will come to pass when his (Jacob's) sons transgress the words of the law, that thou wilt remove his yoke from off thy neck." Similarly in the Jerusalem and Ps.-Jon. Targums and in Ber. rabba 67. This passage in our text is attributed to Genesis by Syncellus, i. 202: τῷ Ἰσαὺ ἔφη ἐν ταῖς εὐλογίαις ὁ Ἰσαάκ, ἔσται δὲ ἡνίκα ἂν καθέλγς καὶ ἐκλύσγς τὸν ζυγὸν αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ τοῦ τραχήλου σου· πλημμελήσγς εἰς θάνατον. Glycas (p. 263) appears to assign it to Josephus: τότε οὖν ἐπληρώθη ἡ τοῦ Ἰσαάκ προφητεία ἡνίκα ἂν καθέλγς τὸν ζυγὸν τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ σου ἐκ τοῦ τραχήλου σου, πλημμελείαν πλημμελήσεις θανάτου. καὶ τὰ μὲν τοῦ Ἰωσήφον τοιαῦτα.

XXVII. And the words of Esau, her elder son, were told to Rebecca in a dream, and Rebecca sent and called Jacob her younger son, and said unto him: 2. "Behold Esau thy brother will take vengeance on thee so as to kill thee. 3. Now, therefore, my son, obey my voice, and arise and flee thou to Laban, my brother, to Haran, and tarry with him a few days until thy brother's anger turns away, and he remove his anger from thee, and forget all that thou hast done; then I will send and fetch thee from thence." 4. And Jacob said: "I am not afraid; if he wishes to kill me, I will kill him." 5. But she said unto him: "Let me not be bereft of both my sons on one day." 6. And Jacob said to Rebecca his mother: "Behold, thou knowest that my father has become old, and does not see because his eyes are dull, and if I leave him it will be evil in his eyes, because I leave him and go away from you, and my father will be angry, and will curse me. I will not go;

XXVII. 1-5. Cf. Gen. xxvii. 42-45.

1. Were told to Rebecca in a dream. In the Ps.-Jon. on Gen. xxvii. 42 it is said: "And the words of Esau her elder son were told to Rebecca by the Holy Spirit." In Ber. rabba on the same passage Rebecca is called a prophetess.

6. This verse like xii. 31 owes its existence, as Singer has pointed out, to the author's desire to protect his heroes

Abraham and Jacob from the reproach of leaving their fathers in their old age. Singer (p. 170) writes: In der Haggada wird nämlich Jakob darob getadelt, dass er so lange Zeit von seinen Eltern fernblieb und dadurch die Uebung der Kindespflichten verabsäumte (Megilla 16 b, Sed. Od. rabba 2, Tanch. u. Lek. Tob. Wagescheb in Raschi, Gen. xxxvii. 34), wogegen Esau in dieser Hinsicht sehr gepriesen und als Muster eines guten Kindes dargestellt wird (Ber. rabba 65, 82; Debarim rabba 1, Pesikta rab. xxiv.).

when he sends me, then only will I go." 7. And Rebecca said to Jacob: "I will go in and speak to him, and he will send thee away." 8. And Rebecca went in and said to Isaac: "I loathe my life because of the two daughters of Heth, whom Esau has taken him as wives; and if Jacob take a wife from among the daughters of the land such as these, for what purpose do I further live; for the daughters of Canaan are evil." 9. And Isaac called Jacob and blessed him, and admonished him and said unto him: 10. "Do not take thee a wife of any of the daughters of Canaan; arise and go to Mesopotamia, to the house of Bethuel, thy mother's father, and take thee a wife from thence of the daughters of Laban, thy mother's brother. 11. And God Almighty bless thee and increase and multiply thee that thou mayest become a company of nations, and give thee the blessings of my father Abraham, to thee and to thy seed after thee, that thou mayest inherit the land of thy sojournings and all the land which God gave to Abraham: go, my son, in peace." 12. And Isaac sent Jacob away, and he went to Mesopotamia, to Laban the son of Bethuel the Syrian, the brother of Rebecca, Jacob's mother. 13. And it came to pass after Jacob had arisen to go to Mesopotamia that the spirit of Rebecca was grieved after her son, and she wept. 14. And Isaac said to Rebecca: "My sister, weep not on account of Jacob, my son; for he goeth in peace, and in peace will he return. 15. The Most High God will

14. My sister. This term as applied by Isaac to his wife is used as an expression of tenderness. It is possible that Singer (p. 168 note) is right in stating that it is designed by our author to justify the fact of Isaac's having called her his sister at the Court of Abimelech. As instances of the former use we might quote Tobit's address to his wife (Tobit v. 21): μη λόγον ἔχε, ἀδελφή: also vii. 15, viii. 4, 7; also

Song of Solomon iv. 9, 10, 12, v. 1.

This usage was common in the old Egyptian songs as Maspero and Spiegelberg have shown (see Budde, Das Hohenlied, pp. xvi-xvii). "Brother" was used in these songs also with a similar meaning. ἀδελφῇ in 1 Cor. ix. 5 has quite a different meaning. It denotes one who is connected by the tie of the Christian religion. The above usage, is according to Singer (p. 208 note), unknown in Rabbinic literature.

preserve him from all evil, and will be with him; for He will not forsake him all his days; 16. For I know that his ways will be prospered in all things wherever he goes, until he return in peace to us, and we see him in peace. 17. Fear not on his account, my sister, for he is on the upright path and he is a perfect man: and he is faithful and will not perish. Weep not." 18. And Isaac comforted Rebecca on account of her son Jacob, and blessed him. 19. And Jacob went from the Well of the Oath to go to Haran on the first year of the second week in the forty-fourth jubilee, and he came to Luz on the mountains, that is, Bethel, on the new moon of the first month of this week, 2115 A.M. and he came to the place at even and turned from the way to the west of the road that night: and he slept there; for the sun had set. 20. And he took one of the stones of that place and laid it (at his head) under the tree, and he was journeying alone, and he slept. 21. And he dreamt that night, and behold a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven, and behold, the angels of the Lord ascended and descended on it: and behold, the Lord stood upon it. 22. And He spake to Jacob and said: "I am the Lord God of Abraham, thy father, and the God of Isaac; the land whereon thou art sleeping, to thee shall I give it, and to thy seed after thee. 23. And thy seed will be as the dust of the earth, and thou wilt increase to the west and to the east, to the north and the south, and in thee and in thy seed will all the families of the nations be blessed. 24. And behold, I shall be with thee,

and shall keep thee whithersoever thou goest, and I shall bring thee again into this land in peace; for I shall not leave thee until I do everything that I told thee of." 25. And Jacob awoke from his sleep, and said, "Truly this place is the house of the Lord, and I knew it not." And he was afraid and said: "Dreadful is this place which is none other than the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven." 26. And Jacob arose early in the morning, and took the stone which he had put under his head and set it up as a pillar for a sign, and he poured oil upon the top of it. And he called the name of that place Bethel; but the name of the place was Luz at the first. 27. And Jacob vowed a vow unto the Lord, saying: "If the Lord will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and give me bread to eat and raiment to put on, so that I come again to my father's house in peace, then shall the Lord be my God, and this stone which I have set up as a pillar for a sign in this place, shall be the Lord's house, and of all that thou givest me, I shall give the tenth to thee, my God."

unto him: "Give me my wife, for whom I have served thee seven years"; and Laban said unto Jacob: "I will give thee thy wife." 3. And Laban made a feast, and took Leah his elder daughter, and gave (her) to Jacob as a wife, and gave her Zilpah his handmaid for an handmaid; and Jacob did not know, for he thought that she was Rachel. 4. And he went in unto her, and behold, she was Leah; and Jacob was angry with Laban, and said unto him: "Why hast thou dealt thus with me? Did not I serve thee for Rachel and not for Leah? Why hast thou wronged me? Take thy daughter, and I will go; for thou hast done evil to me." 5. For Jacob loved Rachel more than Leah; for Leah's eyes were weak, but her form was very handsome; but Rachel had beautiful eyes and a beautiful and very handsome form. 6. And Laban said to Jacob: "It is not so done in our country, to give the younger before the elder." And it is not right to do this; for thus it is ordained and written in the heavenly tables, that no one should give his younger daughter before the elder—but the elder one gives first and after her the younger—and the man who does so, they set down guilt against him in heaven, and none is righteous that does this thing, for this deed is evil before the Lord. 7. And command thou the children of Israel that they do not this thing; let them neither take nor give the younger before they have given the elder, for it is very wicked. 8. And Laban said to Jacob: "Let the seven days of the feast of this one pass by, and I shall give thee Rachel, that thou

10	Zebulon	Joseph	Asher	Naphtali
11	Joseph	Zebulon	Joseph	Joseph
12	Benjamin	Benjamin	Benjamin	Benjamin

It will be observed that the order in II. diverges from all the others as to Dan, Issachar, and Joseph. The Midrash Tadshe, which is partly based on our text, shows the same order (see below). Probably the dates are corrupt. Rönsch proposes to read seventh instead of sixth (an easy emendation resting on womb of Leah, and she conceived and bare Jacob a son, and he called his name Reuben, on the fourteenth day of the 2122 A.M.

confusion of γ and ι) in Jub. xxviii. 24. In that case Joseph would be born in 2135 A.M. and his place in the Jubilees list would agree with those of the other authorities. But this date does not agree with what is required by xxxiv. 10 and xlvi. 1 of our text. For these passages when taken together imply that Joseph was born in the year 2132. See note on xxviii. 24.

Rönsch further supposes that the copyist transposed the dates for Judah and Dan, and again a corruption of seventh into sixth; and finally suggests in the case of Asher and Issachar that we should transpose the years of their births, and read fourth year in Asher's case and fifth in Issachar's. Thus we should have the following list:—

Reuben	born 14th of 9th month	in 1st year of the 3rd week	= 2122
Simeon	„ 21st of 10th „	3rd „ 3rd „	= 2124
Levi	„ 1st of 1st „	6th „ 3rd „	= 2127
Judah	„ 15th of 3rd „	7th „ 3rd „	= 2128
Dan	„ 9th of 6th „	1st „ 4th „	= 2129
Naphtali	„ 5th of 7th „	2nd „ 4th „	= 2131
Gad	„ 12th of 8th „	3rd „ 4th „	= 2132
Asher	„ 2nd of 11th „	4th „ 4th „	= 2133
Issachar	„ 4th of 5th „	5th „ 4th „	= 2134
Zebulon	„ 7th of 7th „	6th „ 4th „	= 2134
Joseph	„ 1st of 4th „	7th „ 4th „	= 2135
Benjamin	„ 11th of 8th „	1st „ 4th „	= 2143

This order, corrected as Rönsch proposes above, is found in Syncellus i. 198, though the dates differ from those in our text: καὶ δουλεύσας ἔτη ζ' ἔλαβε τὴν Δεῖαν καὶ ἐγέννησε τὸν 'Ρουβὴν τῷ π' ἔτει καὶ τὸν Συμεὼν τῷ πα', τὸν δὲ Λεὺι τῷ πβ', τὸν 'Ιούδαν τῷ πγ', τὸν Δὰν τῷ πε', τὸν Νεφθαλεὶμ τῷ πς', τὸν Γὰδ τῷ πζ', τὸν 'Ασὴρ τῷ πη', τὸν 'Ισάαχαρ τῷ πθ', τὸν Ζαβουλὼν καὶ τὴν Δεῖαν ἐκ Δείας τῷ ζ', τὸν 'Ιωσήφ ἐκ τῆς 'Ραχὴλ τῷ δα'.

The following imperfect list (derived undoubtedly from our text) of the twelve patriarchs with their ages and the days of the month on which they were born is found in Eppstein's edition of the Midrash Tadshe viii. lines 2-4: "The years of Rebecca were 133, of Rachel 36, of Lea 46. Reuben was born on the 14th of the 9th month and died 125 years old. Simeon was born on the 21st of the 10th month and died at the age of 120 years. Levi was born on the 1st of the 1st month and died at the age of 137. Dan was born on the 6th of the 9th month and died at the age of 125; Judah on 15th of 3rd and died 119 (?) (text indistinct); Naphtali on the 5th of the 3rd and died aged 133; Gad on the 10th of the 7th and died 125; Issachar on 4th of 5th month and died 122; Asher on 2nd of (corrupt text) and died 123; Joseph on the 1st of the 7th and died 110." It will be observed that more than half the above dates of the month correspond exactly to those in Jubilees, and nearly all the ages to those in Test. XII. Patriarchs (see below). The Book of Jashar (op. cit. ii. 1244, 1246, 1248) agrees with the Testament XII. Patriarch. in giving the same ages for Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Issachar, Gad, Joseph, but disagrees in the cases of Judah, Dan, Asher, Zebulon and Naphtali, to whom it ascribes respectively the following ages: 129, 124, 123, 114, 132.

In the Test. XII. Patriarchs the dates vary also. The facts have been collected by Dodwell and are found in Fabricius, Cod. Pseud. V.T. i. 749-754. See also Rönsch, 327-329. The chief are:—

 2129 A.M. on the fifteenth of the third month, in the †first† year of the †fourth† week. 16. And on account of all this Rachel envied Leah, for she did not bear, and she said to Jacob: "Give me children"; and Jacob said: "Have I withheld from thee the fruits of thy womb? Have I forsaken thee?" 17. And when Rachel saw that Leah had borne four sons to Jacob, Reuben and Simeon and Levi and Judah, she said unto him: "Go in unto Bilhah my handmaid, and she will Reuben was born in the 76th year of Jacob's life, and died aged 125 in the same year as Zebulon aged 114.

Simeon	„	79th	„ and died aged 120 in the same year as Joseph aged 110.
Levi	„	81st	„ and died aged 137.
Judah	„	84th	„ „ 119.
Dan	„	85th	„ „ 125.
Issachar, Naphtali, Gad	„	86th	„ Issachar died aged 122; Naphtali, 130; Gad, 125.

Joseph	„	89th	„ and died aged 110.
Benjamin	„	101st	„ „ 125.

We must be content with these dates till a critical edition of this work is issued. For a different set of dates see Eusebius, Praep. Ev. ix. 21.

11. He called. In Gen. xxix. 32 it is "she called." Perhaps we should so read here and in verses 13, 14, 15, 18. In 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24 this form is actually found.

15. From the context (cf. verses 15 and 18) it is obvious that the dates in the text are corrupt. Judah was born before Rachel gave Bilhah to Jacob. Yet the text sets the birth of Bilhah's son two years before that of Judah. See note on 11-24.

conceive, and bear a son unto me." 18. (And she gave (him) Bilhah her handmaid to wife.) And he went in unto her, and she conceived, and bare him a son, and he called 2127 A.M. his name Dan, on the ninth of the sixth month, in the †sixth† year of the †third† week. 19. And Jacob went in again unto Bilhah a second time, and she conceived, and bare Jacob another son, and Rachel called his name Naphtali, on the fifth of the seventh month, in the second year of the fourth 2130 A.M. week. 20. And when Leah saw that she had become sterile and did not bear, she envied (Rachel) and she also gave her handmaid Zilpah to Jacob to wife, and she conceived, and bare a son, and Leah called his name Gad, on the twelfth of the eighth month, in the third year of the 2131 A.M. fourth week. 21. And he went in again unto her, and she conceived, and bare him a second son, and Leah called his name Asher, on the second of the eleventh month, in the 2133 A.M. †fifth† year of the fourth week. 22. And Jacob went in unto Leah, and she conceived, and bare a son, and she called his name Issachar, on the fourth of the fifth month, in the 2132 A.M. †fourth† year of the fourth week, and she gave him to a nurse. 23. And Jacob went in again unto her, and she conceived, and bare two (children), a son and a daughter, and she called the name of the son Zebulon, and the name of the daughter Dinah, in the seventh of the seventh month, in the sixth year 2134 A.M. of the fourth week. 24. And the Lord was gracious to Rachel, and opened her womb, and she conceived, and bare a son, and she called his name Joseph, on the new moon of the fourth month, in the †sixth† year in this fourth week. 2134 A.M.

18. On the date assigned to Dan see note on 11-24.

20. Become sterile and did not bear. Cf. Gen. xxx. 9 = "had left bearing." I here withdraw the emendation in my text.

Envied (Rachel) and she also gave. So MSS but the text is doubtful. My emendation of the text I here withdraw.

Latin reads et dedit. Gen. xxx. 9 has "took and gave."

21-22. On the dates see note on 11-24.

24. According to xxxiv. 10 Joseph was sold into Egypt in 2149 at the age of seventeen (xlv. 3). Hence this would require the date in our text to be 2132. This change is required also by xlv. 1. This would require "fourth" instead of "sixth," but see note on 11-24.

25. And in the days when Joseph was born, Jacob said to Laban? "Give me my wives and sons, and let me go to my father Isaac, and let me make me an house; for I have completed the years in which I have served thee for thy two daughters, and I will go to the house of my father."

26. And Laban said to Jacob: "†Tarry with me for thy wages†, and pasture my flock for me again, and take thy wages."

27. And they agreed with one another that he should give him as his wages those of the lambs and kids which were born black and spotted and white, (these) were to be his wages. 28. And all the sheep brought forth spotted and speckled and black, variously marked, and they brought forth again lambs like themselves, and all that were spotted were Jacob's and those which were not were Laban's. 29. And Jacob's possessions multiplied exceedingly, and he possessed oxen and sheep and asses and camels, and menservants and maidservants. 30. And Laban and his sons envied Jacob, and Laban took back his sheep from him, and he observed him with evil intent.

Jacob departs secretly, 1-4. Laban pursues after him, 5-6.

26. †Tarry with me for thy wages.† Latin has: Expecta me in mercede. Both seem wrong. Gen. xxx. 28 has "Appoint (נקח) me thy wages." Possibly "expecta" goes back to נקח and "tarry" to קים, but neither of these takes us back to the right text.

Take thy wages. Latin: dabo tibi mercedem is better.

27. Cf. Gen. xxx. 32.

Those of. So b. a b d = "all the sheep of."

Black and spotted = חום ופלוא. See my text for emendation.

White. This is a false rendering of δάλευκα = נקח (same false rendering in Eth. ver. of Gen. xxx. 39), or else it presupposes λευκόν which is itself wrong. We should render "speckled."

28. Cf. Gen. xxx. 39.

Speckled and black, variously marked. This agrees exactly with LXX of Gen. xxx. 39: ποικίλα καὶ σποδοειδῆ παντὰ and Vulg. varia et diverso colore respersa. The Mass. has no equivalent of the σποδοειδῆ. See my text on this clause.

All that were spotted were Jacob's, etc. Cf. Gen. xxx. 32. Jerome (Quaest. Hebr. in loc.) seems to have had this passage in mind: Si quid igitur ex albis et nigris, quae unius coloris sunt, varium natum erit, meum erit; si quid vero unius coloris, tuum.

29. And sheep. So also LXX of Gen. xxx. 43. Mass., Sam., Syr., Vulg. omit.

Amorites (anciently of the Rephaim) destroyed in the time of the writer, 9-11. Laban departs, 12. Jacob is reconciled to Esau, 13. Jacob sends supplies of food to his parents four times a year to Hebron, 14-17, 19-20. Esau marries again, 18. (Cf. Gen. xxxi. 3, 4, 10, 13, 19-21, 23, 24, 46, 47, xxxii. 22, xxxiii. 10, 16.)

XXIX. And it came to pass when Rachel had borne Joseph, that Laban went to shear his sheep; for they were distant from him a three days' journey. 2. And Jacob saw that Laban was going to shear his sheep, and Jacob called Leah and Rachel, and spake kindly unto them that they should come with him to the land of Canaan. 3. For he told them how he had seen everything in a dream, even all that He had spoken unto him that he should return to his father's house; and they said: "To every place whither thou goest we will go with thee." 4. And Jacob blessed the God of Isaac his father, and the God of Abraham his father's father, and he arose and mounted his wives and his children, and took all his possessions and crossed the river, and came to the land of Gilead, and Jacob hid his intention from 2135 A.M. Laban and told him not. 5. And in the seventh year of the fourth week Jacob turned (his face) toward Gilead in the first month, on the twenty-first thereof. And Laban pursued after him and overtook Jacob in the mountain of Gilead in the third month, on the thirteenth thereof. 6. And the Lord did not suffer him to injure Jacob; for He appeared to him in a dream by night. And Laban spake to Jacob. 7. And on the fifteenth of those days Jacob made

And he made there a heap for a witness; wherefore the name of that place is called: "The Heap of Witness," after this heap. 9. 9. Rephaim. Eth. Rafâ'êm. Cf. Gen. xiv. 5.

10. It is difficult to understand why our author mentions these seats of the Rephaim unless it is that certain victories of the Maccabees over the Amorites who succeeded the Rephaim are connected with them. To these we shall draw attention as we proceed.

Karnaim and Ashtaroth. Eth. Qarânâ'im and Astarôs. In Gen. xiv. 5 these two appear as one name "Ashtaroth - Karnaim" = "Ashtaroth of the two horns" (?) in the Mass. and Sam. and some MSS of the LXX. On the other hand the Syr. and some MSS of the LXX support our text. Kuenen, Buhl and Siegfried accept this reading. Ashtaroth Karnaim appears simply as Ashtaroth in Deut. i. 4; Josh. ix. 10, xii. 4, xiii. 12, 31 along with Edrei as a chief city of Og, king of Bashan. This Og was of the remnant of the Rephaim, Deut. iii. 11. See Encyc. Bib. i. 335, 336.

Karnaim. Eth. Qarânâ'im. Cf. Gen. xiv. 5; Amos vi. 13. Karnaim a strong city (1 Macc. v. 26) was captured by Judas and its temple of Atargatis burnt and 25000 people put to the sword (1 Macc. v. 43, 44; 2 Macc. xii. 21, 26). The Rephaim were succeeded by the Amorites (ver. 11), and of these our text grimly declares that "they have no longer length of life on the earth." Judas must have nearly annihilated them.

Edrei. Eth. 'Adrâ'a. This is the biblical Edrei (אֲדָרַי, 'Eḏraî, 'Eḏraîev), the "Ἀδρα of Ptolemy and the 'Ἀδράα of Eusebius. It was the chief city of Og, king of Bashan, who dwelt at Ashtaroth and at Edrei, Josh. xii. 4, xiii. 12, 31. Although this town is not mentioned as attacked by Judas in his eastern campaign (1 Macc. v.) the fact that it is mentioned here as having been destroyed makes it probable that it did suffer at the hands of Judas.

Mîsûr = Μεισώρ = מִישׁוֹר. Cf. Deut. iii. 10, where there is a list of the cities of the plain (מִישׁוֹר) belonging to Og which were captured by Joshua. This may be the same as the valley of Rephaim, Josh. xv. 8, xviii. 16.

Beon = בְּעֹן. Eth. Bêwôn. Cf. Num. xxxii. 3. It is the same as the Baal-meon (see Encyc. Bib. and Bible Dict. in loc.). It is most probably to be identified with the Maccabean Baiav which is described in the Onomastica 32. 40; 101. 32 as a πόλις τοῦ Ἀμορραίου. This suits our text exactly. Beon and its inhabitants were utterly destroyed by Judas (1 Macc. v. 4, 5; Joseph. Ant. xii. 8, 1).

malignant, and the Amorites dwelt in their stead, wicked and sinful, and there is no people to-day which has wrought to the full all their sins, and they have no longer length of life on the earth. 12. And Jacob sent away Laban, and he departed into Mesopotamia, the land of the East, and Jacob returned to the land of Gilead. 13. And he passed over the Jabbok in the ninth month, on the eleventh thereof. And on that day Esau, his brother, came to him, and he was reconciled to him, and departed from him unto the land of Seir, but Jacob dwelt in tents. 14. And in the first year of the fifth week in this jubilee he crossed the Jordan, 2136 A.M. and dwelt beyond the Jordan, and he pastured his sheep from the sea †of the heap† unto Bethshan, and unto Dothan and unto the †forest† of Akrabbim. 15. And he sent to his father Isaac of all his substance, clothing, and food, and meat, and drink, and milk, and butter, and cheese, and some dates of the valley, 16. And to his mother Rebecca also four times a year, between the times of the months,

11. The Amorites dwelt. Latin: habitare fecit.

13. Passed over the Jabbok. Cf. Gen. xxxii. 22.

He passed over the Jabbok . . . on the eleventh thereof. Latin has transivit Jacob et undecim filii ipsius, probably owing to Gen. xxxii. 22.

He was reconciled. Emended with Latin propitius (est) from takuânânú = "they were reconciled."

14. †Of the heap†. So a.d. b c give fahahat a word of unknown meaning. Latin has salso. Hence Lat. = "from the Salt Sea."

Bethshan = Βαιθσάν (1 Macc. v. 52, xii. 40) = בֵּית שֵׁן (i.e. the Bethshan in 1 Sam. xxxi. 10; 1 Kings iv. 12). This town also is associated with Judas, but in a peaceful way: cf. 2 Macc. xii. 29-31, where it appears under a new name Σκυθῶν πόλις (cf. LXX Judg. i. 27, where B adds after Βαιθσάν the gloss ἡ ἐστὶν Σκυθῶν πόλις). In the Roman war 65 A.D. the heathen inhabitants of this city slaughtered their Jewish fellow-citizens to the number of 13,000 (Joseph. Bell. Jud. ii. 18. 3). Eth. has Bêtasan.

Dothan. Eth. Dôthâ'im = Δωδάειμ (Judith iv. 6, vii. 3, etc.) = דֹּתַן, Gen. xxxvii. 17.

Unto the †forest†. Latin has aggruum which may be corrupt for arborem, seeing that the Eth. has 'oma (a) = "forest." b c d read simply "unto Akrabbim." We should expect "unto the ascent of Akrabbim" from Num. xxxiv. 4; Josh. xv. 3.

Akrabbim. Eth. 'Aqrâbêth. This name is found only in the phrase "Ascent of Akrabbim." See preceding note. 'Ακραβάρρηνη, a district in Idumea, where Judas fought against the Edomites, 1 Macc. v. 3; Joseph. Ant. xii. 8. 1.

15-16. Jacob, in contrast to Esau who robs his father (ver. 18), sends presents to him and his mother four times a year. The four times may correspond, as Röscher (p. 140) conjectures, to the four festivals instituted by Noah (see vi. 23 sqq.): the 1st between ploughing and reaping, and between autumn and the rain (season) and between winter and spring, to the tower of Abraham. 17. For Isaac had returned from the Well of the Oath and gone¹ up to the tower of his father Abraham, and he dwelt there apart from his son Esau. 18. For in the days when Jacob went to Mesopotamia, Esau took to himself a wife Mahalath, the daughter of Ishmael, and he gathered together all the flocks of his father and his wives, and went up and dwelt on Mount Seir, and left Isaac his father at the Well of the Oath alone. 19. And Isaac went up from the Well of the Oath and dwelt in the tower of Abraham his father on the mountains of Hebron, 20. And thither Jacob sent all that he did send to his father and his mother from time to time, all they needed, and they blessed Jacob with all their heart and with all their soul.

Dinah ravished, 1-3. Slaughter of the Shechemites, 4-6. Laws against intermarriage between Israel and the heathen, 7-17. Levi chosen for the priesthood on account of his slaughter of the Shechemites, 18-23. Dinah recovered, 24. Jacob's reproof, 25-26. (Cf. Gen. xxxiii. 18, xxxiv. 2, 4, 7, 13-14, 25-30, xxxv. 5.)

2143 A.M.

XXX. And in the first year of the sixth week he went up to Salem, to the east of Shechem, in peace, in the fourth of the 4th month = "between the times of the months"; the 1st of the 7th = "between ploughing and reaping"; the 1st of the 10th month = "between autumn and the rain (season)"; the 1st of the 1st month = "between winter and spring."

16. Between autumn and the rain (season). Latin has: in medio autumni pluviarum. This is the former rain (יורה), which falls from the middle of October to the middle of December.

Between winter and spring. Latin has: in medio pluviarum veris. Eth. could be rendered "between the rain and spring." This is the latter rain (מלקוש), which falls in March and April.

And there they carried off Dinah, the daughter of Jacob, into the house of Shechem, the son of Hamor, the Hivite, the prince of the land, and he lay with her and defiled her, and she was a little girl, a child of twelve years. 3. And he besought his father and her brothers that she might be given to him to wife. And Jacob and his sons were wroth because of the men of Shechem; for they had defiled Dinah, their sister, and they spake to them with evil intent and dealt deceitfully with them and beguiled them. 4. And Simeon and Levi came unexpectedly to Shechem and executed judgment on all the men of Shechem, and peace. This passage is based on Gen. xxxiii. 18 שָׁלַם עָרָב וְיָבֵר. The LXX, Syr., Eusebius, and Jerome here take שָׁלַם as a proper name. The Sam. reads שָׁלַם. Our text combines both interpretations.

To the east. Gen. xxxiii. 18 has "city."

2-3. Cf. Gen. xxxiv. 2, 4, 7, 13.

2-6. The history of Jacob's connection with the Shechemites caused much trouble to our author. He could hardly approve of their slaughter after they had consented to circumcision. Accordingly he omits all reference to the circumcision of the Shechemites, as also does Josephus (Ant. i. 21. 1). On the other hand this is given as the reason for Jacob's anger against Simeon and Levi in Test. Levi 6: καὶ ἤκουσεν ὁ πατήρ, καὶ ὠργίσθη, καὶ ἐλυπήθη, ὅτι κατεδέξαντο τὴν περιτομὴν καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα ἀπέθανον. Notwithstanding the severe disapprobation of Simeon and Levi in Gen. xlix. 5-7 for their conduct in this matter, it was highly extolled in the two centuries preceding the Christian era. This is done in our text and in Test. Levi 5 where the angel bids Levi: ποιήσον ἐκδίκησιν ἐν Συχέμ ὑπὲρ Δίνας, καὶ γὰρ ἔσομαι μετὰ σου, ὅτι κύριος ἀπέσταλκέ με. καὶ συνετέλεσα τῷ καιρῷ ἐκέλευε τοὺς υἱοὺς Ἐμῶρ, καθὼς γέγραπται ἐν ταῖς πλαξὶ τῶν οὐρανῶν: and in the Test. Levi 6-7, where Levi says that he saw that "the sentence of God had gone forth for evil against Shechem," and still more strongly:

ἔφθασε δὲ ἡ ὀργὴ κυρίου ἐπ' αὐτοὺς εἰς τέλος. Again in Judith (a Hebrew work of the first cent. B.C.) ix. 2: κύριε ὁ θεὸς τοῦ πατρὸς μου Συμεὼν, ᾧ ἔδωκας ἐν χειρὶ βρομφαίαν εἰς ἐκδίκησιν ἀλλογενῶν, οἱ ἔλυσαν μήτραν παρθένου εἰς μίσμα καὶ ἐγύμνωσαν μηρὸν εἰς ἀσχύνην, κ.τ.λ. Again in Philo, De Migr. Abrahami, 39, Simeon and Levi are called οἱ φρονήσεως ἀκουσται καὶ γνώριμοι for their action in this matter, and in the next few lines it is implied that Shechem was not circumcised. See also the Book of Jashar for a reproduction of the ancient favourable view of Simeon and Levi (Dict. des Apoc. ii. 1166-1168). In the late rabbinic tradition, however, Simeon and Levi are judged more in accordance with the sentence pronounced upon them in Gen. xlix. In Gen. rabba 80, it is true, there is some extenuation of their conduct; but in section 98 of the same work it is said that the fact that most of the poor were of the tribe of Simeon is to be traced to the curse in Gen. xlix. 7. Singer (p. 115 note) compares also Sifre on Deut. xxxiii. 8.

2. Child of twelve years. This agrees with the reckoning in Test. Levi 12. There Levi, who was six years older than Dinah, slew Shechem at the age of eighteen.

3. His father (ab). cā "her father." And beguiled them. And Simeon . . . to Shechem. Latin has: Et posuerunt in corde suo Symeon et Lenui exterminare eos.

4. Cf. Gen. xxxiv. 25-27.

slew all the men whom they found in it, and left not a single one remaining in it: they slew all in torments because they had dishonoured their sister Dinah. 5. And thus let it not again be done from henceforth that a daughter of Israel be defiled; for judgment is ordained in heaven against them that they should destroy with the sword all the men of the Shechemites because they had wrought shame in Israel. 6. And the Lord delivered them into the hands of the sons of Jacob that they might exterminate them with the sword and execute judgment upon them, and that it might not thus again be done in Israel that a virgin of Israel should be defiled. 7. And if there is any man who wishes in Israel to give his daughter or his sister to any man who is of the seed of the Gentiles he shall surely die, and they shall stone him with stones; for he hath wrought shame in Israel; and they shall burn the woman with fire, because she has dishonoured the name of the house of her father, and she shall be rooted out of Israel. 8. And let not an adulteress and no uncleanness be found in Israel throughout all the days of the generations of the earth; for Israel is holy unto the Lord, and every man who has defiled (it) shall surely die: they shall stone him with stones. 9. For thus has it been ordained and written in the heavenly tables regarding all the seed of Israel: he

5. Wrought shame in Israel. Cf. Gen. xxxiv. 7.

7. This statement does not agree quite with any in the O.T. The burning of the woman with fire, it is true, finds a precedent in Gen. xxxviii. 24, where Judah demands that such a punishment should be executed on Tamar—a punishment at variance with the later law in Lev. xxi. 9. See in note on xli. 17 the distortion of the biblical tradition had recourse to by the Rabbis in order to justify the demand of Judah. It is true that her crime is that of fornication, whereas our text deals merely with the marriage of a Hebrew woman and a Gentile. To

who defileth (it) shall surely die, and he shall be stoned with stones. 10. And to this law there is no limit of days, and no remission, nor any atonement: but the man who has defiled his daughter shall be rooted out in the midst of all Israel, because he has given of his seed to Moloch, and wrought impiously so as to defile it. 11. And do thou, Moses, command the children of Israel and exhort them not to give their daughters to the Gentiles, and not to take for their sons any of the daughters of the Gentiles, for this is abominable before the Lord. 12. For this reason I have written for thee in the words of the Law all the deeds of the Shechemites, which they wrought against Dinah, and how the sons of Jacob spake, saying: "We shall not give our daughter to a man who is uncircumcised; for that were a reproach unto us." 13. And it is a reproach to Israel, to those who give, and to those who take the daughters of the Gentiles; for this is unclean and abominable to Israel. 14. And Israel will not be free from this uncleanness if it has a wife of the daughters of the Gentiles, or has given any of its

10. Has given of his seed to Moloch. This interpretation of Lev. xviii. 21: "Thou shalt not give any of thy seed to make them pass through the fire to Molech," as being equivalent to giving one's child in marriage to a Gentile, is found in Ps.-Jon. on this verse: "And of thy seed thou shalt not give to lie with a daughter of the Gentiles so as to draw him over to a strange worship." The Latin which gives alienigenae instead of Molech is an interpretation of the text but not the text itself. The same idea underlies the statement in Sanh. 82a: R. Chija b. Abija said: "Whoever cohabits with a Gentile woman is to be regarded as though he had made himself the son-in-law of the idol; for it is said: And he cohabited with the daughter of a strange God." In Sanh. ix. 6 it enacts that "the zealous may slay a man taken in fornication with a Gentile or Roman woman (אֲרִמִית)." Nearly the same statement as is quoted above from Ps.-Jon. is found in Megilla 25a. That such an interpretation was prevalent we see from Megil. iv. 9: האומר מורעך לא תתן להעביר: לא תתן לאעבדא בארמיותא = "Whoever translates 'Thou shalt not give of thy seed to pass through the fire to Molech' as 'Thou shalt not give of thy seed to cohabit with a Gentile woman,' bid him be silent." Singer (p. 200 note) says that this Mishna is directed against the Jewish Christians. However this may be, the interpretation was an ancient Jewish one to begin with. It may not be older than the Maccabean age. The circumstances of that time were such as to justify the extremest measures in order to save Judaism from annihilation.

For there will be plague upon plague, and curse upon curse, and every judgment and plague and curse will come (upon him): if he do this thing, or hide his eyes from those who commit uncleanness, or those who defile the sanctuary of the Lord, or those who profane His holy name, (then) will the whole nation together be judged for all the uncleanness and profanation of this (man). 16. And there will be no respect of persons [and no consideration of persons], and no receiving at his hands of fruits and offerings and burnt-offerings and fat, nor the fragrance of sweet savour, so as to accept it: and so fare every man or woman in Israel who defiles the sanctuary. 17. For this reason I have commanded thee, saying: "Testify this testimony to Israel: see how the Shechemites fared and their sons: how they were delivered into the hands of two sons of Jacob, and they slew them under tortures, and it was (reckoned) unto them for righteousness, and it is written down to them for righteousness. 18. 15. (Upon him). Added from the Latin.

Hide his eyes. This is the phrase in Lev. xx. 4, עֵינָיו מְסָתִים. The Latin, praeterierit et despexerit, seems to be a dittography.

Who commit uncleanness . . . defile the sanctuary of the Lord . . . profane His holy name. Cf. Lev. xx. 3, "Hath given of his seed unto Moloch, to defile my sanctuary . . . to profane my holy name."

(Then) will the whole nation together, etc. In Lev. xx. 5 only the man's family is involved in his guilt. Our author's enlargement of the area of the guilt is to justify the action of Simeon and Levi in slaying all the Shechemites. Our text (ver. 2) makes the whole people share in the rape of Dinah. In Test. Levi 6 a very evil account of them is given: οὕτως ἐδίωξαν Ἀβραάμ τὸν πατέρα ἡμῶν ξένον ὄντα, καὶ κατεπάτησαν τὰ ποίμνια δογκομένα ὄντα ἐπ' αὐτόν· καὶ Ἰεβλαὲ τὸν οἰκογενῆ αὐτοῦ σφόδρα ἀκλίσαντο. καὶ γε οὕτως ἐποίησαν πάντας τοὺς ξένους, ἐν δυναστείᾳ ἀρπάζοντες τὰς γυναῖκας αὐτῶν.

All the uncleanness (a b and Latin). c d "all this uncleanness."

Profanation of this (man). MSS read "this profanation." I have emended in accordance with the Latin.

16. [And no consideration of persons]. Bracketed as a dittography. Latin omits.

The fragrance of sweet savour. Latin: odorabitur odore suavitatis.

18. The ground for Levi's appointment to the priesthood is quite different in xxxii. 3. Levi is there consecrated to the work of the priesthood as the tithe or tenth in Jacob's family. Our author has thus made use of two conflicting traditions. Possibly a third is

the priesthood, and to be Levites, that they might minister before the Lord, as we, continually, and that Levi and his sons may be blessed for ever; for he was zealous to execute righteousness and judgment and vengeance on all those who arose against Israel. 19. And so they inscribe as a testimony in his favour on the heavenly tables blessing and righteousness before the God of all: 20. And we remember the righteousness which the man fulfilled during his life, at all periods of the year; until a thousand generations they will record it, and it will come to him and to his descendants after him, and he has been recorded on the heavenly tables as a friend and a righteous man. 21. All this account I have written for thee, and have commanded thee to say to the children of Israel, that they should not commit sin nor transgress the ordinances nor break the covenant which has been ordained for them, (but) that they should fulfil it and be recorded as friends. 22. But if they transgress and work uncleanness in every way, they will be recorded on the heavenly tables as adversaries, and they will be destroyed out of the book of life, and they will be recorded in the book of those who will be destroyed and with those who will be rooted out of the earth. 23. And on the day when the sons of Jacob slew Shechem a writing was recorded in their favour in heaven that they had executed righteousness and uprightness and to be found in Test. Levi 4, where Levi's appointment seems to be in answer to his prayer: εισηκούσεν οὖν ὁ ὑψιστος τῆς προσευχῆς σου τοῦ διελεῖν σε ἀπὸ τῆς ἀδικίας καὶ γενέσθαι αὐτῷ . . . λειτουργὸν τοῦ προσώπου αὐτοῦ. Another tradition appears in Shem. rabba 19 to the effect that Levi received the priesthood because it held fast to the rite of circumcision in Egypt when all the other tribes neglected it (Weber, *Jüd. Theol.*² p. 309). For other reasons cf. Baba bathra 123 a and Bamidbar rabba 7. See Singer (p. 115 note).

vengeance on the sinners, and it was written for a blessing. 24. And they brought Dinah, their sister, out of the house of Shechem, and they took captive everything that was in Shechem, their sheep and their oxen and their asses, and all their wealth, and all their flocks, and brought them all to Jacob their father. 25. And he reproached them because they had put the city to the sword; for he feared those who dwelt in the land, the Canaanites and the Perizzites. 26. And the dread of the Lord was upon all the cities which are around about Shechem, and they did not rise to pursue after the sons of Jacob; for terror had fallen upon them.

Jacob goes to Bethel to offer sacrifice, 1-3 (cf. Gen. xxxv. 2-4, 7, 14). Isaac blesses Levi, 4-17, and Judah, 18-22. Jacob recounts to Isaac how God prospered him, 24. Jacob goes to Bethel with Rebecca and Deborah, 26-30. Jacob blesses the God of his fathers, 31-32.

25. Reproached them. Text = ἐλάλησε πρὸς αὐτούς (so Latin, locutus est ad this context the Greek translator should have rendered by ἐλάλησε κατ' αὐτών.

The same wrong choice of the two possible renderings of this phrase is found also in the LXX of Jer. vi. 10, xxv. 2, xxvi. 2, etc. I press the above correction of the translation because the context requires על ויברך and not ויברך sponding passage. With our text "reproached them because they had put

you." 2. And they gave up the strange gods and that which was in their ears and which was [†]on their necks,[†] and the idols which Rachel stole from Laban her brother she gave wholly to Jacob. And he burnt and brake them to pieces and destroyed them, and hid them under an oak which is in the land of Shechem. 3. And he went up on the new moon of the seventh month to Bethel. And he built an altar at the place where he had slept, and he set up a pillar there, and he sent word to his father Isaac to come to him to his sacrifice, and to his mother Rebecca. 4. And Isaac said: "Let my son Jacob come, and let me see him before I die." 5. And Jacob went to his father Isaac and to his mother Rebecca, to the house of his father Abraham, and he took two of his sons with him, Levi and Judah, and he came to his father Isaac and to his mother Rebecca. 6. And Rebecca came forth from the tower to the front of it to kiss Jacob and embrace him; for her spirit had revived when she heard: "Behold Jacob thy son has come"; and she kissed him. 7. And she saw his two sons, and she recognised them, and said unto him: "Are these thy sons, my son?" and she embraced them and kissed them, and blessed them, saying: "In you shall the seed of Abraham become illustrious, and ye will prove a blessing on the earth." 8. And Jacob went in to Isaac his father, to the chamber where he lay, and his two sons were with him, and he took the hand of his father, and stooping down he kissed him, and Isaac clung to the neck

And which was †on their necks†. Here kêsâwdihômû seems corrupt for êdawihômû = "their hands," and the whole emended clause "which were in their hands" should be inserted after "strange gods."

Her brother. The MSS corruptly

give 'abûhâ = "her father" instead of 'êhûhâ.

3-4. The same incident is referred to in Test. Levi 9, where it says of Isaac: οὐκ ἦθέλησε πορευθῆναι μεθ' ἡμῶν εἰς Βεθῆλ.

of Jacob his son, and wept upon his neck. 9. And the darkness left the eyes of Isaac, and he saw the two sons of Jacob, Levi and Judah, and he said: "Are these thy sons, my son? for they are like thee." 10. And he said unto him that they were truly his sons: "And thou hast truly seen that they are truly my sons." 11. And they came near to him, and he turned and kissed them and embraced them both together. 12. And the spirit of prophecy came down into his mouth, and he took Levi by his right hand and Judah by his left. 13. And he turned to Levi first, and began to bless him first, and said unto him: "May the God of all, the very Lord of all the ages, bless thee and thy children throughout all the ages. 14. And may the Lord give to thee and to thy seed †greatness and great glory†, and cause thee and thy seed, from among all flesh, to approach Him to serve in His sanctuary as the angels of the presence and as the holy ones. (Even) as they, will the seed of thy sons be for glory and greatness and holiness, and may He make them great

9. Part of this verse with the subject matter of ver. 5 and 10 sqq. is attributed by Syncellus (i. 202) to Josephus: Ἰωσήπου. τῷ πνύ' ἔτει τοῦ Ἰσαὰκ ἐπανήλθεν Ἰακώβ πρὸς αὐτὸν ἀπὸ Μεσσοποταμίας. καὶ ἀναβλέψας Ἰσαὰκ καὶ ἰδὼν τοὺς υἱοὺς Ἰακώβ ἠλόγησε τὸν Λεὼν ὡς ἀρχιερεὰ καὶ τὸν Ἰούδαν ὡς βασιλέα καὶ ἀρχοντα.

10. Seen that they are truly my sons. The Latin has: Vidisti, pater, quoniam filii mei sunt, and is probably right; for 'amân="truly" may be corrupt for 'abâ="O father."

12. Spirit of prophecy. See note on xxv. 14.

13. Turned to Levi first, and began to bless him. Similarly in Test. Levi 9 it says of Isaac: καὶ εὐλόγησέ με ὁ πατήρ τοῦ πατρός μου, κατὰ πάντας τοὺς λόγους τῶν ὁράσεών μου ὧν εἶδον.

God of all. See note on xxii. 4.

14. To thy seed †greatness and great glory†. So c. ḅ "to thy seed the great greatness of glory." a is corrupt but points in the direction of b. Latin = magno intellegere gloriam ejus. This is decidedly better than the Ethiopic. By a slight change we can arrive at it from b. Hence we should probably render: "to thy great seed to understand His glory," or else by another change "to thy seed to have great understanding of His glory."

Serve in His sanctuary as the angels of the presence and as the holy ones. On these two classes, see notes ii. 2, 18, xv. 27. Here "the holy ones" appear to form a distinct class, whereas in xv. 27 they are used as a comprehensive term for the two (or "three" according to the Latin) highest orders. Levi is to serve in the sanctuary as the two highest orders of angels serve in the highest heaven. One or two such orders are mentioned in Test. Levi 3 (Armenian vers. A) as λειτουργοῦντες.

May He make them great. Lat. has sanctificabit.

unto all the ages. 15. And they will be princes and judges, and chiefs of all the seed of the sons of Jacob;

They will speak the word of the Lord in righteousness,
And they will judge all His judgments in righteousness.

And they will declare My ways to Jacob
And My paths to Israel.

The blessing of the Lord will be given in their mouths
To bless all the seed of the beloved.

16. Thy mother has called thy name Levi,
And justly has she called thy name;

Thou wilt be joined to the Lord
And be the companion of all the sons of Jacob;

15. In this verse a double function is assigned to the descendants of Levi: they are to rule the nation (to be "princes and judges and chiefs") and to be the priests of the nation ("The blessing of the Lord will be given in their mouths"). This description, combined with other facts peculiar to the Maccabean period, requires us to recognise here the early Maccabean princes. The blessing given to Judah (verses 18, 19) confirms this interpretation.

Princes and judges, and chiefs. The Latin omits "and chiefs." We might compare Test. Levi 8: ἀρχιερεῖς καὶ κριταὶ καὶ γραμματεῖς, for the author of that work had either our text or a source common to both before him. In the same chapter of the Test. Levi there is, as Bousset (Z. f. NTliche Wissenschaft, 1900, pp. 165-167) has already pointed out, an undoubted description of Johannes Hyrcanus: Λεβὶ, εἰς τρεῖς ἀρχὰς διαιρεθήσεται τὸ σπέρμα σου εἰς σημεῖον δόξης κυρίου ἐπερχομένης (so MS P. Arm. = τῆς παρουσίας τοῦ κυρίου). These three offices to be administered by Levi's descendants are to be signs of the coming of the Messiah. What these are is described in the words that follow: ὁ πρῶτος κληρὸς ἔσται μέγας· ὑπὲρ αὐτὸν οὐ γενήσεται ἕτερος (MS R). ὁ δεύτερος ἔσται ἐν ιερωσύνῃ (Arm. as Bousset remarks prob. = ἡ δὲ δευτέρα ἔσται ἱερατεία): ὁ τρίτος ἐπικληθήσεται αὐτῷ ὄνομα κοινόν, ὅτι βασιλεὺς ἐν (so Arm.: Greek ἐκ) Ἰούδα ἀναστήσεται, καὶ ποιήσει ἱερατεῖαν νέαν. The first refers to Moses, the greatest of Levi's descendants; the second denotes Aaron and the Aaronitic priesthood; the third the Maccabean ruling priests, and in particular to Johannes Hyrcanus, for the subsequent words ἡ δὲ παρουσία αὐτοῦ ἀγαπητῇ, ὡς προφῆτης ὕψιστου point to his prophetic gifts. The three-fold offices of prophet, priest and king were never claimed for any Jewish ruler save this Maccabean prince. See Josephus, Ant. xiii. 10. 7; Bell. Jud. i. 2. 8.

The blessing of the Lord will be given in their mouths. Cf. Sir. 1. 20: δοῦναι εὐλογίαν κυρίῳ ἐκ χειλέων αὐτοῦ, and Test. Reuben 6: πρὸς τὸν Λεβὶ ἐγγίσατε ἐν ταπεινώσει καρδίας, ἵνα δέξησθε εὐλογίαν ἐκ τοῦ στόματος αὐτοῦ.

16. Joined to the Lord . . . the companion, etc. In the first, if not in the second, there is a play on the name Levi, as in Gen. xxix. 34 "will my husband be joined to me (לֵוִי יִשְׁתַּחֲוֶה) . . . therefore was his name called Levi" (לֵוִי): cf. also Num. xviii. 2, 4. Instead of "joined to the Lord" the Latin has

Let His table be thine,
 And do thou and thy sons eat thereof;
 And may thy table be full unto all generations,
 And thy food fail not unto all the ages.

17. And let all who hate thee fall down before thee,
 And let all thy adversaries be rooted out and perish;
 And blessed be he that blesses thee,
 And cursed be every nation that curses thee.

18. And to Judah he said:
 May the Lord give thee strength and power
 To tread down all that hate thee;
 A prince shalt thou be, thou and one of thy sons, over
 the sons of Jacob;
 May thy name and the name of thy sons go forth and traverse every land and region.

Then will the Gentiles fear before thy face,

ad decorem Dei, which seems to refer to Levi as derived from לֵוִי, "a crown" or "garland."

Let His table be thine, etc. Cf. Test. Levi 8:

καὶ ἔδεσθε πᾶν ὠραῖον ὀράσει
 καὶ τὴν τράπεζαν κυρίου διανεμήσεται
 τὸ σπέρμα σου.

Also Test. Judah 21: καὶ γὰρ αὐτὸν (Λεὐὶ) ὑπὲρ ὑμᾶς (Arm. Gk. σε) ἐξελέξατο Κύριος ἐγγίλξειν αὐτῷ καὶ ἐσθίειν τράπεζαν αὐτοῦ.

18-19. In the note on ver. 15 we saw that according to the Test. Levi 8 the three great offices held in turn by the descendants of Levi were to be signs of the coming Messiah who was to spring from Levi or from Judah or from Judah and Levi combined (?). Thus according to Levi 18, Reuben 6, the Messiah (a Maccabean priest-king?) was to spring from Levi and to be the eternal High Priest and civil ruler of the nation. During his reign sin was gradually to come to an end just as our author supposes

(xxiii. 26-30), the gates of Paradise to be opened and the saints to eat of the tree of life, as in Eth. Enoch xxv. 5, in an eternal Messianic kingdom on earth, as in Eth. Enoch xc. 29-38. In Judah 24-25 and Dan 5 the Messiah is to spring not from Levi but from Judah, as in Eth. Enoch xc. See Art. "Testaments of the XII Patriarchs" (in Bible Dict. vol. iv.). It is very probable that this last view underlies our text. The words "a prince . . . thou and one of thy sons" admit most naturally of this interpretation. If this is right, then the Messiah is to spring from Judah. In a kingdom which attains to realisation only gradually (see notes on i. 29, xxiii. 26-30) and not catastrophically no rôle seems to be assigned to him, as is also the case in Eth. Enoch xc. On the other hand this seems to be the earliest instance of the presence of a Messiah in a temporary Messianic kingdom (see note on xxiii. 30).

And Isaac said unto Jacob his son: "I am not able to go with thee; for I am old and not able to bear the way: go, my son, in peace; for I am one hundred and sixty-five years this day; I am no longer able to journey; set thy mother (on an ass) and let her go with thee. 28. And I know, my son, that thou hast come on my account, and may this day be blessed on which thou hast seen me alive, and I also have seen thee, my son. 29. Mayest thou prosper and fulfil the vow which thou hast vowed; and put not off thy vow; for thou wilt be called to account as touching the vow; now therefore make haste to perform it, and may He be pleased who has made all things, to whom thou hast vowed the vow." 30. And he said to Rebecca: "Go with Jacob thy son"; and Rebecca went with Jacob her son, and Deborah with her, and they came to Bethel. 31. And Jacob remembered the prayer with which his father had blessed him and his two sons, Levi and Judah, and he rejoiced and blessed the God of his fathers, Abraham and Isaac. 32. And he said: "Now I know that I have an eternal hope, and my sons also, before the God of all"; and thus is it ordained concerning the two; and they record it as an eternal testimony unto them on the heavenly tables how Isaac blessed them.

Ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν γίνου ἐς ἱερέα κυρίου, σὺ καὶ τὸ σπέρμα σου ἕως αἰῶνος. Cf. also Test. Levi 5. In ch. 9 of the same Testament Jacob is said to have had this dream also.

Priest of the Most High God. This was the specific title chosen by the Maccabean priest-kings. Thus they are called sacerdotēs summi Dei in Assumpt. Mos. vi. 1 (where my emendation is wrong): Hyrcanus II. is designated ἀρχιερεὺς θεοῦ ὑψίστου by Joseph. (Ant. xvi. 6. 2), and the Rosh ha-Shanah 18b states that it used to be said: "In such a year of Johanan priest of the Most High God." This title, anciently borne by Melchizedek (Gen. xiv. 18), was revived by the new holders of the high priesthood. Our author has Gen. xiv. 18-20 before him; for in the next verse he adopts a clause from Gen. xiv. 20: "And he gave him a tenth of all." We have seen in the note on xxxi. 18-19 that the Messiah was to spring from this family according to Test. Levi 18. The same expectation seems to be at the base of Ps. cx. 1-4, which constitutes a Messianic hymn addressed to Simeon or Simon the Maccabee. As Bickell has recognised, this Ps. forms an acrostic on the name Simeon. On the frequency of this divine title "Most High" in the second cent. B.C. see note on xxxvi. 16.

Him and his sons for ever. This phrase in the same connection is found in Test. Levi 8, already quoted above.

2. Jacob rose early in the morning, etc. So also Test. Levi 9: καὶ ἀναστὰς τὸ πρωὶ ἀπεδεκάτωσε πάντα δι' ἐμοῦ τῷ κυρίῳ, though here the offering is said to be through Levi.

3. Jacob counted his sons from him (i.e., Benjamin) upwards and Levi fell to the portion of the Lord, etc. Our text in some form was before Cedrenus, i. 60: καὶ πάντα ἀποδεκατώσας ἃ ἐκέκτητο, τελευταῖον ὑποβάλλει κλήρῳ τοὺς παῖδας, καὶ τὸν Λεὼν τῷ Θεῷ ἀφιερῶι, ἐτῶν ὑπάρχοντα ἡ' καὶ ἀρχιερέα ἀναδεικνυσι, δέκατον ὄντα ἀπὸ ἐσχάτου κατὰ τὸν τῆς ἀστρολογίας (λόγον). And still more clearly before his predecessor Syncellus, i. 200: Ἰακώβ ἀποδεκατώσας τὰ ἑαυτοῦ τὸν Λεὼν ἡ' ἐτῶν ὄντα ἀρχιερέα ἀνέδειξε, ἵ' ὄντα ἀπὸ τοῦ ἐσχάτου κατὰ τὸν τῆς ἀναστροφῆς λόγον. And on the fifteenth of this month, he brought to the altar fourteen oxen from amongst the cattle, and twenty-eight rams, and forty-nine sheep, and seven lambs, and twenty-one kids of the goats as a burnt-offering on the altar of sacrifice, well pleasing for a sweet savour before God. 5. This was his offering, in consequence of the vow which he had vowed that he would give a tenth, with their fruit-offerings and their drink-offerings. 6. And when the fire had consumed it, he burnt incense on the fire over the fire, and for a thank-offering two oxen and four rams and four sheep, four he-goats, and two sheep of a year old, and two kids of the goats; and thus he did daily for seven days. 7. And he and all his sons and his men were eating (this) with joy there during seven days and blessing and thanking the Lord, who had delivered him out of all his tribulation and had

R. Eliez. ch. 37 (Beer, Buch d. Jub. 36-37), though the method of reckoning is different. Jacob is said to have separated the first four sons born of his four wives and to have counted his remaining sons from Simeon to Benjamin and then to have begun again with Simeon. Levi thus came to be the tenth.

Filled his hands. The technical expression for appointment to the priesthood. Cf. Exod. xxviii. 41, xxix. 9.

4. This celebration of the feast of tabernacles is peculiar as regards the number of victims. According to the Levitical law on each of the seven days a kid of the goats was offered as a sin-offering, and two rams and fourteen lambs as a burnt-offering. Throughout the seven days seventy bullocks were offered, beginning with thirteen on the first day, the number being diminished daily till on the seventh day seven were offered. See Num. xxix. 12-40; Lev. xxiii. 34-36, 39-44.

Seven lambs. MSS=60, but since Latin has "septem," and the heptadic system prevails, we may assume with Rösensch (p. 147) that the corruption arose from a confusion of ξ' and ζ'.

given him his vow. 8. And he tithed all the clean animals, and made a burnt sacrifice, but the unclean animals he gave (not) to Levi his son, and he gave him all the souls of the men. 9. And Levi discharged the priestly office at Bethel before Jacob his father in preference to his ten brothers, and he was a priest there, and Jacob gave his vow : thus he tithed again the tithe to the Lord and sanctified it, and it became holy unto Him. 10. And for this reason it is ordained on the heavenly tables as a law for the tithing again the tithe to eat before the Lord from year to year, in the place where it is chosen that His name should dwell, and to this law there is no limit of days for ever. 11. This ordinance is written that it may be fulfilled from year to year in eating the second tithe before the Lord in the place where it has been chosen, and nothing shall remain over from it from this year to the year following. 12. For in its year shall the seed be eaten till the days of the gathering of the seed of the year, and the wine till the days of the wine, and the oil till the days of its season. 13. And all that is left thereof and becomes old, let it be regarded as polluted : let it be burnt with fire, for it is unclean. 14. And thus let them eat it together in the sanctuary, and let them not suffer it to become old. 15. And all the tithes of the oxen and sheep shall be holy unto the Lord, and shall

Gave him all the souls of the men. Levi was to exercise his priestly functions on behalf of these.

9. Discharged the priestly office, or "was constituted a priest."

Tithed again the tithe to the Lord. Cf. Num. xviii. 26.

10. To eat before the Lord, etc. Our text holds closely to the law in Deut. xiv. 22 sq. Cf. Tobit i. 7.

11. The second tithe (so a). bcd "the tithe again."

15. The tithes of the oxen and sheep. These tithes are mentioned in the O.T. only in Lev. xxvii. 32 and 2 Chron. xxxi. 6. They were unknown to Nehemiah (x. 37-39, xii. 44-47, xiii. 5, 12). Our author took this law of tithing literally, but rabbinic tradition (Rosh ha-Shanah i. 1, quoted by Dillmann on Lev. xxvii. 32) sought to weaken the statement, and made it out to be merely a tithe of the yearly increase, but the context offers not the slightest justification for this step (see Bertholet on Lev. in loc.). See our text xiii. 26.

belong to His priests, which they will eat before Him from year to year; for thus is it ordained and engraven regarding the tithe on the heavenly tables. 16. And on the following night, on the twenty-second day of this month, Jacob resolved to build that place, and to surround the court with a wall, and to sanctify it and make it holy for ever, for himself and his children after him. 17. And the Lord appeared to him by night and blessed him and said unto him: 'Thy name shall not be called Jacob, but Israel shall they name thy name.' 18. And He said unto him again: "I am the Lord who created the heaven and the earth, and I shall increase thee and multiply thee exceedingly, and kings will come forth from thee, and they will judge everywhere where-ever the foot of the sons of men has trodden. 19. And I shall give to thy seed all the earth which is under heaven, and they will judge all the nations according to their desires, and after that they will get possession of the whole earth and inherit it for ever." 20. And He finished speaking with him, and He went up from him, and Jacob looked till He had ascended into heaven. 21. And he saw in a vision of the night, and behold an angel descended from heaven with seven tablets in his hands, and he gave them to Jacob, and he read them and knew all that was written therein which would befall him and his sons throughout all the ages. 22. And he showed him all that was written on the tablets, and said unto him: "Do not build this place, and do not make it an eternal sanctuary, and do not dwell here; for this is not the place. Go to the house of Abraham thy father and dwell with Isaac thy father until the day of the death of thy father. 23. For in Egypt thou wilt die in peace, and in this land thou wilt be buried with honour in the sepulchre of thy fathers, with Abraham and Isaac. 24. Fear not, for as thou hast seen and read it, thus will it all be; and do thou write down everything as thou hast seen and read." 25. And Jacob said: "Lord, how can I remember all that I have read and seen?" And he said unto him: "I will bring all things to thy remembrance." 26. And he went up from him, and he awoke from his sleep, and he remembered everything which he had read and seen, and he wrote down all the words which he had read and seen. 27. And he celebrated there yet another day, and he sacrificed thereon according to all that he sacrificed on the former days, and called its name †"Addition,"† for †this day was added,† and the former days he called "The Feast." 28. And thus it was manifested that it should be, and it is written on the heavenly tables: wherefore it was revealed to him that he should celebrate it, and add it to the seven days

Our text seems to be the source of the words ascribed by Origen (Fabricius, Cod. Pseud. V.T. i. 761) to the Prayer of Joseph: Διόπερ ἐν τῇ προσευχῇ τοῦ Ἰωσήφ δύναται οὕτω νοεῖσθαι τὸ λεγόμενον ὑπὸ τοῦ Ἰακώβ. ἀνέγνω γὰρ ἐν ταῖς πλαξὶ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ὅσα συμβήσεται ὑμῖν καὶ τοῖς υἱοῖς ὑμῶν. Cf. xlv. 14.

27. †Addition†. This eighth day after the seven days of the feast of tabernacles was called תַּעֲרָה (2 Chron. vii. 9), in New Hebrew תַּעֲרָה (Joseph. Ant. iii. 10. 6, Ἀσδρα): likewise the seventh day of the Passover feast. The translation in our text, "addition," points to some corruption in the Greek or Hebrew. The Latin "reten-tatio" is a possible rendering. Rönisch suggests that ἐπίσχεσις stood in the Greek version but was corrupted into ἐπίθεσις in the copy before the Ethiopic translator. Hence we might render: "Called its name 'a keeping back' for on that day he was kept back." Thus our author connects the origin of this additional feast-day with Jacob's detention an eighth day in Bethel. In the Talmud (Chag. 18a) the idea of "keeping back" (עָצָר) is connected with work. For it states that on the seventh day of the Passover "there must be a keeping back from every kind of work" (חֲשִׁבִּיעִי עָצָר בְּכָל מְלָאכָה). See Levy's Neuhebr. Lexicon, iii. 680. Scholars are now generally agreed that the word עָצָר means "sacred assembly."

†This day was added†. Here we must suppose ἐπετέθη as corrupt for ἐπισχέθη. See rendering proposed in preceding note. The last clause of the next verse may have given rise to the corruption or wrong correction.

The Feast. This agrees exactly with rabbinic usage. The feast of tabernacles was called תַּח = "the Feast." Cf. Sukk. 42b, 48a. Josephus (Ant. viii. 4. 1) designates it as ἑορτὴ ἀγῶνιστῆ καὶ μεγίστη and Philo ἑορτὴν μεγίστην. 29. A very corrupt verse in the Ethiopic and partially corrupt in the Latin. The restored translation is given below.

of the feast. 29. And its name was called †“Addition,”† because that† it was recorded amongst the days of the feast days, †according to† the number of the days of the year. 30. And in the night, on the twenty-third of this month, Deborah Rebecca’s nurse died, and they buried her beneath the city under the oak of the river, and he called the name of this place, “The river of Deborah,” and the oak, “The oak of the mourning of Deborah.” 31. And Rebecca went and returned to her house to his father Isaac, and Jacob sent by her hand rams and sheep and he-goats that she should prepare a meal for his father such as he desired. 32. And he went after his mother till he came to the land of Kabrâtân, and he dwelt there. 33. And Rachel bare a son in the night, and called his name “Son of my sorrow”; for she suffered in giving him birth: but his father called his name Benjamin, on the eleventh of the eighth month in the first of the sixth week of this jubilee. 34. And Rachel died there and she was buried in the land of Ephrath, the same is Bethlehem, and Jacob built a pillar on the grave of Rachel, on the road above her grave.

†Addition†. See note on ver. 27.

†Because that†. The Ethiopic has a peculiar phrase here ‘esma ‘enta which usually = nam quod, but since an analogous yet rare phrase kama enta = quasi occurs in xliii. 19, xlviii. 13, we may take it that ‘esma ‘enta = propter quod as the Latin version has it. But this gives no right sense. The reason of the name is not given here but in ver. 27. Hence I suggest that propter quod = δὲτι = ἦ, which the Greek translator should have rendered in this context by ὅτε.

It was recorded. Text of MSS ungrammatical, but by a change of vocalisation in one letter we arrive at the above.

Amongst the days = ba ‘elâta emended with Latin “in dies” from basēm’a = “for a testimony” (b d). c has basalâm = “in peace.”

†According to†. Here we expect “in.” Accordingly I suggest that we have here an original corruption of †

into †. Thus the whole verse should run: “And its name was called ‘a keeping back’ (i.e. עצרת), when it was recorded amongst the days of the feast-days in the number of the days of the year.”

30. Cf. Gen. xxxv. 8. Deborah dies on the eighth day of the feast of tabernacles.

Of this place. So d, Latin and Vulg. Gen. xxxv. 8 = “of this place.” bc = “of this river.” a omits.

32. Land of Kabrâtân. This goes back to כְּבֵרֵת הָאָרָץ = “some distance” in Gen. xxxv. 16, but the translation like that of the LXX (Χαβραθα) took כְּבֵרֵת to be a proper name.

And he hid himself at night, and he entered the house of Bilhah [at night], and he found her sleeping alone on a bed in her house. 4. And he lay with her, and she awoke and saw, and behold Reuben was lying with her in the bed, and she uncovered the border of her covering and seized him, and cried out, and discovered that it was Reuben. 5. And she was ashamed because of him, and released her hand from him, and he fled. 6. And she lamented because of this thing exceedingly, and did not tell it to any one. 7. XXXIII. 1. To the south of Magdalâdrâ'êf. This name is a compression of מגדל עדר אפרת, "the tower of Eder of Ephrath," Gen. xxxv. 21. See a probably corrupt form of this name in xxxiv. 15. In Test. Reuben 3, where the same scene is recounted, we have ἐν Γαδὲρ πλησίον Ἐφραθᾶ.

And he went to his father Isaac . . . 2. And Reuben saw Bilhah, etc. It was during Jacob's absence with Isaac that the outrage was done. So Test. Reuben 3: ἀπόντος γὰρ Ἰακώβ τοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν πρὸς Ἰσαὰκ τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῦ, δντων ἡμῶν ἐν Γαδὲρ, πλησίον Ἐφραθᾶ οἴκου Βηθλεέμ, Βάλλα . . . ἀκάλυφος κατέκειτο ἐν τῷ κοιτῶνι.

2. Saw Bilhah . . . bathing, etc. Cf. Test. Reuben 3: εἰ μὴ γὰρ εἶδον ἐγὼ Βάλλαν λουομένην ἐν σκεπινῶ τόπω, κ.τ.λ. A very different account of Reuben's conduct appears in later works: Gen. rabba 98, 99; Ps.-Jon. on Gen. xxxv. 22, Shabb. 55 b and the Book of Jashar (op. cit. 1172). In these passages Reuben's guilt is denied absolutely. These writings state that on Rachel's death Jacob settled in the tent of Bilhah her handmaid, and that Reuben, being indignant on behalf of his mother Leah, went into Bilhah's tent and withdrew his father's couch from it, or threw Bilhah's couch into disorder etc., and that on this ground the Scripture held that he lay with Bilhah. In Shabb. 55 b it is recounted that the earlier teachers, R. Joshua and R. Eliezer, accepted the narrative in Gen. xxxv. 22.

3. And he hid himself . . . house of Bilhah [at night]. Latin is preferable: Et introivit nocte occulte ad Ballan. The second "at night" is a dittography.

4. He lay with her, and she awoke. Test. Reuben 3 agrees with this: καὶ γὰρ εἰσελθὼν . . . ἔπραξα τὴν ἀσέβειαν, καί, καταλιπὼν αὐτὴν κοιμωμένην, ἐξῆλθον.

5. She was ashamed because of him. Latin: confusus est ab ea.

him: "I am not clean for thee, for I have been defiled as regards thee; for Reuben has defiled me, and has lain with me in the night, and I was asleep, and did not discover until he uncovered my skirt and slept with me." 8. And Jacob was exceedingly wroth with Reuben because he had lain with Bilhah, because he had uncovered his father's skirt. 9. And Jacob did not approach her again because Reuben had defiled her. And as for any man who uncovers his father's skirt his deed is wicked exceedingly, for he is abominable before the Lord. 10. For this reason it is written and ordained on the heavenly tables that a man should not lie with his father's wife, and should not uncover his father's skirt, for this is unclean: they shall surely die together, the man who lies with his father's wife and the woman also, for they have wrought uncleanness on the earth. 11. And there shall be nothing unclean before our God in the nation which He has chosen for Himself as a possession. 12. And again, it is written a second time: "Cursed be he who lieth with the wife of his father, for he hath uncovered his father's shame"; and all the holy ones of the Lord said "So be it; so be it." 13. And do thou, Moses, command the children of Israel that they observe this word; for it (entails) a punishment of death; and it is unclean, and there is no atonement for ever to atone for the man who has committed this, but he is to be put to death and slain, and stoned with stones, and rooted out from the midst of the people of our God. 14. For to no man who does so in Israel is it permitted to remain alive a single day on the earth, for he is abominable and unclean. 15. And let them not say: to Reuben was granted life and forgiveness after he had lain with his father's concubine, and to her also though she had a husband, and her husband Jacob, his father, was still alive. 16. For until that time there had not been revealed the ordinance and judgment and law in its completeness for all, but in thy days (it has been revealed) as a law of seasons and of days, and an everlasting law for the everlasting generations. 17. And for this law there is no consummation of days, and no atonement for it, but they must both be rooted out in the midst of the nation: on the day whereon they committed it they shall slay them. 18. And do thou, Moses, write (it) down for Israel that they may observe it, and do according to these words, and not commit a sin unto death; for the Lord our God is judge, who respects not persons and accepts not gifts. 19. And tell them these words of the covenant, that they may hear and observe, and be on their guard with respect to them, and not be destroyed and rooted out of the land; for an uncleanness, and an abomination, and a contamination, and a pollution are all they who commit it on the earth before our God. 20. And there is no greater sin than the fornication which they commit on earth; for Israel is a holy nation unto the Lord its God, and a nation of inheritance, and a priestly and royal nation and for (His own) possession; and there shall no such uncleanness appear in the midst of the holy nation. 21. Hiding themselves. Latin gives "et sederunt." This seems right ; for there is no hint of their hiding in any of the other versions of this legend.

2-8. In these verses we have a short outline of an ancient legend which, already attested in Gen. xlviii. 22, tells of Jacob's conquest of Shechem (see xlv. 14 and notes on p. 201), and is probably here recast so as to call to mind some of the great victories of the Maccabees (see below). A fuller account of this legend is given in Test. Judah 3-7, and a still fuller in the Midrash Wajjissau which is translated by Gaster in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel, 1899, pp. 80-87. I have introduced some corrections into this translation from a comparison of the Hebrew MS in the Bodleian, though I have not seen the British Museum MS from which Gaster has drawn occasional phrases. A version almost identical with that of Gaster's has been preserved in the Jalkut Shimeoni i. 40 d-41 b, and has been reprinted by Jellinek in his Bet ha-Midrash, iii. 1-5. A German translation of part of this Midrash by Jellinek will be found in Rönsch, 390-394. From a comparison of the Hebrew text I have observed that this translation has been carelessly edited in one or more points. Thus on p. 393 line 11 instead of "Pasasi von Aram" we should read "Pasusi, König von Sartan, und Laban, König von Aram." A much enlarged and elaborated form of the legend is given in the Book of Jashar (see the French translation: Dict. des Apocr. ii. 1173-1184). So far as I have compared this translation and the text it is trustworthy. A short but interesting study of this subject has appeared from the pen of Bousset in the Z. f. NTliche Wissenschaft, 1890, pp. 202-204, but in some cases he has been misled by the translations, and in others I have been obliged to disagree with his identifications.

A full treatment of this legend belongs rather to the Test. Judah 3-7, where the order of events corresponds closely with that in the Midrash Wajjissau, and in many cases presupposes details which are found in that Midrash. That some form of this legend is very ancient is attested by the fact that it is referred to in Gen. xlviii. 22 where Jacob declares: "I have given to thee one portion (שָׁכָם)

אֶחָד) above thy brethren, which I took out of the hand of the Amorite with my sword and with my bow." So the Rev. Version following the rendering of Onkelos and the Syriac. But as most scholars are now agreed, שָׁכָם here refers to Shechem. So anciently also the LXX (Σικιμα) and Ps.-Jon. on Gen. xlviii. 22 קרתא דְּשִׁכָּם, the city of Shechem). Thus our verse points to an overthrow of Shechem by all Israel under Jacob's direction, and the fact that Jacob makes it over to one of his sons to the exclusion of the rest can only be justified by the further fact that he was the personal leader of the war and had captured Shechem with his sword and with his bow (see Holzinger's Commentary in loc.). Thus this form of the story differs clearly from that in Gen. xxiv. There Jacob has no part whatever in the onslaught on Shechem and is subsequently hostile to its authors (xxiv. 30, xlix. 5-7). But the possibly older account has survived in the present work as in Gen. xlviii. 22. Before we pass on, we might observe that later rabbinic tradition changed "sword and bow" into "merits and good deeds" Targ. Jerus. in loc.; Gen. rabba 97 (to these Beer (Buch d. Jub. p. 3) adds: Baba bathra 123 a), and in a corrupt text of Onkelos we find "prayer and supplication."

Returning now to the legend in our text, I append here a table in which the proper names in the various authorities are compared.

3. Sorrowful. Latin is "pusill-animes."

4. King[s] of Tâphû. In this and all the other cases in this verse we should read "king" and not the plural. The Latin has the singular in all the instances but one. Tâphû is to be identified with Τεφών in 1 Macc. and this with Tappuah in Jos. xv. 53, xvi. 8. It was fortified by Bacchides against Jonathan (1 Macc. ix. 50).

†'Arêsa.† This is corrupt for Aser (cf. Tobit i. 2, 'Ασήρ) or rather Asor, i.e., Hazor (חזר). See above table. At Hazor, according to 1 Macc. xi. 67 sqq.; Joseph. Ant. xiii. 5. 7, Jonathan won a great victory over the Syrians. Parathon, who was king of Hazor (see table above), is of the same name as one of the cities fortified by Bacchides (1 Macc. ix. 50).

Sêrâgân. In the Hebrew authorities this word appears as Sartan. I can discover nothing further about it.

Gâ'as. This may be the Gaash (גאש) in the hill-country of Ephraim, where Joshua was buried (Jos. xxiv. 30; Judg. ii. 9).

Bêthôrôn. The city Bethhoron was closely associated with the victories of the Maccabees. Thus Judas defeated Seron, a Syrian general, in the neighbourhood of Bethhoron and put 800 of his troops to the sword (1 Macc. iii. 13-24; Jos. Ant. xii. 7. 1). A few years later it was the scene of

And he prevailed over them, and imposed tribute on them that they should pay him tribute, five fruit products of their land, and he built Rôbêl and Tamnâtârês. 9. And Judas's great victory over Nicanor when 9000 Syrians were slain (1 Macc. vii. 39-47; Joseph. Ant. xii. 10. 5). It was subsequently fortified by Bacchides against Jonathan (1 Macc. ix. 50; Joseph. Ant. xiii. 1. 3).

(And). Supplied from Latin.

6. Six thousand (a b d). c gives 800.

7. According to our text six kings were slain out of the seven. This agrees with Test. Jud. 4.

8-9. With this passage cf. Test. Jud. 7: ἐδεήθησαν τοῦ πατρὸς μου καὶ ἐποίησεν εἰρήνην μετ' αὐτῶν, καὶ οὐκ ἐποίησαμεν αὐτοῖς οὐθέν κακόν, ἀλλ' ἐποίησαμεν αὐτοὺς ὑποσπόνδους, καὶ ἀπεδώκαμεν αὐτοῖς πᾶσαν τὴν αἰχμαλωσίαν. καὶ ᾠκοδόμησα ἐγὼ τὴν Θάμνα καὶ ὁ πατήρ μου τὴν 'Ραβαήλ (O, 'Ροβαήλ P). It will be observed that whereas in our text Jacob recovers his herds, in the Test. Jud. the sons of Jacob restore to the Amorites the herds which they had taken from them. This divergence in the tradition is seen also in the Hebrew versions. Thus the Yalkut (in Jellinek's Bet ha-Midrash) supports our text: "All the Amorites . . . came without arms . . . and besought them to make peace, and they made peace with them and gave them Timna (חַמְנָה) and all the land of Hararya (חֲרִירָה). And then Jacob made peace with them, and they delivered up to the sons of Jacob all the cattle which they had taken from them, (returning) two for each one, and they gave them tribute, and returned (הוֹרִיר) to them all the booty; and Jacob turned to Timnah and Judah to Arbæel (אַרְבָּאֵל)." On the other hand Gaster's translation of the Chronicles of

Jerahmeel (pp. 83-84) supports the view in the Test. Jud.: "All the Amorites came without arms and promised to keep peace (and friendship, and they gave unto Jacob Timna and the whole land of Hararya). Then Jacob made peace with them, and the sons of Jacob restored them all the sheep they had captured from them, and in returning them gave double, two for one. And Jacob built Timnah (חֲמִנָה) and Judah built Zabel (זַבְאֵל)." This translation does not represent the Bodleian MS, which (fol. 30 a) runs as follows: "All the Amorites . . . came to them without arms and surrendered themselves to be their hirelings, and they made peace with them, and they gave a present and they restored to them Jacob (sic, here I think the ungrammatical יַעֲקֹב לָחֵם is corrupt rather for יַעֲקֹב לְבִנֵי: hence "restored to the sons of Jacob" as in the Yalkut and our text; or for יַעֲקֹב בְּנֵי: hence "the sons of Jacob restored" as we presume is the text of the British Museum MS occasionally used by Gaster) all the cattle which they had captured twice over, and they restored (reading חֲוִירִי instead of the intransitive חוֹרִי) the booty and Jacob built (sic) and also Judah (sic)." The Bodleian MS mentions no towns. The view represented in the Test. Jud. has thus no indubitable support in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel. It has such, however, in the Book of Jashar (op. cit. ii. 1184): Les fils de Jacob . . . leur rendirent tous les hommes qu'ils avaient emmenés prisonniers . . . et autre butin."

8. Rôbêl. This is most probably corrupt for Arbæel, cf. Yalkut (אַרְבָּאֵל) quoted in preceding note. Thus Arbæel appears in Test. Jud. 7 as 'Ραβαήλ (O) or 'Ροβαήλ (P), 'Ραμβαήλ (CR); זַבְאֵל apparently in the Brit. Museum

he returned in peace, and made peace with them, and they became his servants, until the day that he and his sons went down into Egypt. 10. And in the seventh year of 2149 A.M. this week he sent Joseph to learn about the welfare of his brothers from his house to the land of Shechem, and he found them in the land of Dothan. 11. And they dealt treacherously with him, and formed a plot against him to slay him, but changing their minds, they sold him to Ishmaelite merchants, and they brought him down into Egypt, and they sold him to Potiphar, the eunuch of Pharaoh, the chief of the cooks, priest of the city of 'Ēlêw. 12. And the sons of Jacob slaughtered a kid, and dipped the coat of Joseph in the blood, and sent (it) to Jacob their father on the tenth of the seventh month. 13. And he mourned all that night, for they had brought it to him in the evening, and he became feverish with mourning for his death, and he said: "An evil beast hath devoured Joseph"; and all the members of his house [mourned with him that day, and they] were grieving and mourning with him all that day. 14. And his sons and

MS used by Gaster but not in the Bodleian (see preceding note). We have here most probably the stronghold Arbela mentioned in 1 Macc. ix. 2, where it is said that Bacchides and Alcimus "went by the way that leadeth to Galgala and encamped against Mesaloth which is in Arbela (Μεσσαλώθ την ἐν Ἀρβήλοις) and got possession of it" (cf. Joseph. Ant. xii. 11. 1). Here it seems best with Tuch and Wellhausen to read Μεσαδωθ = מצודות = "strongholds" (see Enyc. Bib. i. 291). Arbela is mentioned in the Book of Jashar (op. cit. ii. 1178) as one of the cities put to the sword by the sons of Jacob in this war.

Tamnâtârêš = Θαμναθάρες = תַּמְנַתְאֲרֵשׁ, Judg. ii. 9. This appears as Timna (תַּמְנָה) in the Jalkut; see note on verses 8-9. It was one of the cities fortified by Bacchides against Jonathan (1 Macc. ix. 50).

9. Made peace with them, and they became his servants. The Hebrew for these words is preserved in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel; see note on verses 8-9.

10-11. Cf. Gen. xxxvii. 12, 13, 17, 20, 28, 36.

10. Dothan. Eth. Dôthâ'im.

11. Eunuch of Pharaoh. Here "Eunuch" goes back to מְרִיס. But this word need not be taken literally but simply as meaning "a court official"; cf. 2 Kings xxv. 19.

Chief of the cooks. Cf. xxxix. 2, 14, xl. 10. Our text and the LXX of Gen. xxxvii. 36 wrongly take שֶׁרֵפְתָּהִים as = ἀρχιμάγειρος. It should be "captain of the body-guard."

City of 'Ēlêw = Ἐλίου πόλεως (cf. LXX Gen. xli. 45, 50, xlii. 20), i.e. On (אֵן).

12-14. Cf. Gen. xxxvii. 31-35.

his daughter rose up to comfort him, but he refused to be comforted for his son. 15. And on that day Bilhah heard that Joseph had perished, and she died mourning him, and she was living in †Qafrâtêf,† and Dinah also, his daughter, died after Joseph had perished. And there came these three mournings upon Israel in one month. 16. And they buried Bilhah over against the tomb of Rachel, and Dinah also, his daughter, they buried there. 17. And he mourned for Joseph one year, and did not cease, for he said "Let me go down to the grave mourning for my son." 18. For this reason it is ordained for the children of Israel that they should afflict themselves on the tenth of the seventh month—on the day that the news which made him weep for Joseph came to Jacob his father—that they should make atonement for themselves thereon with a young goat on the tenth of the seventh month, once a year, for their sins; for they had grieved the affection of their father regarding Joseph his son. 19. And this day has been ordained that they should grieve thereon for their sins, and for all their transgressions and for all their errors, so that they might cleanse themselves on that day once a year. 20. And after Joseph perished, the sons of Jacob took unto themselves wives. The name of Reuben's wife is 'Adâ; and the name of Simeon's wife is 'Adîbâ'a, a Canaanite; and the

15. Qafrâtêf (b and so almost a). c reads Qarâttîfâ. These may be corruptions of "Eder of Ephrath," which was at one time the abode of Jacob. See xxxiii. 1 note. Or more probably Qafrâtêf is the same as Kabrâtân in xxxii. 32, where see note.

Dinah. According to Gen. rabba 80 Dinah married Simeon; according to Ps.-Philo, Ant. bibl. Lib. p. 51, she married Job.

17. Cf. Gen. xxxvii. 35.

18-19. Cf. Lev. xvi. 29, 34, 15, 16.—Haggada knows nothing of this institution of the Day of Atonement. See notes on v. 17-18 which possibly belong to this context.

18. Afflict themselves. This phrase (= ταπεινούν την ψυχήν, שָׁפַךְ נֶפֶשׁ) is a technical designation for fasting: see Lev. xvi. 31, xxiii. 27, 32; Ezra viii. 21; Dan. x. 12. So used in the Mishna: נִפְיָהּ = "fasting."

20. For the list of these names in the Syriac Fragment see my text, p. 183. A different list is given in the Book of Jashar, Dict. des Apocr. ii. 1198.

'Adâ. So Syriac Fragment. Book of Jashar gives Elioram, daughter of Havi, a Canaanitess.

'Adîbâ'a, a Canaanite. This is referred to in Gen. xli. 10; Exod. vi. 15 where Shaul a son of Levi is said to name of Levi's wife is Mēlkâ, of the daughters of Aram, of the seed of the sons of Terah; and the name of Judah's wife, Bêtasû'êl, a Canaanite; and the name of Issachar's wife, Hêzaqâ; and the name of Zebulon's wife, †Nî'imân†; and the name of Dan's wife, 'Ēglâ; and the name of Naphtali's wife, Rasû'û, of Mesopotamia; and the name of Gad's wife, Mâka; and the name of Asher's wife, 'Îjônâ; and the name of Joseph's wife, Asenath, the Egyptian; and the name of Benjamin's wife, 'Îjasaka. 21. And Simeon repented, and took a second wife from Mesopotamia as his brothers.

be the son of a Canaanitish woman. Since such a marriage was an abomination for which death was the penalty, cf. xxx. 7 sqq., it is to our author's credit that he has not sought to explain away the statement in Gen. xlv. 10. 'Adibâa may be corrupt; for the Syriac Fragment has ܐܕܒܐ, and Book of Jashar "Buna." Later rabbinic tradition sought to explain this away. According to Gen. rabba 80 Shaul the son of the Canaanitish woman is said to be the son of Dinah, who was deflowered by Shechem. The Rabbis say that Simeon married her (so also Book of Jashar, op. cit. ii. 1198). Another evasion is found in Ps.-Jon. on Gen. xlv. 10 where Shaul is said to be "Zimri who did the work of the Canaanites in Shittim"; and in Sanh. 82b, Shaul is said to have been called "the son of a Canaanite" "because he had committed an act like that of Canaan" (see Beer, Buch der Jubiläen, p. 51 sq.).

Mēlkâ. So also in Test. Levi 11 and Syriac Fragment. Bk. of Jashar "Adina," daughter of Jobab, son of Joctan, son of Heber.

Terah. Eth. Tārân.

Betasû'êl. Cf. xli. 7. So also in Test. Jud. 8, 13, 16 where the name appears variously as Βησσαῖος, Βησουέ, Βισσουέ. These are all derived from בִּתְּיָה, "the daughter of Shua": see Gen. xxxviii. 2 and Syriac Fragment ܒܬܝܐ. The Bk. of Jashar gives her personal name as "Habith." She is here and in Test. Jud. 13, 16

and Bk. of Jashar called a Canaanitess. Here again the rabbinic tradition felt this an offence. Accordingly in some of the MSS of Onkelos on Gen. xxxviii. 2 אִשׁ כּוֹנֵן is rendered by מֵרְכָּא, "a merchant." Similarly in Ps.-Jon. on the same passage: also in Gen. rabba 85; Pessach. 50a. Simeon ben Lakish (circ. 200-250 A.D.) gave this interpretation on the ground of Hosea xii. 7, where he evidently took כּוֹנֵן in the sense of "trader," "merchant."

Hêzaqâ. Syr. Frag. ܫܪܟܐ. Bk. of Jashar, "Arida."

†Nî'imân†. Since abd omit this name it may be the invention of an Ethiopic scribe. Furthermore the Syr. Frag. gives ܐܕܢܝ, "Adni." Bk. of Jashar, "Marusa."

'Ēglâ. Syr. Frag. ܥܓܠܐ. Bk. of Jashar, "Aphlalath."

Rasû'û. Syr. Frag. ܪܫܐ. Bk. of Jashar, "Merimath."

Mâka. Syr. Frag. ܡܟܐ. Bk. of Jashar, "Usith," a daughter of Emoram, son of Hus, son of Nachor." The Syr. Frag. makes Ma'aka also to be of the house of Nachor.

'Îjônâ. Syr. Frag. ܝܝܢܐ. Bk. of Jashar, first "Edon" and next "Hadora."

Asenath. Eth 'Asnêth. Cf. Gen. xli. 45.

'Îjasaka. Syr. Frag. ܝܝܫܐܟܐ. Bk. of Jashar, "Mahalia" and "Harbath."

Rebecca's admonition to Jacob and his reply, 1-8. Rebecca asks Isaac to make Esau swear that he will not injure Jacob, 9-12. Isaac consents, 13-17. Esau takes the oath and likewise Jacob, 18-26. Death of Rebecca, 27.

XXXV. And in the first year of the first week of the 2157 A.M. forty-fifth jubilee Rebecca called Jacob, her son, and commanded him regarding his father and regarding his brother, that he should honour them all the days of his life. 2. And Jacob said: "I will do everything as thou hast commanded me; for this thing will be honour and greatness to me, and righteousness before the Lord, that I should honour them. 3. And thou too, mother, knowest from the time I was born until this day, all my deeds and all that is in my heart, that I always think good concerning all. 4. And how should I not do this thing which thou hast commanded me, that I should honour my father and my brother! 5. Tell me, mother, what perversity hast thou seen in me and I shall turn away from it, and mercy will be upon me." 6. And she said unto him: "My son, I have not seen in thee all my days any perverse but (only) upright deeds. And yet I shall tell thee the truth, my son: I shall die this year, and I shall not survive this year in my life; for I have seen in a dream the day of my death, that I should not live beyond a hundred and fifty-five years: and behold I have completed all the days of my life which I am to live." 7. And Jacob laughed at the words of his mother, because his mother had said unto him that she should die; and she was sitting opposite to him in possession of her strength, and she was not infirm in her strength; for she went in and out and saw, and her teeth were strong, and no ailment had touched her all the days of her life. 8. And Jacob said unto her: "Blessed am I, mother, if my days approach the days of thy life, and my strength remain with me thus as thy strength: and thou wilt not die, for thou art jesting idly with me regarding thy death." 9. And she went in to Isaac and said unto him: "One petition I make unto thee: make Esau swear that he will not injure Jacob, nor pursue him with enmity; for thou knowest Esau's thoughts that they are perverse from his youth, and there is no goodness in him; for he desires after thy death to kill him. 10. And thou knowest all that he has done since the day Jacob his brother went to Haran until this day; how he has forsaken us with his whole heart, and has done evil to us; thy flocks he has taken to himself, and carried off all thy possessions from before thy face. 11. And when we implored and besought him for what was our own, he did as a man who was taking pity on us. 12. And he is bitter against thee because thou didst bless Jacob thy perfect and upright son; for there is no evil but only goodness in him, and since he came from Haran unto this day he has not robbed us of aught, for he brings us everything in its season always, and rejoices with all his heart when we take at his hands, and he blesses us, and has not parted from us since he came from Haran until this day, and he remains with us continually at home honouring us." 13. And Isaac said unto her: "I, too, know and see the deeds of Jacob who is with us, how that with all his heart he honours us; but I loved Esau formerly more than Jacob, because he was the first-born; but now I love Jacob more than Esau, for he has done manifold evil deeds, and there is no righteousness in him, for all his ways are unrighteousness and violence, [and there is no righteousness around him]. 14. And now my heart is troubled because of all his deeds, and neither he nor his seed is to be saved, for they are those who will be destroyed from the earth, and who will be rooted out from under heaven, for he has forsaken the God of Abraham and gone after his wives and after their uncleanness and after their error, he and his children. 15. And thou dost bid me make him swear that he will not slay Jacob, his brother; even if he swear he will not abide by his oath, and he will not do good but evil only. 16. But if he desires to slay Jacob, his brother, into Jacob's hands will he be given, and he will not escape from his hands, [for he will descend into his hands.] 17. And fear thou not on account of Jacob; for the guardian of Jacob is great and powerful and honoured, and praised more than the guardian of Esau." 18. And Rebecca sent and called Esau, and he came to her, and she said unto him: "I have a petition, my son, to make unto thee, and do thou promise to do it, my son." 19. And he said: "I will do everything that thou sayest unto me, and I will not refuse thy petition." 20. And she said unto him: "I ask you that the day I die, thou wilt take me in and bury me near Sarah, thy father's mother, and that thou and Jacob will love each other, and that neither will desire evil against the other, but mutual love only, and (so) ye will prosper, my sons, and be honoured in the midst of the land, and no enemy will rejoice over you, and ye will be a blessing

13. [And there is no righteousness around him.] This is either a corruption or, as I take it, a dittography.

16. [For he will descend into his hands.] Here jēwarēd = "will descend" is corrupt for jēwadēq = "will fall." I have bracketed the clause as a gloss from xxxvi. 9.

17. Guardian of Jacob. We seem here to have the idea of men's guardian angels. In that case it is the earliest distinct reference to this belief. Cf. Mt. xviii. 10; Acts xii. 15; Heb. i. 14; Edersheim, Jesus the Messiah, ii. 752.

and a mercy in the eyes of all those that love you.” 21. And he said: “I will do all that thou hast told me, and I shall bury thee on the day thou diest near Sarah, my father’s mother, as thou hast desired that her bones may be near thy bones. 22. And Jacob, my brother, also, I shall love above all flesh; for I have not a brother in all the earth but him only: and this is no great merit for me if I love him; for he is my brother, and we were sown together in thy body, and together came we forth from thy womb, and if I do not love my brother, whom shall I love? 23. And I, myself, beg thee to exhort Jacob concerning me and concerning my sons, for I know that he will assuredly be king over me and my sons, for on the day my father blessed him he made him the higher and me the lower. 24. And I swear unto thee that I shall love him, and not desire evil against him all the days of my life but good only.” And he sware unto her regarding all this matter. 25. And she called Jacob before the eyes of Esau, and gave him commandment according to the words which she had spoken to Esau. 26. And he said: “I shall do thy pleasure; believe me that no evil will proceed from me or from my sons against Esau, and I shall be first in naught save in love only.” 27. And they eat and drank, she and her sons that night, and she died, three jubilees and one week and one year old, on that night, and her two sons, Esau and Jacob, buried her in the double cave near Sarah, their father’s mother.

Isaac gives directions to his sons as to his burial: exhorts them to love one another and makes them imprecate destruction on him who injures his brother, 1-11. Divides his possessions, giving the larger portion to Jacob, and dies, 12-18. Leah dies: Jacob's sons come to comfort him, 21-24.

XXXVI. And in the sixth year of this week Isaac called 2162 A.M.
his two sons, Esau and Jacob, and they came to him, and he said unto them: "My sons, I am going the way of my fathers, to the eternal house where my fathers are. 2. Wherefore bury me near Abraham my father, in the double cave in the field of Ephron the Hittite, where Abraham purchased a sepulchre to bury in; in the sepulchre which I digged for myself, there bury me. 3. And this I command you, my sons, that ye practise righteousness and uprightness on the earth, so that the Lord may bring upon you all that the Lord said that he would do to Abraham and to his seed. 4. And love one another, my sons, your brothers as a man who loves his own soul, and let each seek in what he may benefit his brother, and act together on the earth; and let them love each other as their own souls. 5. And concerning the question of idols, I command and admonish you to reject them and hate them, and love them not; for they are full of deception for those that worship them and for those that bow down to them. 6. Remember ye, my sons, the Lord God of Abraham your father, and how I too worshipped Him and served Him in righteousness and in joy, that He might multiply you and increase your seed as the stars of heaven in multitude, and establish you on the earth as the plant of righteousness which will not be rooted out unto all the generations for ever. 7. And now I shall make you swear a great oath—for there is no oath which is greater than it by the name glorious and honoured and great and splendid and wonderful and mighty, which created the heavens and the earth and all things together—that ye will fear Him and worship Him. 8. And that each will love his brother with affection and righteousness, and that neither will desire evil against his brother from henceforth for ever all the days of your life, so that ye may prosper in all your deeds and not be destroyed. 9. And if either of you devises evil against his brother, know that from henceforth every one that devises evil against his brother will fall into his hand, and will be rooted out of the land of the living, and his seed will be destroyed from under heaven. 10. But on the day of turbulence and execration and indignation and anger, with flaming devouring fire as He burnt Sodom, so likewise will He burn his land and his city and all that is his, and he will be blotted out of the book of the discipline of the children of men, and not be recorded in the book of life, but in that which is appointed to destruction, and he will depart into eternal execration; so that their condemnation may be always renewed in hate and in execration and in wrath and in torment and in indignation and in plagues and in disease for ever. 11. I say and testify to you, my sons, according to the judgment which will come upon the man who wishes to injure his brother.” 12. And he divided all his possessions between the two on that day, and he gave the larger portion to him that was the first-born, and the tower and all that was about it, and all that Abraham possessed at the Well of the Oath. 13. And he said, “This larger portion I shall give to the first-born.” 14. And Esau said, “I have sold to Jacob and given my birthright to Jacob; to him let it be given, and I have not a single word to say regarding it, for it is his." 15. And Isaac said, "May a blessing rest upon you, my sons, and upon your seed this day, for ye have given me rest, and my heart is not pained concerning the birthright, lest thou shouldest work wickedness on account of it. 16. May the Most High God bless the man that worketh righteousness, him and his seed for ever." 17. And he ended commanding them and blessing them, and they eat and drank together before him, and he rejoiced because there was one mind between them, and they went forth from him and rested that day and slept. 18. And Isaac slept on his bed that day rejoicing; and he slept the eternal sleep, and died one hundred and eighty years old. He completed twenty-five weeks and five years; and his two sons Esau and Jacob buried him. 19. And Esau went to the land of Edom, to the mountains of Seir, and dwelt there. 20. And Jacob dwelt in the mountains of Hebron, in the tower of the land of the sojournings of his father Abraham, and he worshipped the Lord with all his heart and according to the visible commands according as

XXXVI. 1. According to ver. 18 Isaac was 180 years old when he died. Hence he must have been born in 1982 and not in 1980 as in xvi. 12-13. Josephus (Ant. i. 22) sets Isaac's age down at 185.

16. Most High God. This divine title is frequently used by our author: see vii. 36, xii. 19, xiii. 29, xvi. 18, 27, xx. 9, xxi. 20, 22, 23, 25, xxii. 6, 11, 13, 19, 23, 27 (twice), xxv. 3, 11, 21, xxvii. 15, xxxii. 1, xxxvi. 16, xxxix. 6. Cf. Test. Levi 3, 4, 5 (twice), 8, 18. This frequency is characteristic of many writings of the second cent. B.C. Thus it is found forty-eight times in Sirach and thirteen times in Daniel. On the other hand it appears only once in the Prophets, six times in the Pentateuch (and of these four times in Gen. xiv. in connection with Melchizedek), in the Pss. twenty-one times. From the close of the second cent. B.C. till after the Christian era it is rare. Thus in Eth. En. xci.-civ. (before 79 B.C.) it is found nine times, four in xxxvii.-lxx., three times in Tobit, once in Judith, not at all in the Pss. of Solomon, twice in Wisdom, twice in the Assumption of Moses, nine times in the N.T. It is frequent in the Apocalypse of Baruch—twenty-three times, and also in 4 Ezra.

From the above facts it follows that this title of God was most used in the second cent. B.C., though rare in some characteristic writings of that century such as Eth. Enoch i.-xxxvi. (twice), lxxii.-xc. (once) and 1 Macc. (not at all). After a long period of comparative disuse it again became prominent in writings of the latter half of the first cent. A.D.

20. According to the visible commands according as He had divided. (a d). b c almost wholly wanting. Latin: "secundum praecepta visibilia secundum divisionem temporum generationum ejus." The commands here referred to were made visible to Jacob on the seven tablets which the angel showed him in a vision: see xxxii. 21. All the history of Jacob's descendants was recorded here in their successive time divisions (so also Rösensch, p. 152).

He had divided the days of his generations. 21. And Leah

 Rebecca his mother, to the left of the grave of Sarah, his father's mother. 22. And all her sons and his sons came to mourn over Leah his wife with him, and to comfort him regarding her, for he was lamenting her. 23. For he loved her exceedingly after Rachel her sister died; for she was perfect and upright in all her ways and honoured Jacob, and all the days that she lived with him he did not hear from her mouth a harsh word, for she was gentle and peaceable and upright and honourable. 24. And he remembered all her deeds which she had done during her life, and he lamented her exceedingly; for he loved her with all his heart and with all his soul.

XXXVII.-XXXVIII. These two chapters give in some respects the fullest and in others an abridged form of an ancient legend dealing with the wars between the sons of Jacob and Esau. The legend is elsewhere found in the Test. Judah 9, in the Jalkut Shimeoni i. 132 (reprinted in Jellinek's Bet ha-Midrash, iii. 3-5 and on pp. 180-182 of my Ethiopic text of Jubilees), in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel, pp. 80-87, and in the Book of Jashar (op. cit. ii. 1236-1238). Our text preserves the oldest form. The same form though very abbreviated is presupposed in the Test. Judah 9: yet even this preserves some details on the capture of Adora (?) not found in any of the others. The account in the Jalkut and the Chronicles of Jerahmeel comes very close to—at times reproduces verbally—that in our text, though most probably with later amplifications. They show however a deliberate attempt to adapt the legend to later times. Thus Adora or Adoraim (אֲדוֹרַיִם) is changed to Arodin (in the Jalkut) or Merodin (אֲמֶרֶדִין, a.l. מֶרֶדִין in the Chron. of Jerah.) where the M of the latter is due to a change of א into מ. This Arodin is Herodion built by Herod the Great. Gaster has recognised this fact, and on this ground would assign the origin of the legend to the beginning of the Christian era. He takes this legendary story to be a piece of contemporary

the portion of the elder to his younger son Jacob and they were very angry. 2. And they strove with their father, saying: "Why has thy father given Jacob the portion of the elder and passed over thee, although thou art the elder and Jacob the younger?" 3. And he said unto them "Because I sold my birthright to Jacob for a small mess of lentils; and on the day my father sent me to hunt and catch and bring him something that he should eat and bless me, he came with guile and brought my father food and drink, and my father blessed him and put me under his hand. 4. And now our father has caused us to swear, me and him, that we shall not mutually devise evil, either against his brother, and that we shall continue in love and in peace each with his brother and not make our ways corrupt." 5. And they said unto him, "We shall not hearken unto thee to make peace with him; for our strength is greater than his strength, and we are more powerful than he; we shall go against him and slay him, and destroy him and his sons. And if thou wilt not go with us, we shall do hurt to thee also. 6. And now history, "a reflex of the Jewish wars against Herod" (Chron. of Jerah. p. lxxxiii.). But the legend does not owe its origin to the times of Herod, but only this adaptation of it. We should observe also that there were two places called Herodion: the first was a fort built near Jerusalem by Herod (Joseph. Ant. xiv. 13. 9, xv. 9. 6, xvii. 8. 3), in which he was subsequently buried. The second was likewise a fort built in Idumea on the confines of Arabia (Joseph. Ant. xvi. 2. 1; Bell. Jud. i. 21. 10). Our legend underwent a further adaptation—indeed a complete recasting—in the Book of Jashar, which has here borrowed its materials from the Midrash in Josippon (see Bousset, Z. f. NTliche Wissensch. 1900, p. 205). The events recorded are placed after Jacob's death, and the story presupposes the struggles of the Idumean house of Antipater, by which through the help of Rome—here called "Aeneas"—it rose to royal power.

Thus the oldest form of the legend is found in our text and in the Test. Jud. 9; the next oldest in the Jalkut and Chronicles of Jerahmeel, and the latest in the Book of Jashar.

XXXVII. 1. On the day that Isaac . . . died. The sons of Esau began their opposition to Jacob from the day of Isaac's death (2162 A.M.), but did not attack him till Leah died (2167 A.M.). See ver. 14.

2-8, 11-12. The favourable view presented here of Esau contrasts strongly with that found in Jalkut Shimeoni reprinted in Jellinek's Be ha-Midrash, iii. 3-5, or in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel, xxxvii. 1. According to our text, it was not Esau but Esau's sons that were primarily to blame for this fraternal war.

5. Him and his sons. Emended with Latin from "his sons" (bcd). Text of a, though ungrammatical, = "him his sons."

hearken unto us: Let us send to Aram and Philistia and Moab and Ammon, and let us choose for ourselves chosen men who are ardent for battle, and let us go against him and do battle with him, and let us exterminate him from the earth before he grows strong." 7. And their father said unto them, "Do not go and do not make war with him lest ye fall before him." 8. And they said unto him, "This too, is exactly thy mode of action from thy youth until this day, and thou art putting thy neck under his yoke. We shall not hearken to these words." 9. And they sent to Aram, and to 'Adurâm to the friend of their father, and they hired along with them one thousand fighting men, chosen men of war. 10. And there came to them from Moab and from the children of Ammon, those who were hired, one thousand chosen men, and from Philistia, one thousand chosen men of war, and from Edom and from the Horites one thousand chosen fighting men, and from the Kittim mighty men of war. 11. And they said unto their father: "Go forth with them and lead them, else we shall slay thee." 12. And he was filled with wrath and indignation on seeing that his sons were forcing him to go before (them) to lead them against Jacob his brother. 13. But afterward he remem-

6-10. To these verses the only equivalent in the Test. Jud. 9 is: ἐπῆλθεν ἡμῖν Ἡσαῦ, ὁ ἀδελφὸς τοῦ πατρὸς μου, ἐν λαῷ βαρεῖ καὶ ισχυρῷ. For that in the Jalkut see note on verses 14-16.

6. The names of the nations mentioned here recur in verses 9-10.

9-10. Against nearly all the nations mentioned here the Maccabees waged war. With Aram or Syria they were at strife for many decades. The Ammonites were invaded by Judas (1 Macc. v. 6-8; Joseph. Ant. xii. 8. 1), and discomfited in several battles. On the complete subjugation of the Philistines by the Maccabees see notes on xxiv. 28-32. As regards the Edomites Judas fought against them and smote them with great slaughter, 1 Macc. v.

3, 65. The Syrians invaded Judah frequently by Edom (1 Macc. iv. 29, 61), and were helped by the latter against Israel. Later John Hyrcanus wrested Adora and Mareshah out of the hands of the Edomites and compelled the whole nation to accept circumcision (Joseph. Ant. xiii. 9. 1, xv. 7. 9; Bell. Jud. i. 2. 6). As regards the Kittim, see note on xxiv. 28. These may have been Greek auxiliaries of the Syrians.

bered all the evil which lay hidden in his heart against Jacob his brother; and he remembered not the oath which he had sworn to his father and to his mother that he would devise no evil all his days against Jacob his brother. 14. And notwithstanding all this, Jacob knew not that they were coming against him to battle, and he was mourning for Leah, his wife, until they approached very near to the tower with four thousand warriors and chosen men of war. 15. And the men of Hebron sent to him saying, "Behold thy brother has come against thee, to fight thee, with four thousand girt with the sword, and they carry shields and weapons"; for they loved Jacob more than Esau. So they told him; for Jacob was a more liberal and merciful man than Esau. 16. But Jacob would not believe until they came very near to the tower. 17. And he closed the gates of the tower; and he stood on the battlements and spake to his brother Esau and said, "Noble is the comfort wherewith thou hast come to comfort me for my wife who has died. Is this the oath that thou didst swear to thy father and again to thy mother before they died? Thou hast broken the oath, and on the moment that thou didst swear to thy

14-16. These verses are found in the Jalkut Shimeoni (Jellinek's Bet ha-Midrash, iii. 3): "It was the year when Leah died and Jacob and his sons were mourning and some of their children had come to comfort them. Then came (Esau) against them with a mighty army of warriors, clad in armour of iron and brass, all armed with shields and bows and swords, 4000 warriors. All these surrounded the tower, in which were Jacob and his sons together with their servants, children and all their possessions; for they had all assembled there in order to comfort Jacob in his mourning for Leah. They were sitting there peacefully, and none imagined that any force had come upon them to contend with them, nor did they discover it till the whole host had encompassed the tower, in which there were only Jacob and his sons and their 200 servants." Similarly in Chron. of Jerahmeel, p. 84.

17-25. Jacob's attempt to bring about peace and Esau's reply are not referred to in the Test. Jud. 9, but are shortly summarised in the Yalkut: "When therefore Jacob saw that Esau had emboldened himself to come against him in war in order to put those in the tower to the sword, and that he shot arrows against them, Jacob stood upon the wall of the tower, and spake to Esau his brother words of peace, friendship and brotherliness (אָהוּבָה); but Esau would have none of them." Similarly in Chron. of Jerah. p. 84.

father wast thou condemned." 18. And then Esau answered and said unto him, "Neither the children of men nor the beasts of the earth have any oath of righteousness which in swearing they have sworn (an oath valid) for ever; but every day they devise evil one against another, and how each may slay his adversary and foe. 19. And thou dost hate me and my children for ever. And there is no observing the tie of brotherhood with thee. 20. Hear these words which I declare unto thee,

If the boar can change its skin and make its bristles
as soft as wool,

Or if it can cause horns to sprout forth on its head
like the horns of a stag or of a sheep,

Then shall I observe the tie of brotherhood with thee.

[And if the breasts separated themselves from their mother; for thou hast not been a brother to me.]

21. And if the wolves make peace with the lambs so as not to devour or do them violence,

And if their hearts are towards them for good,

Then there will be peace in my heart towards thee.

19. The tie of brotherhood. See this phrase in quotation in preceding note.

20. Boar. In Eth. Enoch lxxxix. 12, 42 sq., 49, 66, the boar is used to denote Esau symbolically. Cf. Ps. lxxx. 13. There is no doubt some such reference here.

Make . . . soft. Instead of 'adkama we should expect jâdakēm.

It can cause horns to sprout forth. So a. b c d = "horns were to sprout forth."

[And if (ab omit) the breasts separated themselves from their mother; for thou hast not been a brother to me.] So a b c d save that for "thou hast not been a brother to me" d reads "I shall not be a brother to thee." These words do not belong to their present context; for the tristichs before and after deal with ideas taken only from the animal world. Nor do the words as they stand form a distich. If they belong to the text at all, they are corrupt. It is not improbable that originally they followed immediately after ver. 19^a "thou dost hate me and my children for ever." By transposing the two clauses and by reading 'ēm'ama tafalta atbû'ē 'ēm'ēmômû instead of wa'ēma tafalta 'atbât 'ēm'ēmôn, we should get the following excellent sense in ver. 19 "And thou dost hate me and my children for ever; for thou hast not been a brother to me since the twins were separated from their mother. Yea, there is no observing the tie of brotherhood with thee."

22. And makes peace with him. This clause which c d omit is added by a b after "ploughs with him." With the

23. And when the raven becomes white as the râzâ,
Then know that I have loved thee
And shall make peace with thee.
Thou shalt be rooted out,
And thy sons shall be rooted out,
And there shall be no peace for thee."

24. And when Jacob saw that he was (so) evilly disposed towards him with his heart, and with all his soul as to

XXXVIII. And after that Judah spake to Jacob, his we shall not slay thy brother, for he is such as thou, and he is like thee: let us give him (this) honour." 2. Then guidance of the parallelism I have 23. The râzâ. The râzâ is according to Isenberg, Amharic Dictionary, p. 48,

"a large white bird which eats grasshoppers." Dillmann both in his Lexicon and translation took râzâ here to mean "rice," oryza, but there can be no doubt that the above is right.
Littmann has followed my rendering.

And Simeon and Benjamin and Enoch, Reuben's son, went forth on the west side of the tower, and fifty (men) with them, and they slew of Edom and of the Horites four hundred men, stout warriors; and six hundred fled, and four of the sons of Esau fled with them, and left their father lying slain, as he had fallen on the hill which is in 'Adûrâm. 9. This is the 'Αδωρα mentioned by Joseph. Ant. xiii. 15. 4, along with Μάρσα (cf. 1 Macc. xiii. 20). These two towns of Edom were captured by Hyrcanus and forced to accept circumcision (Joseph. Ant. xiii. 9. 1; Bell. Jud. i. 2. 6).

10-13. The Jalkut is as follows: "In the morning the sons of Jacob armed themselves and pursued after them and pressed them hard on Mount Seir on the ascent of Aqrabbim. The sons of Esau and all the men who had fled with them came forth and fell down before the sons of Jacob and laid themselves prostrate and prayed them till they made peace with them. And they made them servants to tribute." Similarly in the Chron. of Jerah. p. 87. Test. Jud. 9 gives certain details of the siege of Adora, and then proceeds: τότε αἰτοῦσιν ἡμᾶς τὰ πρὸς εἰρήνην· καὶ γενόμενοι βουλῆς τοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν, ἐδέξαμεθα αὐτοὺς ὑποφόρους. καὶ ἦσαν δίδοντες ἡμῖν πυροῦ κόρους διακοσίους . . . ἕως ὅτε κατήλθομεν εἰς Αἴγυπτον.

fast in the house in order to force him to lie with her, and closed the doors of the house and held him fast; but he left his garment in her hands and broke through the door and fled without from her presence. 10. And the woman saw that he would not lie with her, and she calumniated him in the presence of his lord, saying: "Thy Hebrew servant, whom thou lovest, sought to force me so that he might lie with me; and it came to pass when I lifted up my voice that he fled and left his garment in my hands when I held him, and he brake through the door." 11. And the Egyptian saw the garment of Joseph and the broken door, and heard the words of his wife, and cast Joseph into prison into the place where the prisoners were kept whom the king imprisoned 12. And he was there in the prison; and the Lord gave Joseph favour in the sight of the chief of the prison guards and compassion before him, for he saw that the Lord was with him, and that the Lord made all that he did to prosper. 13. And he committed all things into his hands, and the chief of the prison guards knew of nothing that was with him, for Joseph did every thing, and the Lord perfected it. 14. And he remained there two years. And in those days Pharaoh, king of Egypt, was wroth against his two eunuchs, against the chief butler and against the chief baker, and he put them in ward in the house of the chief cook, in the prison where Joseph was kept. 15. And the chief of the prison guards appointed Joseph to serve them; and he served before them. 16. And they both dreamed a dream, the chief butler and the chief baker, and they told it to Joseph. 17. And in those days Pharaoh dreamed two dreams in one night concerning a famine which was to be in all the land, and he awoke from his sleep and called all the interpreters of dreams that were in Egypt, and magicians, and told them his two dreams, and they were not able to declare (them). 2. And then the chief butler remembered Joseph and spake of him to the king, and he brought him forth from the prison, and he told his two dreams before him. 3. And he said before Pharaoh that his two dreams were one, and he said unto him: "Seven years will come (in which there will be) plenty over all the land of Egypt, and after that seven years of famine, such a famine as has not been in all the land. 4. And now let Pharaoh appoint overseers in all the land of Egypt, and let them store up food in every city throughout the days of the years of plenty, and there will be food for the seven years of famine, and the land will

And the Lord gave Joseph favour and mercy in the eyes of Pharaoh, and Pharaoh said unto his servants: “We shall not find such a wise and discreet man as this man, for the spirit of the Lord is with him.” 6. And he appointed him the second in all his kingdom and gave him authority over all Egypt, and caused him to ride in the second chariot of Pharaoh. 7. And he clothed him with byssus garments, and he put a gold chain upon his neck, and (a herald) proclaimed before him “’Ēl ’Ēl wa ’Abirēr, and he placed a ring on his hand and made him ruler over all his house, and magnified him, and said unto him: “Only on the throne shall I be greater than thou.” 8. And Joseph ruled over all the land of Egypt, and all the princes of Pharaoh, and all his servants, and all who did the king’s business loved him, for he walked in uprightness, for he was without pride and arrogance, and he had no respect of persons, and did not accept gifts, but he judged in uprightness all the people of the land. 9. Before him. MSS add against Latin “and he said.”

’Ēl ’Ēl wa ’Abirēr = אֱלֹהִים אֱלֹהִים אַבִּירֵר, “God, God, the mighty one of God.” The Latin has Ellel et Habirel. This is a peculiar expansion of the term אַבִּירֵר in Gen. xli. 43. With the interpretation of that term we have no concern here, but only with its derivation in our text. The phrase “mighty one of God” clearly designates Joseph, and, indeed seems to be a technical designation for a great magician. Thus in Acts viii. 10 Simon Magus is called ἡ δύναμις τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡ μεγάλη (or ἡ καλουμένη μεγάλη). In a late Christian version of a Jewish legend “The History of Asenath” (see Fabricius, Codex Pseud. V.T. i. 774-784, ii. 85-102; Batiffol, Studia Patristica, 1889), Joseph is twice (chaps. iii. and xv.) spoken of as “the mighty one of God,” Ἰωσήφ ὁ δυνατὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ. The following apt parallel may be cited from Pap. Par. Bibl. nat. 1275 sqq.; Wessely, i. 76 (quoted by Deissmann, Bible Studies, p. 336 note), ἐπικαλοῦμαι σε τὴν μεγίστην δύναμιν τὴν ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ ὑπὸ κυρίου Θεοῦ τεταγμένην.

And the king called Joseph's name Sēphântîphâns, and gave Joseph to wife the daughter of Potiphar, the daughter of the priest of Heliopolis, the chief cook. 11. And on the day that Joseph stood before Pharaoh he was thirty years old [when he stood before Pharaoh]. 12. And in that year Isaac died. And it came to pass as Joseph had said in the interpretation of his two dreams, according as he had said it, there were seven years of plenty over all the land of Egypt, and the land of Egypt produced abundantly, one measure (producing) eighteen hundred measures. 13. And Joseph gathered food into every city until they were full of corn until they could no longer count and measure it for its multitude.

Daughter of Potiphar . . . priest of Heliopolis. Our author has rightly identified פֹּטִיפָר in Gen. xxxvii. 36 and פֹּטִיפָר in xli. 45 as being one and the same name. He takes the two to refer to one and the same person: cf. xxxiv. 11, xliv. 24. Origen (Cat. Niceph. i. 463) refers to our book for this view: οὐκ ἔστιν ἀλλ' ὁ αὐτὸς εἶναι τοῦτον (i.e. Φουρτιφάρ) παρὰ τὸν ὠνησάμενον τὸν Ἰωσήφ· οὐ μὴν οὕτως ὑπελήφασιν Ἑβραῖοι· ἀλλ' ἐξ ἀποκρύφου λέγουσι τὸν αὐτὸν εἶναι καὶ δεσπότην καὶ πενθερὸν γενέσθαι. Later Judaism was offended with this marriage of Joseph to the daughter of a heathen priest.

Hence Ps.-Jon. on Gen. xli. 45 represents Asenath as a daughter of Dinah by Shechem, who was reared by the wife of Potiphar, prince of Tanais. Singer (p. 119 note) states that this view is put forward in the Pirke R. Eliezer 36, 38. This was likewise the view of the Jewish legend which formed the basis of the Greek romance of "History of Asenath" (see Hasting's Bible Dict. i. 162; and Issaverden's translation of Uncanonical Writings of the Old Testament, 1901, Venice, pp. 94-96). In these later writings, however, Asenath is no longer represented as a Jewess by birth except in a single passage in the Syriac version.

But he hated, and did not lie with her, because his mother was of the daughters of Canaan, and he wished to take him a wife of the kinsfolk of his mother, but Judah, his father, would not permit him. 3. And this Er, the first-born of Judah, was wicked, and the Lord slew him. 4. And Judah said unto Onan, his brother: "Go in unto thy brother's wife and perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her, and raise up seed unto thy brother." 5. And Onan knew that the seed would not be his, (but) his brother's only, and he went into the house of his brother's wife, and spilt the seed on the ground, and he was wicked in the eyes of the Lord, and He slew him. 6. And Judah said unto Tamar, his daughter-in-law: "Remain in thy father's house as a widow till Shelah my son be grown up, and I shall give thee to him to wife." 7. And he grew up; but Bêdsû'êl, the wife of Judah, did not permit her son Shelah to marry. And Bêdsû'êl, the wife of Judah, died in the fifth year of this week. 8. And in the sixth year Judah went up to shear his sheep at 2169 A.M. Timnah. And they told Tamar: "Behold thy father-in-law goeth up to Timnah to shear his sheep." 9. And she put off her widow's clothes, and put on a veil, and adorned herself, and sat in the gate adjoining the way to Timnah. 10. And as Judah was going along he found her, and thought her to be an harlot, and he said unto her: "Let me come in unto thee"; and she said unto him: "Come in," and he went in. 11. And she said unto him: "Give me my hire"; and he said unto her: "I have nothing in my hand save my ring that is on my finger, and my necklace, and my staff which is in my hand." 12. And Judah sent a kid of the goats by the hand of his shepherd, an Adullamite, and he found her not; and he asked the people of the place, saying: "Where is the harlot who was here?" And they said unto him: "There is no harlot here with us." 15. And he returned and informed him, and said unto him that he had not found her; "I necklace, ζώνη and ὀρμίσκος go back, is said to be the cord round the neck, on which the signet ring was hung.

asked the people of the place, and they said unto me: 'There is no harlot here.'" And he said: "Let her keep (them) lest we become a cause of derision." 16. And when she had completed three months, it was manifest that she was with child, and they told Judah, saying: "Behold Tamar, thy daughter-in-law, is with child by whoredom." 17. And Judah went to the house of her father, and said unto her father and her brothers: "Bring her forth, and let them burn her, for she hath wrought uncleanness in Israel." 18. And it came to pass when they brought her forth to burn her that she sent to her father-in-law the ring and the necklace, and the staff, saying: "Discern whose are these, for by him am I with child." 19. And Judah acknowledged, and said: "Tamar is more righteous than I am. And therefore let them burn her not." 20. And for that reason she was not given to Shelah, and he did not again approach her. 21. And after that 2170 A.M. she bare two sons, Perez and Zerah, in the seventh year of this second week. 22. And thereupon the seven years of fruitfulness were accomplished, of which Joseph spake to Pharaoh. 23. And Judah acknowledged that the deed which he had done was evil, for he had lain with his daughter-in-law, and he esteemed it hateful in his eyes, and he acknowledged that he had transgressed and gone astray; for he had uncovered the skirt of his son, unto him." Perhaps we should read with Latin "dicens: Non inveni eam," "And said: I have not found her," as I have done in my text.

Let her keep = tēšā'ē, emended with Latin "habeat" from tanšā'ē, "arise."

17. Let them burn her. See note on xxx. 7. In Ber. rabba 85 R. Meir of the second cent. states that Tamar was a daughter of the priest-king Shem. Hence her destruction by fire came under the law in Lev. xxi. 9, which prescribes this penalty for the sin of fornication in the daughter of a priest.

In Ps.-Jon. on Gen. xxxviii. 6, 24 Tamar is called a priest's daughter. Beer (Buch d. Jub. p. 52) cites Baba Mezia 87 a to the same effect.

and he began to lament and to supplicate before the Lord because of his transgression. 24. And we told him in a dream that it was forgiven him because he supplicated earnestly, and lamented, and did not again commit it. 25. And he received forgiveness because he turned from his sin and from his ignorance, for he transgressed greatly before our God; and every one that acts thus, every one who lies with his mother-in-law, let them burn him with fire that he may burn therein, for there is uncleanness and pollution upon them; with fire let them burn them. 26. And do thou command the children of Israel that there be no uncleanness amongst them, for every one who lies with his daughter-in-law or with his mother-in-law hath wrought uncleanness; with fire let them burn the man who has lain with her, and likewise the woman, and He will turn away wrath and punishment from Israel. 27. And unto Judah we said that his two sons had not lain with her, and for this reason his seed was established for a second generation, and would not be rooted out. 28. For in singleness of eye he had gone and sought for punishment, namely, according to the judgment of Abraham, which he had commanded his sons, Judah had sought to burn her with fire.

24-25^a. Cf. Test. Jud. 19: εἰ μὴ ἡ μετάνοια σαρκὸς μου, καὶ ἡ ταπεινώσις ψυχῆς μου, καὶ αἱ εὐχαὶ Ἰακώβ τοῦ πατρὸς μου, ἀτεκνὸς εἶχον ἀποθανεῖν. ἀλλ' ὁ θεὸς . . . ὁ οἰκτίρων καὶ ἐλεήμων συνέγνω ὅτι ἐν ἀγνοίᾳ ἐποίησα.

25. Received forgiveness because he turned from his sin and from his ignorance. Something seems wrong. We ought to have the idea expressed in Test. Jud. 19: συνέγνω ὅτι ἐν ἀγνοίᾳ ἐποίησα. Cf. 1 Tim. i. 13: ἡλεήτην, ὅτι ἀγνοῶν ἐποίησα. ὁ transposes "because he turned" after "ignorance." If we transpose the clauses "because . . . sin" and "from his ignorance," we should have an excellent sense: "received forgiveness because of his ignorance and because he turned from his sin"; for the Eth. preposition emna means either "from" or "because of."

Every one who lies with his mother-in-law, let them burn him with fire. So Lev. xx. 14 enacts.

26. Lies with his daughter-in-law. Cf. Lev. xviii. 15, xx. 12. The punishment ordained for this offence is death in the passages referred to in Leviticus; but the form of death is not specified. On the other hand, death by fire is the penalty presupposed for this offence in Gen. xxxviii. 24. Our text (xx. 4) enjoins this penalty for adultery or fornication.

28. According to the judgment of Abraham. See note on xx. 4.

And the earth grew barren, but in the land of Egypt there was food, for Joseph had gathered the seed of the land in the seven years of plenty and had preserved it. 3. And the Egyptians came to Joseph that he might give them food, and he opened the store-houses where was the grain of the first year, and he sold it to the people of the land for gold. 4. (Now the famine was very sore in the land of Canaan), and Jacob heard that there was food in Egypt, and he sent his ten sons that they should procure food for him in Egypt; but Benjamin he did not send, and (the ten sons of Jacob) arrived (in Egypt) among those that went (there). 5. And Jacob said: "Me have ye bereaved of my children! Joseph is not and Simeon also is not, and ye will take Benjamin away. On me has your wickedness come." 11. And he said: "My son will not go down with you lest perchance he fall sick; for their mother gave birth to two sons, and one has perished, and this one also ye will take from me. If perchance he took a fever on the road, ye would bring down my old age with sorrow unto death." 12. For he saw that their money had been returned to every man in his sack, and for this reason he feared to send him. 13. And the famine increased and became sore in the land of Canaan, and in all lands save in the land of Egypt, for many of the children of the Egyptians had stored up their seed for food from the time when they saw Joseph gathering seed together and putting it in storehouses and preserving it for the years of famine. 14. And they went and stood before Joseph, and he saw Benjamin his brother, and he knew him, and said unto them: "Is this your youngest brother?" And they said unto him: "It is he." And he said: "The Lord be gracious to thee, my son!" 22. And he sent him into his house and he brought forth Simeon unto them and he made a feast for them, and they presented to him the gift which they had brought in their hands. 23. And they eat before him and he gave them all a portion, but the portion of Benjamin was seven times larger than that of any of theirs. 24. And they eat and drank and arose and remained with their asses. 25. Joseph's plan to stay his brethren, 1-10. Judah's supplication, 11-13. Joseph makes himself known to his brethren and sends them back for his father, 14-24. (Cf. Gen. xlv. 3-10, 12-18, 27-28, 30-32, xlv. 1-2, 5-9, 12, 18, 20-21, 23, 25-28.)

XLIII. And he did as Joseph had told him, and filled all their sacks for them with food and put their money in their sacks, and put the cup in Benjamin's sack. 2. And early in the morning they departed, and it came to pass that, when they had gone from thence, Joseph said unto the steward of his house: "Pursue them, run and seize them, saying, 'For good ye have requited me with evil; you have stolen from me the silver cup out of which my lord drinks.' And bring back to me their youngest brother, and fetch (him) quickly before I go forth to my seat of judgment." 3. And he ran after them and said unto them according to these words. 4. And they said unto him: "God forbid that thy servants should do this thing, and steal from the house of thy lord any utensil, and the money also which we found in our sacks the first time, we thy servants brought back from the land of Canaan. 5. How then should we steal any utensil? Behold here are we and our sacks; search, and wherever thou findest the cup in the sack of any man amongst us, let him be slain, and we and our asses will serve thy lord." 6. And he said unto them: "Not so, the man with whom I find, him only shall I take as a servant, and ye will return in peace unto your house." 7. And as he was searching in their vessels, beginning with the eldest and ending with the youngest, it was found in Benjamin's sack. 8. And they rent their garments, and laded their asses, and returned to the city and came to the house of Joseph, and they all bowed themselves on their faces to the ground before him. 9. And Joseph said unto them: "Ye have done evil." And they said: "What shall we say and how shall we defend ourselves? Our lord hath discovered the transgression of his servants; behold we are the servants of our lord, and our asses also." 10. And Joseph said unto them: "I too fear the Lord; as for you, go ye to your homes and let your brother be my servant, for ye have done evil. Know ye not that a man delights in his cup as I with this cup? And yet ye have stolen it from me." 11. And Judah said: "O my lord, let thy servant, I pray thee, speak a word in my lord's ear; two brothers did thy servant's mother bear to our father; one went away and was lost, and hath not been found, and he alone is left of his mother, and thy servant our father loves him, and his life also is bound up with the life of this (lad). 12. And it will come to pass, when we go to thy servant our father, and the lad is not with us, that he will die, and we shall bring down our father with sorrow unto death. 13. Now rather let me, thy servant, abide instead of the boy as a bondsman unto my lord, and let the lad go with his brethren, for I became surety for him at the hand of thy servant our father, and if I do not bring him back, thy servant will bear the blame to our father for ever."

And he conversed with them in the Hebrew tongue and fell on their neck and wept. But they knew him not and they began to weep. 16. And he said unto them: "Weep not over me, but hasten and bring my father to me; and ye see that it is my mouth that speaketh, and the eyes of my brother Benjamin see. 17. For behold this is the second year of the famine, and there are still five years without harvest or fruit of trees or ploughing. 18. Come down quickly ye and your households, so that ye perish not through the famine, and do not be grieved for your possessions, for the Lord sent me before you to set things in order that many people might live. 19. And tell my father that I am still alive, and ye, behold, ye see that the Lord has made me as a father to Pharaoh, and ruler over his house and over all the land of Egypt. 20. And tell my father of all my glory, and all the riches and glory that the Lord hath given me." 21. And by the command of the mouth of Pharaoh he gave them chariots and provisions for the way, and he gave them all many-coloured raiment and silver. 22. And to their father he sent raiment and silver and ten asses which carried corn, and he sent them away. 23. And they went up and told their father that Joseph was alive, and was measuring out corn to all the nations of the earth, and that he was ruler over all the land of Egypt. 24. And their father did not believe it, for he was beside himself in his mind; but when he saw the wagons which Jacob celebrates the feast of first-fruits, and encouraged by a vision goes down to Egypt, 1-10. Names of his descendants, 11-34. (Cf. Gen. xlv. 1-28.)

XLIV. And Israel took his journey from †Haran† from his house on the new moon of the third month, and he went on the way of the Well of the Oath, and he offered a sacrifice to the God of his father Isaac on the seventh of this month. 2. And Jacob remembered the dream that he had seen at Bethel, and he feared to go down into Egypt. 3. And while he was thinking of sending word to Joseph to come to him, and that he would not go down, he remained there seven days, if perchance he should see a vision as to whether he should remain or go down. 4. And he celebrated the harvest festival of the first-fruits with old grain, for in all the land of Canaan there was not a handful of seed (in the land), for the famine was over all the beasts and cattle and birds, and also over man. 5. And on the sixteenth the Lord appeared unto him, and said unto him, "Jacob, Jacob"; and he said, "Here am I." And He said unto him: "I am the God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham and Isaac; fear not to go down into Egypt, for I will there make of thee a great nation.

24. It is enough for me. The Ethiopic is here a literal equivalent of the LXX, Gen. xlv. 28, μέγα μοι ἔστιν, which is in its turn a literal rendering of חַיִּי לִּי. LXX, Syr., Vulg. (sufficit mihi) and Onkelos presuppose the חַיִּי, which however the Mass. and Sam. omit.

XLIV. 1. †Haran†. This seems corrupt for "Hebron." Hebron is pre-supposed by the statement in ver. 6 and also by Gen. xxxvii. 14.

And his sons rose up, and his sons' sons, and they placed their father and their possessions upon wagons. 8. And Israel rose up from the Well of the Oath on the sixteenth of this third month, and he went to the land of Egypt. 9. And Israel sent Judah before him to his son Joseph to examine the Land of Goshen, for Joseph had told his brothers that they should come and dwell there that they might be near him. 10. And this was the goodliest (land) in the land of Egypt, and near to him, for all (of them) and also for the cattle. 11. And these are the names of the sons of Jacob who went into Egypt with Jacob their father. 12. Reuben, the first-born of Israel; and these are the names of his sons: Enoch, and

To examine = אָרָא. So practically Onkelos. Mass. alone has אָרָא, while Sam., LXX, Syr. = אָרָא.

12-33. Our text makes the number of Jacob's descendants together with himself seventy. This was the view of the writer of Gen. xlv. 26 and of Joseph. Ant. ii. 7. 4. On the other hand in Gen. xlv. 15, 18, 21, 25 Jacob is expressly not included in the number seventy. Cf. Exod. i. 5. That chapter has admittedly undergone revision. Our text makes up the number seventy by a method somewhat different from that in Gen. xlv. Thus whereas Dan and Naphtali have respectively one and four sons in Gen., our text assigns them five each. On the other hand Gen. includes in its reckoning two grandchildren of Asher, Er, Onan, two sons of Perez, and Dinah against Jubilees. The numbers in our text may be represented as follows:—

Leah's children	{	Reuben and 4 sons	5
		Simeon and 6 sons	7
		Levi and 3 sons	4
		Judah, 1 son, 2 grandsons	4
		Issachar and 4 sons	5
		Zebulon and 3 sons	4
			29
Zilpah's "	{	Gad and 7 sons	8
		Asher, 4 sons and 1 daughter	6
		14
Rachel's "	{	Joseph and 2 sons	3
		Benjamin and 10 sons	11
		14
Bilhah's "	{	Dan and 5 sons	6
		Naphtali and 5 sons	6

29 + 14 + 14 + 12 = 69. Thus the number 70 includes Jacob. It is noteworthy that the LXX reads 75 in Gen. xlv. 27: likewise in Exod. i. 5, while in Deut. x. 22 most MSS give 70 but some give 75. The number 75 in Acts vii. 14 is of course due to the LXX.

And the years of the famine were accomplished, and Joseph gave to the people in the land seed and food that they might sow (the land) in the eighth year, for the river had overflowed all the land of Egypt. 10. For in the seven years of the famine it had not overflowed and had irrigated only a few places on the banks of the river, but now it overflowed and the Egyptians sowed the land, and it bore much corn that year. 11. And this was the first year of the 2178 A.M. fourth week of the forty-fifth jubilee. 12. Of the corn of the harvest = 'em'êkl zazar'û. So the text should be translated. Zar'û is not a verb here, but zar'e (which here = seges, γεννήματα) with the suffix, which goes back to medr = "land" in verse 10, just as αὐτῆς after τὰ γεννήματα in LXX of Gen. xlvii. 24 goes back to γῆν in the preceding sentence. But since the Latin has de omnibus quidquid natum est, it is possible that for em'êkl zazar'û we should read 'emkuellû zar'û = "of all the harvest." I hereby withdraw the emendation in my text.

6-9. This war between the Egyptians and the Canaanites is referred to in the Test. Sim. 8 and Test. Benj. 12 as being waged when the bodies of these patriarchs were buried at Hebron. Thus in Sim. 8: ἔθθησαν αὐτὸν ἐν θήκῃ ξύλων ἀσθήπτων, τοῦ ἀναγαγεῖν τὰ ὀστᾶ αὐτοῦ ἐν Χεβρών. καὶ ἀνήνεγκαν αὐτὰ ἐν πολέμῳ Ἀλγυπτίων κρυφῇ; and Benj. 12: καὶ ἔθθησαν αὐτὸν ἐν παραθήκῃ καὶ . . . ἀνήγαγον τὰ ὀστᾶ τῶν πατέρων αὐτῶν ἐν κρυφῇ, ἐν πολέμῳ Χαναάν (O. Arm. = ὅτε ἦσαν ἐν πολέμῳ οἱ Χαναανίται). If we could trust the date in Test. Gad 8 which says that the body of Gad was buried in Hebron five years after his death: ἐκοιμήθη ἐν εἰρήνῃ. καὶ μετὰ πέντε ἔτη ἀνήγαγον αὐτὸν καὶ ἔθθησαν αὐτὸν εἰς Χεβρών, we could arrive at the date to which the authors of Jubilees and the Testaments assigned this war between Egypt and Canaan. Since Gad died at the age of 125 (Test. Gad, 1 (MS O); Midrash Tadshe and Book of Jashar, op. cit. ii. 1246) and was 40 when he went down into Egypt

(see note on xxviii. 11-24), his burial in Hebron took place 90 years after the descent into Egypt in the year of the world 2262. But this date would be too early for Levi and Benjamin. The statement in Benj. 12 that this expedition to Hebron was in the 91st year (Greek MSS) before the exodus, is not supported by the Armenian version. Our text fixes it at 2263. Notwithstanding it seems clearly to have been the view of the author of the Testaments that the bones of all the patriarchs save those of Joseph were buried in Hebron on the occasion of a war between Egypt and Canaan. Thus, in addition to the statements in Simeon, Gad and Benjamin, observe that after mentioning the death of Levi, Zebulon and Dan, the Testaments (Lev. 19; Zeb. 10; Dan 7) add that "afterwards" (ὕστερον) they were buried in Hebron. Josephus (Ant. ii. 8. 2) appears to have held the same view, though he makes no mention of the war. He states: "His (Joseph's) brethren also died . . . and their posterity and sons carried their bodies after some time (κομίσαντες μετὰ χρόνον) and buried them in Hebron." St. Stephen is beholden to this tradition for the statement in Acts vii. 15-16.

Merenptah (about this date?) waged war against Palestine. See Articles on Egypt in Encyc. Bib. ii. and Bible Dictionary, i. 662, 665. But our text, he knew that the Egyptians would not again bring forth and bury him in the land of Canaan, for Mâkamârôn, king of Canaan, while dwelling in the land of Assyria, fought in the valley with the king of Egypt and slew him there, and pursued after the Egyptians to the gates of 'Êrmôn. 7. But he was not able to enter, for another, a new king, had become king of Egypt, and he was stronger than he, and he returned to the land of Canaan, and the gates of Egypt were closed, and none went out and none came into Egypt. 8. And Joseph died in the forty-sixth jubilee, in the sixth week, in the second year, and they buried him in the land of Egypt, and all his brethren died after him. 9. And the king of Egypt went forth to war with the king of Canaan in the forty-seventh jubilee, in the second week in the second year, and the children of Israel brought forth all the bones of the children of Jacob save the bones of Joseph, and they buried them in the field in the double cave in the mountain. 10. And the most (of them) returned to Egypt, but a few of them remained in the mountains of Hebron, and which emphasises the weakness of Egypt, points rather to the period of the successors of Rameses III. when Egypt lost her Syrian dependencies.

In Josephus (Ant. ii. 10) there is an account of a war between Cush and Egypt in which the latter prevails under the generalship of Moses. An enlarged form of this legend, having many details in common with that in Josephus, is given in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel, xlv. Here the war is between Cush and Syria and the people of the East. Another form appears in the Palaea Historica (Vassiliev, Anecdota Graeco-Byzantina, i. 228), where Egypt is at strife with India. A later and still more elaborate, and still more grotesque, edition is found in the Book of Jashar (op. cit. ii. 1244-1253). The oldest form of the tradition is that in our text where the war is between Egypt and Canaan. The account in the Chronicles of Jerahmeel comes nearest to this in representing Cush and Canaan as the opposing countries.

6. 'Êrmôn, i.e. Heroôpolis which stood close to the Desert on the canal of Rameses. I cannot identify Mâkamârôn.

8. All his brethren died after him. This statement holds even if we accept the birth-dates in our text (see p. 171 note), and the ages assigned to the twelve sons of Jacob by the Test. XII. Patriarchs (see p. 172 note).

9. The date 2263 is not late enough to allow of all the sons of Jacob being dead if we accept the ages assigned to them by the Test. XII. Patriarchs. Thus Benjamin was born in the year 2143 and as he lived 125 years (see note on p. 172) the date of his death would be 2268.

10. According to Beer there is no other mention of this stay of Amram in Canaan. To Josephus (see Ant. ii. 8. 2), however, some such legend may have been known.

Amram thy father remained with them. 11. And the king of Canaan was victorious over the king of Egypt, and he closed the gates of Egypt. 12. And he devised an evil device against the children of Israel of afflicting them; and he said unto the people of Egypt: 13. "Behold the people of the children of Israel have increased and multiplied more than we. Come and let us deal wisely with them before they become too many, and let us afflict them with slavery before war come upon us and before they too fight against us; else they will join themselves unto our enemies and get them up out of our land, for their hearts and faces are towards the land of Canaan." 14. And he set over them taskmasters to afflict them with slavery; and they built strong cities for Pharaoh, Pithom and Raamses, and they built all the walls and all the fortifications which had fallen in the cities of Egypt. 15. And they made them serve with rigour, and the more they dealt evilly with them, the more they increased and multiplied. 16. And the people of Egypt abominated the children of Israel.

week, in the sixth year thereof, in the forty-eighth jubilee; this was the time of tribulation on the children of Israel. 2. And Pharaoh, king of Egypt, issued a command regarding them that they should cast all their male children which were born into the river. 3. And they cast them in for seven months until the day that thou wast born. And thy mother hid thee for three months, and they told regarding her. 4. And she made an ark for thee, and covered it with pitch and asphalt, and placed it in the flags on the bank of the river, and she placed thee in it seven days, and thy mother came by night and suckled thee, and by day Miriam, thy sister, guarded thee from the birds. 5. And in those days Tharmuth, the daughter of Pharaoh, came to bathe in the river, and she heard thy voice crying, and she told her maidens to bring thee forth, and they brought thee unto her. 6. And she took thee out of the ark, and she had compassion on thee. 7. And thy sister said unto her: "Shall I go and call unto thee one of the Hebrew women to nurse and suckle this babe for thee?" And she said (unto her): "Go." 8. And she went and called thy mother Jochebed, and she gave her wages, and she nursed thee. 9. And

And thou wast three weeks 2351-2372 A.M. of years at court until the time when thou didst go forth from the royal court and didst see an Egyptian smiting thy friend who was of the children of Israel, and thou didst slay him and hide him in the sand. 11. And on the second day thou didst find two of the children of Israel striving together, and thou didst say to him who was doing the wrong: "Why dost thou smite thy brother?" 12. And he was angry and indignant, and said: "Who made thee a prince and a judge over us? Thinkest thou to kill me as thou killedst the Egyptian yesterday?" And thou didst fear and flee on account of these words.

And I delivered thee out of his hand, and thou didst perform the signs and wonders which thou wast sent to perform in Egypt against Pharaoh, and against all his house, and against his servants and his people. 5. 2. We have in this verse another instance (cf. also ver. 17) where our author has followed the example of the Chronicler in 1 Chron. xxi. 1, where he assigns to Satan the action that in 2 Sam. xxiv. 1 is ascribed to Yahweh. The LXX and the Targums replace the divine name by the phrase "an angel of the Lord." We have already called attention to an earlier instance as xvii. 16, where our author has similarly got rid of the offence in the Biblical text. On Mastêmâ see note on x. 8.

On the way when thou didst meet him at the lodging-place. Here the Eth. is hopelessly corrupt. c which represents an attempt at emendation—"on the feast of tabernacles." abd are unintelligible. It is best therefore to follow the Latin: "in via in qua praeteristi eum in refectone," and Exod. iv. 24, בדרך במלון ויפגשו.

3. Our author here quite explains away the true meaning of the incident in Exod. iv. 24 sqq. This is followed more faithfully by the Ps.-Jon. in loc. and the Chron. of Jerah. xlvii. 1, 2 where the angel seeks to slay Moses for not circumcising his son. It is explained, however, that it was owing to Jethro that the child had not been circumcised.

5. We have here an enumeration of the ten plagues of Egypt.

And (by the death) of the first-born. I have supplied the words in brackets. They are wanting both in the Eth. and Lat. The Lat. has simply "primitivorum" and so ab. cd have prefixed "and." Hence there was a lacuna here in the Greek version. Only for the concluding words "and burned them with fire" we might connect the clause with the words that follow and merely supply a preposition: "(on) the first-born." But the genitive "primitivorum" is also against this.

Lord took vengeance and burned them with fire. 6. And everything was sent through thy hand, that thou shouldst declare (these things) before they were done, and thou didst speak with the king of Egypt before all his servants and before his people. 7. And everything took place according to thy words; ten great and terrible judgments came on the land of Egypt that thou mightest execute vengeance on it for Israel. 8. And the Lord did everything for Israel's sake, and according to His covenant, which He had ordained with Abraham that He would take vengeance on them as they had brought them by force into bondage. 9. And the prince of the Mastêmâ stood up against thee, and sought to cast thee into the hands of Pharaoh, and he helped the Egyptian sorcerers, and they stood up and wrought before thee. 10. The evils indeed we permitted them to work, but the remedies we did not allow to be wrought by their hands. 11. And the Lord smote them with malignant ulcers, and they were not able to stand, for we destroyed them so that they could not perform a single sign. 12. And notwithstanding all (these) signs and wonders the prince of the Mastêmâ was not put to shame because he took courage and cried to the Egyptians to pursue after thee with all the powers of the Egyptians, with their chariots, and with their horses, and with all the hosts of the peoples of Egypt. 13. And I stood between the Egyptians and Israel, and we delivered Israel out of his shame until he took courage." As this fails to give a good sense, I omitted the negative in my text. Thus we should have: "was put to shame until he took courage." Cf. xviii. 12. I now think that the corruption lies in the "until he took courage" = עָרַאֲשֶׁר erâšer, where I take עָרַאֲשֶׁר to be corrupt for עַל־אֲשֶׁר = "because." Instead of hajjala = "took courage," a reads halaja = "took thought."

And on the fourteenth day and on the fifteenth and on the sixteenth and on the seventeenth and on the eighteenth the prince of the Mastêmâ was bound and imprisoned behind the children of Israel that he might not accuse them. 16. 18. The fourteenth. So we should read with b. ad = "the seventeenth,"

but sabû'ē in ad is corrupt for rabû'ē in b. c gives "the fifteenth." Cedrenus (i. 87), who has cited our text but a few sentences before, confirms b: τῇ ιδ' τοῦτου τοῦ μηνὸς σκυλεύσαντες τοὺς Αἰγυπτίους ἐξῆλθον. This would admit of the Israelites setting out on the 15th of Nisan as in Joseph. (Ant. ii. 14. 6; 15. 2), where it states Israel went forth from Egypt on the 15th of Nisan having already received gifts from the Egyptians (ii. 14. 6); so also in Shabb. 87 b. Our text then supposes that the Israelites marched from the 15th to the 18th, and that on the 19th Mastema and his powers were let loose. Beer points out that in the Mechilta on Exod. xiv. 3 it is stated that the Egyptians pursued after Israel from the 19th of the first month.

XLIX. Remember the commandment which the Lord commanded thee concerning the passover, that thou shouldst celebrate it in its season on the fourteenth of the first month, that thou shouldst kill it before it is evening, and that they should eat it by night on the evening of the fifteenth from the time of the setting of the sun. 2. For on this night—the beginning of the festival and the beginning of the joy—ye were eating the passover in Egypt, when all the powers of Mastêmâ had been let loose to slay all the first-born in the land of Egypt, from the first-born of Pharaoh to the first-born of the captive maid-servant in the mill, and to the cattle. 3. And this is the sign which the Lord gave them: Into every house on the lintels of which they saw the blood of a lamb of the first year, into (that) house they should not enter to slay, but should pass by (it), that all those should be saved that were in the house because the sign of the blood was on its lintels. 4. And the powers of the Lord did everything according as the Lord commanded them, and they passed by all the children of Israel, and the plague came not upon them to destroy from amongst them any soul either of cattle, or man, or dog. 5. For it is an eternal ordinance, and engraven on the heavenly tables regarding all the children of Israel that they should observe it every year on its day once a year, throughout all their generations; and there is no limit of days, for this is ordained for ever. 9. And the man who is free from uncleanness, and does not come to observe it on occasion of its day, so as to bring an acceptable offering before the Lord, and to eat and to drink before the Lord on the day of its festival, that man who is clean and close at hand will be cut off: because he offered not the oblation of the Lord in its appointed season, he will take the guilt upon himself. 10. and a third part to the evening. 11. This is that which the Lord commanded thee that thou shouldst observe it between the evenings. 12. And it is not permissible to slay it during any period of the light, but during the period bordering on the evening, and let them eat it at the time of the evening until the third part of the night, and whatever is left over of all its flesh from the third part of the night and onwards, let them burn it with fire. 13. And they shall not cook it with water, nor shall they eat it raw, but roast on the fire: they shall eat it with diligence, its head with the inwards thereof and its feet they shall roast with fire, and not break any bone thereof; for †of the children of Israel no bone shall be

12. Slay it . . . during the period (or "time") bordering on the evening. According to our text the Passover victim might be slain "during the period bordering on the evening." This is the meaning it attaches to the phrase "between the evenings" (בֵּין תַּעֲרֵבִים).

It corresponds well with Deut. xvi. 6, which gives directions for the sacrificing of the passover "at even, at the going down of the sun." But in ver. 10 of our text, a wider definition is given—"from the third part of the day to the third part of the night." The Pharisees and the Sadducees differed in the interpretation of the phrase "between the evenings." The former said it meant from the time when the sun inclined towards his setting till his final disappearance, i.e., from 3 to 6 p.m., but according to the latter it was the time between actual sunset and darkness, i.e., 6 and 7 p.m. (Pesachim v. 1). The hours (the 9th to the 11th) assigned by Josephus (Bell. Jud. vi. 9. 3) agree with the Pharisaic determination (θύουσιν μὲν ἀπὸ ἐνάρξης ὥρας μέχρις ἐνδεκάτης). If then we combine the statements in verses 10 and 12 of our text we may infer that the slaughtering of the victim might take place any time during "the third part of the day" before sunset; and this harmonises on the whole with the rabbinic tradition. The Samaritans and Karaite Jews support the usage of the Sadducees in limiting the act of sacrificing to the hour between sunset and complete darkness.

Eat it at the time of the evening until the third part of the night. Night was divided into three parts 6 to 10 p.m., 10 p.m. to 2 a.m. and 2 to 6 a.m. Hence the time for eating seems to be from 6 to 10 p.m. The rabbinic rule fixed midnight as the hour when the eating must be concluded (Berachoth i. 1; Pesach. x. 9).

13. And they shall not cook . . . roast on the fire. Cf. Exod. xii. 9.

They shall eat it = jēb'ēwō, emended with Lat. "comedetis illud" from the unmeaning besûla.

They shall eat it with diligence. Cf. Exod. xii. 11. "With diligence" = σπουδαίως, which in the LXX is a rendering of בְּהָתָּר. In ver. 23 this Hebrew phrase is rendered more literally.

Not break any bone thereof. Cf. Exod. xii. 46.

†Of the children of Israel no bone shall be crushed†. The Latin differs and is to be followed: "Non erit tribulatio in filiis Istrahel in die hac." If we might suppose two distinct Greek versions of the Hebrew and that the original of "in die hac" was בְּעֶצַם הַיּוֹם, we could explain the Eth. by supposing the loss of הַיּוֹם and the change of בְּעֶצַם into עֶצַם. But the cor-

For this reason the Lord commanded the children of Israel to observe the passover on the day of its fixed time, and they shall not break a bone thereof; for it is a festival day, and a day commanded, and there may be no passing over from day to day, and month to month, but on the day of its festival let it be observed. 15. And do thou command the children of Israel to observe the passover throughout their days, every year, once a year on the day of its fixed time, and it will come for a memorial well pleasing before the Lord, and no plague will come upon them to slay or to smite in that year in which they celebrate the passover in its season in every respect according to His command. 16. And they shall not eat it outside the sanctuary of the Lord, but before the sanctuary of the Lord, and all the people of the congregation of Israel shall celebrate it in its appointed season. 17. And every man who has come upon its day shall eat it in the sanctuary of your God before the Lord from twenty years old and upward; for thus is it written and ordained that they should eat it in the sanctuary of the Lord. 18. And when the children of Israel come into the land which they are to possess, into the land of Canaan, and set up the tabernacle of the Lord in the midst of the land in one of ruption seems native to the Ethiopic. If the text referred here to the "breaking" of a bone, it would most probably have used sabara as in the clause before and in the verse after, where the Latin uses frangere and confringere respectively. In this clause, therefore, "ijët-qataqat" (= "will not be crushed") is to be taken metaphorically = the Latin "non erit tribulatio." This idea, that no evil will befall on the day of the right celebration of the Passover, recurs in ver. 15 in an intensified degree.

15. Every year, once a year. Cf. verses 7-8.

From twenty years old, etc. Rabbinic tradition determines fourteen years and upwards as the qualifying age. The determination in our text may be based on such passages as Exod. xxx. 14; Num. i. 32 which prescribe that in numbering the people only the males from twenty years old and upwards should be taken account of. Man was not accountable for the first twenty

their tribes until the sanctuary of the Lord has been built in the land, let them come and celebrate the passover in the midst of the tabernacle of the Lord, and let them slay it before the Lord from year to year. 19. And in the days when the house has been built in the name of the Lord in the land of their inheritance, they shall go there and slay the passover in the evening, at sunset, at the third part of the day. 20. And they will offer its blood on the threshold of the altar, and shall place its fat on the fire which is upon the altar, and they shall eat its flesh roasted with fire in the court of the house which has been sanctified in the name of the Lord. 21. And they may not celebrate the passover in their cities, nor in any place save before the tabernacle of the Lord, or before His house where His name hath dwelt; and they will not go astray from the Lord. 22. And do thou, Moses, command the children of Israel to observe the ordinances of the passover, as it was commanded unto thee; declare thou unto them every year †and the day of its days, and† the festival of unleavened bread, that they should eat unleavened bread seven days, (and) that they should observe its festival, and that they bring an oblation every day during those seven days of joy before the Lord on the altar of your God.

years according to some rabbis, and no punishment was to be enacted for them.

20. Eat its flesh . . . in the court of the house, etc. This direction can be justified by an appeal to Deut. xvi. 7 (cf. 6) "thou shalt eat it in the place which the Lord thy God shall choose." But the Mishna extended this privilege to Jerusalem at large (Sebach. v. 8; Makkoth iii. 3). This extension was necessitated by the vast multitudes which came up to this feast (cf. Joseph. Bell. Jud. vi. 9. 3, ii. 14. 3).

21. May not. Here Eth. and Latin (poterunt) = οὐ δύνησονται, which is a faulty rendering of לא יוכלו, where the phrase denotes moral inability. The text is based on Deut. xvi. 5, where the LXX (οὐ δύνῃσιν) and the Vulg. (non poteris) render in the same faulty manner לא חוכל.

In any place. Eth. prefixes "and," which I have omitted with the Latin.

Will not go astray from the Lord. Cf. Zeph. i. 6.

22. Every year = 'āmata (c) la'amatāt (d). So Latin "per singulos . . . annos." a b = "its year every year."

†And the day of its days, and†. Here the Latin "in tempore dierum suorum" is most probably right, and we should render "during its days and during."

(And) that. "And" supplied from the Latin.

During those. Latin omits "those." Hence it probably represents the Greek article.

23. For ye celebrated this festival with haste when ye went forth from Egypt till ye entered into the wilderness of Shur; for on the shore of the sea ye completed it.

Laws regarding the jubilees, 1-5, and the Sabbath, 6-13.

L. And after this law I made known to thee the days of the Sabbaths in the desert of Sin[ai], which is between Elim and Sinai. 2. And I told thee of the Sabbaths of the land on Mount Sinai, and I told thee of the jubilee years in the sabbaths of years: but the year thereof have I not told thee till ye enter the land which ye are to possess. 3. And the land also will keep its sabbaths while they dwell upon it, and they will know the jubilee year. 4. Wherefore I have ordained for thee the year-weeks and the years and the jubilees: there are forty-nine jubilees 2410 A.M. from the days of Adam until this day, and one week and two years: and there are yet forty years to come (lit.
 2450 A.M. "distant") for learning the commandments of the Lord, until they pass over into the land of Canaan, crossing the Jordan to the west. 5. And the jubilees will pass by, until Israel is cleansed from all guilt of fornication, and uncleanness, and pollution, and sin, and error, and dwells with confidence in all the land, and there will be no more a Satan or any evil one, and the land will be clean from that time for evermore.

6. And behold the commandment regarding the Sabbaths—I have written (them) down for thee—and all the judgments

23. With haste. See note on ver. 13. Cf. Exod. xii. 11. For Shur (Eth. Sûr) see Exod. xv. 22.

L. 1. Sin[ai], which is between Elim and Sinai. Cf. Exod. xvi. 1. Sin[ai] corrupt for Sin.

2. Jubilee years. Cf. Lev. xxv. 8.

3. Cf. Lev. xxvi. 34, etc.

4. Year-weeks, i.e., seven years.

Jubilees. Our author assumes jubilee periods of 49 years each, as R. Jehuda (Nedarim 61 a), whereas the majority of Jewish writers reckoned it at 50 years (Beer, Buch d. Jub. p. 38).

5. Forecast of the Messianic kingdom. A gradual transformation: cf. i. 29 note; xxiii. 26-28 note.

A Satan or any evil one. See note on xxiii. 29.

of its laws. 7. Six days wilt thou labour, but on the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord your God. In it ye shall do no manner of work, ye and your sons, and your men-servants and your maid-servants, and all your cattle and the sojourner also who is with you. 8. And the man that does any work on it shall die: whoever desecrates that day, whoever lies with (his) wife, or whoever says he will do something on it, that he will set out on a journey thereon in regard to any buying or selling: and whoever draws water thereon which he had not prepared

7. Cf. Exod. xx. 9, 10.

8-12. On the Talmudic laws relating to the Sabbath see Schürer, History of N.T. Times, II. ii. 96-105; Edersheim, Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah,² ii. 777-787; and the Bible Dictionaries, in loc.

8. The man that does any work on it shall die. This statement found in Exod. xxxv. 2 makes death the penalty for any and every breach of the Sabbath.

Whoever lies with (his) wife. This law sprung probably from the fanatical period referred to in Sanh. 46a, the period of the Syro-Grecian domination, when a man was put to death for riding a horse. That certain regulations of this nature existed we must infer from our text, as well as from the Talmudic treatise Nidda 38a. Early Chasids refrained from cohabitation with their wives from the close of the Sabbath to the fourth day of the week, in order that their wives might not desecrate the Sabbath 271 to 273 days later by child-bearing. Against this ascetic attitude towards marriage a reaction set in which resulted in the laws of the Mishna on this subject. Thus the cohabitation of husband and wife is enjoined on the Sabbath in Nedar iii. 10, viii. 6, while in Baba kamma 82a it is stated that one of the ordinances instituted by Ezra directed that a man should "eat garlic" (i.e. cohabit) on the eve of the Sabbath. The severer usage is followed by the modern Samaritans (Eichhorn's Repertorium, xiii. 257, 282; de Sacy, Notices et extraits de la Bible, xii. 175: also by the Abyssinian Falashas (Univ. Isr.

1851, p. 482) and the Karaite Jews (see Singer, pp. 198-199 note). The Karaite Jews inferred the unlawfulness of cohabitation on the Sabbath from a literal interpretation of Exod. xxxiv. 21. As regards the usage of the ancient Samaritans there has been some diversity of opinion. Karo (Beer, Buch der Jubilæen, p. 54) argues that the text in Nedar iii. 10 speaks for the existence of the strict law having existed among the Samaritans at a date anterior to the time of the Karaite Jews, but this is disputed by Frankel (Einfluss d. pal. Exeg. 252 sq.).

That he will set out on a journey thereon (bd). a c omit "thereon." This command was derived from Exod. xvi. 29, where the people are bidden "to abide every man in his place . . . on the seventh day" and not to go in quest of manna. Permission was given to go a distance of 2000 cubits (Erubin iv. 3, 1, v. 7), which was called the "Sabbath limit" (חומת השבת) or simply "limit" (חומה), or Sabbath-day's journey (Σαββάτου ὁδός, Acts i. 12). See Lightfoot, Exercitations on the Acts, i. 12; Buxtorf and Levy's Lexicons on the Hebrew; Schürer, History of the New Testament Times, II. ii. 102-103. Josephus (Ant. xiii. 8. 4) speaks of this halacha: οὐκ ἐξέρου δ' ὑμῖν οὐτε τοῖς σαββάτοις οὐτ' ἐν τῇ ἑορτῇ δόδευν. In regard to any buying or selling. All the MSS prefix "and." The true text is uncertain and probably transposed. Buying and selling are prohibited in Neh. x. 31, xiii. 16, 17.

Whoever draws water. This was forbidden by the Karaite Jews (Jost, for himself on the sixth day, and whoever takes up any burden to carry it out of his tent or out of his house shall die. 9. Ye shall do no work whatever on the Sabbath day save what ye have prepared for yourselves on the sixth day, so as to eat, and drink, and rest, and keep Sabbath from all work on that day, and to bless the Lord your God, who has given you a day of festival, and a holy day: and a day of the holy kingdom for all Israel is this day among their days for ever. 10. For great is the honour which the Lord has given to Israel that they should eat and drink and be satisfied on this festival day, and rest thereon from all labour which belongs to the labour of the children of men, save burning frankincense and bringing oblations and sacrifices before the Lord for days and for Sabbaths. 11. This work alone shall be done on the Sabbath-days in the sanctuary of the Lord your God; that they may atone for Israel with sacrifice continually from day to day for a memorial well-pleasing before the Lord, and that He may receive them always from day to day according as thou hast been commanded. 12. And every man who does any work thereon, or goes a journey, or tills (his) farm, whether in his house or any other place, and whoever lights a fire, or rides on any beast, or travels by ship on Gesch. d. Judenth. ii. 304, quoted by Singer, p. 199 note).

Which he had not prepared on the sixth day. This clause comes in awkwardly. A command against "eating or drinking anything" may have originally preceded this clause in our text. Cf. ii. 30, note.

Takes up any burden to carry it, etc. See note on ii. 29. This is the 39th form of work forbidden in the treatise Shabbath. If a man dropped his false teeth it would be unlawful to lift and carry them; for they would constitute a "burden." Similarly as much ink as would suffice for writing two letters (Edersheim, Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah,² ii. 782, 784).

9. See note on ii. 29.

10. Cf. ii. 21.

11. Cf. Num. xxviii. 9, 10; Matt. xii. 5.

12. Goes a journey. See note on ver. 8.

Tills (his) farm. Ploughing and harvesting are forbidden in Exod. xxxiv. 21; Shabb. vii. 2.

Whether in his house or any other place. These words seem to be in their wrong place. They would give good sense if they were read immediately after "every man who does any work thereon."

Lights a fire. Forbidden in Exod. xxxv. 3; Shabb. vii. 2. The man who gathers sticks for this purpose is to be stoned. Num. xv. 32, 33.

the sea, and whoever strikes or kills anything, or slaughters a beast or a bird, or whoever catches an animal or a bird or a fish, or whoever fasts or makes war on the Sabbaths: 13. The man who does any of these things on the Sabbath shall die, so that the children of Israel shall observe the Sabbaths according to the commandments regarding the Sabbaths of the land, as it is written in the tables, which He gave into my hands that I should write out for thee the laws of the seasons, and the seasons according to the division of their days.

Herewith is completed the account of the division of the days.

Rides on any beast. This is forbidden in Beza v. 2: also in Sanh. 46 a, which states that during the Syro-Grecian domination an offender against this law was arraigned before the judicial court and sentenced to death by stoning: cf. Jebam. 90 b.

Strikes or kills anything. Killing any animal is the 26th forbidden Sabbatical offence (Shabb. vii. 2).

Fasts. Israel is to "eat and drink" on the Sabbath (see ver. 9). This law was observed by Judith (Judith viii. 6, a book which in its shorter form probably goes back to the early Maccabean times). The injunction against fasting in our text is not in harmony with the severe ascetic law against the marriage-bed on the Sabbath.

Makes war. This prohibition of all warfare, which is found also in the Mishna, Shabb. vi. 2, 4, was observed literally before and during the outbreak of the Maccabean wars (1 Macc. ii. 31-38; 2 Macc. vi. 11; Joseph. Ant.

xii. 1; 2 Macc. xv. 1; cf. Joseph. Ant. xiii. 12. 4, xviii. 9. 2 for later occasions). But on the urgent representations of Mattathias this prohibition of warfare, offensive and defensive, was abandoned, and defensive measures were declared legitimate (1 Macc. ii. 41; Joseph. Ant. xii. 6. 2): but offensive warfare was still forbidden (2 Macc. viii. 26). Jonathan's battle against Bacchides (1 Macc. ix. 43 sqq.) can be justified from the new standpoint. This emended law was in force when Pompey besieged Jerusalem (Joseph. Ant. xiv. 4. 2), but as it only allowed of an active resistance against an active assault, it did not permit of the destruction of fortified works raised by the enemy on the Sabbath, and so exposed the Jews to defeat (op. cit. xiv. 4. 2). Once during the final war with Rome the Jews broke through this Sabbatical law, and successfully attacked the Romans (Joseph. Bell. Jud. ii. 19. 2).

A CRITICAL HISTORY OF THE DOCTRINE OF A FUTURE LIFE IN ISRAEL, IN JUDAISM, AND IN CHRISTIANITY; or, HEBREW, JEWISH, AND CHRISTIAN ESCHATOLOGY FROM PRE-PROPHETIC TIMES TILL THE CLOSE OF THE NEW TESTAMENT CANON (THE JOWETT LECTURES FOR 1898-99).

BY THE

REV. R. H. CHARLES, M.A.

PROFESSOR OF BIBLICAL GREEK, TRINITY COLLEGE, DUBLIN

Demy 8vo. Cloth. Price 15s.

“If the Jowett Lectures rise always to this height, we shall receive a series of volumes which will rival in value any lectureship in existence. For this is a thoroughly capable treatment of perhaps the most difficult subject in theology.”—Expository Times.

“We may at the outset congratulate Dr. Charles on the appearance of this interesting and scholarly work. The theme chosen is one of the most difficult and intricate in the whole range of theological science, but the clearness of treatment and lightness of touch which characterise the book throughout enable the reader to pass pleasantly through the various stages of a long and exhaustive investigation.”—The Athenaeum.

“Within its own sphere Dr. Charles’s work is valuable and exhaustive, traversing the whole field of scriptural and apocalyptic conceptions relative to a future state.”—The Scotsman.

“It is a pleasure to come upon the scholarly and really thorough work which Professor Charles gives us.”—The St. James’s Gazette.

“His book is one which no serious student can afford to leave unread.”—The Pall Mall Gazette.

“A learned and courageous attempt to deal with a subject which is as important as it is obscure, and therefore deserves the respectful consideration of all students of theology.”—The Christian World.

PROFESSOR OF BIBLICAL GREEK, TRINITY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE

Crown 8vo. Cloth. Price 7s. 6d. net.

“Its most striking features are the introduction, which abounds in learning and acute criticism, the Latin translation of the Slavonic version, which has hitherto been a sealed book except to a few specialists, and the papyrus fragment containing about a sixth of the original Greek text.”—The Christian World.

“Dr. Charles has laid scholars under an additional obligation by this edition of the Ascension of Isaiah.”—The Scotsman.

“By editing this and other Apocrypha, Mr. Charles is doing service which cannot be too warmly acknowledged, and by his learned and scholarly notes he succeeds in throwing a flood of light on the New Testament.”—The British Weekly.

“The entire volume is one which will receive the same grateful welcome from all readers of apocalyptic literature as has been extended to the author’s previous important contributions to this branch of scholarship.”—Record.

“Professor Charles is doing much to raise English scholarship in the eyes of the world.”—The Weekly Register.

THE APOCALYPSE OF BARUCH

TRANSLATED FROM THE SYRIAC

REV. R. H. CHARLES, M.A.

PROFESSOR OF BIBLICAL GREEK, TRINITY COLLEGE, DUBLIN

Crown 8vo. Cloth. Price 7s. 6d. net.

“Mr. Charles’s last work will have a hearty welcome from students of Syriac whose interest is linguistic, and from theological students who have learned the value of Jewish and Christian pseud-epigraphy; and the educated general reader will find much of high interest in it, regard being had to its date and its theological standpoint.”—Record.

“Mr. Charles has in this work followed up the admirable editions of other pieces of apocalyptic literature with an edition equally admirable. Some of the notes on theological or other points of special interest are very full and instructive. The whole work is an honour to English scholarship. . . . The work before us is one that no future student of apocalyptic literature will be able to neglect, and students of the New Testament or the contemporary Jewish thought will find much to interest them in it.”—Primitive Methodist Quarterly Review.

“As is intimated in the title-page, the Syriac text, based on ten MSS., from which the Epistle of Baruch is translated, is included in the volume. The learned footnotes which accompany the translation throughout will be found most helpful to the reader. Indeed, nothing seems to have been left undone which could make this ancient writing intelligible to the student.”—Scotsman.

“To say that this is the edition of the Apocalypse of Baruch is to say nothing. Let us say that it is an edition which alone would give an editor a name to live.”—Expository Times.

THE ASSUMPTION OF MOSES

Translated from the Latin Sixth Century MS., the unemended Text of which is published herewith, together with the Text in its restored and critically emended form.

WITH INTRODUCTION, NOTES, AND INDICES

BY THE

REV. R. H. CHARLES, M.A.

PROFESSOR OF BIBLICAL GREEK, TRINITY COLLEGE, DUBLIN

Crown 8vo. Cloth. Price 7s. 6d.

"In this admirable little book the Rev. R. H. Charles has added another to the excellent series of editions by which he has earned the gratitude of all students of early Christian literature."—Times.

"Nothing has been left undone by the author which could contribute to the settling of the text, the elucidation of the general purpose of the book, and the interpretation of particular passages. In short, it is worthy to rank with his edition of the 'Apocalypse of Baruch,' and higher praise than that could hardly be given."—Primitive Methodist Quarterly Review.

"If ever man found his vocation in life, it is Mr. Charles. He is at home and happy among these unknown apocryphal authors, as you or I might be with Isaiah or St. Paul, and he sees to it that the edition of their works he publishes is better than any edition that has gone before. There have been editions of the Assumption of Moses before; there is no edition that one would dream of buying now but this."—Expository Times.

"The Rev. R. H. Charles's edition of 'The Assumption of Moses' adds another to the number of valuable books which he has given to students of the non-canonical scriptures of the Jews."—Scotsman.

INTRODUCTORY NOTES.

ONE of the most marked features of theological research in our day and decade is the intense interest which characterizes the work in biblical theology, technically so called, and in this department no auxiliary branch has been more productive of good results than has been that discipline called History of New Testament Times, or the study of the times of Christ as to their religious, moral, and social features. The aim of such study is to reproduce, as far as possible, the exact picture of Christ's earthly career in the midst of all the agencies which influenced him and upon which he exerted his influence; in other words, to understand Christ's words and works with their true historical background and surroundings. It is a line of investigation that has produced, indirectly, such masterpieces as Weber's System der altsynagogalen palästinischen Theologie (Leipzig, 1880), and, directly, such as Edersheim's Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah, as also the two Neu-Testamentliche Zeitgeschichten, of Schürer and Hausrath, as well as many other works, smaller in dimensions and more closely circumscribed in scope, while the spirit and method of this research is felt in every fibre of the leading exegetical and historical works on biblical subjects. The object of all this study is to produce an accurate and truly historical picture of Christ and Christianity.

In the pursuit of this aim the Book of Jubilees has a not unimportant mission. This importance lies in the fact that it, if carefully studied, will furnish valuable contributions toward the understanding of that problem which lies back and behind all the work and teachings of both

Christ and his disciples, as also of the writings of the latter, namely, the doctrines, beliefs, and spirit of New Testament Judaism. Christ came unto his own, and his own received him not (John i. 11), because Israel had departed from the revelations of God. Instead of a justification by faith, as is taught throughout the whole Old Testament, the cotemporaries of our Lord taught a justification by the law, a legal righteousness. The central principle of Jewish orthodoxy was the nomistic principle, that obedience to the law in all its real and imagined ramifications must be the basis of acceptance before God. Thus there was an impassable gulf fixed between the theological system of the Jews and that of Christ and his disciples. The latter was a further development from Old Testament premises; the former was a radical departure from all pre-Christian revelation. This woful heterodoxy, which constituted the backbone and marrow of the accepted theology of the day, meets Christ and his disciples wherever they work or speak, and has been an all-powerful factor in moulding the shape and form which the New Testament revelation and development has assumed. We need in this connection to cite as examples only the Pauline doctrine of the law, in which he antagonizes, not the law as such, but only the false stand-point of the Jews in regard to the law, and his outspoken and decided championship of the doctrine of justification by faith alone over against a justification by works, suggested, beyond all doubt, by the fundamental error of the Jewish system of his day.

In the study of these problems the book before us finds its mission. The editor of the Ethiopic text and German translator, Professor Dillmann, has proved to the satisfaction of scholars in general, that the book is a production of the first Christian century. In Ewald's Jahrbücher der biblischen Wissenschaft for 1850 and 1851, he has published a German translation of the book from a single and defective manuscript, and added a short discussion of the contents. There (pp. 90-4) he shows that the book presupposes and cites those parts of the Book of Enoch which date up to about the birth of Christ, while it, in turn, has been used and quoted by the Testament of the Twelve Patriarchs, a work similar in spirit and a product of the early part of the second century. This will decide the end of the first century after Christ as the date for the composition of the Book of Jubilees. By Christian authors the work is not quoted until later. Epiphanius, Jerome, and Rufinus are the first to mention it, while Syncellus, Cedrinus, and other Byzantine writers quote from it at length. These citations are collected in Fabricius, Codex Pseudepigraphus Veteris Testamenti, 1722, vol. i. pp. 849-64. But the testimony of the Testamentum XII. Patriarcharum is decisive as to the terminus ad quem. Rönisch, who has made a most exhaustive study of the book, confidently claims that it was written before the destruction of the temple, pointing to the words in c. 1, 23; 49, 27, and similar passages, which could not have been written after that event. Cf. also Drummond, The Jewish Messiah, p. 146, and Schiirer, l. c. 463.

As the book is undoubtedly the work of a Palestinian Jew and written in Hebrew (although the Ethiopic is translated from the Greek—cf. Dillmann, l. c. p. 88 ff.), it can be fairly considered as an outgrowth of that school and spirit of Judaism which we in the New Testament find arrayed in opposition to Christianity and its work. The book can best be described by calling it a haggadic commentary on certain portions of Genesis and the opening chapters of Exodus, and it is thus the oldest of all the Midrashim, and a representative example of the manner in which the learned contemporaries of Christ made use of the biblical books for their own peculiar purpose and object. It is a sample of an exegetical Targum of those days in the spirit of New Testament Judaism. Just to what particular school of Jewish thought it owes its origin would be difficult to decide. Since the publication of the German translation, a number of Jewish scholars, such as Jellenek (Beth-ha-Midrash, 1855, p. x. ff.), Beer (Das Buch der Jubiläen, 1856), Frankel (Monatsschrift für Geschichte u. Wissenschaft des Judenthums, 1856), and earlier, Treuenfels (Literaturblatt des Orients, p. 1846), have discussed the problem, one advocating a Samaritan origin, another an Essene, another claiming that it arose in the Egyptian Diaspora, but all agreeing as to its thoroughly Jewish origin and, in general, its representative character, while Rönsch even thinks that he detects an anti-Christian tendency (Das Buch der Jubiläen, oder die kleine Genesis, pp. 518–20).

What time and source would indicate is amply verified by an examination of the contents. This, of course, cannot be the place, nor is it our object, to analyze critically the contents of the book, but by pointing to a few prominent features it will be readily seen how thoroughly the book harmonizes with the leading thoughts of Jewish orthodoxy in Christ's day. The centre of that orthodoxy was the law and its paraphernalia, and all means, lawful and unlawful, were put into requisition to exalt the importance of that law and to increase its authority. The eternity and pre-existence of this law, its festivals and its ceremonies, are accepted beliefs of later Judaism (cf. Weber, l. c. § 4 ff.). To the service of this dogma the writer of the Book of Jubilees has lent his pen. He again and again maintains the thesis that the law existed from eternity, although revealed in full only through Moses; that even in heaven, before the creation, the angels observed the festivals, services, and ceremonies of this law; that throughout their lives the patriarchs all strictly carried out its behests. All these things were written on the "tablets of heaven," and were gradually introduced among the pious fathers as occasion offered an opportunity, and the teachings concerning them were laid down in writing at the very beginning, which books of mystery were handed down from father to son in theocratic succession. This is the leading thought of the whole work, and, in some form or other, is found in nearly every chapter. It is a remarkable example of how willing the Jews in Christ's day were to employ a most remarkable exegesis in order to make the records of revelation accord with their false view of its legal features.

Besides this leading characteristic of the work, there are many others of less importance that are interesting and instructive, and that cast a discerning light on the Jewish world of thought at the New Testament era. Outwardly the leading feature is the chronological system of the book, namely, its division of all ancient history of the Israelites according to the sacred periods of jubilees of forty-nine years, which fact gives it one of its Greek names, Tὰ Ἰωβηλαία (Epiphanius, adv. Her., i, 3, 6), the other being ἡ λεπτή γένεσις, λεπτογένεσις, or μικρογένεσις, so called, not because it is shorter than the canonical Genesis, but because it had less authority. The time between the creation and the entrance of Israel into Canaan is counted as fifty jubilees, or 2,450 years, which in general agrees with the biblical records. In the details of this chronological arrangement there are occasionally slight variations from the Hebrew text, and in these instances there is often a surprising agreement with the Septuagint and the Samaritan versions. Dillmann is probably correct (p. 77) in ascribing these variations from the Hebrew, not to the author, but to the translator, accommodating the numbers to the Septuagint text recognized among the Greeks.

It is remarkable how the writer bridges over all the difficulties of the canonical Genesis. The speaking of the serpent in Paradise is explained by the fact that before the fall all animals could speak; he knows the names of all the wives of the patriarchs, also the day and month when their children were born; he shows how Genesis ii. 17 was literally fulfilled, since before the Lord a thousand years are as one day, and Adam died before he was a thousand years old; a parallel exegesis to this is found in Justin Martyr c. Tryphone 81. He narrates with whose assistance Noah brought the animals into the ark; how the Hamitic tribes of Palestine unlawfully took possession of Shem's portion; that Rebecca loved Jacob more than Esau because Abraham had told her that the younger son would be the theocratic successor; also why it was that Amnon refused to take Tamar to wife; how Moses was preserved in the bulrushes, etc., and many other biblical narratives are explained and complemented in various manners, usually in an apologetical spirit.

The book is also full of stories and fables concerning the fathers in Israel, some of these being found also in the Testament of the Twelve Patriarchs, and other earlier and later works, but many not preserved elsewhere. In this connection we mention the names of the wives of the patriarchs and of the sons of Jacob; the name of the land to which Adam was driven after the expulsion from Eden; the number of the sons of Adam; the four sacred mountains of the earth; the name of the mountain of the Ararat chain where the ark rested; the extensive account of the fall of the angels in the days of Jared, together with the dire consequences of their sins with the daughters of men, which story forms the burden of the earliest portions of the book; the story of the books of Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac, and others; the early days of Abraham, his piety, and fight against the idolatry of his father's house; the ten temptations of Abraham, and many similar stories concerning Jacob and his relations to Esau, and concerning the sons of Jacob and their history. The angelology and demonology of the book are carried out quite extensively, and in the main thoughts agree with the ideas found in other apocalyptic works. The patriarchs are all models of virtue, and especially prominent through their observance of the Levitical ordinances and ceremonies. The rest of the work is in harmony with these statements. Both through what it states and what it omits, the work is instructive in teaching what was the Zeitgeist among the Jews in those memorable days.

But, of course, the full contribution of the Book of Jubilees to the New Testament can only be secured through a careful and patient study of every chapter and verse. In order to enable scholars who are not acquainted with the Ethiopic to do this work, the present translation is here offered. It has been made directly from the best Ethiopic text accessible, and with the best aids at the translator's command. As has been stated above, the German translation by Dillmann is from a single defective and poor manuscript. Nine years after its publication, in 1859, Dillmann, the prince of Ethiopic scholars in our century, issued a critical edition of the Ethiopic text on the basis of two manuscripts, entitled, Liber Jubilaeorum Qui idem a Gracis Ἡ λεπτὴ γένεσις inscribitur, versione Graeca deperdita, nunc nonnisi in Geez lingua conservatus, nuper ex Abyssinia in Europam allatus, Aethiopice ad duorum librorum manuscriptorum fidem primum edidit Dr. August Dillmann. He had hoped himself to make a new translation of the book from this improved text (cf. Praefatio p. x.), but has never been able to do so. In Rönsch's edition, however, of a Latin fragment of the book found in 1861 by Ceriani, and embracing about one-third of the book, he has given a Latin translation from the Ethiopic of those sections corresponding to the Ceriani fragment. The need of a new translation has frequently been urged (cf., e. g., Drummond, l. c., p. 144). As there is no such version in any modern language, the present translator has attempted to do this, leaving to others to investigate the book in its whole length, depth, and breadth. In order to facilitate the study of the book, the translator has not only adopted the division of Dillmann into chapters, but has also divided these again into verses. The lack of this latter feature in Dillmann makes the use of his version very difficult. The fullest discussion of the book is that of Rönsch, besides whose work those mentioned in this introductory note may be consulted. The English reader will find valuable aid in Drummond, pp. 143-147.

THE BOOK OF JUBILEES.

These are the words of the division¹ of days, according to the law and testimony,² according to the events of the years, according to their sevens, according to their Jubilees, to all the years of the world, according to the word of the Lord on Mount Sinai to Moses, when he ascended to receive the stone tablets of the law and the commandments by the voice of the Lord when he said to him: "Ascend to the top of the mountain!"³

CHAP. I. And it happened in the first year of the exodus of the children of Israel out of Egypt, in the 3rd month, on the 16th of this month, and the Lord spoke to Moses saying: "Ascend to me here on the mountain, and I will give to thee the two stone tablets of the law and the commandments; as I have written them, thou shalt make them known." 2. And Moses ascended the mountain of the Lord, and the glory of the Lord dwelt on the mountain of Sinai, and a cloud overshadowed it six days. 3. And the Lord called to Moses on the seventh day in the midst of the cloud; and he saw the glory of the Lord like a flaming fire on the top of the mountain.¹ 4. And Moses was there on the mountain forty days and forty nights, and the Lord instructed him in regard to what was past and what would be, the words of the division of days, both in the law and the testimony. 5. And he said to him: "Incline thy heart to every word which I shall speak to thee, and write them into a book, in order that their generations may see how I have left them on account of all the evil which they do, in rebelling and in deserting the covenant which I established between me and thee this day on Mount Sinai for their generations. 6. And it will be and these words shall declare it thus when all the punishments shall come over them, and they will know that I am more righteous than they in all their judgments and their desires, and they will know that I was with them. 7. And thou, write for thyself all these words which I make known to thee this day (for I know their rebellion and their stiff neck²) before I shall lead them into the land which I have sworn to their fathers, to Abraham and to Isaac and to Jacob, saying, "To your seed I will give this land, which flows with milk and honey; and they shall eat and be satisfied. 8. And they will turn themselves to false gods, who did not deliver them from all their oppression; and this testimony will be heard against them for a testimony. 9. For they will forget all my ordinances which I have commanded them, and will walk after the Gentiles and after their impurity and after their shame, and will serve their gods, and these will become for them an offence unto oppression and misfortune and for a trap. 10. And many will be destroyed and will be taken captive and will fall into the hands of the enemy, because they have deserted my ordinances and my commands and the festivals of my covenant, and my sabbaths and that which I have sanctified to myself in their midst, and my tabernacle and my sanctuary which I have sanctified to myself in the midst of the land that I should set my name over it and it should dwell there. 11. And they will make to themselves altars on heights and groves and sculptured idols, and each one will worship his own idol for sin, and they will offer their children to the demons and to all the deeds of the error of their hearts. 12. And I will send witnesses to them that I may testify over them, but they will not hear and will slay my witnesses, and they will cast out those who seek the law, and will abolish the whole [law], and will begin to do evil before my eyes. 13. And I will hide my face from them and I will deliver them over to the gentiles for captivity and for binding and for devouring and for expelling them from the midst of the land, and I shall scatter them in the midst of the gentiles. 14. And they will forget all my law and all my commandments and all my judgment, and they will err in reference to new moons and sabbaths and festivals and jubilees and ordinances. 15. And then they will turn themselves to me from the midst of the gentiles with all their hearts and all their soul and all their power, and I shall gather them from amongst all the gentiles, and they will seek me that I may be found for them when they seek me with all their heart and with all their soul, and I will open to them much peace and righteousness. 16. And I will transplant them as a plant of righteousness, with all my heart and with all my soul, and they will be to me for a blessing and not for a curse, a head and not a tail; and I will build up my sanctuary in their midst, and I will dwell with them, and I will be to them their God, and they shall be to me my people, in truth and in righteousness, and I will not desert them and will not deny them, for I am the Lord their God." 17. And Moses fell down upon his face, and he prayed and said: "My Lord and my God, do not forsake thy people and thy inheritance to wander in the error of their hearts, and do not deliver them into the hands of their enemies, the gentiles, that these may not rule over them, and that they do not make them to sin against thee. 18. O Lord, let thy mercy be raised over thy people, and create for them a righteous mind, and let not the spirit of Beliar¹ rule over them to accuse them before thee, to entrap them away from the path of righteousness, that they be destroyed from before thy face. 19. But they are thy people and thy inheritance, which thou hast delivered from the hands of the Egyptians with thy great power; and create in them a clean heart and a holy spirit, and let them not be entrapped in their sins from now on and to eternity!" 20. And the Lord said to Moses: "I know their contrariness and their thoughts and their stiff neck, and they will not obey until they learn their sins and the sins of their fathers. And after this they will turn to me in all righteousness and with their whole heart and with their whole soul, and I will circumcise the foreskin of their hearts and the foreskin of the hearts of their seed, and I will create for them a holy spirit, and will cleanse them so that they do not turn away from me from this day to eternity. 21. And their souls will cling to me and to all my commandments, and my commandments shall return to them, and I will be to them a father, and they shall be to me children. And they shall all be called the children of the living God, and will know all things of the spirit and all things of service, and it will be known that they are my children and that I am their father in righteousness and in truth, and that I love them. 22. And thou, write down for thyself all these words which I have this day make known to thee on this mountain, the first and the last and what is future, according to all the division of days in the law and in the testimony, and according to the weeks¹ of the jubilees to eternity, until I descend and dwell with them in all eternity."

¹ Kûfâlê, i. e., division, or rather, "Book of Division," is the name by which this book is known among the Abyssinians. As such it is cited, e. g., in the Apostolic Canons, 55. In Fell's edition, c. 56, we read of "three books of the Kûfâlê." The name is derived from the fact that the author divides the history he records according to the chronological system of jubilee periods.

² Both words used in the original for law and testimony are frequently employed for "covenant," διαθήκη. The two together evidently express the covenant relation between Israel and Jehovah.

23. And he said to the angel of the face:² "Write for Moses from the beginning of creation until my sanctuary shall have been established in their midst for all eternity, and the Lord will have appeared to the eyes of all, and all will know that I am the God of Israel and the Father of all of the children of Jacob and King on Mount Zion from eternity to eternity. And Zion and Jerusalem will be holy."

24. And the angel of the face, who went before the tents of Israel, took the tablets of the division of years from the time of the creation, the law and the testimony for the weeks and the jubilees, each year according to all its numbers and the jubilees according to years from the day of the new creation, when heaven and earth were created new, and also all creation according to the powers of heaven and all the creation of the earth, until then when the sanctuary of the Lord will be made in Jerusalem on Mount Zion, and all the luminaries will be renewed for a healing and for peace and for a blessing for all the chosen of Israel, that it may be thus from this day on and to all the days of the world!

CHAP. II. And the angel of the face spoke to Moses by the command of the Lord, saying: "Write all the words

¹ The word "weeks" is used throughout the work in the sense of week of years, i. e., forty-nine years, or one jubilee period.

² The biblical מלאך הפנים, the favorite angels of apocalyptic writers, whose mission is the mediatorship between God and man. Later writers resort to this means of communication between divinity and humanity all the more in order to preserve the former from all contact with the latter, and thus preserve the holiness of God. The idea is born from the same spirit that induced the Septuagint translators to smooth over the anthropomorphism and anthropopathies of the Hebrew text, and helped much to the development of Philo's logos idea and allegorical method of interpretation, as also to the popularity of the Menre mediatorship in God's dealings with men and the world so generally prevalent in the Targumim. Cf. Zech. i. 9, and similar passages, and also Weber, System der altsynag. palest. Theologie, passim.

of creation, how in six days the Lord God finished all the works which he created, and rested on the seventh day and sanctified it for all the years and established it as a sign for all his works." For on the first day he created the heavens above and the earth and the waters and all the spirits that serve before him, and the angels of the face and the angels that cry "holy," and the angels of the spirit of fire,¹ and the angels of the spirit of wind, and the angels of the spirit of the clouds of darkness and of hail and of hoarfrost, and the angels of the abysses and of thunder and of lightning, and the angels of the spirits of cold and of heat, of winter and of spring and of fall and of summer and of all the spirits of the multitude of works which are in the heavens and on the earth and in all the depths, and of darkness and of light and of dawn and of eve which he has prepared in the knowledge of his heart. 2. And at that time we saw his work and praised him and lauded before him on account of all his work, for seven great things did he make on the first day.² 3. And on the second day he made a firmament between the waters, and the waters divided on this day, and half of it ascended upward, and half of it descended beneath the firmament over the face of the earth. And this work alone was made on the second day. 4. And on the third day he did as he said to the waters that they should cross from the face of the whole earth to one place, and that dry land should appear. 5. And he made the waters thus as he said to them, and they gathered from over the face of the earth into one place outside of this firmament, and the dry land appeared. 6. And on that day he created for it

¹ The idea underlying this and similar expressions found so frequently in the Jewish apocalypses is that all objects in nature which can be agencies for good or for evil are under the management of particular angels who direct their use according to the will of the Lord. Especially is this the case in the Noachic fragments of Enoch. Cf. the translator's version of that book (Andover, 1882), chap. 60 sqq. and notes.

² I. e., heaven, earth, water, serving spirits, angels of the face, angels of praise, and angels of the elements. Cf. also verse 17 of this chapter.

[the water] the abysses of the seas, according to their separate gathering places, and all the rivers and the gathering places of the waters in the hills and in all the earth, and all the lakes, and all the dew of the earth, and the seed which is sown according to its kind, and every thing that is eaten, and the trees which bear fruit, and the wild trees, and the garden of Eden for pleasure; and all these four¹ great creations he made on the third day.

7. And on the fourth day he made the sun and moon and stars and placed them in the firmament of heaven that they should shine over the earth and to rule over day and night and to divide between night and day and between darkness and light. 8. And God established the sun as a great sign over the earth and for days and for sabbaths and for months and for festivals and for years and for jubilees and for all seasons of the years. 9. And he shall divide between light and darkness and for prosperity that all things that sprout and grow on earth may prosper. 10. These three kinds God made on the fourth day. 11. And on the fifth day he created the great animals in the abysses of the seas (for these were the first things of flesh created by his hands), and every thing that moves in the waters, and the fishes and every thing that flies, the birds and their whole kind. 12. And the sun arose over them to prosper them, and over all that was on the earth, every thing that sprouts out of the earth and all the trees that bear fruit and all flesh: these three kinds he made on the fifth day. 13. And on the sixth day he made all the animals of the earth and all the beasts and every thing that moves over the earth. 14. And after all this he made mankind, a single one; male and female he created them, and made him ruler over all things upon the earth and in the seas and over that which flies and over all the animals and beasts and over every thing that moves on the earth, and over the whole earth; and over all this he made him ruler. 15. And these four kinds he made on the sixth day. And there were altogether twenty-two kinds.¹ 16. And he completed all his work on the sixth day,² all that is in the heavens and on the earth and in the seas and in the abysses, in the light and in the darkness and in every thing; and he gave us [the angels] a great sign, the day of sabbaths, that we should do work six days, and should rest on the sabbath from all work. 17. And all the angels of the face and all the angels that cry "holy," to us, these two great kinds, he said that we should observe the sabbath with him in heaven and on earth.³ 18. And he said to us: "Behold, I shall separate for myself a people from among all the nations, and these shall celebrate the sabbath, and I shall sanctify them unto myself as a nation, and I will sanctify them unto myself as a people, and will bless them, as I have sanctified the day of sabbaths, and I will sanctify them unto me and thus I will bless them; and they shall be to me my people, but I will be to them a God. 19. And I chose the seed of Jacob from among all that I have seen and have written him down as a first born son, and I have sanctified him unto myself forever and ever; and the day of the sabbaths I will teach them, that they observe sabbath on it from all work." 20. And he made therein a sign that they too should observe the sabbath with us on the seventh day, to eat and to drink and to bless him who has created all things, as he blessed and sanctified unto himself a people which shall appear from amongst the nations and that they should observe the sabbath together with us. And he caused that before him his commands should ascend like a sweet savor which should be acceptable before him all the days of the twenty-two heads of men from Adam to Jacob. And twenty-two kinds of works were made until this seventh day;¹ this thing is blessed and holy, and the former too is blessed and holy: and this one with that one serves for a sanctification and blessing. 21. And to this one [Jacob and his seed] was given that they should be for all days the blessed and holy ones of the testimony and the first law, just as he had blessed and sanctified the seventh day on the seventh day. 22. He created heaven and earth and every thing that he created in six days, and the Lord established a holy festival day for all his creation; and therefore he commanded on its account that he who does any work on it shall die, and whoever defiles it shall surely die. 23. And thou, command the children of Israel, and they shall observe this day, so that they keep it holy and do not work on it any work, and do not defile it; for it is holier than all the days. 24. All who profane this day shall surely die, and all who do any work on it shall surely die forever; so that the children of Israel observe this day in their generations and be not rooted out of the land; for it is a holy day and a blessed day. 25. And every man who observes it and keeps the sabbath on it away from all his work, will be blessed and holy for all his days like unto me. 26. And announce and say to the children of Israel the law of this day, and that they shall observe the sabbath on it, and do not desert it in the error of their hearts, and that they be not engaged in doing any thing on it which should not be done, and that they do not prepare on it any thing that is eaten or drunk, nor draw water, nor on it carry in or bring out of their gates any thing that is carried, which they have not prepared for themselves as a work on the six days in their houses. 27. And they shall not carry out or bring in on that day from one house to another, for this is a holy and blessed day over all the days of jubilees; on it we observed the sabbath in heaven, before it was known to any mortal to observe the sabbath on it on the earth. 28. And the Creator of all blessed it; but he did not sanctify all nations and peoples to observe the sabbath on it, only Israel alone: to them alone he granted to eat and to drink and to observe sabbath on it on the earth. 29. And the Creator of all blessed it, who had created this day for a blessing and a sanctification and for glory above all the days. 30. This law and testimony was given to the children of Israel as a law forever to their generations.

³ Not only the pre-existence of great persons, such as the Messiah, but of sacred objects and ceremonies is a favorite idea of apocalyptic writers. According to the book of Jubilees, the Israelite economy was but a reflex and reproduction of an eternal and more perfect hierarchia caelestis among the angels around the throne of grace. Cf. especially the translator's introduction to Enoch p. 48 sqq. In Assumptio Mosis i. 17 we have the same view we find expressed here concerning the observance of the sabbath in heaven, cf. also verse 27 of this chapter.

CHAP. III. 1. And in the sixth day of the second sabbath we brought, by the command of the Lord, to Adam all the animals and all the beasts and all the birds and every thing that moves on the earth and every thing that moves in the water, each according to their kind, and each according to their similarity: on the first day the animals; the beasts on the second day; the birds on the third day; every thing that moves on the earth the fourth day; whatever moves in the water on the fifth day. 2. And Adam gave unto each its name; and as he called them, this was their name. And on these five days Adam saw this: a male and a female in each kind that is on the earth, but that he was alone and could not find a companion who could be an aid to such as he. 3. And God said to me:¹ "It is not good that man should be alone: let us make for him a helpmeet like unto him." 4. And the Lord our God caused a stupor to fall upon him and he slept, and he took for a wife one rib from amongst his ribs, and this rib was made into a woman from amongst his ribs, and he built flesh there in its place, and built a woman. 5. And he awakened Adam out of his sleep, and awakening he arose on the sixth day and came to her and knew her and said unto her: 'This is now bone from my bone and flesh from my flesh: this one shall be called my wife, for she came and originated from man. 6. For this reason man and wife shall be one, and for this reason a man shall leave his father and his mother and will connect himself with his wife, and they shall be one flesh. 7. And in the first seventh was Adam created, and his wife in his side, and in the second seventh he showed her to him,¹ and on that account the command was given to observe in their defilement seven days for a male and twice seven days for a female.²

8. And when Adam had completed forty days in the land where he had been created, we brought him into the garden of Eden, that he should work it and watch it; but his wife they brought in on the eightieth day, and after this she entered the garden; and on this account the commandment is written on the tablets of heaven³ in reference to her that gives birth, that "if she brings forth a male, she shall remain in her uncleanness seven days according to the first week of days, and thirty days shall she abide in the blood of purifying, and she shall touch nothing holy and shall not enter into the sanctuary until these days are completed for her who has a male child. 9. But she who has a female child shall remain in her uncleanness two weeks, according to the first two weeks, and sixty-six days in the blood of purifying, and all the days for her shall be eighty."⁴ 10. And she having completed these

eighty days we brought her into the garden of Eden, for it is holy above the whole earth, and every tree that is planted in it is holy. And on this account was ordained concerning her that gives birth to a male or female this law for these days, that they shall touch nothing holy nor enter a sanctuary until these days for a male or a female are completed.¹ 11. This law and testimony was given and written for the children of Israel that they should observe it all the days. 12. And in the first week of the first jubilee Adam and his wife were in the garden of Eden seven years working and watching it; and we gave them work and taught them to work every thing that offered itself for work. 13. And he labored and was naked and did not know it and was not ashamed, and he watched the garden against the birds and the animals and the beasts,² and gathered its fruits and ate and laid aside the rest for himself and his wife, and laid aside that which he had guarded for himself. 14. And having ended the completion of seven years which he completed there, in the seventh year exactly, and in the second month, on the seventeenth of the month, the serpent came and approached the woman, and the serpent said to the woman: "Has God commanded that you shall not eat of any of the fruit of the tree in the garden?" 15. And she said to it. "He has told us, 'Eat from all the fruit of the trees in the garden, but from the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden ye shall not eat, nor shall ye touch it, that ye die not!'" 16. And the serpent said to the woman: "Ye will surely not die, but because God knows that on which day ye eat of it your eyes shall be opened and ye shall be like gods and will know good and evil." 17. And the woman saw the tree that it was pleasant and it pleased the eye, and that its fruit was good to eat; she took from it and ate. 18. And she first covered her shame with fig leaves, and gave to her husband, and he ate, and his eyes were opened and he saw that he was naked. 19. And he took fig leaves and sewed them together and made for himself an apron and covered his shame. 20. And God cursed the serpent and was enraged at it forever; and he was enraged at the woman also, because she had obeyed the voice of the serpent, and he said to her: "I shall surely increase thy pains and thy trouble; in thy pains bear children, and to thy husband be thy refuge, and he shall be thy lord." 21. And to Adam he said: "Because thou didst obey the voice of thy wife and didst eat from this tree of which I had commanded thee that thou shouldst not eat, let the earth be cursed on account of thy deed; thorns and thistles shall it bring forth for thee; and eat thou thy bread in the sweat of thy brow until thou returnest to the earth from which thou hast been taken; for earth thou art, and to earth thou shalt return." 22. And he made for them garments of skin and clothed them, and sent them from the garden. 23. And on that day on which Adam came out of the garden of Eden he offered, as a sweet savour, a burnt offering: frankincense and galbanum and myrrh spices, in the morning with the rising of the sun, on the day when he covered his shame. 24. And on that day was closed the mouth of all the animals and of the beasts and of the birds and of whatever walks and of whatever moves, so that they could not speak; for they all had spoken with each other one lip and one tongue.¹ 25. And he sent out of the garden of Eden all flesh that was in the garden of Eden, and all flesh was scattered according to its kinds and according to its natures to the places which had been created for them. 26. And to Adam alone did he give to cover his shame, of all the animals and beasts. 27. On this account it is commanded in the tablets of heaven concerning all who know the judgment of the law, that they shall cover their shame and shall not uncover themselves as the gentiles uncover themselves. 28. And at the new moon of the fourth month Adam and his wife came out of the garden of Eden and dwelt in the land of Eldâ, in the land of their creation. 29. And Adam called the name of his wife Eve. 30. And they did not have a son until the first jubilee year; and after this he knew her. 31. But he cultivated the land, as he had been taught in the garden of Eden.

CHAP. IV. 1. And in the third week of the second jubilee she gave birth to Cain, and in the fourth she gave birth to Abel, and in the fifth she gave birth to her daughter Awân.¹ 2. And in the first [week] of the third jubilee Cain slew Abel, because [God] accepted an offering from his hands, but did not receive a fruit offering from the hands of Cain. 3. And he slew him on the field; and his blood cried aloud from earth to heaven lamenting that he had slain him, and God punished Cain, because he had slain Abel. 4. And he made him a refugee over the earth, on account of the blood of his brother, and he cursed him upon the earth. 5. And on this account it is written in the tablets of heaven: "Cursed be he who slays his neighbor in wickedness, and all who hear shall say, 'So be it!' and the man who sees it and does not announce it, cursed be he like the other." 6. And on this account we hearing come to announce before the Lord our God all the sins which take place in heaven and earth, and in light and in darkness, and everywhere. 7. And Adam and his wife mourned for Abel four weeks of years; and in the fourth year of the fifth week he became joyful and knew his wife again, and she brought forth for him a son, and ¹ Who invented this and the other non-biblical names that are found in this and the following chapters is not known. As in the whole known literature of that day and kind there is no other book that contains so many of them as does the one before us, it may not be incorrect to think that the author himself invented many. But he is certainly not the originator of the idea of inventing such names. Indications abound that the popular Jewish faith of the day had many such names.

they called his name Seth; for he said: "The Lord has raised up for us a second seed on the earth in the place of Abel; for Cain slew him." 8. In the sixth week he begat his daughter Azûrâ. 9. And Cain took Awân his sister to himself as wife, and she brought forth for him Enoch at the end of the fourth jubilee. And in the first year of the first week of the fifth jubilee houses were built on the earth, and Cain built a city, and called it by the name of his son Enoch. 10. And Adam knew Eve, his wife, and she brought forth yet nine sons. 11. And in the fifth week of this jubilee Seth took Azûrâ his sister to himself as wife, and in the fourth [year] she brought forth for him Enos. 12. And he began first to call upon the name of the Lord on the earth. 13. And in the seventh jubilee, in the fifth week, Enos took Nôêm his sister to himself as wife, and she brought forth for him a son in the third year of the fifth week, and called his name Cainan. 14. And at the end of the eighth jubilee Cainan took to himself as wife Mûalêt his sister, and she bore for him a son in the ninth jubilee, in the first week, in the third year of this week, and he called his name Malâlêl. 15. And in the second week of the tenth jubilee Malâlêl took unto himself as wife Sinâ, the daughter of Barâkhêl, the daughter of the sister of his father, and she bore him a son in the third week, in the sixth year, and he called his name Jârêd; for in his days the angels of the Lord descended upon the earth, those that are called Watchmen,¹ that they should teach the children of men to do judgment and right over the earth. 16. And in the eleventh jubilee Jârêd took to himself a wife, and her name was Barâkâ, a daughter of Râsûjêl, a daughter of the sister of his father,

¹ The name by which the angels of Gen. vi. 1 sqq. are known in apocalyptic literature. Their evil deeds and the consequences thereof form the burden of the oldest portion of the book of Enoch. All that is here related of them and of Enoch is based upon the account there given, and the whole matter is treated in extenso in the writer's translation of that book. in the fourth week of this jubilee; and she bore for him a son in the fifth week, in the fourth year, of this jubilee, and he called his name Enoch. 17. He was the first one from among the children of men that are born on the earth to learn writing and knowledge and wisdom. 18. And he wrote the signs of heaven¹ according to the order of their months in a book, that the sons of men might know the time of the year according to their separate months. 19. He was the first to write a testimony, and he testified to the children of men concerning the generations of the earth, and explained the weeks of the jubilees, and made known to them the days of the years, and arranged the months and explained the sabbaths of the years as we made them known to him. 20. And what was and what will be he saw in a vision of the night in a dream, and as it will happen to the children of men in their generations until the day of judgment; he saw and learned every thing and wrote it as a testimony and laid the testimony on the earth over all the children of men and for their generations. 21. And in the twelfth jubilee, in the seventh week thereof, he took to himself a wife, and her name was Ednâ, the daughter of Daniel, the daughter of the sister of his father; and in the sixth year in this week she bore him a son, and he called his name Methusaleh. 22. And then he was with the angels of God six years of this jubilee, and they showed him all things on earth and in heaven, the rule of the sun, and he wrote down all things. 23. And he testified to the Watchmen, those that sinned with the daughters of men; for they had commenced to mix with the daughters of the earth, so that they were defiled; and Enoch testified against them all. 24. And he was removed from the midst of the children of men, and we conducted him into the garden of Eden for greatness and for honor, and behold here he was engaged in writing down the judgment and the eternal condemnation and all the wickedness of the sons of the children of men. 25. And on his account [God] brought the deluge over the whole land of Eden;¹ for there he was set as a sign and that he should testify over all the sons of the children of men, that he should declare all the deeds of the generations until the day of judgment. 26. And he offered a burnt offering on the west side of the sanctuary [?] which was pleasing before the Lord on the hill of the south; for there are four places to the Lord on earth: the garden of Eden and the hill of the east in it,² and this hill on which thou art to-day, the hill of Sinai, and the hill of Zion, which will be sanctified in the new creation for a sanctification of the earth: through it the earth will be sanctified from all its sin and its uncleanness to the generation of eternity.³ 27. And in the fourteenth jubilee Methusaleh took unto himself as his wife Ednâ, the daughter of Ezrâêl, the daughter of the sister of his father, in the third week in first year of this week, and he begat a son and called his name Lâmêch. And in the fifteenth jubilee, in the third week, Lâmêch took to himself a wife, and her name was Bilanôs, the daughter of Barâkêl, the daughter of the sister of his father; and in this week she bore him a son, and he called his name Noah, saying: "This one will comfort me on account of all my work and on account of the earth which the Lord has cursed." 28. And at the end of the nineteenth jubilee, in the seventh week, in the sixth year thereof, Adam died, and all of his sons buried him in the land of the creation of Adam, and he was the first to be buried in the earth, and he lacked seventy years of one thousand years; for one thousand years are like one day in the testimony of heaven,¹ and therefore it was written concerning the tree of knowledge: "On the day on which ye eat thereof ye shall die." 29. And for this reason he did not complete the years of this day; for in it he died. 30. At the end of this jubilee Cain was killed, after him, in the same year; and his house fell upon him, and he died in the midst of the house, and he was killed with his stones, for with a stone he had killed Abel, and with a stone he was killed by a judgment of righteousness. 31. On this account it is ordained in the tablets of heaven: "With the instrument with which a man kills his neighbor, he shall be killed; as he wounded him, shall thus they do to him."² 32. And in the fifty-fifth jubilee. Noah took to himself a wife, and her name was Emzarâh, the daughter of Râkêl the daughter of his sister [sic] in the first year, in the fifth week; and in the third year thereof she bore him Shem, in the fifth year thereof she bore him Ham, and in the first year in the sixth week she bore him Japhet.

¹ This is a somewhat strange statement, and the text may be corrupt. The term "land of Eden" generally is the same as simply Eden. The connection might lead to the thought that all but Eden was then destroyed, as it was no longer inhabited since Adam's expulsion. A negative particle of some sort may have dropped out.

² Naturally the locality of the first two of these sacred places cannot be ascertained; it may be that the writer himself had no accurate idea on this matter.

CHAP. V. 1. And it happened, when the sons of the children of men commenced to increase over the face of the whole earth and daughters were born to them, that the angels of the Lord saw them in one year of this jubilee, that they were beautiful to look upon; and they took unto themselves wives from all of them whomever they chose, and they bore them sons, and these were giants.³ 2. And injustice increased over the earth and all flesh corrupted its way, from men to animals and to beasts and to birds and to all that walks upon the earth; all corrupted their ways and their orders¹ and began to devour each other, and unrighteousness increased over the earth, and all the thoughts of the knowledge of all the sons of men were thus wicked all the days. 3. And the Lord looked upon the earth, and behold it was corrupt, and all flesh corrupted its order and they all did evil before his eyes, all that were on the earth. 4. And he said: "I shall destroy mankind and all flesh that has been created above the face of the earth." And Noah alone found grace before the eyes of the Lord. 5. And concerning the angels whom he had sent upon the earth, he was greatly enraged, that he would root them out of all their power; and he said to us that we should bind them in the depths of the earth; and behold they are bound in the midst of them [depths] and separate. 6. And against their children came a word from before the face of the Lord, that they should be slain with a sword and be removed from under heaven. 7. And he said: "My spirit shall not abide over men forever, for they are flesh; and let their days be one hundred and twenty years." 8. And he sent into their midst his sword that each should slay his neighbor; and they began to slay one the other until they all fell upon the sword and were destroyed from the earth. 9. And their fathers witnessed it; and after this these were bound in the depths of the earth, until the day of the great judgment for the coming of punishment unto eternity over all those who have corrupted their ways and their works before the Lord. 10. And he destroyed all their places, and there was not left a single one of them who was not judged according to all their wickedness. 11. And he made for all of his works a new and righteous nature, so that they did not sin in their entire nature unto eternity and were righteous each in his generation all the days. 12. And the judgment of all is ordained and written on the tablets of the heaven and without injustice; and all who depart from the path which is ordained for them to walk in, and if they do not walk in it, then is written down a judgment for every creature and every generation; and nothing that is in heaven, or on earth, or in the light, or in the darkness, or in Sheol, or in the depth, or in the dark place [can escape]; all their judgments are ordained and written and engraved concerning all. 13. He will judge the small and the great, the great according to his greatness and the small according to his smallness, and each one according to his path. 14. And he is not one who has regard for persons, nor one who receives bribes when he says that he will hold judgment over each one: if one gives him all things on earth, he will have no regard for his person and will not receive any thing from his hands, for he is the judge. 15. And of the children of Israel it has been written and ordained, if they shall turn to him in righteousness, he will remove all their guilt and pardon all their sins. 16. It is ordained and written that he will show mercy to all who turn from all their errors, once each year. 17. And concerning all those who corrupted their ways and works before the flood, he had no regard for their persons, with the exception of Noah alone; for he had regard for his person on account of the sons whom he saved from the water of the flood for his sake;¹ for his heart was righteous in all his ways, as had been commanded concerning it, and he had not transgressed any thing that had been ordained for him. 18. And the Lord said: "Every thing that is on the dry land and every thing that is created, from men to animals and to beasts and to birds and to whatever moves upon the earth, shall be destroyed." 19. And he commanded Noah to build an ark for himself that he might save him from the water of the flood. 20. And Noah made an ark in every thing as he had commanded him in the [twenty-seventh] jubilee, in the fifth week, in the fifth year. 21. And he entered on the sixth [year] thereof, in the second month, in the new moon of the second month:

¹I. e., Noah's sons were not themselves worthy of being saved, but escaped death for their father's sake.

until the sixteenth thereof he entered and all that we brought to him into the ark, and the Lord locked it from without on the seventeenth, at eve. 22. And the Lord opened seven flood-gates of heaven and the mouths of the fountains of the great deep, seven mouths in number. 23. And the flood-gates began to pour down water from heaven forty days and forty nights, and the fountains of the deep also sent up waters, until the whole world was full of water. 24. And the water increased upon the earth: fifteen ells the waters were raised over all the high mountains, and the ark was lifted above the earth and moved upon the face of the waters. 25. And the water remained standing upon the face of the earth five months, one hundred and fifty days. 26. And the ark proceeded and rested upon the top of Lûbâr, one of the mountains of Ararat. 17. And in the fourth month the fountains of the great deep were closed, and the flood-gates of heaven were restrained, and in the new moon of the seventh month all the mouths of the deep of the earth were opened, and the water began to descend into the deep below. 28. And in the new moon of the tenth month the tops of the mountains became visible, and in the new moon of the first month the earth became visible. 29. And the waters disappeared from above the earth in the fifth week, in the seventh year thereof, and on the seventeenth day in the second month the earth became dry. 30. And on the twenty-seventh thereof he opened the ark and sent out of it the animals and the beasts and the birds and whatever moves.

CHAP. VI. 1. And at the new moon of the third month he came out of the ark and built an altar on that hill. 2. And he appeared on the earth, and he took a young goat and atoned by its blood for all the guilt of the earth, because every thing that had been on it was destroyed except those that were in the ark with Noah; and he placed the fat on the altar, and he took an ox and a goat and a sheep and young goats and salt and a turtle dove and the young of a dove and brought a burnt sacrifice upon the altar, and scattered over them fruit offerings baked in oil and sprinkled the blood and wine, and placed upon it frankincense, and a sweet savour arose which was acceptable before the Lord. 3. And the Lord smelt the sweet savour, and he made with him a covenant that there should no more be a flood upon the earth which would destroy the earth: all the days of the earth, seed and harvest shall not cease, frost and heat and summer and winter and day and night shall not change their order and shall not cease forever. 4. "And ye, grow and increase on the earth and increase over it, and be for a blessing in its midst: your fear and your terror I will put upon every thing that is on the earth and in the sea. 5. And, behold, I have given you all the animals and all the beasts and every thing that flies and every thing that moves on the earth and the fish in the waters and all things for food; like the herbs of grass, I have given them all to you to eat. 6. Only flesh in which is its life with blood ye shall not eat: for the blood is the soul of all flesh, so that your blood in your souls be not demanded of you. 7. From the hands of each one I will demand the blood of a man; every one that sheddeth the blood of a man, by the hand of a man shall his blood be shed; for in the image of God did he create Adam. 8. But ye, grow and increase upon the earth." 9. And Noah and his sons swore that they would not eat any blood that is in any flesh, and they made a covenant before the Lord God for ever, in all the generations of the world, in this month. 10. On this account he spoke to thee that thou shouldst make a covenant with the children of Israel in this month upon the mountain, with an oath, and shouldst sprinkle blood over them on account of all the words of the covenant which the Lord has made with them for all days.¹ 11. And this testimony is written concerning you, that you observe it in all days, that ye do not in all days eat any blood of animals and birds and beasts in all the days of the earth; and the man who eats the blood of an animal or of beasts or of birds in all the days of the earth, he and his seed shall be rooted out of the land. 12. And thou command the children of Israel that they shall not eat any blood, so that their names and their seed may be before the Lord our God all the days. 13. And for this law there is no limit of days, for it is for eternity; and they shall observe it to generation and generation, so that they may continue supplicating in their behalf with blood before the Lord on the altar on each day and day; mornings and evenings they shall supplicate in their behalf perpetually before the Lord, that they may observe this and not be rooted out. 14. And he gave to Noah and his sons a sign that there should not again be a deluge over the earth; he placed his bow in the clouds as the sign of the eternal covenant that no water of the deluge should again come over the earth to destroy it all the days of the earth. 15. On this account it is ordained and written on the tablets of heaven that the celebration of the festival of weeks should be in this month, once a year, for a renewed covenant in each year and year.¹ 16. And during the time this festival was being celebrated in heaven, from the days of creation to the days of Noah, it was twenty-six jubilees and five weeks of years; and Noah and his sons observed it seven jubilees and one week of years until the time when Noah died. 17. But his children violated it until the days of Abraham, and they ate blood. But Abraham alone observed it, and Isaac and Jacob observed it, for these are his children, up to thy day; and in thy day the children of Israel forgot it until I renewed it for them on this mountain. 18. And thou command the children of Israel that they should observe this festival in all their generations as a commandment for them: one day in the year, in this month, they shall celebrate this festival. 19. For it is the festival of weeks and is a festival of first fruits; for this festival is of a double nature and double kind, as is written and engraved concerning its celebration. 20. For I have written it in the book of the first law in which I wrote to thee that thou shouldst observe it in its time one day a year; and I have explained to thee the offerings on that day, that they should be remembered and that the children of Israel should celebrate it one day in each year. 21. And at the new moon of the first month, and in the new moon of the fourth month, and in the new moon of the seventh month, and in the new moon of the tenth month are the days of remembrance and the days of the festivals in the four divisions of the years: written and ordained they are for a testimony until eternity. 22. And Noah ordained them for himself as festivals for future generations, for on them there was to him a remembrance. 23. At the new moon of the first month it was said to him that he should make for himself an ark, and on it the earth became dry, and he opened [the ark] and saw the earth. And at the new moon of the fourth month the mouth of the flood-gates of the lowest deep was closed. 24. And at the new moon of the seventh month all the mouths of the flood-gates of the earth were opened and the waters began to descend into the depth beneath. 25. And at the new moon of the tenth month the tops of the mountains appeared, and Noah became glad. 26. And on this account he ordained them as festivals of remembrance unto himself unto eternity, and thus they are ordained. 27. And they were raised into the tablets of heaven: thirteen sabbaths to each, from one to another their remembrance, from the first to the second, from the second to the third, from the third to the fourth. 28. And all the days of this commandment are fifty-two sabbaths of days, and the whole year is completed. 29. Thus it is engraved and ordained in the tablets of heaven, and there is no transgression from one year to another. And thou command the children of Israel that they should observe the years in this number, three hundred and sixty-four days, and the year shall be complete and the fixed date of their days and their festivals shall not be corrupted, for every thing transpires in them according to their testimony; and they [Israel] shall not miss a day or corrupt a festival. 31. But if they do transgress and do not observe them according to his commandment, then will be corrupted all their fixed dates, and the years will waver in consequence, and also their times and their years, and they will transgress their ordinances. 32. And all the children of Israel will forget and will not find the paths of the years, and will forget the new moon and the sabbaths and the festivals, and in all the order of the years they will err. 33. For I know, and from now on I shall make it known to thee, and not from my heart, but thus is written in a book before me and is ordained in the tablets of heaven, the division of the days, that they forget not the festivals of my covenant and walk according to the festivals of the gentiles, after their errors and after their ignorance. 34. And there will be those who will make observations of the moon, for this one [the moon] corrupts the stated times and comes out earlier each year by ten days. 35. And in this way they will corrupt the years and will observe a wrong day as the day of testimony and a corrupted festival day, and every one will mix holy days with unclean ones and unclean with holy; for they will err as to months and sabbaths and festivals and jubilees. 36. And on this account I command thee and testify to thee that thou shouldst testify to them, for after thy death thy children will corrupt, so that they make a year only three hundred and sixty-four days,¹ and on this account they will err as to new moons and sabbaths and fixed times and festivals and will ever eat blood with all kinds of flesh.

CHAP. VII. 1. And in the seventh week, in the first year thereof, in this jubilee, Noah planted vines on this hill upon which the ark had rested, named Lûbâr, the Ararat Mountains, and they produced fruit in the fourth year, and he watched their fruit and gathered them in this year in the seventh month, and he made wine of it, and put it into a vessel and kept it until the fifth year, until the first day of the new moon of the first month. 2. And he celebrated this day in rejoicing as a festival,¹ and he made a sacrifice unto the Lord, a young one from among the oxen and a ram and a sheep, each seven years old, and a young goat, that he might thereby obtain pardon for himself and his sons. 3. And he prepared the goat first, and he placed of its blood upon the flesh of the altar which he had made, and all the fat he laid upon the altar where he was sacrificing to the Lord, and of the ox and the sheep he also placed the flesh upon the altar. 4. And he made all the fruit offerings thereof mixed with oil upon them, and thereupon he first scattered wine upon the fire on the altar, and placed incense upon the altar, and a sweet savor ascended which was acceptable before the Lord his God. 5. And he and his children rejoiced and drank of this wine in joy.² 6. And it was evening, and he went into his tent, and he lay down drunken, and he slept, and he was uncovered in his tent while sleeping. 7. And Ham saw his father naked, and going out he told it to his two brothers without. 8. And Shem took his garment and arose, he and Japheth, and they carried the garment upon their shoulders, and their faces backward, and covered the shame of their father. 9. And Noah awoke from his sleep and learned everything that his youngest son had done to him; and he cursed his son and said: "Cursed be Canaan, a slaving servant shall he be to his brothers." And he blessed Shem: "Blessed be the Lord God of Shem, and may Canaan be his servant; and may the Lord extend Japheth and may the Lord dwell in the tent of Shem, and Canaan shall be his servant!" 11. And Ham knew that his father had cursed his youngest son, and he became displeased with him because he had cursed his son and he separated himself from his father, he and his sons with him, Chush, and Meshrêm, and Pûd, and Canaan. 12. And he built for himself a city, and called its name after the name of his wife Nêêlâta-Mêk.¹ 13. And Japheth saw it and became envious of his brother, and he too built a city, and called its name after the name of his wife Adalênsês. 14. But Shem dwelt with his father Noah, and he built a city by the side of his father on the hill, and he too called its name by the name of his wife Sêdûkâtêlbâb. 15. And behold these three cities are near Mount Lûbâr: Sêdûkâtêlbâb on the side of the hill on the east; Nêûltemâûk on the south side; and Adalânêsês toward the west; and these are the sons of Shem: Elâm, and Asûr, and Arpakeed: this is the generation after the second year of the flood (?)² these are the children of Noah. 16. And in the twenty-eighth jubilee he began to command the sons of his sons the ordinances and the commandments all as he had learned them and the judgments, and he testified to his sons that they should observe righteousness, and that they should cover the shame of their flesh, and that they should bless him who created them, and should honor father and mother, and each should love his neighbor, and should preserve their souls from all fornication and from all uncleanness and unrighteousness. 17. For on account of these three things the deluge came over the earth, namely on account of fornication, in which the Watchmen indulged against the commandments of their law, with the daughters of men, and took to themselves wives from all whom they chose and made the beginning of uncleanness. 18. And they begat sons, the Naphidêm, and they were all unlike and they devoured one another: the giant slew the Naphil, and the Naphil slew Eljô, and Eljô the children of men, and all publicly practised every unrighteousness and shed much blood, and the earth was filled with unrighteousness; and after all these the animals, and the beasts, and the birds, and whatever walks and moves on the earth; and much blood was spilt on the earth, and all the thoughts and deeds of men were wicked in all the days. 19. And the Lord destroyed everything from the face of the earth on account of their deeds and on account of the blood which was spilt over the earth. 20. And we were left, I and you, my sons, and everything that entered with us into the ark, and behold I am the first to see your works that ye do not walk in righteousness, for in the path of destruction have you commenced to walk, and are separating yourselves each from his neighbor, and are envious the one of the other, and are not in harmony each with his neighbor and his brother. 21. And yet, my sons, for I see and behold the satans have commenced to lead astray you and your children; and now I fear on your behalf that after my death ye will spill the blood of men over the face of the earth, and that ye too will be destroyed from its face. 22. For every one that sheds the blood of any man, and every one that eats the blood in any flesh, shall all be destroyed from the earth. 23. And there shall not be left any man who eats blood and who sheds blood upon the earth, and there shall not be left alone for him any seed or children under heaven; for they will go into Sheol, and into the place of judgment they will descend, in the darkness of the deep they will all be cast by a terrible death. 24. With regard to all blood over you which is in all the days that ye sacrifice an animal or a beast or whatever flies over the earth, and do a good deed concerning your souls in your covering of that which has been spilt over the face of the earth. 25. And ye shall not be like him that eats
